Q. And what you referred to yesterday when you released the picture State Fair in a large number of Iowa towns following its opening in Des Moines was what you call a pre-release? A. Yes, they were all pre-released. And that is easily explained. That picture State Fair was set for release in October. I mean for the country. And we opened it up out there in September in all these towns.

Q. Now, one of the allegations of the complaint is that there is some affiliation between Twentieth Century-Fox and the Randforce Amusement Company. In your dealings with the Randforce, with whom do you deal? A. There are two men I deal with, Louis Frisch and Sam Rinzler.

Q. Are they officers or directors or employees of Twentieth Century-Fox? A. Not to my knowledge, no.

Q. Do you deal with anybody at Fox in licensing your pictures to Randforce? A. Do we deal with anybody at Fox?

Q. That is right. A. No, we deal direct with them.

Q. And do you deal with anybody at RKO in licensing your pictures to Randforce? A. No.

Q. Now, with regard to Skouras: You, of course, know that the three Skouras brothers have an interest in the theatre? A. In some theatres, yes.

Q. And when you deal with Skouras theatres, with whom do you deal? A. George Skouras, William White, and a man named Benes. They have offices in Broadway.

Q. Do you deal with anyone at RKO? A. For who? Skouras Theatres?

Q. Yes. A. No.

Q. Do you deal with Mr. Spyros Skouras? A. No.

Q. Or Charles Skouras? A. No, not the Skouras Theatres you referred to in the metropolitan area, no. But we deal with Mr. Charles Skouras.

Q. And this chain of theatres, one operated by Skouras Theatres Corporation, and the other operated by Randforce —are they parts of the old Fox Metropolitan Playhouse? A. Yes.

Q. Which went into receivership in 1932? A. They are.

Q. Now, to use a colloquial phrase which we used here the other day, have you and these other defendants ganged up on the independent exhibitors of the country?

Mr. Wright: That is objectionable, if the Court please; pure argument.

Judge Hand: I will allow it.

A. Ganged up? What do you mean by ganging up?

Q. I assume it means joining with these other defendants to injure or impair the successful conduct of their business. A. Not in the least.

Mr. Caskey: Mr. Wright, I assume you will stipulate that if I propounded to Mr. Kupper the same questions which were asked of Mr. Zukor, that he will answer them in the negative?

Mr. Wright: Yes, indeed.

(1629)

Mr. Caskey: You gentlemen may inquire.

Mr. Seymour: I would like to ask one question.

Cross Examination by Mr. Seymour:

Q. Is there any relationship whatever between the licenses which Twentieth Century-Fox negotiates with the various theatre operating companies in which Paramount has an interest for exhibition of Fox pictures in the theatres operated by those companies, and any negotiations for licenses for the showing of Paramount pictures in any theatres in which Fox has an interest? A. No.

By Mr. Proskauer:

Q. Is there any relationship——

Mr. Wright: We will stipulate that he will answer no to the same question from all the other defendants.

Mr. Proskauer: It is stipulated that the witness will answer no to that question when propounded as to all the other producers and exhibitors.

Cross Examination by Mr. Erohlich:

Q. Mr. Kupper, I understand you testified that you had about 30 years experience in this business? A. I testified that I was employed by Fox Film, I think, October 7, 1919, and have been in constant service ever since with that company.

Q. Do you have a great deal of experience in selling pictures to the exhibitors? You did, didn't you? A. A great deal. yes, sir.

Q. And when you came to sell a picture to the exhibitor just what did you stress as your most important selling point? A. First of all, it is box office. I considered its box office potentiality.

Q. Well, let us break it down a bit. You were not just talking about box office potentiality when you saw Mr. John Smith who owned a theatre and asked him to buy a picture, did you? A. Well, first of all I decided that I thought I would like to sell that picture to John Smith, and then I went to work and used every bit of salesmanship I had in my possession to get the price that I wanted.

Q. Well, in your salesmanship what did you stress as the important element in your picture? A. Well, it could be the story; it could be the star value.

Q. Wasn't it as a result the star value of your picture? A. Well, when we had star value I guess I used that most, yes.

Q. And you used that for a great many years while you were selling your pictures in block? A. Yes.

Q. And did you use that after you sold your pictures in small blocks after the consent decree? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you still use that today? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is really the chief element that you stress in trying to get your customers interested, isn't it? A. They are (1631) all elements in what I consider box office potentiality.

Q. Now, in stressing the star value of your picture today is it necessary for you to sell your pictures in blocks of two, three or five, or could you sell your pictures as you did in the old days in a season's product? A. Well, I think I could, yes. Do you mean if I had no restrictions on me to hold me back or prohibit me from doing it? I think I could. I did it for years.

Q. So you can sell your pictures either way, under the old system of block booking, or the present system that you employ of selling them in small groups? A. You are asking me if I or my company would have the ability to do it?

Q. Yes. A. I think we would. I think we could.

Q. Now, are you now selling your pictures in small groups? A. Yes.

Q. I understood you to testify yesterday that you were selling them in groups of two and three, as a rule? A. Yes. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have not gone back to the system of selling them in blocks? A. Blocks of two or three, or groups of two or three.

Q. When I speak of "block" I mean an entire season's product. A. No.

Q. You could go back to it if you had to or if you (1632) wished to? A. I suppose we could, yes.

Q. But you prefer to sell in these small groups at the present time? A. Even though it makes a lot of work—it takes a lot more effort and a lot more work—I like it this way, and I think the exhibitors like it this way.

Q. And it takes a lot more money, doesn't it, in the way of expense? A. Yes, naturally.

Q. Your sales expense has increased substantially since the decree? A. Quite a bit, yes, sir.

Q. And if you did not sell a season's product in block your sales expense would be reduced? A. I did not hear that.

Q. If you went back to selling a season's product in block, your sales expense would be reduced, wouldn't it? A. I imagine it would, yes, sir.

Q. And you feel that you could do the same business with either method? A. I am not so sure of that. But I know we could sell the product. Whether we could do it as good that way as we do this way is something I can't tell you.

Q. As a matter of fact, the reason you have not gone back to the old system is because you are making more money with the new system? A. Yes, I believe we are selling to better advantage.

Q. Do you have reports of your trade showings? A. Yes, (1633) we do.

Q. And do you examine these reports from time to time? A. I have.

Q. And do you find that these exhibitors around the country go to these trade showings in large numbers? A. No, they do not. Very sparsely. I was very disappointed that they did not take more advantage of it.

Q. As a matter of fact, the exhibitor does not rely on the trade showing of a picture; he relies on the star, doesn't he, when he does business with you?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, as to what the exhibitor relies on this man is not competent to testify.

Mr. Frohlich: This man is an expert.

Judge Hand: I am sure I do not know what it has got to do with the case, but I will allow it. Go on.

The Witness: The question again, please.

Mr. Frohlich: Will you read the question, please.

Q. (Read.) A. Well, if he cared much about the trade showing I think he would be there; so apparently it must be something else.

Mr. Frohlich: That is all.

Cross Examination by Mr. Raftery:

Q. Mr. Kupper, there has been some testimony here that there are approximately 17,000 theatres in the United States. Does that agree with your idea? A. I think I testified to (1634) more than that.

Q. Well, you will admit to 17,000? A. Oh, yes.

Q. Well, they are divided into affiliated circuits, independent circuits, and individual operation? A. They are.

Q. And you have many individual operations where one exhibitor owns the one theatre; isn't that a fact? A. There are a lot of towns like that, small towns.

Q. And those are absolutely closed situations, are they not? A. Yes, sir; there is no opposition.

Q. And for the most part they are independent exhibitors? A. For the most part.

Q. The affiliated theatres are generally in the larger towns; isn't that a fact? A. Yes; but they are in small towns too.

Q. But for the most part, numerically, the great number of their theatres are in the larger situations? A. That is right.

Q. So, numerically, the independents far exceed the affiliated, isn't that right? A. In numbers of theatres, yes, sir.

Q. And since 1936 and 1937 this business has been a pretty prosperous business, hasn't it? A. I would say it has, yes, sir.

Q. Both in production and distribution and exhibition? A. I would say so, yes, sir.

(1635)

Q. And that same prosperity has extended through the operation of the independent accounts that you serve; isn't that a fact? A. I would say so, yes, sir.

Q. Have you heard of any theatres for sale around the country? A. Not very many; and I have not heard of any going out of business either.

Q. So when Mr. Caskey was talking about the ganging up situation, as far as you know, the independents have fared very well financially since 1936, 1937; isn't that the fact? A. I would think so. I believe so.

Q. Well, you know so from your own dealings with them, do you not; Mr. Kupper? A. I don't get around to as many small towns today as I used to; but it is my belief that that is the fact; and I hear from my salesmen that they are doing pretty well.

Q. And you have mentioned, I think, the name Nathan Yamins, did you not, this morning? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Operating independently in Fall River. A. Yes, he has been there a good many years.

Mr. Raftery: I should like to remind Judge Goddard that that was the man who swore to the affidavit before your Honor with the jurat at Palm Beach that cold winter's day when we were here.

Q. Now, about New York City: You have been selling (1635a) pictures yourself around New York City a great many years? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or either yourself or your associates or assistants have? A. Yes.
(1636)

Q. And you have had many first-run outlets in New York City? A. Quite a few, yes, sir. A number of theatres play first-run.

Q. Do you have many more first-runs today than you had back in 1936? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now prior to 1930, when you were working for Fox Film as distinguished from Twentieth Century, the RKO Circuit operated a fair number of theatres in the subsequent runs here in New York City, did it not, Mr. Kupper? A. Yes, they did.

Q. And before that the name was known as Keith-Albee, was it not? A. Yes.

Q. And those theatres for the most part were vaudeville houses? A. Vaudeville, vaudeville-picture houses.

Q. And there were two classes, were there not; that is, like the Palace and the Riverside that played straight vaudeville and a newsreel, and those which played a combination vaudeville and feature pictures, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. And the Loew's circuit operated in a similar manner, did they not? A. Same manner.

Q. Except that the Loew's circuit were practically all combination theatres? A. They were.

Q. They did not operate straight vaudeville theatres? A. No, not like the Palace in those days. They generally (1637) had vaudeville and pictures.

Q. And Loew's theatres long before RKO started featuring the picture, were featuring the picture equally with the vaudeville, were they not? A. Yes.

Q. And the Loew's theatres were the only people to play one picture with the vaudeville? A. That is right.

Q. There were no double features? A. Not in those days, not generally, no.

Q. And isn't it a fact that during that period, starting around 1924, 1925, up until sound came in and until sound took hold, the Loew's theatres generally played United Artists pictures, Metro pictures, and some Paramount pictures, in addition to vaudeville? A. That is right.

Q. So that United Artists was a customer of the Loew's Circuit way back in the silent picture days; isn't that a fact? A. I was always under the impression they used all United Artists pictures.

Q. Well, I will agree with you on that. And they used them back in the silent picture days and have used them ever since, isn't that a fact? A. That is correct. I think they have used them ever since. I have not checked but I think they have used them ever since.

Q. Well, you watch the metropolitan advertising in the dailies of the second and subsequent-run houses, do you not? (1638)

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, the RKO later took over the Keith-Albee; that is, it became known as the RKO operation? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And gradually they went second-run and began featuring feature pictures with the vaudeville, isn't that a fact? A. Yes.

Q. Now, all this time Fox pictures were playing primarily in the Fox houses in New York City with the second-runs, were you not? A. We were.

Q. You had the Audubon up on 168th Street, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. You had the Riviera at 96th or 97th Street? A. Up around there, yes.

Q. And you had theatres in Jamaica, Long Island? A. Yes; Academy of Music on Fourteenth Street.

Q. And you had them in Brooklyn? A. Yes; and Jersey.

Q. And after a time, either during bankruptcy or receivership or some other Federal court procedure, the Fox circuit disintegrated, did it not? A. It did.

Q. And ceased to be second-run competition here in this neighborhood? A. Well, some of them are still in that classification.

Q. What do you mean, in bankruptcy or second-run? A. That I don't know. I mean playing second-run, subsequent-run. But they are under different management. They (1639) are not under Fox management.

Q. But there was a disintegration of that circuit? A. That is correct.

Q. So the phrase "Loew's split," referred primarily, did it not, to the pictures that played second-run or sub runs in the Loew's theatres; isn't that it? A. Yes, it is a term I think that was coined by the exhibitors. They play the same pictures that Loew played. RKO had some other type of pictures, and Fox had some other; so they say they play the Loew's split or the RKO split, or they play some other split.

Q. Now, Mr. Kupper, don't you know that there is an economic reason that those terms exist? Isn't it a fact that there are sub-run theatres in New York, unaffiliated theatres, that follow either Loew or RKO, and certain of them will not follow or play the so-called Loew's split, isn't that correct? A. That is correct.

Q. And there are other theatres that won't play the so-called RKO split? A. That is right.

Q. And there is a big economic disadvantage between one and the other due to the fact that you have 40 RKO theatres as against about 60 Loew's; isn't that the fact? A. That is right.

Q. And you have to pick up your revenue from other sub-runs that are willing to play the so-called RKO split, isn't (1640) that the fact? A. Yes.

Q. And those who play the Loew houses don't get as many sub-runs to follow, do they? A. I don't think they do. I don't know, but I don't think they do.

Q. Well, do you feel that you can pick up a sufficient amount of revenue to offset the difference between the 40 and 60 by playing the RKO split? Is that right? A. Well, I would not say that. I think we would be better off if we had the Loew split. They have twenty-odd more important theatres, and I think we would make a lot more money, and I think we would get a greater film rental out of the New York area than we do in the RKO split; but we can't sell them; and they have got enough product; and we have got to deal with RKO. But I personally would rather have the Loew's circuit as to revenue, total dollars, than the RKO, which I serve.

Q. Isn't that true in many competitive situations? A. What?

Q. Isn't that true in many competitive situations, you can't get the houses you would like to get into? A. Yes, I guess there are some situations like that, yes.

Q. In other words, there is so much playing time in each house? A. That is right.

Q. And if somebody else has it, you can't get into it? A. That is right.

Q. Now you told us this morning something about the great advantage of having show windows or places where you could get your pictures open first-run; and I think an exhibit went in, and Judge Hand asked the rest of us to get something like it, showing how you open all these runs, day and date. Well, haven't you got a competitive advantage of being able to sell your own theatres and securing that day and date playing between here and Los Angeles, that a company like United Artists or Universal or Columbia haven't got? A. I should think we would get more sympathetic treatment.

Q. You heard of the picture called, "I'll Be Seeing You"? A. Who?

Q. "I'll Be Seeing You." A. Yes.

Q. You would say that was a fine picture, wouldn't you? A. I would say so, yes.

Q. And would it surprise you to know that that opened in a Fox West Coast theatre on Christmas Day, and we could not get a showing in New York until a week after Easter? A. It would not surprise me at all.

Q. In other words, you do run into these bottlenecks in playing time, do you not? A. Definitely.

Q. Well, would you say today this is an exhibitors' market? A. It has been for a long time.

Q. And the distributors, in competition with each other, are continuously fighting that exhibitor market; isn't that the fact? A. Yes, as long as I have been in the business we have been fighting it.

Q. And you have just as much trouble with our brethren here at the table as you do with the independents on the competitive feature, do you not? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Raftery: That is all.

Mr. Seymour: May it please the Court, I haven't anything else to ask this witness, but Mr. Beatty, who was here yesterday, has been held over for Mr. Wright to decide whether he wants to cross-examine. I have furnished Government counsel with the documents he asked for yesterday. Mr. Beatty has a homing instinct and has an odd itch to get back to Detroit. I do not know if Government counsel will say they want to cross-examine or if they do not.

Mr. Wright: I have not had a chance to examine the documents, but just from looking at them, I think we want to put them in evidence; so if you want to explain anything you had better hold him over. I do not know that we want to cross-examine him, but we would want to put the substance of what is in here in evidence.

Mr. Seymour: If you say you don't want to cross-examine him, I want to tell him he is at liberty to go back to Detroit, which he wants to do more strongly than I would in his place.

Mr. Wright: I do not see any reason why he cannot go, with the understanding that we will expect to offer what is in here. So if you have any explanation that you want to have him make, why you had better keep him.

Mr. Seymour: I haven't any explanations I want him to make. And you can offer the exhibit.

Cross Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. Mr. Kupper, getting back to the routine business of selling films, it was not clear to me from your direct testimony as to just where the final approval of the Fox film contracts lies, whether that is in New York City or somewhere else? A. Yes; it is in New York City. There have been others—they have been approved in the field, but in the main the final approval rests in New York, where the application for contract becomes a final contract with the signature of an officer of our company making it so.

Q. These four division managers that you referred to, those division sales managers, I think you said one of them was located in Atlanta, one in San Francisco. After they approve or recommend, then those contracts which they approve come to New York, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. And are approved here? A. Yes.

Q. And if approved here, signed by Mr. Connors? A. They are executed here in New York too, yes, sir. (1644)

Q. By Mr. Connors, is that right? A. Yes, sir, or Mr. Michel. I think it is Mr. Michel, the executive vice-president.

Q. Well, either one, either Mr. Michel or Mr. Connors? A. They see that an officer of the company, that his signature goes on the contract.

Q. And in the course of selling to accounts that Fox serves, the salesmen in the exchanges have nothing to do, of course, with selling the so-called affiliated circuits, do they? A. No, I do not believe they do at all.

Q. And that is pretty much true of the branch managers also, isn't that right? A. That is not altogether true of the branch manager.

Q. Well, he may be called in for discussion, but actually he does not negotiate in any deal, does he? A. He helps to negotiate; he helps to formulate the sales with his sales manager or district manager. He works pretty hard on those accounts.

Q. But the principal function of the branch manager and the salesman is, is it not, to sell the independent accounts in the area? A. The principal function of the salesman is to sell those accounts in his area, which generally are independent situations, small towns, and subsequent-runs in cities; and the manager's responsibility is to see that they (1645) are all sold, whether they are affiliated or whether they are circuits or whether they are independents.

Q. And you give the branch manager and the salesmen quotas, do you, for what they are supposed to do from these independents, from independent accounts? A. You do not set it up for independent accounts. We set it up for the whole territory.

Q. How do you set it up? A. Well, in our case we have over years of experience found out what a branch—what percentage of the United States it is that that branch does, and that is the yardstick. It is what they do, and that is worked out percentage-wise over the country; and then we, in turn, break it down. It is not drawn off from just the independents or just the affiliated or their circuits. It is the whole.

Q. So that you do set a quota for each branch, is that right? A. Yes, the percentage of the gross.

Q. And within the branch do you have any quotas fixed for any particular accounts, as distinguished from others? A. No, we do not.

Q. You do not break down your quotas—that is, your particular salesmen don't have quotas for their territories? A. They have a percentage the same as we do at National* *Change as indicated at p. 1229.

for the branch. Each branch does it in turn for each salesman's territory.

(1646)

Q. Within the branch there are quotas for the salesmen's territories? A. That is right.

Q. And insofar as those salesmen are concerned, those quotas are independent account quotas, isn't that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then, as I understand this progression of authority, anybody at any stage can always turn down an application, isn't that right? Of course the salesman, in the first instance, may not even take an application from the exhibitor? A. There is no sense in him writing it up if he has not got what he considers a fair and equitable proposition, because he knows he will be rejected.

Q. So he may reject—— A. He will walk away.

Q. —and the branch manager may reject; the district manager may reject; and the division sales manager, all may reject? A. Yes.

Q. And the only one that may approve is the New York office, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. Now, in the process of selling, do you, as a matter of fact, do what you call setting your deals or negotiating your deals with your affiliated circuits first; do you not? A. Well, I would not say that, no. I think a lot of our salesmen are out selling the subsequent-run accounts long before we complete negotiations with circuits or affiliated circuits. We do not wait for them.

Q. Well, regardless of whether or not they are taking contracts from subsequent-runs, it always is a fact, is it not, that you just cannot or do not make pictures available to the subsequent-run accounts until you have arranged your terms with your circuits or others that play the prior runs in the so-called key spot; isn't that correct? A. That is right. It is only natural. You would want to sell the first-run first, and then the subsequent-run from there on; but I thought you were talking about all salesmen.

Q. Well, I am talking about your general selling policy, I say it is a fact, isn't it, that before you would offer any run that is used by any key account, or before you make pictures available for exhibition following exhibition in those key theatres, you make your deals with your so-called key run accounts, is that right? A. First, yes, sir.

Q. Now these figures that you have tabulated here on this exhibit, F-12, Tree Grows in Brooklyn, these figures that you have were all equally available, were they not, in the interrogatory answers that were supplied as to the picture, Sweet Rosie O'Grady, that was given in answer to Interrogatories 6 through 11 inclusive? A. I assume so, yes. I don't know, though. I did not give any interrogatory answers.

Mr. Caskey: We will have that chart tomorrow, Mr. Wright.

Q. I just wondered why a chart was made up on A Tree Grows in Brooklyn instead of Sweet Rosie O'Grady. Is there anything about this picture that you regard as more typical or more representative than the other one that was used in the interrogatory answer? A. I would not say it was. I was asked to get it.

Mr. Caskey: If I may iterpolate, the chart for Sweet Rosie O'Grady, which is a 1943-1944 picture, is being typed at this moment; and this is one that I picked out for 1944-1945 as being the same type of picture.

Mr. Wright: I was just trying to get at the basis for the picture.

Q. Now as I understand this chart that you have got marked F-12, all that this covers is simply the first-run exhibitions in these 92 cities of more than 100,000 population; is that right? A. Right.

Q. And of those, of the first-run revenue that you got from those 92 cities, as I understand your chart, only 16 and 47/100ths per cent came from theatres that you designated as independents here; is that right? A. Whatever it is, I don't recall now. If I can see it——

Mr. Wright: Give him a copy of it.

(1649)

A. (Continuing) Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, about 85 per cent of your first-run revenue in these towns came from affiliated—— A. No, sir, that does not say that.

Q. Well, 83.13 per cent came from Paramount, Skouras, National, Loew's, Warner, Standard Theatres, RKO and Paramount-Publix, is that right? A. Do you mean you are adding up everything but the independent?

Q. Yes. A. That is the first-run revenue out of these 92 towns, and it is broken down there, the percentage of them.

Q. Well, can you just answer the question? A. May I have the question again, please?

Q. (Question read.) A. Yes, first-run revenue in those towns.

Q. And this chart, of course, does not even purport to reflect the percentage of total revenue that you get out of those cities that was affiliated revenue or came from these companies as distinguished from what came from independents, isn't that right? A. No. It is the first-run revenue.

Q. You have in many of those situations a very substantial amount of subsequent-run revenue from affiliated houses, such as what you get from the RKO circuit in New York; that, I take it, is excluded from this chart completely? A.

(1650)
That is right. They are both affiliated and independent. There is a substantial amount of both.

Q. Now this U.S. Gross, October 13, those percentages there represent the amount or percentage of business actually billed as of that date, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. Now this column that is headed, "Per Cent of Estimated U.S. Gross"—just what is that estimate and when was it—— A. Well, it was made the other day when we worked this chart out. As a matter of fact, we are always making estimates on our pictures, every quarter. In the years of our experience, we know what we have worked out, and drawn up tables—we have a tabulating department that can tell us almost to the dollar what the expectancy will be at any period of time.

Q. And, of course, you make an estimate at the time you first put the picture in release, is that right? A. That is right, we do.

Q. And you are able to estimate within a small percentage or so what it is going to gross at the time you put it into release, is that right? A. We form and we work out an estimate, yes, on all pictures, what we think they will do nationally.
(1651)

Q. But I say, the estimate you make at the time you release it turns out to be substantially what you realize when you finally get through with the runs; is that right? A. Well, most of them are pretty accurate. Some we go off on. We make mistakes; some we make a little more on, and some we make a little less on; but in the aggregate we are pretty close.

Q. And these percentages are also predictable as of the time that you start the release here, is that right, the percentage of the gross you are going to get from these various interests that you have listed there? A. Well, I would say so, yes. It depends, of course, naturally, on the income at the theatre; I mean, the rentals they will take in as to what our percentage share will be.

Q. Now, you don't have any idea offhand as to how much of the total revenue that came out of these 92 cities named in the chart here came from affiliated theatres?

Mr. Caskey: I am going to have a table on that, Mr. Wright.

Mr. Wright: I just wanted to see if he knows offhand.

A. Offhand I don't know, sir.

Q. Now, I think you testified that at one time there you were out of the Warner circuit. That is, you were unable to (1652) sell your films to the Warner Circuit anywhere in the country? A. Twice to my knowledge, twice that I have been negotiating with them, I have had to break off relationship, once for a short period, and finally we got together a little later——

Q. Well, the first time you refer to was the 1933-34, and the 1934-35 seasons, is that right? A. I can refresh myself on that. Somewhere around that time was the last time.

Q. 1933 and 1934 and 1934-1935, those seasons were the last seasons that you were out of the circuit, is that right? A. Well, I would not say were entirely out of the circuit. We did not sell them. I remember distinctly the last time because John Clark was then our general sales manager, and I, were negotiating, and I had been carrying the negotiations; and finally we had a showdown with their buyer, Mr. Clayton Bond, and it was in the Park Central Hotel, and it lasted almost one night, and we came to the conclusion that we just could not sell them; so we went out and sold the lot —either sold the lot or developed a lot of opposition; and those accounts—we have never gone back to Warner's in those situations.

Q. Now, are those seasons you are referring to there the 1933-1934 and 1934-1935 seasons? A. Around that time.

Q. But you did not offer any of your pictures to any of those opposition independents until after you had broken with the circuit on the circuit deal, is that right? A. I don't believe we did as long as we were trying to negotiate with Warner's, or whoever it was—it was Warner's in this case —we certainly were not going to offer it to somebody else.

Q. Did I understand you to say that you stayed with each one of the independent accounts that bought your pictures in those seasons after Warner left you out? A. To the best of my recollection we have to this day where we established a new account.

Q. Don't you know, as a matter of fact, that there were a number of those situations where when you got back into the Warner circuit you took the product away from the independent who had it without any negotiations with him whatsoever? A. No, sir.

Q. You don't know that to be the fact? A. I do not know that, no, sir.

Q. Would you say positively that it is not a fact? A. I will say positively it is, that a great many of the accounts that we took away and sold—and I remember a lot of them——

Q. I am not talking in terms of many; I am talking in terms of any. A. That we did not stay with that independent?
(1654)

Q. Yes. A. I do not know of any that we took the product away from.

Q. Would you say that there were none? A. To the best of my knowledge there were not any. I don't recall them.

Q. How about Punxsutawney, Pennsylvania? Do you remember that one? A. I don't remember that one.

Q. Well, would you say that it is not a fact that you did take the product away from the independent there and give it back to Warner? A. I can't recall the individual situation. I remember Punxsutawney there.

Q. As a matter of fact, you don't know what was the correct situation? A. No, I do not know about that situation.

Q. And there are other situations that you do not know about? A. There may be, but I don't recall them.

Q. So, as you testify there now, you are not able to tell us the precise extent to which you took the product away from these independent accounts and gave it back to Warner, or the extent to which you did not; isn't that right? A. Well, I would like to refer to the record, but my best recollection is, a great many that we sold away, after we could not complete and work out our deal with Warner's, are still on our books, and still have used our product to this day.

Q. Now, can you answer my question? A. I have tried to. (1655)

Mr. Wright: Read it to him.

Q. (Read.)

Mr. Caskey: I submit he has answered the question.

Mr. Wright: That calls for a yes or no answer.

Mr. Caskey: It does not.

Mr. Wright: Can you answer it?

The Witness: Well, let me study the question once more, please.

Mr. Wright: Read it again.

(Question re-read.)

A. Well, I can't remember every town that we had sold away from Warner's right at this minute any more than I can tell you——.

Q. The answer to the question is no, isn't it? A. I will try and answer the question fairly and honestly. I don't like to answer yes or no, but I do not say that it calls for a direct one. I may be mistaken. But to the best of my recollection—and I am almost positive—that those that we sold away and established an account, the product still remains there.

Q. Well, you don't know. Is it right or isn't it right, do you know now, that you did not take any back, or what is the fact as to your present knowledge, not what you think? (1656)

A. I don't know of any that we took it away from them.

Q. And you don't know whether there were such situations or not, is that right? A. I did not know that there were any such.

Q. I say now, do you know whether there were or not? A. No, I don't know now.

Q. And it is also true, is it not, that in many situations instead of taking all of it back, you just told the independent that the product would have to be split with Warner in succeeding seasons? A. Well, I did not tell them that. I don't recall those situations at all I am talking about——

Q. Well, would you say there were none of those situations? A. No, there are situations where we split the product with Warner and an independent.

Q. And situations where the independent had bought all your product, and then when you went back into the circuit with Warner you told the independent that Warner would get half and he would get half from then on? A. Probably did in those situations; that is the way we carried on.

Q. And that was without any opportunity as far as he was concerned to negotiate for keeping all of it, isn't that right? A. There could be situations like that, yes, sir.

Q. And you just determined what the split should be and that Warner would have the other half, is that right? A. Well, it may be in a house that was not comparable by any means or stretch of the imagination that could support and handle that product, and naturally it was only a deal for a few pictures or a block of pictures, or, possibly, the product for that season; and we knew that sooner or later we might be able to work out a fair and equitable deal in those places.

Q. Now, with the exception of such independent accounts as may have been opened up as the result of this split that you had with Warner there in 1933, 1934 and 1935, can you point to any of those 92 cities that you covered where your product had played in an affiliated theatre and was then later offered to or played in an independent house on a regular first-run?

Mr. Davis: May I have that read?

Mr. Davis: Does this relate only to the years 1933, 1934 and 1935?

Mr. Wright: No. I am covering the 92 cities that he testified to in his direct examination, and the period is the 1935-36 season to date.

A. Well, I believe Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, is one where we definitely sold and have been selling the independent exhibitor. That is one of the 92.

Q. And what was the affiliated house that you sold before you sold the independent? A. It was the Warner situation. They had the theatres, the other theatres.

Q. That is, you sold—this was the situation where you had sold Warner prior to 1933-34; is that what you are talking about? A. Yes; that is what I am talking about.

Q. Now, I called your attention specifically to situations other than those which opened up as a result of that split. In the last ten years from 1935-36 on, can you give me any situation in one of those 92 cities that you covered where you had made product available to an independent that was formerly played by an affiliated theatre? A. No, I do not believe so.

Q. Now, in those 92 cities that you covered, and confining yourself to this same period, 1935-36 to date, can you tell me any one of those situations where you had negotiations with two or more affiliated exhibitors for a first-run of your product? A. Two or more?

Q. Yes. A. Well, generally—there are some towns where we split the product between two affiliated, and there are some towns where we split it between an independent and an affiliated. What do you want me to answer?

Q. I want to get what the fact is. A. How do we sell them?

Q. Other than the situations in which you have split the product between two affiliated first-runs on an arbitrary basis, there have been no situations in those 92 cities where you have negotiated with more than one affiliated exhibitor, isn't that right? A. Where we have split the product? Well——

Mr. Wright: Wait a minute now. Listen to the question.

Q. (Read.)

Mr. Davis: May I ask whether that means simultaneous negotiations?

Mr. Wright: I am talking about any time during the 10-year period.

Mr. Raftery: We are going to object to the use of the word "arbitrary."

Mr. Wright: Well, we will cover exactly what the nature of the split is later.

Mr, Raftery: We are going to object to this line of testimony for the reasons stated in our opening.

Judge Hand: Overruled. Go on.

A. Where there is an affiliated—where there are affiliated theatres, and there are two of them——

Mr. Wright: First, can you answer directly and then launch into your explanation.

Mr. Caskey: Let him answer.

The Witness: I am trying, Mr. Wright, to the best of my ability; unless I don't grasp your question.

Judge Bright: Read it again.

A. I believe that is correct.

Q. And where you had a split in those situations, those splits, as I understand it, have been made simply where you say that one gets a third and the other two-thirds, or one gets a half and the other gets a half, and it is determined on simply a basis where you say one exhibitor will sort out the pictures into two groups, and the other one makes the selection, is that right, or vice versa? A. That is right.

Q. So that in those situations the split that you make is in no sense the result of any competitive negotiations that you have with either of them; isn't that right?

Mr. Caskey: I object to that characterization of it. When there are two customers in a town and he sells to both, it is certainly competitive.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Mr. Davis: May I have that question read?

(Question read.)

A. No, it is not right.

Q. Well, then describe these negotiations that you have with them that you regard as competitive. A. Well, we (1661) have been selling—let us assume—we don't have to assume; take a concrete case, if you want, where we sold one of the affiliates a half of the product and the other one a half of that product: Our organization knows what we are going to release, and it is, as you say, and as I have said before, well set up, these pictures, and we know when we have trade-shown them—we can't sell them before we trade-show them—they are there, and they see them, and it is convenient to us, and it saves us a lot of dickering and argument, and they will divide as they seem to think and try to be fair on the splitting of it; and then when they have decided which it is, then we go and sell and negotiate direct with each one individually, separately and apart, at terms we think those pictures are worth for those theatres.

Q. The only negotiations you have are with reference to the rental terms on which the pictures in the particular split play, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have no negotiations with reference to how much of the product shall be split and how the split shall be made, is that right? A. Well, we sit in on it; at least our representative knows what is going on; and I assume he will try to guide them right; and it would seem to me that they would both want to get the best of any attraction; they would like (1662) the best pictures; but it don't work out that way. He has to be fair because he knows the next time they are going to make the split the other fellow will take the advantage.

Q. So it is worked out so that there is an alternative selection there which is not a subject of negotiation at all, is that right? A. Well, I would say that is correct.

Judge Bright: Who determines what the proportion of the split may be?

The Witness: Well, it is more or less handed down from our experience in selling the situation. As I say, when there was an equal split, there was never much trouble; and where you have one-third or two-thirds, even with independents or affiliated, that is a problem there, especially when you are only releasing a few pictures at a time.

Judge Bright: Who determines the split?

The Witness: We are supposed to determine the split, but we try to accommodate; we try to work with them and set it up so it will be fair for both; and I would say it is determined by the three of us, whoever is in the negotiation, or both parties to the negotiation.

Q. And in some situations you accomplish the same purpose that you do when you split the product by selling to a so-called pool of two or more of these affiliated theatres, isn't that right? A. Yes——

Mr. Caskey: That question is objected to as to form.

Judge Hand: The witness says it is so. Objection overruled.

A. (Continuing) It will work out much the same way.

Mr. Caskey: The witness may have said he sold so-called pools, but I do not think he meant to say they accomplish the same result that was in Mr. Wright's question.

Q. Now, getting back to this question of a road show for a moment: As a matter of fact, a road show is a situation where you have a special showing in a theatre before it is done anywhere else in the area but where the picture does not become available to other theatres in the area at the conclusion of the showing, isn't that right? A. It is not run the same as the regular run-of-the-mill product, if that is what you mean.

Q. That is, when you have a road show you simply take over a particular theatre for an advance exhibition, and you have a high admission scale, and you generally share in the profits of the run, and you play it for as many weeks as you think it will stand up, and then when you are through with it it still has to go into what you call regular release before it become available to anybody else in the area, isn't that right? A. Not so.

Q. Do you mean to say that if you have a road show exhibition of a picture in a particular area, and then you put it into subsequent-run houses before it has any regular first-run exhibition at the regular first-run prices? A. I didn't say that. I said the road show—for instance—let me give you the whole story: Let us take Song of Bernadette. We opened it here in the Rivoli Theatre. I forget how many weeks we ran, 18 or 19 weeks; it was a picture in which the admission price was increased; and we set up a definite admission for road shows on that particular picture, I think it was 85 cents minimum in the afternoon and $1.10 at night, or something of that nature, or 76 cents and $1.10, and we offered that picture following the road show at the Rivoli Theatre to all exhibitors in the City of New York who were willing to buy it and play it at that admission price. That was the established price we offered it as a road show, and that was the only way we would license it. We would not license it any other way unless we did get that admission price; but it was offered for sale to all of them, and a lot of them played it following the Rivoli, and subsequent-run theatres.

Q. You mean in addition to a first-run road show you had a subsequent-run road show on that picture, is that correct? A. Yes.

Q. And then after you got through with all these road shows, then you put it into regular release where it went into the regular theatres at the regular first-run prices, and from then on down in accordance with the clearance, is that right? A. We advertised at the time we solicited the licensing of the road show engagement that it would not be shown in any theatre in the United States for less than these admissions for at least one year.

Q. And it did not become available then to subsequent-run theatres on their regular policies until a later time when it was put into regular release through first-run theatres; is that correct? A. That is correct. If they had not so elected to play it on a road show basis at the prices we wanted, then it was not available to them until we had put it into general release at regular admission prices in the usual first-run manner, and from there on down in the area.

Q. After you get through with a road show, where you have a road show—I take it this table, this F-12 does not include any road show revenue. Was there a road show on Tree Grows In Brooklyn? A. No, sir.

Q. And such pictures on which you do have a road show, when you put it into regular release you then play it in the first-run theatres, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And on those first-run accounts that you referred to in your 92 cities, the affiliated first-run exhibitors that you named then have the privilege of playing the picture either simultaneously or successively in however many theatres they have that are designated as first-run on your licenses, isn't that right? A. After we license them they can, yes.

Q. After they have had such first-run exhibition as those accounts give them, then they become available to later runs in the area, is that right? A. On a regular basis, yes.

Q. And do you call each time, even though the picture may have moved from one theatre to another, and it may actually be successive engagements—you don't count those as additional runs for the purpose of considering what run the subsequent independent operator gets it on, is that right? A. Are you talking about the difference between road show and the regular?

Q. No, I am talking about your continued first-runs. If you sell an independent exhibitor in one of those first-runs in one of those 92 cities a contract which says second-run in the town, actually he may not get the picture until it has been played on successive engagements in two or three or perhaps four of the affiliated first-run theatres first, isn't that right? A. Well, no. If he has got a definite second-run contract—unless I misinterpret your question again—he is going to get that picture second-run. Now, we have a first-run contract—let us say we have a license for first-run with an affiliate, and we license it for a theatre to play the picture, and we book it in that theatre—now, if you are referring to the fact that it was held over for a number of weeks——

Q. I am referring to the situation where he comes in and says, "Look here, I am supposed to have a second-run. Actually this picture has played two and three times ahead of me in these different theatres." And then you tell him, "Why, no, that does not interefere with your second-run; those are just continued first-runs or move-over first-runs; isn't that right? A. If they ask that question they would be told that, but we don't have it set up that way. They know what they are buying. They know what the first-run is and what the move-over is, and if there is going to be a move-over, and they are sold accordingly.

Q. At the time the subsequent-run makes his contract with you and a price is filled in for the picture, there is nothing said in his contract as to how many times the picture can or cannot be played ahead of him on a first or move-over first-run, isn't that right? A. Well, I know he is going to assume there is only one run to be ahead of him, whether it is continued in one house or moved over to another. (1668)

Q. Can you answer the question?

Mr. Caskey: He did answer it, I submit.

Mr. Wright: Will you read the question, please.

Q. (Read.) A. There may be nothing said about it, but he knows the established principle and established business in the area, and he knows what transpires. He knows that he can't tell whether the picture is only going to play one week any more than we can. We assume that the picture will play maybe two or three weeks in a theatre, and it may only play one, or it may move to another house, or it may not move at all.

Q. So he does not know at the time he makes the deal with you how many times it is going to move over, does he? A. He generally knows because it is usually only the one move-over that you get. You do not move to a dozen.

Q. It all depends on what the first-run operator and you decide to do with the picture, isn't that right? A. I suppose it is what we negotiate or license to do, yes. He would know.

Q. And you put nothing in your contract which restricts you in any way from moving over the picture in just as many of these continuous runs as you want to have it in, isn't that right? A. We don't restrict ourselves, no. We negotiate, and you don't know as to what will make it available (1668a) for a move-over and what will make a move-over.

Q. Now, in those 92 cities that you covered on your direct testimony, can you point to any situation there where an affiliated subsequent-run house plays a run of your films behind an independent who has a move-over privilege? A. Affiliated subsequent-run?

Q. Yes. A. I will look it up. I don't think there are any. (1669)

Q. You know there aren't any, don't you? A. I don't see them. I haven't got it through the list.

Mr. Caskey: Do you want to cross-examine or do you want to get the facts?

Mr. Wright: I want the facts, and I would rather have them from the witness, if he has got them.

A. (Continuing) Outside of Pittsburgh. I know our first-run account is an independent account. I know subsequent-runs there are a lot of Warner theatres.

Q. That is what I am asking you for. A. I am trying to get to that.

Q. In the situation where you have an independent, now, in Pittsburgh, does that independent first-run there have the privilege of moving over your pictures and does he move over your first-runs there to two or three theatres? A. The Harris Theatre, which is part of our product—licenses a part of our product, moves over—holds over, first of all, several weeks in the Harris Theatre. He can have a picture two or three weeks and then move it to the Center Theatre, which is his theatre.

Q. You have a move-over from the Harris to the Center in Pittsburgh, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. Before the pictures go into Warner second-runs, is that right? A. That is right.

Judge Goddard: That is an independent?

The Witness: Yes, sir, independent.

(1670)

Q. Do you have any other situations like that? A. Let us continue on in Pittsburgh. It just so happens the party that licenses the other part of our product does not have a move-over there, and he continues playing longer in the one house.

Q. Who is the other party? A. Shea Theatres, Fulton Theatre.

Q. So that is a split of your product there between Shea and Harris? A. Yes.

Q. Shea does not move over but you say the Harris house may move over before it goes into the Warner subsequent-runs? A. That is right.

Q. Are there any others in those 92 cities where that occurs? A. I think that is the only one.

Q. Well, take your time, look at it carefully. A. That is the only one that I see, notice.

Q. As a matter of fact, how many of those 92 cities there can you point to where there is a subsequent affiliated run of any kind that plays your pictures after an independent first-run? A. How many? Probably Pittsburgh is the only one.

Q. Do you find any others? A. Wait a minute. I think Miami might be an exception. I think we play some of them. I am not positive of that.

Q. In Miami your Wometco Circuit has your first-run?

(1671)

A. Yes, and may have subsequent runs.

Q. Your subsequent runs go to Wometco too? A. They go to them, too. I was wrong there. No, I do not believe there are any on this list.

Q. In those 92 cities, can you point to those cities in which an independent first-run that you license takes clearance over a first-run affiliated house in another city? A. I don't think so, no.

Q. I can give you one there. A. There may be one.

Q. Your Music Hall here in New York, of course, does take—— A. That is true.

Q. (Continuing) —clearance over some independent runs in some other cities? A. That is true.

Q. But apart from that, I mean, some affiliated runs in other cities, apart from the Music Hall. Can you give me a first-run independent theatre in any of those cities that takes clearance on your pictures over an affiliated first-run in another town? A. No, I don't believe so.

Mr. Wright: Have you one?

Mr. Caskey: We copied those clearance provisions in the record yesterday. I don't know where they are now.

Q. I think you referred in your direct testimony to these situations where the clearance that you have prescribes a subsequent-run for—or prescribes an admission price for certain subsequent-run theatres, and I call your attention to (1672) one of them here, which is the clearance granted to Capitol Operating Company, Chester L. Stoddard, for the Capitol Theatre at New London. That is a Paramount affiliate. A. Yes.

Q. It says, "National release date." That means, I take it that it becomes available to this exhibitor when it is released nationally, is that right? A. I would say so.

Q. "30 days clearance in New London providing any subsequent-run house charges an admission price of not less than 25 cents for their entire orchestra at weekly night performances; if 20 cents, 120 days; if 15 cents, six months." Now, the statement as to the minimum adult admission prices, which are specified in the contract for the Capitol is simply none. Do you have any agreement in that situation with the Capitol as to what, if any, admission price it was to maintain as a condition of having this clearance over these subsequent-run houses? A. I imagine we did. I don't recall it right now. I don't recall the contract. What is the year of the contract in reference to, as to clearance?

Q. That is for the 1943-44 season, your first group of pictures, I believe Bombers Moon, Heaven Can Wait, Holy Matrimony, and the same clearance appears as that which your picture Sweet Rosie O'Grady had when it played that (1673) theatre. As a matter of fact, in dealing with this particular exhibitor, this Paramount affiliate, in virtually no case did you actually require the maintenance of a particular first-run price by that exhibitor, isn't that right? A. I wouldn't say that. I think we do generally watch that very carefully, and if it was not in the contract, I don't know why it wasn't put in, and, naturally, he should be, as far as I am concerned, he should be more concerned about charging a good admission and a right kind of admission, because he gets the greatest share of the income at the box office. I may contract for that picture 35 per cent, but he is going to get 65, so why shouldn't he want to protect the box office receipts?

Q. I am not talking about what he wants to do. I am talking about what you did. A. Well, that is what we did.

Q. In those cases where you neglected to insert any admission price restriction for his prior run, that was simply a matter of inadvertence, was it? A. I would say so, because I believe that our local representatives, who work out those contracts and work out those negotiations, know his admission price right along, and if he ever varied, they would have been the first ones to get in contact with him and see if there was any change and work it out again. I do not believe (1674) any one of our offices don't know the admission price in those theatres, and they have it as a matter of record right on their booking books.

Q. No question of your knowing what the admission prices were. I am directing your attention now to what you required in the way of maintenance of prices by these affiliated first-run exhibitors that you do business with.

Mr. Proskauer: I am objecting to that as argumentative and repetitious.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Q. (Continuing) As a matter of fact, in the great majority of the contracts you made with affiliated first-runs in this 1943-44 season you did not insert in the contract a minimum admission price that they had to charge; you know that? A. It should have been there. That is what the clause is put on there for and that is what the space is provided for and our instructions were it should have been on all contracts.

Q. As a matter of fact, you do give your first-run customers who happened to be affiliated with another distributor a great deal of latitude in the admission prices that they charge, isn't that right?

Mr. Proskauer: I object to that as incompetent and calling for a conclusion.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

A. We don't give them any more than anybody else, whether (1675) they are independent or a small town or subsequent-run. They are all treated alike in that respect as any other.

Q. What you do, I take it, is reflected in the contracts that you made? A. Should be reflected there.

Q. In so far as you did not insert a minimum admission price requirement in the contract, then I suppose the maintenance of any price was simply a matter for further negotiation or adjustment between you and the exhibitor, is that right? A. It would be. I am positive——

Mr. Davis: Will you read that question?

A. (Continuing) No, I assume that our branch knew and understood that the same price was going to be maintained that has been established in the theatre.

Q. That was, then, just an informal or implied understanding that customary prices would be maintained by those accounts where you omitted to state the minimum admission price? A. Yes; and I should think it would go even further. It would be more than an understanding. They would assume it was a fact and a part of the negotiations, part of the license, even though it might not be there.

Q. With reference to this 25-cent price that is specified for subsequent-runs there which follow 30 days, that, I take it, of course, is a minimum price, isn't that right? A. I (1676) would assume so, yes.

Q. That is, 25 cents or more—if he charges 25 cents or more, he can play 30 days after first-run, is that right? A. Is that what it says?

Q. I will read it again. All it says is, "30 days clearance in New London providing any subsequent-run house charges an admission price of not less than 25 cents for their entire orchestra at weekly night performances; if 20 cents, 120 days." Now I take it means if his price goes down to 20 cents— A. He goes back.

Q. (Continuing) —he is shoved back to 120 days. But suppose he raises his price from 25 cents to 30 cents, then what happens? A. It would be a matter of negotiation with us whether he would think it good business on our part. I assume in that situation, I am not as closely familiar with it as perhaps I should be, but it would be up to us to decide whether it would be good business on our part.

Q. Actually, if he charges 50 cents, he still cannot play ahead of 30 days after this first-run, can he? A. It would be a matter of negotiation. I should think the first-run would be glad to have him go up in his admission. Certainly would be better for him.

Q. I understand he would be glad to have him go up in his admission, but he would not be glad to have him play within the 30-day period, would he? A. No, he would like (1677) the given amount of protection, naturally, I would assume. He established that for the prior runs, were accustomed to getting it, and the public know about it, so he would naturally want that 30 days.

Q. Under this agreement I just read to you, he gets that 30 days protection whether the independent subsequent-run charges 25, 30 cents or 40 cents, is that right?

Mr. Caskey: That is objected to as purely speculative. There is no suggestion that in fact he did charge more or that he asked for anything. Mr. Kupper has repeatedly testified that if he did in fact charge the higher admission price, then the clearance would be a matter of negotiation, but how that negotiation would come out is purely speculative.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Q. I am directing your attention to the situation under this particular contract, not under some contract that you may negotiate in the future.

Mr. Wright: Now will you read the question?

Q. (Read.) A. He gets that protection, because the next fellow cannot get it any quicker, unless he charges more than 25 cents.

Q. So, regardless of what he charges—— A. That is right, regardless of what he charges, that is written in the contract, he has got 30 days protection, any theatre charging (1678) a certain figure there.

Q. Of course, when you are negotiating the contracts in the first instance, the admission price that he charges——

Mr. Proskauer: Mr. Wright, we cannot hear a word you say.

Q. (Continuing) When you are negotiating contracts in the first instance with any exhibitor, the price that he is charging or proposes to charge is an element in the negotiations, is that not right? A. Yes.

Q. And you recall that there have been systems of runs and clearances where the admission price actually did determine availability?

Mr. Caskey: That is objected to. Not any proof of any such thing in this case, that I know of.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Mr. Caskey: Certainly should be made specific as to what he is talking about.

Q. Do you remember the question?

Mr. Wright: Will you read it?

The Witness: I think the question was—read it, it is easier.

Q. (Read.) A. Yes, there were.

Q. That was true in those early days in the 20s you were referring to where you say there were runs and clearances and anybody who wanted to charge a certain price could (1679) have the picture on a certain run, isn't that right? A. Not anybody, no, but they were agreed upon, certain runs they could play at a certain specified time if they would charge a certain admission.

Q. I call your attention to Kansas City prior to 1935. Now, it is a fact, is it not, that that was one of the last places or last areas in the country where the pictures were released on a basis so that anybody who charged a certain admission would get the films at the same time as anybody else who charged the same price, isn't that right? A. I believe Kansas City was one of the last areas that had such an arrangement.

Q. Then along about the year 1935 Elmer Rhoden, the Fox manager out there, decided that he did not like that system, isn't that right? A. I don't know whether he decided or whether we decided we didn't like it, as far as we were concerned, and changed it. I don't recall exactly now who was responsible for it, but I know it was changed.

Q. A request for the change came from Rhoden, did it not? A. Maybe it did.

Q. Rhoden didn't like the idea of these independent theatres playihg day and date with some of the subsequent runs that Fox was operating, isn't that right?

Mr. Caskey: That is objected to. That certainly cannot be competent testimony, whether Mr. Kupper——

Judge Hand: Overruled.

A. I don't know what Rhoden liked or didn't like. He didn't tell me about it.

Mr. Caskey: Have you a copy of Judge Otis's opinion to hand up, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: I would be glad to have the Court read Judge Otis's opinion. I don't propose to examine the witness on it.

Q. Then, in any event, you had some consultations with Rhoden about setting up a new system of clearance in Kansas City, is that right? A. Well, if we had consultations, we did—discussions, I will put it that way, probably about his clearance in all his theatres in the City from time to time. I don't know whether that is the date or around that period. We have had discussions on it, and I know a lot of local people have had discussions on it.

Q. When you got through with the discussions you came out with a clearance system something like this: where the pictures played first-run and then they went into a Fox house for an exclusive second-run, and then they went into another house, Fox house, for an exclusive third run, isn't that right, before they were released or made available to (1681) any independent exhibitors in Kansas City? A. I think we did sell in that sequence to our own theatres first, yes.

Q. Not only you but all the other major distributors after the 1935-1936 season adopted this method of selling so that Fox would have an exclusive second and third-run in the town, isn't that right? A. Well, I don't know what they all did. It is a matter of record what they did, I should think, and if we did it, that is it; and if they did it, that is it.

Q. You know that is what you did anyway? A. I am pretty certain we sold that sequence of runs, yes.

Q. In which Fox had the second and third exclusively? A. Yes. I recall distinctly that we have sold Rhoden right along second-runs in the Plaza Theatre, even before this date you are talking about, and I also remember we sold him third-run.

Q. You know that Rockhill Theatre in Kansas City? A. I remember the name Rockhill.

Q. That was brought to the attention of the Court here on a chart. That was run by Rhoden for quite a number of years as a 15-cent house, wasn't it? A. I don't know. It may have been. I wouldn't doubt it. Probably was.

Q. And played, when it did, it played behind the independent Bijou there, that was charging 25 cents? A. It may have. I don't recall. Probably did, and that is what——
(1682)

Q. Later on, in about 1940, you recall the admission price of the Rockhill was raised to 25 cents? A. I don't remember that, no, sir.

Q. You don't remember when it was? A. No, I don't remember. If it was raised, it was raised. I don't remember.

Q. You recall it was raised to 25 cents? A. Yes, I think it was. I am quite sure it was, now.

Q. Then when Rhoden or Fox changed the admission price of the Rockhill, then it took a very substantial clearance over the Bijou, isn't that right, and moved it up ahead? A. I don't recall exactly what it was. I am sure they must have taken some clearance.

Q. You remember moving it up, that was moved up ahead of the Bijou, and taking clearance over the Bijou after they changed the price? A. I don't remember, but it could be possible.

Q. Do you have any recollection on it at all? A. It is vague to me right now, very vague to me, but I do know the theatre, and I know we sold it a run. I can remember, I am pretty sure, it was a 25-cent admission. I recall that.

Q. You know that the run was moved up ahead of the independent 25-cent run? A. No, I don't know that. I would have to find out.

Q. I think you said in Kansas City you played your first runs there with Fox. In the Fox houses you have a simultaneous first-run in three different theatres sometimes, is that right? A. In Kansas City, Missouri, there are two. There is another house over the boundary. It isn't in Kansas City, Missouri. It makes three we play.

Q. What is that other house over the boundary? A. It is a house that has been opened not so long ago, and I haven't seen it myself. It is in the new area out there that has been developed since the war, quite a new, extensive area.

Q. What is the name of it? A. I think it is the Fairview.

Q. The Fairway? A. Fairway, or something like that. I haven't seen it. I haven't been there.

Q. That is just over the border in Kansas, but in a suburban area of Kansas City? A. Yes, that is right.

Q. That was where, in the same area, where Mr. Dickinson has his Dickinson theatre there, the Mission? A. I think he had the Mission out there. I don't know just where it is. I never did see that, but I know he had a theatre out there.

Q. And you recall when Mr. Dickinson built and opened (1684) his theatre, the Mission, he had to play 56 days after first-run Kansas City, Missouri, didn't he? A. I guess he did. I don't recall; if that was the clearance, that is what it was. I don't recall offhand. I know he had to play some time.

Q. And his theatre is not far from the Fairway, is it? A. As I said, I haven't seen either one. I don't know the area myself. I only know what I hear about it, and I don't know. I guess it is a good theatre, but I don't think it is as good as this—one that could be set up as a first-run.

Q. What do you hear as to the distance between them? A. I think they are pretty close. I don't think they are so far apart.

Q. Your Fairway Theatre there today is playing these pictures at the same time as downtown, Kansas, while Dickinson follows downtown Kansas City after a very substantial interval of time; you know that, don't you? A. Yes, I know that, yes.

Q. When you gave this testimony about the history of all these first-run situations, did you mean to give the Court the impression that during, let us say, the last ten years, or during this period you have covered, your product was being played in the same theatres all the time? A. I tried to give the impression to the Court that our accounts—I tried to tell the Court where the product was playing right now, and I tried to show the historical background, if it was the account. Certainly some of these theatres that we originally sold could have gone out of business but the same ownership might still be in these other theatres.

Q. The theatre situation is, of course, changed from year to year? A. Some places, and they don't change so very often.

Q. There are new ones built and sometimes some are dropped? A. You couldn't build so many in the last few years.

Q. You did not undertake to tell the Court, as I recall it, what happened to your pictures in the cases where theatres which had been using—had first-run, were either lost by the first-run account or dropped out of the first-run pool that was showing them? A. I tried to tell the Court and explain to the Court the exact situation as it existed, as I knew it.

Q. I did not see in your printed testimony or what you said on the stand any mention as to the Oriental Theatre there in Chicago. A. That is right, I gave none.

Q. It is a fact, is it not, that your pictures had been shown first-run in the Oriental when it was a Balaban & Katz house and after it ceased to be a Balaban & Katz house, they weren't shown first-run in the Oriental? A. I think there were some shown there. There weren't many; there were some played, I am quite positive. Had, I think, a vaudeville picture policy, though I am not sure now. That is going back to 1935. I was not responsible for that area at the time. I think it was 1935, right?

Q. I think it was about 1938 when Balaban & Katz lost its interest in the house. A. Well, somewhere in that neighborhood.

Q. Since that time you have not had any regular first-run of your pictures in the Oriental Theatre at all, have you? A. No, we have not.

Q. Although that is the newest and best located theatre in that town, isn't it, and the next to the largest? A. Yes, it is a large house and a well appointed house.

Q. And in many others of these situations—you neglected to cover in your little history there what happened to the Roxy in Atlanta during the 1938-1939 season. You recall that? A. Before I go to that, do you want me to finish Chicago?

Q. Was there something you wanted to say about Chicago that you did not say in your other testimony? A. No, but I do recall Balaban & Katz operated the Oriental for a while, but I do recall they did not work out and they dropped the house, and somebody else, Johnnie Jones, I think, as a matter of fact, I think wanted to buy our product but we had the established account in the situation, B. & K., who had other theatres and could absorb our product. We were satisfied to keep our account there with B. & K.

Q. In Atlanta, do you recall that Roxy Theatre? A. Yes, sir, I do.

Q. I think you described it as a smaller theatre there. Actually it has 2400 seats? A. The Roxy Theatre—is that the theatre, now, right near the big department store?

Q. It is in Atlanta. That is all I know about it. A. It is right between the hotel and that big department store. I know the theatre very well. As a matter of fact, a friend of mine owns the property. His name is Bob Meyers, and a big hotel operator. He came to me and asked me to help him and advise him after Lucas and Jenkins dropped the theatre, and I helped him, and I sold him pictures, and then he decided to lease it back to Lucas and Jenkins, who had the lease originally, and I helped out and advised him and got him pictures, gave him some of our pictures, even though they were contracts.

Q. You advised him to lease it back to Lucas and Jenkins? A. No. I told him if he could get a good lease—he is not a theatre operator; he is a hotel operator. It is the only theatre, the only one, he ever had any interest in. He asked me for my advice, and he said he couldn't get the theatre leased. I said, "Run the theatre." I like to see competition in those towns—any towns. I told him to go ahead and run it, "and I am sure you can get pictures. You may not possibly get all the best," but I got him some pictures.

Q. What were the pictures that you got him? A. Those that Lucas and Jenkins didn't run, or behind that. They weren't our top grade pictures, by any means.

Q. You got him pictures that the other first-run houses didn't want there? A. I gave him pictures, yes; those that were available, that they didn't use, I sold them to him quick.

Q. And not only that they did not use but that they did not want? A. All right, that they did not want, yes.

Q. And I take it those pictures of that quality were not enough to make his operation there a success? A. I don't know about that. He ran it until the time Lucas and Jenkins re-leased it at a great, substantial, increase in rent. I understand that he is now out of the theatre business again.

Q. You know he ran it unsuccessfully? A. No, I don't. I think he was doing pretty well. I think he was getting by all right, from what he told me.

Q. You knew that he could not get the quality of pictures for that theatre from you or any other major distributor? A. He wasn't going to get mine—I beg your pardon.

Q. Let me finish the question. A. All right, pardon me.

Q. You knew, as a matter of fact, that he could not get from you or any other major distributor the quality of pictures that he had to have to let him compete on an equal basis with Paramount? A. I did not know what he could get from any other distributor. I told him personally myself that he was not going to get ours, because I was going to continue selling the Fox theatre. What he could do with somebody else, I didn't know.

Q. What do you do, Mr. Kupper, when somebody wants to put a new theatre in, or does put a new theatre in one of these so-called established account situations? A. Well, sell him some run, if he wants to buy my product.

Q. "Some run"? A. Yes.

Q. That is, last run in the area, behind everybody else who is what you call established? A. Could be. If I have customers that take care of all the other runs, could be the last run.

Q. How about if he becomes affiliated, then what do you do? A. I think we would take it on the same basis.

Q. Do you recall, do you know the situation, in Engle wood, California? A. I know we have a couple of theatres out there.

Q. One of them you acquired in 1941, didn't you? A. I don't know the exact date.

Q. Fifth Avenue? A. I think so. Somewhere around that time. I know we acquired some theatre.

Q. When it was first built, the operator of that theatre tried to get a first-run in that area from you and you would not even negotiate with him, isn't that right? A. I don't remember. Didn't negotiate with me direct. May have tried to negotiate with some representative of our company. I don't recall.

Q. You know you didn't make any Fox films available to him for first-run in that area at the time he first completed it? A. I don't think so.

Q. And then after he sold the theatre, or an interest in it, to Fox, then you made films available to him first-run there and for a move-over from the Fox first-run in that area, isn't that right? A. I believe we did.

Q. When you talk about selecting customers and dealing the same way with affiliated houses that you do with independents, you don't mean that you make any of these deals blindfolded, do you? A. Blindfolded?

Q. You know who you are dealing with in each case and what his connections are, isn't that right? A. I should think we should.

Q. Part of your business to know that? A. Should know, yes.

Q. And who he is makes a great deal of difference in what you do, doesn't it? A. Sometimes I would say so, yes.

Q. And that may sometimes be a far more important factor than the physical characteristics of the theatre or theatres that he happens to be operating? A. I don't know about that.

Q. You know that is a fact, don't you? A. I don't think it is a fact. It might be.

Q. You remember what happened in Janesville, Wisconsin? A. In Zanesville?

Q. In Janesville. A. I think we had some theatres there and then lost them or they were taken over, but I don't remember.

Q. You had an account there that had the two largest theatres in the town, and then another theatre became affiliated with Fox, Fox had a 40 per cent interest and did the booking for it, do you remember? A. I don't remember it. If they had an interest in it, I would say we sold it.

Q. Yes. A. As long as we had to retain an interest or acquire an interest in a theatre, I should think we would sell our product there.

Q. You know that after Fox acquired a 40 per cent interest in the smaller and inferior house, then you sold that house, didn't you? A. If that is the case, we did.

Q. And continued to sell it? A. I think that is the case. I am not positive.

Q. And then finally Fox was able to buy the other two houses and you have what is called a closed town there? A. I believe it is. I believe we have all the theatres there.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Caskey:

Q. Mr. Kupper, in Boston, it appears from your testimony that approximately one-third of the product you sold to RKO and two-thirds you sold to M. & P. Who determined the division or proportion of one-third and two-thirds? A. We did.

Q. And in Albany there is a division of, I understand, two-thirds to Fabian and one-third to Warner? A. That is right.

Q. Who determined that proportion? A. We did.

Q. Calling your attention to Youngstown, Ohio, Mr. Wright asked a question whether you sold to the pool in Youngstown. There is a pool, as you understand it? A. Yes, between Shea and Warners.

Q. Who do you consider your customer? A. Shea.

Q. Do you sell to the pool? A. We sell Ed Grainger, who is head of the circuit there. We sell direct to him. We don't sell any pool.

Q. In each of these situations in which there is a pool prior to the arrangement between the exhibitors, you had an established customer? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the customer made some arrangement in the community with other operators whereby your pictures were played in better theatres? A. That is true.

Q. That is true in Jersey City? A. It is true in most all of them. Even in Youngstown, which we just got out of, the Warner theatre is a better theatre than the Park.

Q. Why doesn't Shea have a move-over theatre in Pittsburgh? A. Well, I don't know why. He has none available as far as I can say.

Q. Do you grant Mr. Harris the privilege of a move-over and not the Shea interest? A. No, sir. If Shea had a house that you could move over into, we certainly would let him have it, too. He just doesn't have the theatre.

Q. And one of the requirements of a move-over is that it shall charge the same admission price as the house from (1694) which it is moved? A. That is correct.

Q. And there is a limit in every community as to how long a picture can play at the advanced admission price? A. I think that is pretty well established.

Q. Today and for some years you have been selling your pictures in small blocks? A. Yes.

Q. And at the time that they are sold to the second and subsequent runs, have they been trade shown? A. Yes.

Q. And who the first-run account in the city is is well known in the trade? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the number of theatres he has is well known? A. Well known and well established fact.

Q. So that when you sell second-run in Boston, the exhibitor knows in fact, first of all, that only the best pictures are going to be moved over? A. He knows that.

Q. And, second, he knows that, in fact, the only place they are going to be moved over from is from the Metropolitan to the Paramount and Fenway? A. He knows that.

Q. And at most the number of pictures that could be played on any theory of a violation of second-run contract would be two or three? A. That is right—with those that are moved over, if that is what you mean.

Q. Yes. Without making excuses, it is a fact that a great many of the records and reports and forms of the company have not been kept in precise and apple-pie order (1695) during the last few years? A. Definitely. The help situation has been terrible. And they come in and walk out on you. It is an awful problem, help today. You have a lot of inexperienced help. And we have lost a lot of good help who went into the services. We are behind, way behind, in a lot of our things, in regular ordinary things that we have had to let slide behind to take care of the more important things.

Q. Has any exhibitor in this country complained to you about the fact that the prior run affiliated theatres during the 1943-44 and 1944-45 seasons were charging too low an admission price? A. No, sir.

Q. Has any exhibitor who has followed one of these affiliated exhibitors, where the contract was not filled out with the admission price, been prejudiced or injured by the omission, say, to fill out the contract?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, that is a legal conclusion that this man cannot possibly draw.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

A. I don't know of any.

Q. No one has complained? A. Not to me.

Mr. Caskey: I believe that is all.

By Mr. Proskauer:

Q. Just a question or two. You referred to the time in the middle '30s when you had a break with the Warners. (1696)
Do you remember that? A. Yes, I do.

Q. You did not sell them any pictures for two years approximately, wasn't it? A. I think something like that. Sometimes we did not sell them at all.

Q. Then you sold your pictures to other people? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And after about two years you began to sell your pictures to Warners again? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it a fact that after you resumed relations with Warners you continued relations with some of the people to whom you had—with whom you had made new relations after that break and, in some instances, you returned to your relations with Warner Bros.? A. I know there were a great many we retained our relationship with.

Q. With the new people? A. The new ones that we had established, and we even do today.

Q. And in some cases you resumed the old relationship with Warners? A. There may have been—yes, we did.

Q. So you determined that question on the basis of what was more advantageous to you? A. That is right.

Mr. Caskey: If the Court please, there are two specific situations which were called to Mr. Kupper's attention, that I am unfamiliar with. If overnight I find anything that should be inquired about, I will ask (1697)
Mr. Kupper to come back, but with that reservation I am through with him.

Now, Mr. Wright, I have in court Mr. A. W. Smith, Jr. Will you stand up, Mr. Smith? And I will either call him, or, if you prefer, stipulate that if called, that he would answer the same questions which have been propounded to Mr. Zukor and Mr. Skouras in the negative.

Mr. Wright: So stipulated.

Judge Bright: Who is Mr. A. W. Smith?

Mr. Caskey: Maybe I had better ask him that question, at any rate.

Judge Hand: Can't you state that?

Mr. Caskey: Yes. Mr Smith is Eastern sales manager of Twentieth Century-Fox and has jurisdiction over the exchanges in the Eastern part of the country. Is there anything else you would like to ask him?

Judge Bright: What does that mean, Eastern part of the country?

Mr. A. W. Smith, Jr.: I have charge of sales in the following territories: New York, Washington, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, New Haven, Boston, Albany and Buffalo.

Mr. Caskey: Anything else?

Judge Bright: I just wanted to know who he was.

Mr. Caskey: Mr. Connors——

(1698)

Judge Bright: Has that stipulation been made?

Mr. Caskey: The stipulation was made, with respect to Mr. Smith?

Mr. Wright: Oh, yes.

Mr. Caskey: Then Mr. Connors, the vice-president in charge of distribution, member of the executive board, and a director of Twentieth Century-Fox. May we have the same stipulation, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: All right.

Mr. Caskey: Are there any questions the Court would like to ask him? He is here for that purpose.

I will have some more in the morning. This happens to be a convenient place to stop.

Judge Hand: You have what?

Mr. Caskey: I will have at least two witnesses tomorrow morning and I have several stipulations.

Judge Hand: We will adjourn until tomorrow morning at ten-thirty.

New York, October 31, 1945;
10:30 o'clock a.m.

Trial resumed.

Mr. Caskey: If your Honors please, Mr. Wright's associates have called my attention to page 1592 of the stenographic minutes, and we have agreed that the 14th line from the top should read—I shall read the whole paragraph—"By the way, we have sold a few pictures to Loew's when we had—not Loew's; I mean we didn't sell Loew's; we sold some, because we couldn't get together with Mr. Richards, with his buyer, Mr. Gaston Dureau."

Judge Hand: Wait a minute. "to, I think, his competitor" goes out?

Mr. Caskey: Yes, and the words "with his buyer" in their place.

And then the word "They" in the next line should be "Loew's." "Loew's played the picture at advanced admission."

And on page 1645, at the third line from the bottom, the answer should read, "They have a percentage the same as we have nationally for the branch.

I offer in evidence Exhibit F-5 for identification.

Mr. Wright: No objection.

(Defendant Twentieth Century-Fox's Exhibit F-5 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Caskey: Referring to the testimony regarding the Capitol Theatre in New London, Connecticut, about which Mr. Kupper was examined, I wish to call the Court's attention that in evidence and on the same schedule that Mr. Wright read from appears the fact that the Capitol Theatre charged an actual admission price exclusive of tax of 45 cents first-run in New London when exhibiting Bombers Moon, Heaven Can Wait, Holy Matrimony and Sweet Rosie O'Grady.

Mr. Wright, I hand you a form of contract which is used by Twentieth Century-Fox currently after the first block of pictures has been sold to the exhibitor.

Mr. Wright: That is the one gotten up by salesman Sanders? Won't you have it marked?

Mr. Caskey: I will offer it.

(Marked Defendant Twentieth Century-Fox's Exhibit F-14.)

Mr. Caskey: Plaintiff's counsel and we have stipulated as to the testimony of Mr. Joseph M. Schenck; and I hand the stipulation to the reporter and ask that it be copied into the stenographic minutes.

(The stipulation referred to is as follows:)

"It is hereby stipulated between the attorneys for the plaintiff and the defendants, Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and National Theatres Corporation, that, if called, Joseph M. Schenck would testify as follows:

"Q. What is your name and address? A. Joseph M. Schenck. I reside at No. 720 North Foothill Drive, Beverly Hills, California.

"Q. What is your occupation? A. I am an executive in the production department of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation.

"Q. How long have you been engaged in producing motion pictures? A. Since 1916.

"Q. When did you first have any connection with Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation? A. In 1935. I was one of the three stockholders of Twentith Century Pictures, Inc. which was producing motion pictures and releasing them through United Artists Corporation, of which I was also president. In August, 1935, Twentieth Century Pictures, Inc. sold all its assets to Fox Film Corporation, which changed its name to Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, Mr. Darryl Zanuck, Mr. William Goetz and I received stock in exchange, and we entered into employment contracts, agreeing to supervise the production of motion pictures for the company. Shortly thereafter, I became Chairman of the Board of Directors. I am no longer an officer nor a director of the company and I have sold all of my stock. I am, however, still an executive in the Studio.

"Q. How long ago was United Artists Theatre Circuit formed? A. To my best recollection 1926.

"Q. That was shortly after you became president of United Artists Corporation, the distributor? A. I think a couple of years after that.

"Q. Who else was active with you in forming the United Artists Theatre Circuit, if anyone? A. Sidney Grauman, Lee Shubert, William Phillips, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks.

"Q. And you were the principal stockholder after it was formed, were you not? A. When it was first formed I think that Pickford and Fairbanks jointly had as much stock as I had and Sidney Grauman had as much as I did.

"Q. You owned a third approximately? A. No, less than a third. I think I owned one-fifth of that stock. But subsequently I bought Grauman out.

"Q. And when was that? A. Grauman had 80,000 shares and I think I had 80,000 shares and I bought him out because he got cold feet.

"Q. That was about when? A. He never oper-(1703) ated—he was to operate the theatres, but he didn't wait that long.

"Q. This was right after the corporation was organized? A. Right. His chief reason was that he didn't want to leave California. He liked California too much.

"Q. What was the purpose of organizing the United Artists Theatres Circuit at that time? A. At that time there were but very few theatres in the United States that ran a picture longer than one week.

"Q. This was in 1926? A. 1926 I think, and if there were theatres there were so many pictures made by other companies that were also desirous of running their pictures longer than a week in a theatre that we did not get in often enough to those theatres that would run a picture more than a week.

"Q. When you say 'we' you are referring to the United Artists pictures? A. I mean the United Artists pictures, and we felt that we needed theatres that would be ready and willing to run our pictures for an indefinite period or at least as long as the public would patronize them in a paying mass, you might say. And we decided that we would build first-run theatres of a certain capacity, that capacity being between 1500 and 2000 seats, where we could run a picture or where we could exhibit a picture for a long run.

"Q. How did you fix on that particular capacity of 1500 to 2000 as desirable for your purposes? A. Well, there was sort of an inclination at that time on the part of every exhibitor to have theatres of very large capacity, such as four or five thousand seats. In a theatre of that kind no picture could run more than a week. You couldn't expect it. And their picture was exhibited with either vaudeville acts or stage show and we wanted our pictures to play without a stage show and without vaudeville acts and play in a theatre of such capacity that would permit a run of a picture for a long period of time, for a sort of a show window in many big cities for our product and to get a cumulative advertising and importance through the picture being a long-run picture.

"Q. Well, was it just from the standpoint of advertising value that you thought a long run in a smaller house was more desirable than a short run in a larger one, or was it a question of increased revenue? A. Increased revenue also because if a theatre runs a vaudeville show or a stage show with a picture a great deal of the receipts taken in at the box office go to pay for that stage show or vaudeville show of which we couldn't expect to get a percentage.

"Q. And after United Artists Theatres Circuit was organized it proceeded to acquire theatres of the type you have just described? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. About how many? Do you remember? A. 15 theatres.

"Q. Do you remember where they were located? A. Located in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Detroit, Chicago, Baltimore, Columbus, Portland, Seattle, Pittsburgh, Louisville, New York. That is about all I can remember.

"Q. Well, there was only one in each town that you went into though? A. Well, some towns we had more than one because we took a 50 per cent interest with another company in some of the towns.

"Q. And which towns were those? A. Like Baltimore and Columbus.

"Q. And whom did you take the interest with? A. With Loew Company.

"Q. And were there any other situations in which you were jointly interested with Loew? A. In New York, two theatres—the Rivoli and the Rialto—with the Paramount Company.

"Q. And these theatres that you acquired in the other towns were all named the United Artists Theatre in each case? A. In most cases they were named United Artists Theatres.

"Q. After they were acquired they then entered into long term franchises with United Artists Corporation? A. Yes, sir, ten-year franchise. That wasn't after but before we organized we made that or simultaneously with the organization of that theatre company we got that ten-year franchise because that franchise helped us to finance the acquisition of the theatres.

"Q. And this franchise gave the United Artists Theatres the exclusive right to the first-run exhibition of the United Artists pictures in the towns where they were located? A. Well, all of the producers of United Artists pictures with the exception of Charlie Chaplin, who did not subscribe to it.

"Q. Do you know what Mr. Chaplin's reasons were for not subscribing? A. I invited Chaplin to take an interest in the United Artists Theatres and he didn't want to do it. And I also wanted him—asked him to join that franchise and he refused to do that and I couldn't possibly give you his reasons for it because he didn't know them himself.

"Q. Can you give us the conversation you had with him as best you can remember on that subject? A. Charlie refused to sign any papers. He was perfectly willing to subscribe to it without putting his name on paper.

"Q. Well, he didn't say anything at the time in reference to why he would not put his name on paper? A. He signed a couple of contracts years prior to that and they did not turn out quite as good as he wanted them to turn out. In fact, he had them changed in the middle of the contract—improved them—and he made up his mind he never would sign any papers.

"Q. Wasn't there any discussion with him as to the desirability of United Artists producers entering the exhibition field? A. Oh, he approved of the plan. The plan was perfectly all right for everybody else but himself because he didn't want to commit himself to the future. At the time he thought it was all right, but he didn't know how it would turn out in the future, what changes would come about in the industry, and he didn't want to be committed to any permanent plan.

"Q. Are these franchises or the one franchise which controlled all of the situations, was that for a ten-year period? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Did the United Artists Theatres Corporation execute a series of franchises with the United Artists Corporation or was there one franchise which covered all of the United Artists Theatres? A. One franchise.

"Q. There was a separate franchise executed with the United Artists Theatre in Chicago, wasn't there? A. No, there was no separate franchise.

"Q. You still have the same interest in the United Artists Theatres Circuit, now? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And what if any changes have there been in the theatre holdings of the Circuit since that time? A. We expanded the Circuit.

"Q. In what way? A. By building a number of theatres in the State of California and by acquisition of a number of theatres in New York, Brooklyn, Long Island, and Jersey.

"Q. And when did this expansion and acquisition that you have referred to occur? A. We built the theatres in California I think in 1932 or 1933.

"Q. What part of California was that? A. In Northern and Southern California.

"Q. Do you remember the names of the cities? A. Los Angeles, San Francisco, Sacramento, Inglewood, Beverly Hills.

"Q. Were those first-run theatres? A. No, sir.

"Q. And these theatres you have referred to in Brooklyn and New York and that territory, when were they acquired? A. They were acquired in 1935, I think.

"Q. They were theatres which had formerly been part of the Fox Metropolitan Theatres Corporation? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And were acquired on a sale of the assets in the Fox Metropolitan bankruptcy proceeding? A. I know that we have acquired them through a plan that was submitted to Judge Mack in one of these courts here and subsequently that plan was approved.

"Q. And the court you are referring to was the court that had the Fox Metropolitan receivership or bankruptcy, was it not? A. I think so.

"Q. Now, these were also subsequent-run theatres, were they not? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What was the purpose of acquiring the subsequent-run theatres you have referred to? A. Originally our purpose in the acquisition of theatres was entirely different, as I recited. But then we had money idle and we wanted to expand purely for the purpose of making money.

"Q. Whom do you refer to as 'we'? A. I mean the United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc.

"Q. And the subsequent-run theatres that you acquired did not enter into any franchise arrangements with the United Artists Corporation? A. No, sir. The franchise for the United Artists pictures had expired about that time and has not been renewed.

"Q. Well, the franchise was made for ten years in 1926 and would have expired in 1936, and these acquisitions that you have referred to according to your testimony occurred before 1936? A. That franchise did not cover anything else but first-run theatres.

"Q. Yes. Are your associates in the ownership of the United Artists Theatre Circuit the same today as the ones you previously mentioned? A. I think there is a slight change in the stockholders. Gloria Swanson does not own stock. Miss Pickford is still a stockholder. Goldwyn is still a stockholder. I am a stockholder. Bill Phillips is still a stockholder.

"Q. Do any of the defendants in this suit have a financial interest in the United Artists Theatre Circuit today? A. No, sir.

"Q. What is the relationship between United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. and Metropolitan Playhouses? A. The United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. owns 50 per cent of the Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc.

"Q. What other corporations does United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. have an interest in? A. In the Robb & Rowley Circuit of theatres we have a 50 per cent interest.

"Q. Do you have any financial interest in any other motion picture enterprises besides Twentieth Century-Fox Film and United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. A. No.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to restrain competition in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures in the United States? A. No.

tive terms? A. No.

"Q. Has there been any agreement or understanding to your knowledge to withhold any of the production personnel and equipment from any producer of motion pictures? A. No.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to exclude independent producers from access to production personnel and to withhold production equipment owned by the defendants or any of them on the same terms on which they are made available to the defendants in this case? A. No.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to fix the terms upon which motion pictures would be licensed for exhibition to any exhibitor in the United States? A. No.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement among the defendants or any of them to license any pictures for exhibition in any theatre before the pictures have been produced and before any exhibitor has had a fair opportunity to estimate the value and character of the films licensed and before such films have been completed or tradeshown? A. No.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to condition the licensing of one or more films or group of films upon the licensing of another film or group of films? A. No.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to enter into long term franchises with circuits of theatres or to suppress competition offered by competing theatres during the terms of such long term franchises or to preclude independent distributors from licensing their pictures to those circuit theatres? A. No.

affiliated with any producer-exhibitor with respect to run, clearance, license fees or any other terms of licensing? A. No, sir.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any two or more of them to license pictures for exhibition in the theatres in which one of the defendants had an interest, on condition or in consideration of another licensing its pictures with respect to the pictures distributed by the other? A. No.

and towns where affiliated theatres are located? A. No.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to use the first and early run affiliated theatres to control the film supply, run, clearance and admission price of operators of competing unaffiliated theatres in the cities and towns where affiliated theatres are located, or elsewhere? A. No.

Stipulation as to Testimony of Joseph M. Schenck

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them as to the terms upon which each or any of them would license their film to unaffiliated exhibitors? A. No.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to deprive any theatre operator of the supply of film or to withhold film from an unaffiliated exhibitor or to limit the terms and conditions on which licenses would be made to any unaffiliated exhibitor? A. No.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to divide the available films among the affiliated theatres owned or controlled by two or more producer-exhibitor defendants located in the same competitive area without competitive negotiations? A. No.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge an agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them not to compete with one another in the licensing of motion pictures to be exhibited in cities or towns where two or more of them had interests in theatres? A. No.

Judge Bright: Mr. Caskey, yesterday, you offered some forms of licenses, I think, that covered up to and including the 1933-1934 season?

Mr. Caskey: Yes, sir.

Judge Bright: Was the form of license from then on the same until the current license?

Mr. Caskey: No, sir. The form of license from the 1933-1934 season through the 1940-41 season was substantially the same. I make the reservation that there may have been changes of phraseology or grammar; but the form and the method of selling was the same. And then a new contract form was prepared for the 1941-1942 season, which is the first year of selling under the consent decree.

Judge Bright: Do we have that form?

Mr. Caskey: You have an excerpt—we have it here.

Mr. Wright: We put in evidence, if the Court please, the 1936-1937 form and the 1943-1944 form.

Mr. Caskey: That is right. Is that in evidence?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Bright: That is in your appendix.

Colloquy

Mr. Wright: The licenses themselves are in evidence——

Mr. Caskey: The 1943-1944 one is in evidence.

There are a great many of them in evidence.

Mr. Wright: 1936-1937 is also in evidence.

Mr. Caskey: Sir?

Mr. Wright: 1936-1937 is also in evidence.

Mr. Caskey: That is right. And there is no change from 1941-1942 to 1943-1944.

Judge Bright: The reason why I asked the question was that in comparing in this appendix of the Government, in comparing your form for 1936-1937 and 1943-1944, there does not seem to be any provision in the 1943-1944 with reference to what will be done if an exhibitor reduces his admission. That is so far as this printed book is concerned.

Mr. Caskey: Suppose I get a copy for all the years and submit them at some convenient time. My recollection is that there is a penalty clause. My recollection is if he reduces the admission price he may be required to pay based upon a percentage of the agreed admission price; and he is subject to termination of the contract, and his clearance may be reduced.

Judge Bright: Well, I do not recall seeing that in this printed book in the 1943-1944 abstract.

Mr. Wright: My recollection corresponds with Mr. Caskey's. It may be that the summary in the appendix does not reflect it, but the agreement itself is in evidence as Exhibit 276, which is the 1943-1944 form, and No. 275 is the 1936-1937.

Judge Bright: We haven't had access so far to those forms. I was just reading out of your appendix.

Mr. Wright: Yes. It is possible our appendix was at fault in that respect, in not pointing out the provision of the agreement.

Judge Bright: I went over it hurriedly, when we were discussing admission prices during the taking of testimony, and I may have skipped it, but I did not see it.

Mr. Caskey: I am reading now from the 1943-1944 contract, which is Exhibit 276:

"The Exhibitor during the whole of the licensed exhibition period of the licensed pictures hereunder shall charge for admission per person to said theatre the following prices:

EVENINGS: Adults, Orchestra .. Balcony ..; Children, Orchestra .. Balcony ..

MATINEES: Adults, Orchestra .. Balcony ..; Children, Orchestra .. Balcony ..

"If during any such period less than said admission prices is charged, the Distributor in addition to all other rights hereunder shall have the right: (a) to terminate the license of the picture then being exhibited, by written notice to such effect to the Exhibitor and upon the giving of such notice, the license of such picture shall forthwith terminate and revert to the Distributor; or (b) provided the Exhibitor is granted herein a period of 'clearance' to reduce such period by not to exceed one-half in respect to each of the licensed pictures thereafter deliverable hereunder; or (c) provided no period of clearance is specified in the Schedule to withhold, for a period not to exceed sixty (60) days notice of the date when each picture thereafter deliverable hereunder will be available for exhibition by the Exhibitor; and as to each such picture the 'run' thereof, if any, granted the Exhibitor, shall be deemed revoked and the Exhibitor agrees to exhibit each such picture after notice of the available date thereof upon the date or dates determined as provided in paragraph 7 hereof; if Distributor does not elect to terminate the license of the picture then being exhibited, as provided in subdivision (a) of this paragraph, the Exhibitor shall account for all admissions to said theatre during the exhibition of such picture on the basis of the admission prices hereinabove stipulated."

Judge Bright: That is on the face of it?

Mr. Caskey: Yes, sir.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, you will note that those provisions he was reading are substantially the same as those set forth on page 52, at the end of the schedule, in the 1936-37 agreement. Then when we got over to page 60, where we summarized the changes in the schedule in the 1943-44 agreement, we simply noted the changes that were made and then we set up in the bottom, "Schedule is otherwise substantially the same except for substitution of the Consent Decree arbitration procedure." So I think the Appendix does correctly reflect the situation.

Judge Goddard: What does Mr. Schenck's testimony relate to?

Mr. Caskey: Mr. Schenck's testimony primarily relates to the reasons for United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc.——

Judge Goddard: The reasons?

Mr. Caskey: The reasons why United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. built a number of medium sized theatres in various of the principal cities of the United States for the exhibition of United Artists pictures on long runs, or released on longer runs than were then current in the industry. It gives the story of the ownership of United Artists Theatres Circuit, Inc., and as we believe, shows that it is not affiliated with Twentieth Century-Fox. It also details briefly the reasons why United Artists Theatres Circuit, Inc. acquired an interest in the reorganized Metropolitan Playhouses, which was in receivership in this court under Judge Mack's supervision. The reason given is that it was purely an investment.

I have here an affidavit of Felix A. Jenkins, the secretary of Twentieth Century-Fox, which Mr.
(1721)
Wright has agreed may be taken as testimony, and I will hand that to the reporter and ask that it be copied in the stenographic minutes as testimony and not as an affidavit.

Judge Goddard: What is his name and what is his official position?

Mr. Caskey: Felix A. Jenkins. He is the secretary and a director of the corporation.

Judge Goddard: Of Fox?

Mr. Caskey: Yes, sir. This has to do with the history of the company, the ownership of its stock, and it deals with its financial vicissitudes in the late '20s and early '30s, and it details the transactions in 1935 when the company purchased the assets of Twentieth Century Pictures and secured the services of Mr. Zanuck as the head of its production.

(The affidavit referred to is as follows:)

"State of New York, } County of New York, } ss.:

"I, Felix A. Jenkins, being duly sworn, do depose and say:

"I am Secretary and a director of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation. The corporation was organized under the laws of New York on February 1, 1915. Its original capital was $1,500,000, divided into 100,000 shares of $10 par value common stock and 5,000 shares of $100 par value preferred stock.
(1722)

Immediately upon its organization, Fox Film Corporation acquired the assets of Box Office Attraction Film Rental, Inc. and the stock of William Fox Vaudeville Company and the stock of Wonderful Play and Players Company, Inc. The first Board of Directors comprised John C. Eisele and Nathaniel King, both of the Newark investment firm of Eisele & King, Anthony R. Kuser, Thomas N. McCarter, William Fox, Charles S. Levin, Jacob G. Leo (Fox's brother-in-law) and Saul E. Rogers. Winfield Sheehan was general manager. This group managed the corporation until April 7, 1930.

"By June 17, 1919, the preferred stock of the corporation had been retired by redemption. On December 30, 1921, the board of directors approved the acquisition of a first run theatre in Oakland at an investment of between $250,000 and $300,000, and negotiations for the acquisition of a first run theatre in Philadelphia were discussed. These negotiations were unsuccessful and in 1924 a subsidiary commenced the erection of the Fox theatre and office building at Fifteenth and Market Streets in Philadelphia. On July 17, 1924, the directors authorized the acquisition of three theatres in Chicago from Ascher.

"On May 28, 1925, the capital stock was increased to 1,000,000 shares without par value and reclassified into 100,000 shares of class B common stock and 900,000 shares of class A common stock. The class B common stock was given the sole right to vote except as otherwise might be provided by law. The previously outstanding 100,000 shares of common stock were surrendered in exchange for the 100,000 shares of new class B common stock.

"400,000 shares of the new A stock were listed. 235,000 shares were issued as a stock dividend and 165,000 shares were offered to stockholders at $43 a share, Eisele & King agreeing to purchase any shares not subscribed for by stockholders.

"On September 15, 1925, an agreement was approved with Adolph Ramish Inc. and Adolph Ramish for the purchase of 47,000 shares of West Coast Theatres, Inc., and an additional 6,000 shares at the price of $55 a share.

"On December 1, 1925, the acquisition of the preferred stock of Ascher Theatre Circuit for $500,000 was approved. The circuit embraced 19 theatres in Chicago and suburbs. The remaining stockholders of West Coast Theatres, Inc. formed a voting trust and transferred their stock to Wesco Corporation, in exchange for its voting trust certificates thus insuring that Fox Film Corporation could not buy control of West Coast Theatres, Inc.

"On March 5, 1928, all the stock of Wesco Corporation was acquired; 107,029 were purchased at $55 per share, and 187,902 in exchange for 140,926½ shares of Fox Film's A stock. In addition, 1,620 shares were variously acquired bringing Fox's total interest to 100%. Fox Film then donated to Wesco its holding of 88,270 shares of the stock of West Coast Theatres, Inc. at the book value of $4,229,814.61 and Fox Film's investment in Wesco Corporation was fixed at $20,570,267.97.

"In January and February, 1930, the financial affairs of the company were so precarious that a number of actions had been instituted for the appointment of a receiver. Various plans were negotiated for the refinancing of the company and there was much litigation. On April 7, 1930, William Fox sold all of the class B common stock to General Theatres Equipment, Inc. and a new management took over the affairs of the company headed by Harley L. Clarke, who became president.

"By certificate filed with the Secretary of State on April 17, 1930, the previously authorized 1,000,000 shares without par value were increased to 5,000,000 shares and reclassified as 100,000 shares of class B common stock and 4,900,000 shares of class A common stock. The certificate was pursuant to action taken on October 10, 1929, but the certificate was withheld from filing because the company could not at the time afford the payment of the large fee involved. It was filed April 17, 1930, which was the effective date of the refinancing that resulted from the retirement of William Fox from the company by the sale of his stock to General Theatres Equipment, Inc. on April 7, 1930.

"A part of the refinancing of this company in 1930 consisted in the issue of $55,000,000 of one-year notes. The bankers who had purchased them insisted upon their payment and additional financing was necessary. This consisted of the issuance of $30,000,000 of 6% convertible gold debentures and the sale of certain securities to a corporation known as Film Securities Corporation for a stated consideration of $75,000,000, of which $28,000,000 was in cash and the balance in its class A common stock. The proceeds of these two transactions paid the $55,000,000 of one-year notes.

"In the fall of 1931, a new management was installed. Charles E. Richardson became treasurer of the corporation and on November 17, 1931, Edward R. Tinker, a former president of The Chase National Bank of the City of New York, became president.

"On March 22, 1932, Mr. Samuel Burns, the secretary and a vice-president, resigned. On April 1, 1932, Sidney R. Kent became executive vice-president in charge of operations. He later that year became president on Mr. Tinker's resignation.

"On May 5, 1932, the capital of the corporation was reduced from $90,780,000 to $12,628,300, which was $5 per share multiplied by the 2,525,660 shares of stock outstanding. The result was the creation of a huge capital surplus against which reserves for depreciation were set up.

"In 1932, the company was adversely affected by a series of receiverships of related companies. On March 1, 1932, Daniel O. Hastings was appointed receiver of General Theatres Equipment, Inc., which at the time was the largest stockholder of the company. On May 18, 1932, a receiver was appointed of Roxy Theatre Corporation which was this company's first run account in New York City. On June 6, 1932, a receiver was appointed of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc., a company which operated theatres in metropolitan New York and adjacent territory and which played Fox pictures. On June 22, 1932, receivers were appointed of Fox Theatres Corporation. On December 31, 1932, Pacific Northwest Theatres, Inc., a subsidiary of Wesco Corporation filed a petition in bankruptcy. On February 28, 1933, Fox West Coast Theatres the principal subsidiary of Wesco filed a petition in bankruptcy. About the same time Midwesco Theatres, Inc. and Midwest Theatres, Inc., subsidiaries of Wesco, filed petitions in bankruptcy.

"In 1933, the financial condition of the company was so precarious that bankruptcy was imminent. The principal subsidiaries of Wesco were already in bankruptcy. In the spring of 1933, the holders of the 6% notes of Film Securities Corporation announced their intention to foreclose which, if consummated, as it was, would wipe out the value of the Class A stock which Fox Film Corporation had, and result in a loss of nearly $46,000,000. The company had outstanding debentures of $30,000,000 and bank loans in the amount of $12,000,000. It had been unable to meet the interest payable April 1, 1933. During May and June a reorganization was worked out. The creditors to the extent of $36,000,000 agreed to exchange their creditor claims for stock.

"By certificate filed with the Secretary of State on July 22, 1933, the class A stock was reduced by 5/6 or to 404,276-2/3 shares, and the class B common stock was reduced by 5/6 or to 16,650 shares, and the capital of the corporation was reduced to $2,104,633.33 or $5 per share for each of the 420,926-2/3 shares.

"Then by certificate filed the same day, the class A common stock was increased to a authorized 2,800,000 shares. The class B common stock remained at 16,650 shares and the capital remained at $5 per share.

"The principal creditors of the corporation, that is, the debenture holders and The Chase National Bank of the City of New York surrendered the obligations of the corporation which they held for shares of class A stock. The increased stock was offered to the stockholders at $18.90 per share on the basis of 5 shares of new stock for each share then held. To the extent that the same was unsubscribed for by stockholders, the aforementioned creditors exchanged the obligations which they held for such stock at $18.90 per share. At the same time the investments which the corporation held in Film Securities Corporation and Wesco Corporation (now National Theatres Corporation) were reduced to a nominal book value of $1 each.

"In 1935, this company acquired the assets of Twentieth Century Pictures, Inc., a producing company owned by Joseph M. Schenck, Darryl F. Zanuck and William E. Goetz, and they entered into long term contracts for their services.

"On August 22, 1935, the class A common stock and class B common stock were eliminated and there were created 4,600,000 shares of new stock without par value of which 1,500,000 shares were preferred stock and 3,100,000 shares were common stock. The 2,800,000 shares of class A common stock previously authorized and the 16,650 shares of class B common stock previously authorized were by this certificate transmuted into new preferred stock and the common stock on the basis of ½ share of preferred stock and ¼ share of common stock for each share of class A stock issued or unissued and one share of preferred stock and ½ share of class B common stock, issued or unissued. The preferred stock was made convertible into common stock on the basis of 1¼ shares of common stock for each share of preferred stock.

"There were issued to the stockholders of Twentieth Century Pictures, Inc., 132,513 shares of preferred stock and 613,264¾ shares of common stock which was exactly one-half of the common stock outstanding at the time of the reorganization.

"In 1943, 10,000 shares of prior preferred stock of a par value of $100 were issued. The proceeds thereof and other funds of the company were used to acquire from The Chase National Bank of the City of New York the 58% of the stock of National Theatres Corporation which it had held since 1934, and National thus became a wholly owned subsidiary.

"In April, 1942, Sidney R. Kent died. Shortly thereafter, Spyros P Skouras was elected president of the corporation and Wendell L. Willkie, chairman of the board. Mr. Willkie died October 8, 1944.

"In 1943 and 1944, additions were made to the board of directors to elect the representatives of Massachusetts Investment Trust, a substantial stockholder, and representatives of Lehman Brothers which had underwritten the issuance of the prior preferred stock.

"No officer of Twentieth Century-Fox is an officer, director, or, so far as is known, a stockholder in any of the other defendants. No director of the company is an officer or director, or, so far as is known, a stockholder in any other of the defendants. No stockholder of the company owning any substantial number of shares of the stock of any of the three classes is, so far as is known, an officer, director or stockholder of any of the other defendants.

"To my knowledge, Twentieth Century-Fox has not conspired or combined with the other defendants in this case, or any of them, to restrain or monopolize trade and commerce."

Mr. Caskey: I yield now to Mr. Frohlich.

Judge Bright: Do I understand that the Fox case is now in?

Mr. Caskey: No, sir. We have testimony which we may adduce by stipulation of the comptroller, and we will have at least one witness from the Coast. As to National Theatres Corporation, we are engaged in all the periods when there is a recess in preparing stipulations that we are submitting to Mr. Wright, and we are making substantial progress there. I think we will have a stipulation of facts from each of the operating heads of the five principal divisions.

I think that is right, isn't it, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: We have agreed that they would testify in accordance with their affidavits.

(1731)

ABRAHAM MONTAGUE, called as a witness on behalf of defendant Columbia Pictures Corporation, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Frohlich:

Q. Where do you reside, Mr. Montague? A. New York City.

Q. What is your occupation at the present time? A. General sales manager.

Q. For whom? A. Columbia Pictures Corporation.

Q. How many years have you been engaged in the motion picture industry? A. Since 1908.

Q. Will you kindly give us your background and experience. A. In 1908 I opened a very small theatre in Weare, New Hampshire. I operated that theatre and some other theatres until 1923.

In 1923 I sold out the motion picture interest that I had and became what is known as a state-right distributor in Boston.

In 1929 we sold out the business of state-right distribution to Columbia Pictures Corporation, and since that time I have been associated with them, first as a district manager operating out of Boston, and then as a sales manager operating out of New York.

Q. Can you tell us something of the Columbia Pictures Corporation from the first days that you were acquainted (1732) with that company? A. My first connection with the company was the purchasing of a picture called Innocents for the territory of New England, the six states. I undertook the distribution of that picture as a state-righter for Columbia Pictures. After that I continued to purchase state rights for New England from Columbia.

Q. Did you know the officials of Columbia Pictures in those days? A. Well, I got acquainted with them after my first contact with them.

Q. Was it a large company or a small company? A. It would be considered a small company.

Q. How was it selling its pictures? A. In those days it was selling its pictures through state-right operators throughout the United States—in fact, throughout the world.

Q. Was the method of state-right distribution prevalent throughout the motion picture industry in the early 20s? A. Yes; practically all of the pictures were distributed in the early 20s through state-right distribution.

Q. You yourself said you were a state-righter. Did you control certain territory? A. We had the rights of licensing the theatres on these state-right pictures in six states.

Q. Did other people in the state-right field likewise (1733) operate in various territories throughout the United States? A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that if a man produces a picture and wanted to sell his picture and had no distribution organization of his own, he was compelled to go to the state-right people, wasn't he? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he would have to parcel his product out in various territories throughout the country? A. Yes, sir.

Q. From the viewpoint of the producer and from your experience with the producer, was that a profitable operation for the producer? A. Well, to the best of my recollection it was profitable in some instances; unprofitable in others. It was not a certain operation; it was an uncertain operation.

Q. Did there come a time when there was a change in the method of distribution throughout the industry? A. Well, we know of one method of change known as the consent decree, which happened some few years ago.

Q. I am speaking of the early 20s. A. In the early 20s the state-righters would accumulate from one or more producers a program and then go out and try to sell that program in block.

Q. Did a time come when the producing companies—by the way, how many important producing companies were there in existence in the early 20s? A. I would have to refer to the records on that; I don't remember.

Q. Did a time come when those producers commenced to operate under a system of distribution of their own? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had nothing to do with state-right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In that way they contacted the exhibitor directly? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And sold their product to him without the intervention of any state-right? A. Correct.

Q. Did Columbia Pictures embark upon that method of operation? A. Yes, they embarked on what we might call the national distribution system in 1929.

Q. Do you know whether they required and obtained financing for that purpose? A. They did require and obtain financing for that purpose.

Q. A very substantial amount, wasn't it? A. In those days we would call it a substantial amount, yes, sir.

Q. Was it over a millions dollars? A. I believe it was over a million dollars.

Q. That money was required to organize the distribution system throughout the United States, wasn't it? A. It was required to buy out some of the state-righters and acquire a system of their own.

Q. And to substitute for state-right divigions exchange branches of their own? A. Yes, sir.

(1735)

Q. In how many cities of the United States, approximately, has Columbia branch offices? A. 31.

Q. And has had those offices for a great many years? A. Since 1929.

Q. After Columbia organized this distribution department, how did Columbia sell its pictures to the exhibitor? A. They had salesmen go out and made effort to sell the product of one year in a group sale.

Q. Was that known as block booking? A. It could be called block booking, yes, sir.

Q. Is that the same method of operation as Mr. Wright refers to in his complaint as blind selling? A. Yes, I think Mr. Wright refers to it as blind selling.

(1736)

Q. As a matter of fact, the exhibitor knew very well what he was purchasing when he made a contract for your year's product, didn't he? A. He knew fairly accurately what he was purchasing. His principal purchase, we always claimed, was the company he was buying from. He knew the history of that company, the type of releases it had, and that is why, in most cases, he decided to continue to do business.

Q. In selling your pictures in block, didn't you try to describe as adequately as possible the prospective pictures by the title of the picture, by the story, or play, or novel, and by the stars? A. We gave him all the information as accurately as possible that we had.

Q. And then when you went into production you tried to keep pace with that information and live up to it? A. To the best of our effort, sir.

Q. Have you been selling your pictures in that way from the early 20s down to the present time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are there other distributors in the United States who sell their pictures in the same manner? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you name them, please? A. Universal, Republic, Monogram, Producers.

Q. And from your experience with exhibitors, both as an exhibitor and as a produeer, do you find that that method of operation is satisfactory to the exhibitor? A. It is my belief it is the most satisfactory method of distribution to the exhibitor. By that means the exhibitor knows that he has a certain program that is his, he knows what price the pictures are coming to him at, and he feels that he is having some insurance as against his investment in brick and mortar, sir. We are quite certain that the majority of the exhibitors in the United States desire to buy that way.

Q. Is that method of operation vital and necessary for Columbia? A. It is absolutely vital and absolutely necessary, sir.

Q. Please state why. A. If we were to change our method of distribution to the so-called small group selling, which is used under the consent decree, we would find it absolutely necessary to change the whole financial base of our company. We wouldn't have—we do not have enough money to keep pictures in inventory, such as we would have to do, for any period of time. We find it absolutely necessary to turn our pictures over as rapidly as possible, to send that money back to California so California can again invest it in pictures.

Q. Does the making of block contracts or bulk contracts insure a market for your product? A. We feel that it does, sir.

Q. Does it give you something on which you can base the gamble that you take in making pictures? A. It makes (1738) more certain the gamble, sir.

Judge Hand: How have you managed to get along in those four years of tyranny, or whatever there has been?

The Witness: We have got along very well.

Mr. Frohlich: We are not a party, your Honor, to the consent decree.

Judge Hand: That is true.

Judge Goddard: How large a block did your client sell?

Q. Tell the Court, please, how large a block of pictures you sell each year, approximately. A. Well, for the last few years it has numbered between 40 and 44 pictures, that we call features; we also sell westerns; we also sell short subjects, and we have serials.

Judge Bright: How many in a block?

The Witness: We try to sell all of the pictures that we have to all exhibitors. It is either all or part thereof.

Judge Goddard: That numbers some 40, you say?

The Witness: So-called features, as we call them, there are between 40 and 44.

(1739)

Judge Bright: During what period?

The Witness: Between the period of September and October 1st we expect to produce and release that number. Sometimes we fall a little short.

By Mr. Frohlich:

Q. In addition to distributing your own pictures, Mr. Montague, has Columbia from time to time distributed pictures of other producers? A. Yes, sr.

Q. Did Columbia at any time lend its distribution facilities or make them available, as such, to other producers? A. We never lend our facilities. We have released pictures for other producers.

Q. That has been by special contract? A. Yes.

Q. No other producer or distributor in this country has any access to your branch office? A. No, sir.

Q. Your salesmen? A. No.

Q. Or your employees? A. No.

Q. You distribute independently? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you produce independently? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any understanding, any arrangement, any contract with any other defendant in this case other than the occasional exhibition license contract that you have with his theatres? A. No, sir.

Q. I have prepared, Mr. Montague, a list of pictures—that is, a list of the number of pictures produced by outside (1740) producers and distributed by Columbia from 1928 down to the present time. I show you this list and ask you whether this is a true and accurate list? A. We believe it to be true and accurate, sir.

Q. You had it prepared, as a matter of fact, at my request, under your direction, didn't you? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Frohlich: I should like to offer that in evidence.

Mr. Wright: No objection.

(Marked Defendant Columbia's Exhibit C-1.)

Judge Goddard: How would you describe that exhibit?

Mr. Frohlich: It is the list of outside producers. May I hand it up to the Court?

Judge Hand: Yes.

(Exhibit C-1 handed to the Court.)

Q. In 1928, Mr. Montague, I see by this document that I am going to show you in a moment Columbia spent all told for this production $1,632,300. Of course, that amount has increased each year, hasn't it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And have you at my request prepared from your books of account a list of the total expenditures each season by Columbia Pictures in its production? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Frohlich: I should like to offer that in evidence.

(1741)

Mr. Wright: We have no objection.

Mr. Seymour: May I see it, Mr. Frohlich?

Mr. Frohlich: I will give you a copy, Mr. Seymour (handing).

(Marked Defendant Columbia's Exhibit C-2.)

Q. There has been some evidence here, Mr. Montague, in this case about borrowing and loaning players, artists, from one company to another. Have you prepared from data collected from the studio of Columbia Pictures—and, by the way, where is that studio located? A. In Hollywood, California, sir.

Q. Have you prepared a list of each and every artist and each and every company in the United States to whom Columbia loaned players and from whom it borrowed players down to the present time? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Frohlich: I should like to offer this list, which comes in two portions, in evidence.

Mr. Wright: No objection.

(Marked Defendant Columbia's Exhibits C-3-A and C-3-B.)

Q. When Columbia borrowed a player from one of the major defendants in this case—and, by the way, what is your definition of a major defendant? Have you got any? A. No, sir.

Q. Well, what is your definition of an independent producer? A. One who has no connection with any other, sir.

Q. Now, when Columbia borrowed a player from a producer, an affiliated producer in this case, as appears by that list in evidence, did Columbia Pictures ever give any of its profits or undertake to give any of its profits to that producer? A. Whom we had borrowed the personality from?

Q. Yes. A. To the best of my knowledge, no.

Q. As a matter of fact, in instances where it borrowed a star, was Columbia unable to book its picture into the very theatre owned by the company from whom it borrowed the star? A. Yes.

Q. Can you give us one or two instances of that? A. Well, we can go way back to a picture with Clark Gable in it called It Happened One Night. We licensed that picture to Loew's Circuit and also to the opposition of Loew's.

Q. Now, the Loew's Circuit is the company owned by Metro? A. Yes.

Q. Which owns many theatres? A. Yes.

Q. And you licensed that picture to houses in opposition to Loew's. A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in many instances you did not license it to the Loew's theatres? A. In many instances we did not license (1743)
it to the Loew's theatres.

Q. Now, as a matter of fact, does Columbia face competition from all of the defendants in this case? A. May I have the question repeated, sir?

Q. Does Columbia face competition from all of the defendants in this case? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is the competition keen? A. Very keen.

Q. And constant? A. And constant.

Q. Are there many fine pictures produced by independent producers in the United States? A. I would say yes, sir.

Q. Have you at my request prepared a list of successful pictures, pictures that were successfully artistically and financially in recent years and which were produced by independents throughout the country? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I show you this list and ask if that is an accurate list of pictures of that kind? A. I believe it to be accurate, sir.

Mr. Frohlich: Any objection.

Mr. Wright: No. I would like a copy.

Mr. Frohlich: I will let you have one, Mr. Wright (handing).

(Marked Defendant Columbia's Exhibit C-4.)

Mr. Raftery: Mr. Frohlich, is the list confined to Columbia only?

Mr. Frohlich: Independent producers throughout the country.

Mr. Raftery: You have got United Artists pictures?

Mr. Frohlich: United Artists pictures, Universal pictures, and others.

Mr. Davis: That is, all but the five consenting defendants in this case?

Mr. Frohlich: That is right.

Q. I will show you a copy of this list, Mr. Montague, and ask you if you can go down the list and give us a half dozen instances of outstanding pictures, pictures of great appeal and great success. A. Am I supposed to stick to Columbia?

Q. No, keep away from Columbia as much as you can. A. 100 Men And A Girl, Universal. All Quiet on the Western Front, Universal. Showboat——

Q. All Quiet on the Western Front—that was the Erich Remarque picture of the book? A. Yes, quite so.

Algiers, by Walter Wanger, I see here. Modern Times and the Great Dictator, Charlie Chaplin. Edward Small, the Man In The Iron Mask. Howard Hughes, the producer, Scar Face. Selznick, the producer of Rebecca, Gone With The Wind. Harold Lloyd Corporation, The Freshman. Walter Disney, Snow White and The Seven Dwarfs. Samuel Goldwyn, Wuthering Heights, Stella Dallas, Dead End. (1745)

Hal Roach, Topper; Of Mice and Men. Gene Autry (Westerns) produced by Republic Pictures Corporation. That Hamilton Woman, produced by Alexander Korda. Frank Lloyd Productions, Howards of Virginia. Columbia: Here Comes Mr. Jordan; Penny Serenade; My Sister Eileen——

Q. Well, let us have others besides Columbia. A. I think I have gone over the list and I have given a few from each one of the producers.

Q. Now, in addition to the competition based by Columbia from independent producers in the United States, do you face competition by producers in foreign countries? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whose pictures come over here? A. Yes.

Q. And are released in the United States? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I show you this list of foreign pictures which were distributed in the United States and ask you whether this is a farly comprehensive list of the successful pictures so released? A. Yes, I think it is.

Mr. Frohlich: I should like to offer that in evidence. Any objection, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: What is this?

Mr. Frohlich: A list of foreign pictures released in the United States.

(1746)

Mr. Wright: Well, we have no objection.

(Marked Defendant Columbia's Exhibit C-5.)

Q. Will you be good enough to look at that list for a moment and just read off to their Honors a number of the outstanding and successful pictures on this list?

The Witness: May I have a copy of the list, sir?

Mr. Frohlich: Oh yes, I am sorry (handing).

A. Henry VIII; Maedchen in Uniform; Mayerling, 39 Steps; Pygmalion; The Lady Vanishes; Goodbye Mr. Chips; Count of Monte Cristo; The Scarlet Pimpernel; Pepe LeMoko; In Which We Serve.

Q. What have you found in this industry in the past 10 years with respect to independent production? Has it increased or decreased? A. Increased.

Q. Considerably so? A. Considerably.

Q. And have a great many important pictures been released in the United States as well? A. Not in the last few years, sir.

Q. But the increase has been with respect to domestic production? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what would you say today is the state of affairs with respect to independent producers? Are there a great many more than there were in 1935? A. Yes, sir, and they seem to be growing all the time.

(1747)

Q. To your knowledge——

Mr. Wright: May I have that last question and answer read?

(Question and answer read.)

Q. To your knowledge has any independent producer in this country ever had any trouble or difficulty in having his pictures released or distributed throughout the United States? A. I know that they have all been distributed. I can't tell you just what difficulties they may or may not have in negotiating for that distribution, but they have all reached, to the best of my knowledge, the market.

Q. Do you know of a single producer who made any kind of a picture of any importance in this country who was unable to have it distributed in the United States? A. I do not know of one.

Q. In making your deal, Mr. Montague, with exhibitors, what is your primary objective, and what factors do you take into consideration in these negotiations? A. Well, our first interest is how much we can get out of a given situation or out of the territory as a whole. We in most cases attempt to license our film to what we call our old and standard accounts, be they so-called affiliated or independent. We are always anxious and seeking an increased market and to develop the market that we have on the highest terms that we can secure.

Q. And to how many theatres at the present time do you sell your product? A. Well, we sell a major part of our program to something between 10,500 and 11,000 accounts in the United States. We have licensed certain pictures to as many as 13,700 theatres in the United States.

Q. That has been the exception, hasn't it? A. That was the exception, sir.

Q. And that, of course, was true only with respect to outstanding pictures? A. That was true with respect to one picture called Cover Girl.

Q. But aside from these exceptions, your general product is licensed to approximately ten or eleven thousand exhibitors? A. Correct, sir.

Q. And that means that you negotiate approximately 10,000 contracts a year, doesn't it? A. Oh, we negotiate a great many more than that, sir. We renegotiate with many houses for more pictures than they may buy the first time.

Q. And you carry on these negotiations each year, don't you? A. We carry them on each year, sir, in the main.

Q. Under your method of selling pictures, you have one sales campaign a year, do you not? A. We have what is called our major one sales campaign a year.

Q. During what period does that campaign take place? A. Well, the campaign will usually come out if it is on time somewhere between March and April.

Q. And then in conjunction with the campaign do you have sales conventions? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And is that held only once a year? A. Well, we may have what is termed a sales convention once a year. We may have other meetings during the year with various members of our sales force.

Q. And after your sales convention your salesmen are instructed to go out into the highways and byways and make the deals as best they can with exhibitors? A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you had to sell pictures in small blocks of two or three or five, wouldn't you have to go through that entire campaign many times a year? A. Well, if we had to sell them in groups of five we would have to go through that campaign eight or nine times a year, sir.

Q. Could you sell in small groups with the present sales force? A. We would have to augment our sales force considerably.

Q. And you would be involved in very substantial expense, wouldn't you? A. We would be.

Q. Now, in making your contract with the exhibitor do you treat affiliates and independents on an equal basis? (1750)

A. We do, sir.

Q. Do you give the same terms to the independent that you give to the affiliate? A. In many cases we try to get as good. In some cases we succeed and in others we do not.

Q. Let us take the specific term of selectivity. Just what is that? A. I beg your pardon?

Q. What is selectivity? A. It is where an exhibitor does not buy all the film that we have; where he has a selection out of the number that we might have.

Q. In other words, instead of taking your entire number of features he has a right to say, "I will take only 20 or 25," instead of the 40 or 45, or whatever it is? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, do you frequently give that to affiliates? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do you frequently give that to independents? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you give the independents the same right of selectivity that you give the affiliated throughout the United States? A. As a rule the independent has a little edge on the affiliated. The affiliated run in the main more important pictures, and we try to be quite a bit more definite on those contracts.

Q. Now, how do you approach clearance when you negotiate your deals? A. Well, clearance is something we usually (1751) find when we arrive there and we usually negotiate our deal within the clearance that we find.

Q. You don't in each instance, in every contract, attempt to set up a new clearance, do you? A. It would be impractical and impossible, sir.

Q. As a matter of fact, has not clearance been an established part of this industry for a great many years? A. It has. It was augmented back in the days of the NRA.

Q. And speaking of the NRA, you were, of course, with Columbia at the time the NRA came into existence, weren't you? A. Yes.

Q. Did the NRA have anything to do with the contract that Columbia uses for its licensing with exhibitors? A. Well, to the best of my knowledge at that time Columbia became part of the regulation in which the NRA tried to establish what was then known as the standard form of contract.

Q. And for whose protection was that? A. Principally for the exhibitors.

Q. Did Columbia, for one, attempt to comply with the regulation of the NRA in that respect? A. To the best of my knowledge it did, sir.

Q. Did the NRA have anything to do with the so-called admission price clause in the contract? A. Yes, it did, sir. (1752)

Q. Please tell us what. A. Well, after the NRA tackled the job of trying to set up a form of run and clearance in the various and many zones throughout the United States, it seemed to us who observed it carefully, they figured that the best way to do it was on some form of admission price, and they seemed to have tried to go along in that direction of established admission prices. I remember that particularly as to several arguments that came before us in the case of Los Angeles.

Q. There has been some testimony given in this case, Mr. Montague, about clearance hinging upon the admission charged by a subsequent-run theatre. Have you heard the testimony here in the courtroom? A. No, I did not, sir.

Q. Well, have you at various times in contracts with exhibitors who are affiliated with the five defendants here given clearance dependent upon the admission price of second or third or fourth-run? A. I believe we have in some instances, sir.

Q. In other words, 30 days ahead of a house that charges 30 cents, 50 days ahead of a house that charges 25 cents—I am taking arbitrary figures—something of that kind. A. Yes, something of that kind.

Q. Have you also given that clearance to independents? A. We have given probably a like clearance to independents, yes, sir.

Q. I call your attention to the exhibitors in Malden, Massachusetts, Southgate California, St. Joseph, Missouri, and Akron, Ohio. Have you given those exhibitors who are independent exhibitors the identical form of clearance? A. I believe we have, sir.

Mr. Wright: What were the four towns again?

Mr. Frohlich: Malden, Mass., Southgate, California, St. Joseph, Missouri, and Akron, Ohio.

Q. Have you ever knowingly permitted any exhibitor in this country to over-buy your product? A. Not knowingly. It would be of no advantage to us to sell an over-buy situation.

Q. Will you explain to the Court what over-buy means? A. Well, over-buy is a term where an exhibitor has all the film he can use, a little more, and he still seeks more film on top of that.

Q. And what would be his purpose in seeking more film? A. Well, I would say in some cases they seek to do that to control the situation as to the film.

Q. And to keep film away from a competitor? A. It could be for that purpose, sir.

Q. And have you ever knowingly embarked on that kind of a contract? A. No, sir.

Q. Have the exhibitors in the country in the last ten years been successful, if you know? The exhibitors. A. The exhibitors have been very successful in the last ten years.

Q. And have made a lot of money in the last five years, haven't they? A. According to some of the Government statistics, I would say so, yes, sir.

Q. And they have increased their admission prices substantially, haven't they? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do you know of any exhibitors who are anxious to sell their houses? A. No, sir.

Judge Hand: Why do you say block booking is so necessary for you? Is it because you do not own any theatres?

The Witness: Well, it could be one of the reasons, sir, and it is necessary because our type of program is the type of program that runs from the most expensive pictures down to what we call the B grades, the commercial grades of film. We would find it most difficult because of the numbers and the type of quality, and so forth, to continuously go back. We sell so many of these pictures to the small villages and hamlets all throughout the United States who cannot come to the market as often as they would like to. Now, we could not get there fast enough unless we augmented our sales force considerably; we would not have the money to wait, to hold this inventory on the shelves, so-called inventory, meaning these pictures, on the shelves, while we are waiting to get in there. Our particular company's success has been on the rapid turn-over of its pictures.

Q. Have you ever compelled an exhibitor to take your short pictures in order to obtain your features? A. No, sir.

Judge Goddard: I do not quite understand that. If you tell us that you sell your entire product at one time, that would include shorts and everything else, would it not?

The Witness: We attempt to sell our entire product at one time, but it is only a small percentage of the theatres in the United States that we succeed in doing that. It usually ends up with the exhibitor having a selective contract. He may or may not buy any shorts at all.

Judge Goddard: On an average how many pictures does the contract include, a block?

The Witness: Sir, on our feature program, meaning 44 pictures in that form, which excludes the Westerns, we average about 32 across the United States to an account.

Q. You do not condition the selling of features upon the taking of shorts, do you? A. No, sir.

Q. And if an exhibitor does not want your shorts you will sell him your features just the same? A. Yes, we will try to sell him the shorts; we will use all the salesmanship (1756) that we have, if he uses shorts.

Q. But you have never withheld your features from an exhibitor because he would not use your shorts, have you? A. We could not afford to do so, sir.

Q. Have you ever had instances where your exhibitor has changed his admission price after he made his contract with you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you had instances where the change was upwards and he increased his price? A. I believe so.

Q. Have you had instances where the change was downward and there was a decrease in price? A. I have heard of such instances, sir.

Q. Did you ever take any action with respect to an exhibitor who did that? A. No, sir, unless by the so doing of it he was interfering with the contracts, our licensing contract with the prior account.

Q. As a trade practice isn't it a fact that from time to time exhibitors come in to you and seek adjustments on their contracts? A. Well, they don't come in to me, Mr. Frohlich. They go to the various branches.

Q. When I say "you", I mean Columbia Pictures. A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is very prevalent, isn't it? A. So prevalent, sir, that we are through counting the changes by the week; we now measure them by the foot.

Q. And do you accommodate these exhibitors and give them these adjustments? A. Yes, I would say it is an accommodation, sir.

Q. And do you treat the independent exhibitor as well as you do the affiliate on these adjustments? A. We give less adjustments, much less adjustments to the affiliate than we do the independent. Our records will substantiate that.

Q. Do you give all the breaks to the independent? A. If you want to call it breaks, yes, sir.

Q. Yes, that is what I want to call it.

Judge Bright: Why is that?

The Witness: Well, we know pretty well—we will say that we know a little more about what the affiliate can take, and we follow them a little careful as to the gross of their theatres, but you take the mass of theatres in the small towns, we don't know too much about them. He comes in and says, "Such and such a picture played. I didn't do very well with it. You charged me too much for it." And he says, "We believe we should have an adjustment." We believe a certain amount of adjustments is a good idea because we believe we can get more good will with that. Now, when it comes to the affiliated, we don't have quite as much consideration, sir.

Judge Bright: You license largely on percentage licenses?

The Witness: No. Very largely on the flat side of our selling, whereby we sell a man a picture for $50 and he will come in and say, "I only took in $51. I think we should have an adjustment." We don't know whether he took in $51 or not, but we know our accounts pretty well. We have what we call a chronic complaining list. It is a common expression in the exchanges, that they keep a towel there so as to wipe up the tears of these fellows coming in. In other cases we have fellows who really need help, have hit hard times, or a picture didn't do good business, it hurt their

Saturdays and Sundays if they played them, and they need help legitimately, and they get it, and we consider that part of our business.

Judge Hand: That would be almost like a trade discount.

The Witness: It is a trade discount, sir. I think it is almost taken in the mind of some exhibitors at the time they buy the contracts.

Judge Bright: Where you sell a block of pictures to one exhibitor, that is at the beginning of your season, isn't it?

The Witness: Yes.

Judge Bright: They buy blind as to some of them?

The Witness: Yes, sir, we got only a few films produced he can see. The rest of them are on description, and he really and truly buys on what we call past performance—what has Columbia's past performance been with that exhibitor over the period of years that we traded with him.

Judge Bright: Do you sell to these so-called majors, five majors, by block licenses?

Colloquy

The Witness: We sell them by block, sir.

Judge Hand: Right along?

The Witness: Right along. We have since our beginning and still do, sir.

Judge Goddard: Just the same, same as to the (1760) independents?

The Witness: I did not get your question.

Judge Goddard: Are blocks sold comparatively the same size as those sold to the independents?

The Witness: Comparatively. In some of their big theatres we cannot sell as many. In some of the smaller theatres we can sell more because they can use some of what we call our B-grade films. If the theatre is such it does not use B-grade films, of course, we cannot sell them or license the film—that would be a better expression.

Judge Hand: If I understand the thing at all, to sell to an exhibitor a lot of 40 plays would be a perfect gamble as far as he is concerned as to half of the plays submitted?

The Witness: Well, sir, from your seat I can understand that you could think so, but a lot of these exhibitors would like not only to buy 44 but they would like to buy 84, if we have them, because they need the film. They are changing in these towns—some of them use as many as six, and some eight and 12 pictures a week, if they have a double bill. They need these pictures. If you try to take them away and give them to somebody else in that town, you see the squawk they put up, because they feel that is their measure of protection and they want it.

Judge Hand: That is because, I suppose, then, that they have so many different theatres they can place them. Supposing, for example, Paramount or Loew or Fox or any of these defendants, had but one theatre, one big theatre. They certainly wouldn't do it then unless they went into an absolutely blind gamble, would they?

The Witness: They wouldn't do it unless they needed the films that I had to offer. If they only had one theatre in a situation and they played only 52 pictures a week, I wouldn't have a chance, sir, to get in my group of pictures.

Judge Goddard: 52 a year?

The Witness: 52 a year. Pardon me. Correction. Thank you.

Judge Bright: You mean these men that want the block buying most are those that change their program oftenest?

The Witness: Yes. I think they want them most, probably, but the larger exhibitor needs it just as bad as the small one. He wants to know, because of competition, what pictures he is getting. At least we find it so from our own distribution. We have no trouble at all in distributing through block selling. In fact, we have attended meetings back there sometime ago where the exhibitors as a whole were meeting from all over the country, trying to get all these companies to plead—to get away from this so-called small group selling. They wanted to buy all; they wanted to buy their season's product from all the companies. They called them the umpty meetings at the time. I have forgotten just what umpty stood for, but it was a whole series of meetings, whereby they actually made a very strenuous plea——

Judge Bright: Exhibitors?

The Witness: Yes, sir. (Continuing)—to do away with this consent decree form of selling.

Mr. Wright: I think he means independent exhibitors, is that right?

The Witness: Independent exhibitors were there, and also affiliated, Mr. Wright.

Judge Bright: That demand or suggestion, you say, comes from the small town exhibitor more than the large one?

The Witness: It would come from small towns, and it would come from large ones, depending on the need of the film to the exhibitor, whether he had a competitor, whether he had a double feature policy, whether he had a single feature policy, whether he run three shows a week, changed three times a week, or whether he changed seven times a week. There are so many things that come into the individual situation as to why that particular exhibitor wants to buy that particular way.

Q. Mr. Montague, did you make up at my request a list of all the cities, up to 418, which have a population of 25,000 and over, and include in that list the name of the exhibitor, whether he is an independent or affiliate, how you sold to that exhibitor, in other words, did you sell to an independent in the town or an affiliate, whether it is a closed town of affiliates or a closed town of independents? A. I instructed such a list to be made, sir.

Q. And I show you this list and ask you whether this is the list that you made up? A. Yes, sir, this is the list we had made up, sir.

Q. When I use the expression "Closed town of affiliates" or "Closed town of independents", just what do I mean by that? A. I assume you mean a town that has no competition, sir.

Q. In other words, if a city has, say, two or three affiliated theatres and no comparable independent theatre, would you call that a closed town of affiliates? A. Well, if there were other theatres there, I would not call it a closed town, sir. It might be closed as to a run.

Q. I am speaking of first-run. A. Yes, sir.

Q. Comparable theatres of first-run only, it would be a closed first-run. This list is related only to first-run theatres? A. Yes.
(1704)

Q. And would the same hold true of a situation where an independent owned all of the important theatres in the city? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Frohlich: I should like to offer this list in evidence.

Mr. Proskauer: I would like to see it.

Mr. Frohlich: I have no copy of it.

Mr. Wright: I have no objection, providing we can have a copy before he leaves the stand.

Mr. Frohlich: I will be glad to leave the list with Mr. Wright when——

Mr. Wright: We might have to defer cross-examination.

Mr. Proskauer: May I take a look at it, with your Honor's permission?

Mr. Frohlich: I am sorry, if I have kept the Court waiting. I want to interrogate on this list.

Q. Mr. Montague, the counsel——

Mr. Proskauer: Mr. Frohlich, before you go ahead, may I suggest we get through with this? And I would like to ask you this question. Does Mr. Montague call a closed town one where there is competition between two different affiliated theatres for first-run? In Detroit you have that marked a closed town. In Detroit there is competition, isn't there, between (1765) different affiliates first-run?

The Witness: The competition, I know, is between an independent and an affiliate.

Mr. Proskauer: But you have it marked a closed town on here.

The Witness: What town did you give me?

Mr. Proskauer: Detroit.

The Witness: No, you are absolutely right, there is competition in Detroit between the affiliates.

Mr. Proskauer: Between whom?

The Witness: Between Fox on the one hand, the Fox Theatre operated by National Theatres Company, I believe, or some other corporation—I can't remember the name of the corporation—and theatres operated by an affiliate of Paramount. That would not be a closed town as to first-run.

Mr. Proskauer: It is marked "closed" on this list that is tendered.

Q. Wouldn't it be closed so far as the independent is concerned? In other words, let me make this clear to you, Mr. Montague. Let us get this straight. If you go into a town and there is only one theatre there owned by an affiliate, or two theatres owned by two affiliates, or three owned by three affiliates, is that an open or closed town, as far as you are concerned? A. Open town.

Mr. Frohlich: Then this list isn't correct. Then I withdraw it.

(1766)

Mr. Proskauer: May I make a practical suggestion, with the Court's permission? Mr. Frohlich, obviously, in making up this schedule, there has been confusion in the use of the terms "open" and "closed." My suggestion is, you go over it overnight and re-tender it tomorrow, corrected to meet the various suggestions.

Mr. Frohlich: I shall eliminate from the list the column designated "Closed".

Mr. Wright: I might say we——

Mr. Frohlich: That is the only way I can do without——

Mr. Wright: (Continuing) ——we should like to have it as it is for purposes of cross-examination.

Mr. Frohlich: Now I am in a spot.

Mr. Caskey: Would you like to have it, even if it is inaccurate, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: I said for purposes of cross-examination we should like to have it as it is, and it will appear to the extent to which it is accurate or inaccurate.

Mr. Proskauer: We are under the necessity of interposing an objection, which is not in any sense technical.

Mr. Frohlich: I should like to offer it now.

Judge Hand: Now?

Mr. Frohlich: Yes, and I am going to say to the (1767)

Court I should like to offer it now and eliminate from the consideration of the exhibit the columns called "Closed" and "Competitive", becaues they seem to give rise to a lot of dispute here.

Mr. Proskauer: You will offer the list of accounts to which you sold?

Mr. Frohlich: I will ask the Court to consider only one column, that we sold, whether independent or affiliated.

Mr. Proskauer: We have no objection to a list of the accounts to whom he sells. Everything else is out of it?

Mr. Frohlich: I think that will eliminate all dispute then, your Honor.

Mr. Proskauer: It is clearly understood that the last two columns marked "Open" and "Closed"—and "Competition"—are not a part of the exhibit.

Mr. Frohlich: That is right.

Mr. Wright: That is not understood as far as the Government is concerned. We object to the exclusion of any part of the exhibit until it is apparent from what the witness has to say about it, as distinguished from counsel, as to what its accuracy or inaccuracy is.

Mr. Caskey: The witness has already testified.

Judge Hand: I will overrule your objection. I do not know any way of your compelling him to offer something that he does not want to offer.

(Marked Defendant's Exhibit C-6.)

Q. For the information of the Court, Mr. Montague, what was that blue circle around the "I"? A. I would like to see them. I may be able to explain it. I haven't had it in my hands yet.

Q. Didn't you see it last night? A. Yes, sir, but I would like to see it again, if I may.

Q. I just want that for the information of the Court. You will notice wherever the letter "I" appears there is a blue pencil mark around it.

Judge Bright: I thought those columns were out.

Mr. Frohlich: Not that column, Judge Bright. The other two columns. This is the first column. There are three columns altogether. This is the first column, showing selling to independent or affiliate. The other two columns have to do with closed situations. They are out.

Q. Have you in front of you, Mr. Montague, a list of the 92 cities that has been put in evidence in this case? A. I believe so, sir. I have this list here.

Q. I will have to go over this list with you, and I will try to make it as short as possible, and I want you to make your answers as brief as you can. Akron, Ohio, to whom do you sell there? A. First-run?

Q. I am speaking now only of first-run. To whom do (1769) you sell there? A. The Akron Palace Theatre Corporation.

Judge Bright: Isn't that all in this list right here, to whom you sell? Isn't it all in this exhibit you just offered?

Mr. Frohlich: I was going to have him make some explanation of these theatres, of comparisons of theatres how long he has been selling, to whom, and why, and so on. I thought it might be helpful to the Court, instead of wading through a long exhibit.

If the Court feels that I shouldn't go into the 92 situations, I won't do it. I had some qualms about it, your Honors have heard so much about it.

Judge Hand: I should think you could do it in nucleus, asking general questions, and then I think it should be admissible, subject to cross-examination and motion to strike out.

Mr. Frohlich: I want to save time. I don't want to spend two or three hours on it.

Q. Mr. Montague, did you have a computation made of the list of 92 cities of 100,000 inhabitants and upwards, showing from 1936, '37, down to 1943-44 to how many independents you sold, to how many affiliates you sold each season? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I show you this chart or series of charts and ask you whether that truly represents the amount of sales to affiliates (1770).

and independents in these respective years based upon one inch for—I think that is the scale—one inch to eight cities? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is correct, isn't it? A. Correct.

Q That has been done for each season down to the very last season, 1944-45? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And these figures show, down to the very theatre, just how many independents you sold and how many affiliates you sold in these 92 cities? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Frohlich: I should like to offer this chart in evidence.

Mr. Wright: Let us see just what it is now. These charts that you have just identified, Mr. Montague. These are tabulations based upon the admissions of fact which you submitted and which are in evidence, are they?

The Witness: They are a compilation of our figures taken from our records. Whether they are in evidence here or not, I would sooner have the lawyer answer that.

Mr. Frohlich: The admissions of fact cover alternate seasons. These are for every season from 1936 down. They are based on the admissions of fact.

Mr. Wright: There is nothing in these computations that is supposed to contradict or alter anything that has been offered by way of admissions of fact?

(1771)

Mr. Frohlich: I am sure I can say no to that. They are entirely consistent with the exhibit that was handed to you, Mr. Wright.

Mr. Wright: You have one blue column here on this first one. There is one of these for each season, is that right?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Wright: I notice, this 1936-37 season, you have a blue column, you have a figure 38½ at the top. What does that mean?

The Witness: Just what it says there, sir.

Mr. Wright: 38½ what?

The Witness: Theatres. For Columbia first-run accounts in cities over 100,000, season 1936-37, and that half was probably created by a split.

Mr. Wright: What you mean is that in 38 cities you sold the independents all of the Columbia product and in one more you split it between Columbia and an affiliated account?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Wright: And then in 73 cities you sold the affiliated accounts exclusively, is that right?

The Witness: We sold 58—53½, which are not exclusive, but which were splits.

Mr. Wright: These figures refer to towns, 58½, 38½?

(1772)

The Witness: To theatres.

Judge Bright: To theatres?

The Witness: First-run accounts. An account is a theatre and not a town, sir.

Mr. Wright: You have one account in each of the 92 cities except where you split the product, is that right?

The Witness: We have a first-run account, and in this case there has been one account that we split the product with an independent theatre, as we term an independent, and with an affiliated theatre.

Mr. Wright: Then isn't what I said correct, that this chart means that in 38 of the 93 towns you sold your pictures exclusively to an independent first-run account?

The Witness: Independent first-run theatre.

Mr. Wright: And in 53 you sold them exclusively to an affiliated first-run account?

The Witness: I don't like the word "exclusive", sir, because we don't sell exclusive. We sell it to first-run.

Mr. Wright: As far as first-run is concerned.

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Wright: Then in the other one town it was split between the two?

The Witness: Yes, sir, the product was split between the two.

(1773)

Mr. Wright: I don't quite understand. This says one inch equals eight scale. One inch scale what?

The Witness: One inch, I imagine, will equal—I am not too sure of this scale myself.

Mr. Frohlich: That means eight accounts.

The Witness: One inch to eight.

Mr. Frohlich: Eight accounts.

The Witness: Eight accounts.

Mr. Frohlich: One inch to each eight accounts.

Mr. Wright: We have no objection.

Mr. Seymour: May we see them, Mr. Frohlich?

Mr. Frohlich: I will have them marked first.

Mr. Seymour: I would like to see them before they are marked in evidence.

Mr. Frohlich: You want to see them first before they are marked?

Mr. Seymour: Before they are marked in evidence. I suppose, like other exhibits, these are offered subject to correction? This is just counsel's characterization——

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Seymour: (Continuing)—of certain theatres being affiliated, and he may be wrong about it.

(Marked Defendant Columbia's Exhibit C-7.)

Judge Bright: What do you mean by "affiliates"?

The Witness: Affiliated is a term that we use meaning that to the best of our knowledge a particular theatre is associated with a company that has distribution and production, or a company that is producing pictures, that has a theatre ownership of some theatre or theatres.

(1774)

Judge Bright: Not confined to the eight defendants here.

The Witness: We don't have any theatres. Columbia doesn't own a single theatre, or interest.

Judge Bright: It is not confined to the so-called five major defendants.

The Witness: Yes, we would call an affiliate one of the five defendants, namely, we call M-G-M, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; we call Paramount an affiliate; we call RKO an affiliate; we call Warners an affiliate, and we call Fox an affiliate.

Judge Bright: Are those the only five?

The Witness: Universal, to the best of our knowledge, does not have theatres, so we would not call them that. Republic, we don't believe—well, I think Republic has one theatre in New York, but we certainly would not classify them in the industry as an affiliate.

Judge Bright: I am trying to find out what you mean by an affiliate.

The Witness: A producer-distributor that has directly or indirectly some theatre connection.

Judge Bright: Are you referring to the producer-distributor and exhibitor in this case, or universally all over the United States, if there are any others?

The Witness: If there are any others, I am including them too, sir.

(1775)

Q. I neglected to ask one important question, Mr. Montague. Does Columbia own any theatres? A. No, sir.

Q. Did it ever own any? A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Wright, Government's counsel, has had these defendants answer interrogatories or make admissions of fact with respect to 418 cities in the United States which have a population of 25,000 or over. Did you at my request have your department in Columbia make up a chart similar to the one just received in evidence, showing the number of accounts which Columbia has sold since 1936-1937, each season, down to 1944-45, to the independent theatre in these respective cities, also to the affiliated theatre in these respective cities? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I show you these charts and ask you whether these are the charts that were made? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Frohlich: I should like to offer these in evidence.

Mr. Seymour: May we see them?

Judge Bright: Following up my last question to you, what do you mean by an independent?

The Witness: An independent theatre owner is one in our opinion that has no connection whatsoever with distribution or production. An independent producer is one who has no connection with theatres.

(1776)

Judge Bright: That does not help any. You are selling to independent theatre operators. Who are independent theatre operators?

The Witness: Who are independent theatre operators?

Judge Bright: Who do you refer to when you say you are selling to independents in these charts?

The Witness: We refer to an independent theatre in those charts as a theatre that we license our film to, that has no connection with any distribution or production, as far as our knowledge is concerned.

Q. And any connection with the five defendants in this case? A. Or any connection with the five defendants in this case that would be.

Judge Hand: That last, of course, identifies something. The first throws the whole case into confusion, as far as I am concerned. Mere unclassified confusion. What is the use of introducing such things and having such vague talk as this?

Mr. Frohlich: I thought the witness had testified as to what is an independent and what is an affiliated theatre, and I did not think there was any question about it.

Judge Hand: Absolutely vague. He sometimes says an affiliate is one of the big five, then he says anybody else. I did not think we were talking about anybody else except these five and the people that have been classified at different times as independents.

(1777)

Q. Do you know of any producer-distributor in the United States other than the big five in this case that owns any theatres? A. No, sir.

Q. When you speak of an affiliated theatre, are you confining yourself to theatres owned or operated by the big five defendants in this case? A. Yes.

Q. When you speak of an independent theatre, Mr. Montague, do you mean a theatre which is not owned or controlled or operated by the big five in this case? A. Yes.

Mr. Caskey: I would like to examine on the voir dire before these are received.

Judge Bright: Oh, dear, did you say?

Mr. Caskey: Voir dire is as close to it as I can get.

Preliminary Cross Examination by Mr. Caskey:

Q. Mr. Montague, taking the 1944-45 chart, how did you classify the first-run theatres in Jersey City, Newark and Elizabeth? A. The first-run theatres we sell?

Q. Yes. A. If we sold it to one of the defendants here, it would be called affiliated. If we sold it to an independent it would be in the independent column.

Q. Did you sell Skouras in those three cities first-run? A. I would want to refer to the record, sir.

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge whether the (1778)
Skouras theatres in Jersey City, Newark and Elizabeth, are included in these charts? A. I don't know, sir.

Q. What about the Robb & Rowley, do you know whether they are included as an affiliate or independent? A. To us Robb & Rowley would be included, as we understand it, as an independent.

Mr. Seymour: I assume these, if received, will be taken subject to correction, because it is his characterization which is being received.

Mr. Frohlich: Any further questions, Mr. Caskey?

Mr. Caskey: My objection to them is that they are lumping a great many things under one heading. It may be that National Theatres are affiliated but they certainly are not affiliated with anybody else but National Theatres, and these picturesque charts may some day prove to be misleading.

Mr. Frohlich: I did not think there was any serious dispute in this case up to now as to what is an independent theatre in this case and what is an affiliate.

Mr. Caskey: Not in the least, but there is a dispute in my mind whether that kind of chart should come in which lumps National Theatres with the Sparks theatres in Florida in one basket.

Judge Bright: Does the chart show what theatres are lumped as independent or what theatres are lumped as affiliated, or is it just the statistical information as to the number they sold?

Mr. Caskey: The statistical information puts the theatres of all these defendants into one chart without any separation.

Judge Bright: Aren't you trying to get a shoe on your foot which may not fit? How do you know it includes theatres which you say are not affiliated, in the affiliated column?

Mr. Caskey: I don't know it, but I understood him to say that it did. I think the chart would be much more helpful if it showed each one of the defendants separately, at least indicating on the chart for each company the number of accounts. Then what the conclusion may be will be for argument and for the Court.

Mr. Frohlich: I offer the exhibit, your Honor.

Mr. Caskey: We have an objection.

Judge Hand: Received.

By Mr. Frohlich:

Q. Just a few general questions, Mr. Montague. There has been some testimony about Blumenfeld out in California. What cities does he operate his theatres in? A. He has quite a list of cities, Mr. Frohlich. I know of some of them offhand. I don't know all of them. I would want to refer to the list.
(1780)

Q. Has he any in Oakland? A. Yes, sir.

Q. San Francisco? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Sacramento? A. Yes, sir. Stockton.

Q. Does Columbia sell him? A. Yes.

Q. Are there affiliated theatres in those cities? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And has Columbia sold Blumenfeld for many years? A. Many years.

Q. Find him a satisfactory customer? A. A very satisfactory customer.

Q. There has been testimony in this case that Blumenfeld theatres have suffered by comparison with the affiliated theatres in the respective cities. What do you say on that subject? A. I am not an expert, sir, as to the qualifications as to whether one theatre has a better appointment than another, but I feel that as far as Columbia goes we can get more income out of the Blumenfeld theatres than we can get out of any other theatres in that particular zone. That is why we sell him or license our films to him.

Q. Even though Blumenfeld's theatres are smaller? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Less seating capacity? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does he take all of your product or most of it? A. He (1781)
takes most of our product.

Q. What would you say the affiliates in those cities would do with most of your product? A. I don't think that they could use as much film. I don't believe they could run my important pictures as long as Mr. Blumenfeld can run them. Therefore it is our considered opinion that we are much better off selling Mr. Blumenfeld than we would to the affiliates.

Q. What is your general custom and practice throughout the country in respect to these affiliates and independents? Whom do you prefer to sell and whom do you sell most of your pictures to? A. We prefer to sell the accounts that we think we can get the most out of for our over-all program.

Q. Who are those accounts? A. In many situations they are the independent; in others they are the affiliates.

Mr. Frohlich: May I have about five minutes? I am trying to get some figures that will shorten this examination, and then I will be finished.

(Short recess.)

By Mr. Frohlich:

Q. Now, Mr. Montague, in 1943 and 1944, what amount did Columbia take in in the United States from the exhibition of its pictures in all theatres? A. Just feature pictures——

Q. Feature pictures only, nothing about Westerns or (1782) shorts, just feature pictures? A. Approximately twenty millions of dollars.

Q. And how much of that twenty millions of dollars came in from affiliated theatres? A. I would say approximately one-third.

Q. About six million or seven million dollars? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Frohlich: No further questions.

Cross Examination by Mr. Raftery:

Q. Mr. Montague, in response to one of Judge Bright's questions, you stated that your service that you sold in a group contract was needed in small towns where an exhibitor used a number of pictures, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, in your cities, including the 92, or the 482, or whatever they are, you have suburban runs, neighborhood runs, in addition to the first-runs downtown, isn't that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how much of the country today is double feature? A. A good portion of it.

Q. Would you say 80 per cent? A. No, I would not say 80 per cent; maybe 75 per cent of it.

Q. Well, 75 per cent. That is numerically as well as territorially, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. And in those neighborhood runs and in those suburban runs they need many more pictures each week than (1783) they do in the first-run downtown, isn't that right? A. Definitely so, sir.

Q. And it is very comparable to the number needed in the small towns? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when you start out to sell your service, you have your salesmen's eye directed on those suburban runs, neighborhood runs, and small town runs, do you not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you seek to sell him the service that he needs to keep his theatre open, isn't that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in the big towns in the first-runs, you supply a great deal of the features that are called second features, do you not? A. We supply a number of pictures that are termed second features.

Q. Yes. They will play one picture which they advertise as the first picture, isn't that a fact? A. Correct.

Q. Then they advertise the second feature? A. Correct.

Q. That is true in Boston, New York, and many other of the big cities, is it not? A. Where they have the double bill, yes, sir.

Q. Where they have the double bill? A. Yes.

Q. And when you talked about trying to sell an exhibitor as many pictures as you can, you and your associates analyze the needs of each particular theatre, isn't that right? (1784)

A. Correct, sir.

Q. And when you told Mr. Frohlich on this over-buying situation, you go into this account and try to sell him as many of the features as you—and when I say you, I mean you and your subordinates—feel that theatre needs to keep that theatre open? A. Correct.

Q. Now in New York City, where do you exhibit your pictures first run on the Island of Manhattan? A. Our first-run is with Radio City Music Hall, and we also play some first-runs in the Capitol, in the Criterion, in the Rialto, and the State theatre.

Q. Now the preferred first-run—and I am going to borrow Mr. Wright's term—preferred first-run—that is what? A. Radio City Music Hall.

Q. And how many pictures a year are you able to get exhibited in the present market in the Radio City Music Hall? A. In a good year it might be five to six.

Q. Well, by a good year, you mean good for you? A. Good for me, yes, sir.

Q. Well, in a good year, meaning the kind of a market we are in now, how many do you get? A. I think last year we have three or four pictures in Radio City Music Hall.

Q. In the 52-week period? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how many weeks did those three or four pic- (1785)

tures play? A. One of them played six weeks; another one played six weeks; one played three weeks; I think one played either two or three weeks.

Q. That, I think, the Government has classified as an independent [redacted]e; isn't that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Th[redacted] operated by the Rockefeller interests? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, after you are able to place, we will say, your top pictures of that caliber—those are your top pictures, are they not? A. Yes, sir; part of our top pictures. We would say they are part of our top pictures.

Q. Well, as far as the Music Hall is concerned, the Music Hall considers them the top pictures that you have? A. Quite so.

Q. So then you start out and you try to place the remainder of what you call the top pictures, in your next best outlet, isn't that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. First-run? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, where do you place those? A. Well, we may try to place them in the Roxy or the Capitol or the Criterion or the State or the Rialto, or any other theatre that we think may be available.

Q. Do you try the Globe occasionally? A. I beg pardon?

Q. The Globe. A. Yes, the Globe; but we have not played there a top picture for quite some time.

(1786)

Q. That is because United Artists have been using the playing time? A. Well, somebody else has been getting it. We have not.

Q. In the Gotham? A. We have not played a picture in the Gotham.

Q. In the Victoria? A. No, we have not played a picture in the Victoria.

Q. The Astor? A. No, we have not played the Astor for a long, long while.

Q. And then you have a great many pictures that never get a first-run in downtown Manhattan, isn't that right? A. Quite so, sir.

Q. And that is due generally in the great big cities, isn't it? A. Quite true.

Q. Now the pictures that play in a theatre like the Music Hall, do you have any trouble selling them to the independent accounts or the affiliated accounts that follow the Music Hall, outside of getting the price you want? A. They are under contract to these following theatres, probably prior to the time we play the Music Hall; so consequently we would not have any difficulty selling it. We do not have any difficulty dating them.

Q. Now let us come to that. You have sold your pictures in advance? A. Quite so.

Q. To, we will say, part to the Loew's circuit, and some (1787) to Randforce—I am not saying the same runs; I am talking different runs—some to Skouras, some to Brandt; and we can go on and name many more accounts in the suburban areas of New York City. You have sold them in advance to those accounts, isn't that a fact? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have no trouble, you say, getting those Music Hall pictures dated and played and paid for in your sub runs? A. None whatsoever, sir.

Q. Now that equally applies, we will say, to the pictures that have had a run in the Capitol theatre? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or the Criterion theatre? A. Yes.

Q. Now let us look at those pictures that have never had a first-run of that kind. Do you have any trouble getting those dated in the sub runs? A. Great trouble, sir.

Q. So a picture that has been established by a fine run in a fine theatre—that is the type of picture that will almost automatically date itself all the way down to that last ten-cent run; isn't that the fact? A. Quite true.

Q. And many times these ten and fifteen and 25-cent runs will book them back again; isn't that a fact? A. If we allow it.

Q. Now, you referred to, It Happened One Night. Has (1788) that picture had more repeat books than any picture you ever released? A. Many more.

Q. Many? A. Yes.

Q. Not that picture was played first-run in the key cities, was it not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was moved over? A. Yes, sir.

Q. It had an extended first-run in most of the cities? A. In many of them.

Q. And had an extended move-over? A. In some of them.

Q. And perhaps was moved over again? A. And repeated and brought back several times.

Q. So you have heard the expression in the business, "There is no evil in this business that good pictures won't cure"? A. Yes, and I believe in that.

Q. And you subscribe to that? A. Yes.

Q. So in talking about this weeping towel that is kept in each exchange, that has to do with the pictures primarily that do not have the first-runs and the move-overs, isn't that a fact? A. They are not what we call in the business the "sock" pictures.

Q. In other words, Mr. Montague, you as the producer of these pictures—and I refer to these pictures as the pictures that don't have the first-run and are not known as the "sock" pictures—you assume generally the whole risk of loss (1789) connected with that type of production, do you not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the exhibitor who exhibits these pictures, those are the pictures that he objects to playing, isn't that so? A. It is easily those pictures, sir.

Q. Now what are you talking about is equally true of the problems of your competitor, Republic, is it not? A. I would believe there is the same problem.

Q. And Universal? A. I would believe they too have the same problem.

Q. And also P.R.C.? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Monogram? A. Definitely so.

Q. Now in connection with the various meetings you talked about with exhibitors, Mr. Wright stated that it was the independent exhibitors who objected primarily to the blocks of five or less; and I think you stated the affiliated exhibitors took part in those meetings? A. To the best of my knowledge they did, sir.

Q. Have these meetings been held since the entry of the consent decree? A. It was after the consent decree, to the best of my opinion.

Q. The meetings were with the distributors and exhibitors? A. At that time there was distributors and exhibitors, yes, sir.

Q. Was the distributors association represented? A. (1790)
Yes, they were all represented to the best of my knowledge.

Q. What are the two large exhibitors associations? A. Well, there is the Allied and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

Q. The Allied is the Abe Myers Association, so-called, is it not? A. So called, yes.

Q. And the M.P.T.O.A. was formerly headed by—what was his name, Kuykendal? A. Kuykendal.

Q. And that association had affiliated and non-affiliated members, did it not? A. At that meeting?

Q. No, I say Kuykendal, the Kuykendal association had affiliated members as well as independent members? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the Myers association is composed entirely of independent exhibitors? A. I believe so, sir.

Q. But you have been active in that better relations between exhibitors and distributors personally, have you not, Mr. Montague? A. I have, sir.

Q. And Mr. Rogers of Metro? A. Yes, sir, and Mr. Depinet of RKO and Mr. Sears of Warner Bros. at that time.

Q. That is before he joined United Artists? A. That is right, sir.

Q. He never attended after he joined United Artists, is that right? A. To the best of my opinion, yes, he never attended.

(1791)

Q. So these groups met and discussed both blocks of five and the old system of selling, isn't that the fact? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And as I understood your testimony, each of the exhibitor groups were demanding a return to the old system of selling, isn't that right? A. Arguing for a return to the old system of selling.

Q. Rather than sell in blocks of five? A. In blocks of five, yes, sir.

Q. Did this group or either of them or both of them have a little squawk about having to buy pictures on percentage? A. Exhibitors have been more or less squawking about that ever since percentage was first brought up, I believe.

Q. And also the right to eliminate pictures. Wasn't that the second big squawk? A. Yes, that has been a bone of contention for many years, sir.

Q. So when you talked about your selective contracts, what you are trying to do is to meet by selectivity or right to eliminate the squawks of the exhibitors on the pictures they did not want to play? A. Yes, sir, as best we can.

Q. Now, when you told their Honors this morning that you averaged 32 pictures across the country, you, Columbia, would commit your entire program to an exhibitor and give him the right to eliminate, isn't that it? A. Correct.

Q. So as to the pictures he eliminated, as far as he was concerned, you assumed the full risk of loss in those pictures, isn't that right? A. Correct.

Q. Now, have you ever heard of any exhibitors in any of these meetings asking to continue the policy of selling in blocks or five? A. No, sir.

Q. Quite the contrary? A. Quite the contrary.

Q. Now, you are fairly familiar with the method of selling used by United Artists, are you not? A. Yes; I would say that I am reasonably familiar with it.

Q. You used to be a customer of United Artists years ago, did you not, Mr. Montague? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you used to buy their pictures? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you were an exhibitor? A. That is correct.

Q. And they sell pictures one at a time, is that a fact? A. They sold pictures in those days one at a time. And if there happened to be two that may have been released, I would try to buy two.

Q. But they sold them individually on individual contracts? A. Yes.

Mr. Wright: Aren't you going to have a witness of your own?

Mr. Raftery: I don't know.

Judge Hand: You are doing very well with this (1793) one.

Q. And they continued selling pictures individually for a great many years? A. I beg your pardon, sir?

Q. All through the years; isn't that a fact? A. I understand they continued to sell pictures individually.

Q. And are you familiar with the manner and method, generally, used by Universal in selling, are you not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they sell pictures in groups, don't they? A. Yes, sir, as we do.

Mr. Wright: If the Court is going to regard this as competent evidence of sales methods of these other people, we object to it. I do not think he is in a position to state what United Artists does with its pictures, how it sells, or Universal either.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Q. You are in competition with both United Artists and Universal? A. In direct competition, sir.

Q. Now, Mr. Montague, I did not see those charts you put in, but I presume Boston was somewhere included in those fancy paintings? A. Yes, sir, they were included, sir.

Q. And for a great many years you sold your pictures first-run for exhibition in the Orpheum and the State theatres in Boston, did you not? A. We still do, sir.

Q. And you still do? A. Yes.

(1794)

Q. But you were not able to get them all played there, were you? A. No, sir.

Q. Loew's had their own product in those theatres, didn't they? A. They played their own pictures too in those theatres.

Q. And United Artists used to play in those theatres? A. Yes, sir.

Q. So between United Artists and Columbia and Loew's there was a scramble for the playing time of those theatres, was there not? A. Quite a scramble, sir.

Q. And in this present lush market we are in, bottlenecks have developed up there in the past couple of years, have they not? A. As they have in many other places.

Q. In many other cities? A. Yes.

Q. Now, when a situation like that develops, what do you do? A. Well, if we can't get our picture released fast enough and we think there is a possibility of selling that particular picture that we need an immediate release on, we are very apt to go to the Loew organization and ask them to give up that picture from their contract and try to find another theatre, or do find another theatre.

Q. Well, up in Boston there was a theatre called the Trans-Lux Theatre, was there not, Mr. Montague? A. Yes.

Q. And it is still up there? A. Yes.

(1795)

Q. And a very good location? A. Excellent location in my opinion.

Q. And not a large seating capacity? A. Quite a small seating capacity.

Q. And when the bottleneck developed you played pictures in the Trans-Lux Theatre? A. We have been known to play pictures in the Trans-Lux Theatre.

Q. And good pictures?

Judge Bright: What do you mean by a bottleneck?

The Witness: Well, if we have three or four pictures waiting for release in the City of Boston, and our account, Loew's State and Orpheum theatres have a lot of pictures that they have not played that have been released before we released ours, that means we must wait our turn, at least, and our turn may not come for three or four or five months; and in that case we term that a bottleneck; and then we go and try to get them off the Loew's contract and try to find another theatre for them. That is so the subsequent-run theatres can get more of a regular play of our product.

Q. And that is the same reason the Tremont and the Majestic theatres, legitimate theatres in Boston, in the last couple of years have been converted into first-run motion picture theatres? A. Yes, sir.

(1796)

Q. And isn't your real reason for that, Mr. Montague, for that, selfishly to get your turn-over; isn't that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And secondly to take care of the subsequent runs who need pictures? A. Who need and whom we have an obligation to deliver pictures to.

Q. In other words, a picture will go into the Orpheum Theatre now in Boston and play three or four weeks where formerly it played one week; isn't that a fact? A. Yes. They played a great many more pictures for one week and a lot less pictures in the past for longer than one week than they do now.

Q. And the neighborhoods still change the pictures once or twice or even three or seven times a week, do they not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Boston is where the double bill policy was born, is it not? A. It has been so said.

Q. By exhibitors like you and other exhibitors? A. Yes, from Boston and all of the rest of the country too.

Q. And in those situations in the neighborhoods they need far more pictures per week than are being played downtown Boston first-run under the old setup; I mean without the Trans-Lux, the Tremont and the Majestic? A. Yes, they would not have enough clearance to the few theatres as they have now with the many theatres playing first-run.

Q. Hasn't the situation even gotten to a point in the last couple of years where they are reshowing your pictures to take care of the second features in these double bill houses? A. Yes, sir; that was one of the reasons.

Q. And you have talked a great deal, Mr. Montague, about adjustments. Do you have much trouble with the towel on those top pictures we talked about? A. No, we have very little trouble with the top pictures; practically none at all.

Q. And it is these low bracket pictures, again, that are subject to adjustment, even over and above the amount of selectivity you allow these exhibitors? A. Yes, sir.

Q. So as Judge Hand remarked, even though your contract is signed, it calls for an obligation to play, say 32 out of 42, you may end up with a much less play-off than 32 out of 42? A. Yes, and a different price on some of the pictures than specified on the contract.

Q. Now, yesterday Mr. Kupper told us about these little towns where you have only one theatre. Do you have much trouble getting into those towns? A. They are the hardest towns to sell.

Q. In other words, that man has a complete monopoly in his own town in exhibition, is that right? A. Absolutely complete, sir.

Q. And he can leave you out any time he feels like? A. (1798)
Yes; and feels like it quite a bit.

Q. Now, you may run into that in the suburban and neighborhood runs in the city? A. Yes.

Q. Where you have one theatre in the neighborhood? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you are left out of those situations quite frequently, are you not? A. Quite frequently.

Q. And, again, to go back to the larger towns, do you have trouble in this present market getting day and date from coast to coast? A. Very difficult.

Q. Well, let us take a picture like Kiss and Tell that is opening at the Capitol Theatre. Have you that dated pretty well across the country? A. No, we have not.

Q. I am talking only of first-runs. A. No, we have not got it dated. We are dating it very slowly because we think the picture will benefit by slow dating. By word of mouth it will spread as to the type of business the picture is doing.

Q. Let us assume that the picture is one you desire to get dated quickly. Have you been able in the present market to get quick datings across the country? A. No, we have not been able.

Q. You have none of these theatres to date them in for you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that right? A. I beg pardon?

(1799)

Q. You have no theatres of your own to date them in? A. None whatsoever.

Q. So you take the market as you find it and try to get the most dates you can on your first runs and as soon as you can? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that applies equally to the subsequent runs that follow down the line? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, these subsequent-run theatres have been very prosperous, have they not, during the past ten years? A. They have seemed to grow considerably in prosperity. They have been more successful year after year. In such situations as we play our pictures on percentage we naturally get a good feel of that group, because we participated in the group, and we have found over the period of the last few years we have been able to get increased prices on the so-called flat buy, from which we have a right to assume that the theatre has improved its business.

Mr. Raftery: That is all.

Mr. Seymour: I have a few questions.

Cross Examination by Mr. Seymour:

Q. I wish you would clear up for us just what you meant when you testified earlier that you considered certain theatres affiliated with major producers, and in particular reference to those charts which your counsel put in, will you define for us what you mean by an affiliated theatre? A. An affiliated theatre in our description is a theatre that to the best of our knowledge is in some way associated with a producer and distributor.

Q. That is in some way associated with a particular producer or distributor? A. Particular, yes, sir.

Q. You do not mean that it is associated with all the producers who have interests in theatres? A. Definitely not.

Q. Or with more than one of them? A. No.

Q. And so when in these charts or graphs that have been put in there are theatres described as affiliated, that is just the sum total of the theatres to which you sell which severally are affiliated with a particular producer, is that right? A. Yes, sir, severally.

Q. Now, for example, in those graphs that you put in, did you include the theatres which are operated by the Butterfield Theatre Company? A. We considered Butterfield in our listing as an independent, not an affiliated.

Q. Not an affiliated? A. No.

Mr. Seymour: I wonder if that clears up the question that was asked from the bench earlier about that matter.

Judge Hand: I think so. I think there was a misunderstanding between the witness and his counsel.

(1801)

Mr. Raftery: Or a misunderstanding between the witness and the charts. That is the reason I haven't any charts.

Q. Now, has the cost of your top pictures increased in the last ten years, Mr. Montague? A. Yes, materially.

Q. Can you give us some idea of what that increase has been? A. In the last ten years?

Q. Yes. A. Well, a top picture ten years ago would have cost in the neighborhood of approximately $400,000. A top picture today has cost us as much, with its prints and advertising, as two million three to two million four.

Q. Are you familiar with the negotiations which the sales department conducts with theatre companies in which Paramount has some interest?

The Witness: I did not get the first part of your question.

Q. (read.) A. Yes.

Q. And have you from time to time participated in negotiations with one or more of those companies? A. With some of them, yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell us where those negotiations are conducted? A. Well, in the localities in which the theatres are operated.

Q. And are they conducted by representatives of the exchanges or of the sales department at the principal office of (1802) those theatre-operating companies? A. Yes, sir.

Q. They are not conducted with the Paramount theatre department? A. No, sir.

Q. Now, so far as you are concerned, or the Columbia sales department, is there any relationship whatever between the negotiations or licenses granted to one of those theatre-operating companies, such as Minnesota Amusement Company, and the negotiations or licenses for Columbia pictures to the theatres operated by another one of those companies, such as M. & P. in New England? A. No; the type of deals are quite different.

Q. Now, do you license Columbia pictures to all the theatre-operating companies or theatres operated by all the theatre-operating companies in which Paramount has an interest? A. No, sir.

Q. With respect to a particular theatre-operating company, do you license Columbia Pictures to all the theatres operated by that company? A. In some cases I think we do. Not in all the theatres. If those theatres are in competition with one another we would not lease our films in all.

Q. And in some cases you do not license to all the theatres, isn't that so? A. That is right, sir.

Q. And in many cases you license to competitors of theatres operated by one or more of those operating companies; (1803) isn't that so? A. Quite true, sir. In New England I believe we only sell one or two situations to M. & P. where they have competition. We sell the independent so-called competition.

Q. And that is so elsewhere in the country? A. In many situations.

Q. Now, your counsel has asked you a number of questions about selling in blocks of five. Before the decree was entered and before your company concluded not to participate, were you generally familiar with the source from which the various matters covered by the consent decree came? A. Yes, generally speaking, I think I am acquainted with it.

Q. Am I correct in believing that the provision for selling in blocks of five was a suggestion of the Attorney General?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, that is objectionable, where any particular thing came from. I think the decree speaks for itself as to what is in it. I do not see how it has the slightest relevance who suggested what.

Judge Hand: I will sustain the objection.

Mr. Seymour: That is all.

Judge Hand: Any more questions before the Government cross-examines?

(1804)

Mr. Wright: Yes, we will have——

Judge Hand: I mean before.

(No response.)

Judge Hand: All right, we shall adjourn until 2.15.

Mr. Seymour: Would your Honors give me a five-minute leeway, to come back at 2.20? I have to preside at a meeting.

Judge Hand: Yes. Somebody can take your place.

AFTERNOON SESSION

Mr. Frohlich: Before proceeding, your Honors, may I ask Mr. Wright to stipulate with me that the witness, if asked, would answer in the same strain as the other witnesses, negativing the charges of conspiracy?

Mr. Wright: That is so stipulated.

Mr. Frohlich: Your witness.

ABRAHAM MONTAGUE resumed the stand.

Cross-Examination by Mr. Caskey:

Q. Mr. Montague, with whom do you negotiate film licenses for Randforce Amusement Company? A. Sam Rinzler.

Q. Do you negotiate with anyone at Twentieth Century-Fox for Randforce? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you negotiate with anyone at RKO for Randforce? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you regard Randforce an affiliate or independent? A. We consider Randforce an independent.

Q. Is the same true of the Skouras Theatres Corporation which operate in Metropolitan New York? A. We consider Skouras an independent.

Q. Do you know Si Fabian? A. Very well, sir.

Q. How long have you known him? A. Ever since I have been in New York, 12 or 13 years.

(1806)

Q. He operates theatres in Albany? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And, according to the testimony, now in Norfolk and Richmond, Virginia? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is he affiliated with anyone? A. To the best of my knowledge, definitely, no. We consider him an independent.

Q. And he acts independently of everyone else? A. Absolutely.

Mr. Caskey: That is all. Thank you, Mr. Wright.

Cross-Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. On this question of Mr. Fabian's status: You consider him an independent in Brooklyn, where he operates for the RKO-Paramount-Fox pool? A. We consider him as an independent, Mr. Wright.

Q. I mean, everywhere that he operates, regardless of whose theatres he is operating? A. We are not interested in whose theatres. We list him as an independent because he acts entirely independent of any so-called affiliate.

Q. I just wanted it clear that you regarded Mr. Fabian as an independent even in those situations where he is operating theatres which are owned by one or more of these defendants or their subsidiaries upon a basis where they share in the profits of the operation, is that right? A. We understand there is a pool in Brooklyn, for which Mr. Fabian is the operator.

Q. Can you answer the question? A. I beg your pardon?
(1807)

Mr. Wright: Will you read the question?

(Question read.)

A. We consider him an independent, sir, in such situations.

Q. You do not, of course, sell Columbia pictures to everybody yourself, do you? A. No, sir.

Q. You have a sales organization. Can you just tell us what it consists of? A. We have a sales organization that consists of approximately 101 salesmen, 31 branch managers and eight district managers.

Q. And then, what is above the district managers? A. Then we have certain home office personnel that act as what we call circuit contacts and bigger contacts, which some of these men go out into the field and help negotiate and do negotiate.

Q. And who and what are they? Can you give us their names and titles? A. Yes; there is a Mr. Jackter, who is the assistant sales manager; Mr. Weinberg, who is one of those who goes out from the home office and acts and negotiates for us; and a Mr. Louis Astor; also a Mr. Max Weisfeldt.

Q. Those men are all in New York, is that right? A. Those men reside in New York and are part of the home office.

Q. The district managers—are they in the field here in New York? A. They are in the field. One of them is in New York in the New York branch.

Q. The others are in the field or in the areas occupied by the exchanges that they supervise? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And your solicitation of contracts, as far as independent accounts, is handled principally by the salesmen and branch managers in the first instance? A. Some of the independent contracts are handled by them. I have also been negotiating with many of the independents throughout the United States.

Q. Well, the ordinary routine in selling the independent account is that the salesman takes an application from them; then it goes in to the branch manager? A. In some cases the branch manager; many cases the district manager; and in some cases the home office contacts them.

Q. Well, whenever the solicitation is made and then the application is signed, then it goes first to the branch for approval or rejection? A. It goes first to the branch manager, yes, sir.

Q. And then to the district manager? A. In some cases to the district manager.

Q. For approval or rejection? A. For his opinion or approval.

Q. And then it comes to New York for a final decision before it is approved? A. Yes, sir.

(1809)

Q. And when the contract is approved some New York official executes it and returns it to the exhibitor, is that right? A. Returns it to the branch.

Q. Or returns it to the branch; and then the branch, I suppose, delivers it to the exhibitor in question? A. Yes, sir. It mails it probably in most cases.

Q. This method of selling that you use that is described as season block booking—you say you sell your pictures today pretty much as you have for the last ten years as far as season blocks are concerned? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in addition to season blocks, of course, you also sometimes make franchises which extend for more than a season? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you still make those today? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in this process of selling your features, westerns, shorts, in fact, everything you have to offer, the effort of the salesman or individual who negotiates the account is always to include as much of the product as you have in the contract; isn't that right? A. Correct, sir.

Q. And, of course, as to what particular negotiations go on between a salesman or branch manager and any particular exhibitor, I suppose that is something that does not come to your attention? A. Well, not too much, sir. I have general knowledge of the type of discussion that may go on.

Q. Well, the type of discussion that may go on and does go on is that it is sometimes indirectly suggested to the account that if he wants certain of the product he had better take some of the other, isn't that right? A. The conversation that goes on as to that point between the salesman and the manager—the salesman, you understand, Mr. Wright, is always very, very anxious to close a deal with a theatre. Once he has that closed up much of the responsibility is off of him as far as the selling of it goes; but not as far as the liquidating of the contract; that he must follow up. Now, very often the salesman may suggest to the branch manager that a certain portion of the program which the exhibitor offers to buy, he feels it is a fair representation in that house, and he suggests to the manager to take it; and the manager may differ with his opinion, or he may accede to it and say, "All right, let us close that contract."

Q. I am afraid you misunderstood the question. I was not referring to conversations between the salesman and the manager. I was referring to such negotiations or conversations that either the salesman or the manager may have with the independent exhibitor. A. I have a general knowledge of what that might be.

Q. And I say in the course of those conversations and negotiations it is sometimes suggested to the exhibitor, is it not, either directly or indirectly, that if he wants to buy certain of the product it would be advisable for him to buy some of the other which may not appear to him to be so desirable, because he may not have such an acute need for it; is that right? A. That is quite true. The exhibitor may want to buy less and we may want to sell more. He may want to buy just two or three pictures of the top, and we may think he has room in his theatre and we are seeking representation for more.

Judge Goddard: Suppose he says he won't take more than three or four, do you turn him down altogether?

The Witness: In some cases, yes, sir. It would depend on whether we had opposition or not. If we had some place that we thought we could do better by going across the street or in the adjacent town, or some place, the chances are we would go and try to sell that one, or more of it to the other fellow. If we did not have any opposition we would still try to talk him up to take some more film than just the top, because we would not afford to sell him just the top film.

Judge Goddard: Suppose you had none who would take them, and he would not take more than seven, or four or five, would he get them or not?

The Witness: In rare cases, yes. In general cases I would say no, sir.

By Mr. Wright:

Q. Now, as far as what you term blind selling is concerned, you pursue the same practice there today that you have for the past ten years? A. Well, if you want to use that term "blind selling", we do not agree with it that it is blind, Mr. Wright.

Q. What you would do is, you, at the time you have these negotiations for a season's deal, you tell the exhibitor the approximate number and kind of pictures that you think you are going to be able to release that year, isn't that right? A. Yes; we let out as much knowledge of the picture as we have.

Q. And he does not get any assurance when he signs the contract even as to how many you are going to be able to deliver, is that right? A. Yes, it may be we will not be able to deliver them all. Occasionally we deliver more. He bases his contact and the method under which he negotiates a contract with us on past performances. That is the basis. Therefore we say it is not blind selling. It is a continuance of an actual knowledge that a man has of our product and the kind of pictures we make.

Q. I understand. Well, of course, he considers your past performance. That is about the only thing he really has to go by in estimating what he is going to get under your contract for the ensuing year; that is right, isn't it? A. Yes. (1813)

We make a great deal of past performance. We are willing to have that past performance reviewed and so sell against it.

Q. You do not even name the title of the features in the deal that he makes, do you? A. In the contract we do not.

Q. And he does not even know with any degree of certainty how many are going to have which particular stars in them either, does he? A. Not on all of them, sir.

Judge Hand: What do you agree to do, to give him your output?

The Witness: That is right, sir; we agree to give him all or any part of it that he may buy and we complete negotiations for.

Q. Now, that again is the method of selling which you generally pursue with the smaller independent accounts, isn't that right? A. It is the same method whether they be small or big, sir.

Q. Well, as a matter of fact, in selling your so-called key runs, those people have never committed themselves to play any one of your pictures without having seen it first, isn't that a fact? A. That is not a fact.

Q. When you sell those runs before they book any of your pictures actually in there for an exhibition, they see it, don't they? A. After they have bought it.

(1814)

Q. Well, let us take one of these concrete situations where there is some first-run account that uses perhaps five or six of your season's output for first-run exhibition in the course of the year—— A. Are you talking about the Music Hall, sir?

Q. No, I am not talking about the Music Hall. A. You will find it very difficult to find any more.

Q. Well, you have some, let us say, that will not use more than eight or ten or 12 of your entire output for first-run exhibition in a particular large city, isn't that right? A. There would be some of them but not too many.

Q. Well, as to those, you make a deal for the season's product which simply gives them the privilege of selecting from your output eight, 10 or 12, or some other specified number that they think will be suitable for first-run exhibition in their theatres; isn't that right? A. We would give them the same rights we would give any other selective contract; no more and no less.

Q. Well, the amount of selectivity you give always depends, does it not, on the particular bargaining position of the fellow that you make the deal with; isn't that right? A. It always depends on the bargaining position of the fellow we make the deal with.

Q. Now, you have a situation where the first-run exhibitor has enough product to play so that he does not need more than 8 or 10 of your pictures to exhibit on first-run in his theatres; you know of such situations as that don't you? A. Where I know there is competition I do not sell them if I can do better.

(1815)

Q. In those situations where you make a deal of that kind, the ten or twelve that are actually used and exhibited are not now and never were actually elected and dated in until the exhibitor had had a chance to see them, isn't that right? A. Mr. Wright, your question is very general. If you could name one particular theatre or group of theatres, I could give you your answers very much clearer. You are generalizing and it is very hard for me to answer.

Q. Can you think of a situation offhand? Let me take your Music Hall. A. Yes.

Q. Which uses five or six pictures selected from your annual output, or maybe three or four. None of those pictures is ever actually dated and committed, put into the Music Hall, until after the operator of the Music Hall has seen the picture, isn't that right? A. Mr. Wright, when you get to the Music Hall, I would like to explain to you that the Music Hall contract does not deal with pictures, sir. It deals with a number of weeks the Music Hall commits themselves to play against the contract. He also agrees in that contract that if he does not fill out those weeks, that he pays for the pictures at a certain stipulated price.

Q. You sell him so many weeks of playing time? A. I beg your pardon?

Q. You sell him so many weeks of playing time? A.
(1816)
Correct.

Q. The selection of the pictures that are actually used, if any, to fill that playing time, is not made now and it never has been until after the Music Hall has seen the picture in question, isn't that right? A. The contract is made prior even to the time we produce the pictures. The play-off of the contract, as far as the Music Hall is concerned, is based on whether or not he likes the picture. If he does, he will give playing time. If not, there is a cost to him, if he passes it up and doesn't fill out the 12 weeks of his contract.

Q. Exactly. A. Yes.

Q. But as to what is actually played, that is never determined until after he has seen the picture? A. After the sale is made and after he has seen the picture, yes, sir.

Q. And that situation is not unusual, is it, that is, where you contract with a first-run account for a certain amount of playing time; you do that in other so-called key situations? A. No. Very rare. I could not offhanded think of another situation that we sold on playing time, sir.

Q. Give me a situation, if you can think of one, where your first-run exhibitor that you sell is only committed to actually use the ten or twelve of your features. A. I cannot remember one offhanded. I would have to refer to my records, sir.

Q. How about 15 or 20, then? A. Yes, I think we could remember 15 or 20.

Q. Could you give me one of those? A. Well, for instance, I can remember that Loew's Theatre in Boston, trusting to my memory, sir, is approximately 25. They commit themselves to play 25 of our pictures in two theatres day and date in the city of Boston.

Q. As to those pictures that actually go in there, those are never selected, are they, until after Loew has actually seen the finished product? A. Well, they couldn't date them before I finished it and as soon as I get a print in New York

I am ready to screen it, and they have screening days over there and we send the picture and they look at it.

Q. And they screen it before they date it or put it in? A. Most of the key theatres in the United States do the same thing.

Q. That has always been true, not only today but in the past? A. Yes, sir. The key theatres——

Q. When you sold that kind of account? A. The key theatres in the United States usually see the picture before they book it but they have already bought it.

Q. You mean they have already made a contract which (1818) permits them to select a certain number from all released, is that not right? A. Correct, but they must run those pictures that are on the contract.

Q. That is, they must—— A. Or pay for them.

Q. —either run or pay for a certain commitment? A. That is right.

Judge Hand: Does that mean all?

The Witness: If it be all, or if it be part. In the case of metropolitan New York, it is all, sir.

Q. Ordinarily the only situation where the selection would not be made from all subjects is where you have a split of your first-run, isn't that right? A. Mr. Wright, when I said all—you spoke of Loew's in Boston; I was now speaking of Loew's Metropolitan Circuit in New York—they buy all, they play all.

Q. Yes, but I think Judge Hand's question referred to what the selection was made from in any case; whether they select five, ten or fifteen, the selection is made from your entire season's product, isn't that right? A. It is made with the stipulation, Mr. Wright, they only have the right of elimination of a certain number of pictures that we designate from the bottom of our program! There are all kinds of stipulations in these various contracts as to how they can eliminate, and that is why I would like to get down to a particular theatre. Then I can answer it intelligently.

Q. In selling your accounts, generally the principal thing, or, particularly your independent exhibitor, that he is interested in is the amount of film rental that he has to pay, isn't that right? A. Yes, all of them are interested in the amount of film rental they have got to pay. It is of great interest to them.

Q. Of course, what you attempt to do is to get the most film rental you can out of them for everything you have for sale? A. Within reason.

Q. And now and heretofore whenever you had a really top-notch picture that you knew would stand on its own feet, you have been accustomed to sell that picture individually under individual contracts, have you not? A. As a custom, no. It has happened twice in the history of Columbia.

Q. That picture "It Happened One Night," how was that sold? A. "It Happened" was sold in the group.

Q. You did not make individual contracts for that? A. No, sir, that was sold as part of a program and delivered as part of the program.

Q. Didn't your contract with Mr. Capra provide that you had to have—to sell that individually and have individual approval? A. No, sir.

Q. That happened with the later pictures that Capra made for you? A. It happened with one picture that Capra made later.
(1820)

Q. Which was that? A. Lost Horizon.

Q. You sold that individually? A. Collective, in contract and out of the contract. Some of the exhibitors bought it as part of the program, some of the exhibitors bought it separate and apart from the program.

Q. You have had what you call so-called specials, haven't you? A. Yes, but most of them have been in the program.

Q. What do you mean when you say "in the program"? A. In the contract that we make with the exhibitor before we produce our pictures, our program is those pictures that we make during X season, starting as of one date and finishing as of another.

Q. You have had some specials that you make a separate contract for with each—a contract separate and apart from the one you make for your season's product, isn't that right? A. We have had pictures that we have sold on a separate contract.

Q. Those pictures that you have sold on separate contract have always been outstanding box office attractions, isn't that right? A. Yes, in our opinion they have been.

Q. You have got as high film rentals for those pictures that you got for any you had? A. As high and in some (1821) cases higher.

Q. I believe you said that at least in selling independents you sold most of your product on flat rental? A. Most of the independents buy on flat rental from us.

Q. But you always try to have some pictures which everybody buys on percentage, isn't that right? A. Only a very recent picture where we have insisted that that be bought on some sort of our participation.

Q. And the purpose of getting the independent in every case to license at least one picture on percentage is, I suppose, to give you a more accurate picture of what kind of business he can do than you could get any other way, isn't that right? A. Oh, yes, I get a much more accurate picture of it that way.

Q. How much film rental you can ultimately get out of him, I suppose, of course depends to some extent on his operating expenses and what he can take in? A. Well, in selling this picture we did not go into operating expense too definitely.

Q. And when you do sell those pictures on percentage you, of course, have the right to audit his books and to check the pictures? A. We have the right under the contract—it gives us a right of checking and auditing.

Q. And you do check his pictures, is that right? A. In some cases we do. In many cases we do not.

(1822)

Q. When you do, you use an agency called Confidential Reports, Inc.? A. We do now use that agency, yes, sir.

Q. That is, for how long have you been using it? A. Oh, since, I believe, last April or May.

Q. And that is an agency that was formed by your company and some of the other defendants in this case? A. Correct.

Q. Who were the other defendants?

Mr. Raftery: If your Honors please, there is nothing in the pleadings, there is nothing in the trial brief about that. Is Mr. Wright making an issue of the right to police these accounts? We could go on forever examining on this thing.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Mr. Wright: What is your answer?

A. RKO, Paramount, Universal, United Artists and Columbia.

Q. And you have an agreement, do you, with those other defendants for the joint use of this particular corporation in checking pictures? A. We have an arrangement for this checking corporation to check such pictures as we want checked.

Mr. Wright: Will you read the question?

Q. (Read.) A. I don't know whether you would call it an agreement with the other four or whether we call it an agreement with the checking service itself.
(1823)

Q. Anyway, you five—— A. We do not have an agreement with the other four. We have an agreement with Confidential Reports.

Q. You five are the sole owners of Confidential Reports, isn't that right? A. That is correct, sir.

Q. What the independent actually wants in buying film, in addition to the lowest film rental, lowest terms which enable him to pay the lowest film rental, I suppose, is the highest degree of selectivity that he can bargain with you for, isn't that right? A. Some of them, Mr. Wright, do not bargain for selectivity at all. They want all that I can possibly give them. Some of them would like to play less than we ask for and usually a compromise is brought about whereby we will have a meeting of the minds. You must understand, Mr. Wright, that the majority of these accounts we have been selling for years and years, ten, twelve years, and they understand us and we understand their requirements and, consequently, there is a meeting of the minds over a period of years of the development of the account, they with us and we with them.

Q. Of course, where he is short of pictures and is badly in need of pictures, there is no problem, you sell him all, but I am talking about the situations where he has some kind of choice as to product. Then I take it the thing that he tries to get from you is the privilege of selecting and exhibiting the best pictures that you have got rather than the poorest ones. He wants to eliminate the bad ones and to play only the good ones? A. No, that does not necessarily be right. If you will tell me of a theatre, particular theatre or theatres, I will be glad to answer you directly on it, but you are generalizing again, and these situations change all over the United States. You have different problems—you might say a different problem with every account you sell and each one is treated as to that problem.

Q. What did you mean by the generalization that Mr. Raftery put in your mouth, that you assumed the risk of loss when you deal with these independents? What did that mean? A. I assume that Mr. Raftery meant that we produce 44 pictures and if a man buys 32 or 36 out of our 44, we do not have the advantage of the income from the balance of those pictures because he does not buy them and he doesn't play them.

Q. What you get out of him is a commitment in which agrees to pay you so much for so many pictures, isn't that right? A. Yes.

Q. In each case? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And as far as the failure of those pictures to draw, in box office returns, what you represented to him they (1825) would at the time you made the deal with him is concerned, the risk of loss is his, not yours? A. The loss would be mine. I created the investment first, sir. I made the picture. If I didn't make it, I would certainly—couldn't lose. I am assuming in making it that he will buy it. If you are speaking of any one account, he may decide not to buy. And in a lot of cases, Mr. Wright, these smaller accounts, if you are referring to smaller accounts, they do much better with some things that you would call a poor picture than they do with some of the pictures that you would think is great entertainment to you. Why, I can take you to hundreds of accounts in this country that do a sensational business with a Western and you give them a picture as great as Song to Remember, if I may call that great, and they flop with it.

Q. Let us take a situation where he has bought all of your product and he has agreed to pay so much for it in dollars and cents, so much per picture, and if the pictures that he plays or that you have sold him at those prices do not happen to be as good as he and you thought they were going to be at the time you made the deal with him, he is the one who is stuck on the contract, isn't he? A. If you want to call that stuck, but you will find out, if you will examine the records that he comes around and asks for a reduction and in the vast majority of them, he gets it.

Q. Whether or not, of course, he gets a reduction depends on such good will as you may entertain for him, does it not? A. Well, if he is a responsible man, that has been doing business with us for years and so-called played ball with us and we with him, we believed him for years, and we believe him then, that it is necessary to help him.

Q. You don't hesitate to wave his contract in his face at the time he asks for it and tell him you are doing him a substantial favor by letting him off the hook? A. We don't wave the contract. It is seldom that a contract, after made, is ever taken out of the file and re-examined. It is rare.

Q. On this tabulation that was offered here as Exhibit C-6, can you tell me what, if anything, you had to do with preparing the table or the material that is in here? A. I was requested by counsel to prepare such a list. I had such a list prepared by those in our organization who had such information. Mr. Rose, who is sitting in court here, had quite a lot to do with the preparation of this.

Q. But this was prepared under your direction? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I notice in the last two columns, or before you get to the last two columns, you have a letter "I" or a letter "A".
(1827)
That indicates whether the account is what you call independent or affiliated?

Mr. Proskauer: It was my understanding, your Honors, that the last two columns were withdrawn from the exhibit on our objection. I am not sure whether what Mr. Wright is reading is from that part or not.

Judge Hand: Is it?

Mr. Frohlich: They have been withdrawn. The last two columns are withdrawn and they haven't been physically X'd out or inked out, but they are not part of this exhibit.

Judge Bright: The column marked with the "I" and "A" is not part of the last two columns?

Mr. Frohlich: No, they aren't. May I show the witness a copy of this exhibit while he is being cross-examined?

Judge Bright: That is the column with the blue circles.

Mr. Frohlich: Yes, that is the first column, that is right. That stays in.

Q. As to the column which is marked "Closed" and which has X opposite the town, under the column "Closed", can you tell me just what was done in that connection, that is, what that X was supposed to represent at the time the table was prepared?

(1828)

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor, I object to that. Those two columns marked "Closed were distinctly excluded from the exhibit on our objection.

Mr. Frohlich: And I take the same objection, your Honor.

Judge Hand: Sustained.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I submit that if I can establish what is represented here, and if what is represented is relevant, I am entitled to offer it myself and have it in evidence. It is wholly a question of finding out what was actually done and what this means, as I see it.

Judge Hand: I would drop that. I don't see why you want to do it that way. He has only offered a certain part. His exhibit does not include those columns.

Mr. Wright: That is quite right. His exhibit as it is now in evidence does not include the data shown in the last two columns. I wish to establish what this data shows in the last two columns. And if I can satisfactorily establish it and demonstrate to your Honors that it is relevant, I would then offer it and expect it to be received. We are dealing with facts here.

Judge Hand: Let me hear what your question is.

(Question read.)

Judge Hand: If you want to show that these towns that are closed are not closed, you may by your cross-examination, but not by marks on the exhibit that are not in evidence at all.

(1829)

Q. I take it, Mr. Montague, at the time the Exhibit C-6 was prepared, there was some discussion between you and counsel, or you and the people who got it up, as to what were referred to as closed situations, and what were referred to as competitive situations, is that right? A. To the best of my knowledge, Mr. Wright, counsel proposed that I draw such a list, and discussed it with me——

Mr Proskauer: Will you keep your voice up, please.

The Witness: Pardon me.

A. (Continuing) Proposed that we compile such a list, and this list was turned over to some of the clerks that handled—I believe it was turned over to those clerks that handled our possibility list; and on that possibility list there is a notation as to what we call independent and what we call affiliated and what we call closed and what we call open.

Q. That possibility list includes all the towns in the United States, or just those that are on this Exhibit C-6? A. It includes all the towns in the United States, sir, and all the theatres that we have on record.

Q. So in preparing this table you simply took off the possibility list the names of the cities with more than 25,000 population? A. I assume so, yes, sir.

Q. And then also the name of the exhibitor? A. Yes, sir. (1830)

Q. As it appears on your list? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Proskauer: I object to this an independent evidence against us. It may be perfectly proper cross-examination.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Mr. Proskauer: The difficulty, of course, is, if I may be practical for just a moment, there is a confusion between the witness and ourselves which has developed here this morning as to what were closed towns and what were not closed towns in the terminology. I think a great deal of time might be saved if we had a talk with Mr. Wright about this document out of court in an endeavor to ascertain what the facts are.

Mr. Wright: I would prefer to talk with the witness about it in court.

The Court: All right. I overruled the objection.

Mr. Wright: Will you read the last question and answer?

(Last question and answer read.)

Q. And then the letter "I" was inserted where your possibility list showed the account that you were selling to be independent, and the letter "A" was put in there where the accounts you were selling was an affiliated one, is that right? A. I would assume that is right, Mr. Wright. I am positive as to that.

(1831)

Q. Now calling your attention to the town, Philadelphia, where you have the name Warner under the exhibitor, and the letter A opposite it. Do you recall whether that was a town where you regarded any other exhibitor as a possibility for first-run exhibition there? A. I would call any other exhibitor that had a suitable theatre where my product is available, a possibility for first-run. If my product is not available, it still may be listed as a possibility, but I may not be able to sell them.

Mr. Frohlich: What season, may I ask, Mr. Wright, are you referring to?

Mr. Wright: The top one here is 1936-1937.

Mr. Frohlich: Were you referring to all of them or to the last one?

Mr. Wright: Well, let us take the last one to see where we are, here.

Mr. Frohlich: Have you a copy of that document before you? That is the document and these are the seasons first and last (indicating).

The Witness: Thank you.

Q. You have one of these for each season, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had it prepared for each season? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now then, in Philadelphia, in the 1944-45 season you had, did you, what you regard as another possible first-run account? A. Are you referring to any particular theatre or theatres, or just a company known as Warner?

Mr. Caskey: I can't hear a word of that.

The Witness: I am sorry.

A. (Continuing) I say, are you referring to any particular theatre or theatres, or to Warner? I see here "Warner." The exhibitor is Warner.

Q. Yes, I understand that. I am asking you whether or not your records as to possible first-run accounts in Philadelphia indicate that there was another possible first-run outlet there?

Mr. Proskauer: This schedule is a schedule of the accounts sold. Are you referring to some other schedule than the one in evidence?

Mr. Wright: I think the question is clear.

Mr. Caskey: I object to that. If you are examining the witness——

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Mr. Caskey: Just a moment, sir, if I may make the objection. He is examining this witness about some document that is up in Columbia's office that is not in court, and trying to get this witness to remember what is on this document not in court, and to state it orally. Now we submit that at the very least we have the right to have the document here in court so that we may cross-examine from it.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Mr. Wright: Will you read the question?

Q. (Question read.) A. I assume that it would, if you are referring to the possibility list that we have in the home office.

Q. Yes. A. I assume that it would.

Mr. Davis: What do you mean by possibility list?

The Witness: A theatre that runs first-run pictures, and if we are considering first-run possibilities, that first-run theatre, whether we serve it or not, would be on that list.

Q. And that is true if it is actually suitable for first-run exhibition in your opinion, whether or not it is then actually playing first-run, is that right? A. I would not consider it suitable in a comparable way, no, sir. If you are referring to the same theatre that I am in Philadelphia——

Q. I was not referring to any theatre. I was referring to your record. A. I can't remember the record, sir. It is up at 729 Seventh Avenue, and that record has thousands of theatres on it.

Q. Could you produce for us without too much trouble the records which apply to these towns that you have got (1834) tabulated here in this C-6? A. I imagine we could produce such a record.

Q. Let us say for the 1943-44 season? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Frohlich: We will produce that.

Q. Now in these exhibits that you identified, which are supposed to chart your first-run accounts in the cities of 25,000 or more, I notice your charts in evidence as C-8 have notations at the bottom which run as follows:

> "This chart covers 384 cities excluding the following five in which there was no deal, 14 for which there is no record; 10 which are not in fact separate cities but in fact parts of larger cities."

Now I take it you have the names of the towns that are referred to there? Do you know what they are offhand? A. No, I don't know offhand, but, as I recall, we must have the names.

Q. But you can supplement what you have here with a list of the towns, the names of the towns that are referred to in the footnotes on each of those charts? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Mr. Montague, in selling these so-called affiliated accounts in the towns over one hundred thousand that you have tabulated in these exhibits here, your Exhibit C-7, can you tell us whether or not you have negotiated in those towns where there is more than one affiliated exhibitor with more than one of those exhibitors during the past ten years? (1835)

A. That question is not quite clear to me, Mr. Wright.

Q. I will try to simplify it. In many of these towns, or in some of these towns, these 92 cities over a hundred thousand population, there are first-run exhibitors which may be affiliated with one or more of the defendants in this suit, isn't that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in some of them there may be a first-run which is affiliated with one defendant, and another first-run which is affiliated with another defendant, isn't that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now in selling those towns in the situations where there are two or more first-run theatres affiliated with two or more of these defendants, have you had any competitive negotiations for the sale or licensing of your films in those towns first-run as between those affiliated exhibitors? A. Occasion has arisen where we definitely have, yes, sir.

Q. Now, when and where? A. Well, at various times.

Q. Well, can you give the names of the towns involved? A. Well, I happen to particular remember in the case in New Haven, the theatre there that is affiliated with Paramount tried to buy our pictures or offered to buy some against our account, which we have had for many years, which first was Poli and now is operated by Loew. I know of that particular situation because it was brought to my attention.

(1836)

Q. When was it? When did that occur? A. There was a particular conversation as to that within two or three years.

I can't tell you whether it was three years ago or two years ago, but it was quite recent.

Q. You mean after the consent decree in this case or before? A. Well, if it be two or three years it would be after the consent decree.

Q. Now, what was it that occurred in that instance? A. In that instance it seems that the theatre that is associated with Paramount was short of pictures, and we had some particular picture, and they wanted that picture pretty badly to fill out some particular play data. I can't just remember the name of the picture, but I do remember the incident. And they did not get it because we had had the contract and we could not do anything about it.

Q. That was the situation where your pictures were committed to Warner—— A. Committed to Loew's.

Q. —or committed to Loew's, and Paramount wanted to pick up a picture to fill in with that was committed to Loew's and you were not able to release it, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. Now, any others? A. Well, I would not be able to stretch my memory because most of that would come through district men; but I know from time to time it has been called to my attention that there had been requests for pictures from so-called affiliates, one as against the other.

Judge Bright: You mean after your contracts had been made.

The Witness: Either after the contract had been made or prior to the making of the contract. You see, most of these contacts in our organization are conducted by district men. They are trained particularly to handle those accounts. Some of them are handled by the home office. So this negotiation would go on with the district man, and he, in turn, if there was a problem that he did not want to act on, such as this, he then would refer it to us in the home office for final decision.

Q. Do you recall any other situations yourself? A. No, offhand I could not. If I had time to think I could, I am sure I could.

Q. Well, insofar as the negotiations for any regular first-run of your season's product is concerned, I take it there were none? A. No, I would not say there were none. I am trying to say I believe there were some.

Q. Where did that occur? A. I am trying to say if I had time, I believe I could get definite situations on this. I don't want to trust to my memory on this. I do remember some instances in the case of New Haven.

Q. That, as you remember, did not relate to the licensing (1838) of the first-run season deal, did it? A. No; it was related to a picture.

Q. I say, other than these situations which relate to a single picture or a few pictures, don't you know as a matter of fact that there have not been any? A. No, I do not know that, Mr. Wright, and I am trying to think very hard, but I believe the story in New London would prove my case. I am not positive on the records, but I am almost positive there is where we did sell Paramount and we now sell Warner Bros. And I think that is on an entire year's product. I am almost positive, and I am sure I can dig up many more such cases if necessary.

Q. Well, will you see what you can do along that line when you bring this other data in? A. Yes, I will be glad to.

Q. Now, in those first-run situations generally, where Loew has a theatre, you sell Loew, is that right? A. No, that is not right, Mr. Wright.

Q. Where there is more than one affiliated house and there is a Loew theatre, can you point to any of those where you do not sell Loew? A. Well, now, let me see. We sell Loew in Boston where there is an affiliate; we sell Loew half the product in Providence, and we have played some pictures in Providence and also in Boston with RKO.

Q. Those are pictures which Loew has released to RKO, (1839)
isn't that right? A. No, sir, they are pictures that we requested Loew release to us and for us to sell to whomever we may desire to sell to.

Q. Well, in any event, before they were made available to RKO, you had to get your release by Loew, isn't that right? A. Yes, sir. Sometimes Loew released pictures to us in Boston to sell to the independent, at our request.

Q. Now, are there any situations you can recall where Loew has a first-run—— A. Well, have you a list there of the Loew situations? If you have that it would make it a little easier for me than to try to remember it.

Q. I don't think your charts show a breakdown as to which is which? A. If I had a list of the situations I could tell you immediately, sir.

Q. Here is your admission of facts. Now maybe that would help you (handing). A. I believe Loew has a first-run theatre in Cleveland. We sell to RKO, which is now in the pool with Warner Bros.

Q. You sell the RKO-Warner pool? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have sold them for the last what, ten years? A. Well, we sold RKO for many years, and then when the pool became effective we played with the pool. To the best of my knowledge Loew has an interest in a theatre in Denver, and we sell to the Fox affiliate.
(1840)

Q. You are referring there to the RKO Orpheum? A. Yes, sir. I believe that is the theatre.

Q. That is a theatre that is not operated by Loew; it is operated by RKO, isn't it? A. That is one of the defendants, sir. I thought you said any first-run——

Q. What I wanted to have you point out were the situations where Loew had a first-run theatre and where another defendant had a first-run theatre, and where you sold the other defendant rather than Loew—— A. I just named the spot——

Q. —such as Cleveland? A. Denver.

Q. Well, I take it in Denver what you referred to as a Loew operation is one that is operated by RKO in which Loew has an interest, is that right? A. Oh, we sell to the Fox affiliate there. We do not sell to Loew or to RKO. Loew has a theatre in Houston, I believe, and we sell to the Interstate circuit, an affiliate of Paramount.

Q. Well, the situation, whatever it is, as it exists today, is correctly reported in the admission of facts there? As to 1943-1944, have there been any changes from 1943-44 to now in the distribution of your product first-run among the affiliated first-run accounts in the 92 cities? A. There might be, Mr. Wright. I do not want to trust to my memory.

Q. You don't know? A. No, I do not know.

Q. Well, if there were, that would be reflected in this exhibit that you have given us here, C-6? A. I would assume so, sir. I am not completely familiar.

Q. Well, your C-6 gives your distribution as of 1944-45? A. Yes, I would assume so, sir.

Q. And I take it this is the latest information you have? A. Yes.

Q. Now in those first-run situations, I believe, as Mr. Raftery pointed out, your large city first-runs, you have a situation at the present time where you have what would be called a glut of pictures; that is, more being made available than is room for? A. I do not understand that question. Would you repeat it, Mr. Wright?

Q. I say, in the key metropolitan first-runs, the situation you have now is that there are more pictures available under contract for exhibition in those situations than there is playing time for, is that right? A. Metropolitan? What Metropolitan are you referring to?

Q. In large cities, cities over a hundred thousand. A. I don't know whether you were referring to metropolitan cities, or Metropolitan New York.

Q. No. A. There are more pictures than there are dates for first-run?

Q. Yes; generally is that situation true? A. I would think so.

Q. And in your subsequent runs the situation——

Mr. Davis: Occasionally we are able to hear coun-(1842) sel, and occasionally the witness; but when they both speak at the same time we throw up our hands.

Judge Hand: Read the last several questions and answers.

(Record read.)

The Witness: More pictures available or more pictures under contract?

Q. Well, at the present time, pictures are what is known as backed up in those first-run situations, isn't that right?

Mr. Caskey: I object to the generality of the question, both as to the producer and the exhibitor. I think that any such testimony should be confined to specific cases. I am quite certain we can adduce testimony that even in Boston, where he talked about, there is no backing up on our product.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

A. Speaking of my product?

Q. Yes, as far as you are concerned. A. In some of the cities there is a backing up of our product, yes.

Q. And generally in the subsequent runs, shortage is the result of that, is that true? A. In some rare cases but not too many, because the subsequent runs can use pictures in many cases where the first run cannot use, so they are available without waiting for that first run.

(1843)

Q. Under your prevailing clearance system, though, insofar as those pictures are concerned, which are good enough for first-run exhibition, those simply have to wait until their turn in the first-runs before they can be made available for general release down through the subsequent runs; isn't that right? A. Correct, sir.

Q. Now I am going to call your attention to a specific situation in Salt Lake City, Utah. Your pictures there have played a number of years in the Paramount houses there? A. They have been sold to the Paramount affiliate for quite a few years, yes, sir.

Q. And there is an independent who has a couple of theatres there? A. There is an independent. I don't know just how many theatres he has.

Q. First-run? A. First-run.

Q. Now, in that situation it is the fact, is it not, although you have not had your pictures played off promptly in the Paramount houses, you have not made available to the independent any of those which have been backed up, have you? A. What made you think we had a back-up in Salt Lake City, sir? As I remember Salt Lake City, it has been playing our pictures very fast.

Q. You would say there was no time in the last year when you had pictures that might have been released for six months and not played there? A. I have no record of that, sir. I had no difficulty in play-off as I remember Salt Lake City.

(1844)

Q. Well, do you know? A. To the best of my knowledge I should say there is no difficulty in getting our pictures played in Salt Lake City.

Q. Now I will call your attention to the particular picture, A Song to Remember. Do you recall that one? A. I recall the picture, Song to Remember, yes, sir.

Q. Do you know at what time you sold that to Paramount for in Salt Lake City?

Mr. Seymour: Mr. Wright, I hesitate to object. You are constantly referring to a sale to Paramount. The testimony, universally, and without dispute, shows that those theatres are operated by separate companies, and I think I shall have to ask you to put your questions in accordance with the undisputed testimony rather than try to give it a twist.

Q. Do you know what the name of the affiliate is there? A. No, I do not have it offhand. You say it is in the records there?

Q. Well, you did not have any trouble understanding what I was talking about, did you, when I said Paramount? A. I assumed that you meant one of these affiliated companies.

Q. The affiliated company that is your first-run account (1845) in Salt Lake City.

Mr. Seymour: That is objected to, Mr. Wright.

Q. Now, can you tell me the terms on which you licensed that picture to the Paramount affiliate there? A. No, I could not unless I refer to the records, sir.

Q. You don't know what you got for it? A. No, I don't remember.

Q. Do you recall getting an offer for it from the independent there? A. Yes, I do remember getting an offer from the independent.

Q. Did you ever reply to his offer? A. I am quite sure I replied. I am positive I replied to that offer through my branch manager.

Q. Well, as far as you yourself are concerned, did you make any reply personally? A. I would have to refer to the records whether I wrote direct, but I do remember discussing the matter with the district man and the branch manager.

Q. Well, I am talking about with the independent? A. I did not talk with the independent. He did not talk with me, He wrote me, sir.

Q. And you know that you did not reply to his letter, isn't that right? A. I do not know that I did not, Mr. Wright. I would like to refresh my memory by looking into the files.

(1846)

Q. Well, have you ever offered him any pictures there? A. I am not sure whether we have or not.

Q. Well, do you know? Can you remember ever having offered him any? A. No, I do not know that we have.

Q. Now, in your dealings with the theatres that are affiliated with these defendants, you are still making franchises occasionally? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in evidence here, I believe, is one that you made with Warner and one with the Evergreen circuit.

Mr. Frohlich: What is the number of that?

Q. I will show you this 265. That is a three-year deal, is it not, that you made in 1942, with the Evergreen Theatres Corporation? A. Yes, sir, we made a three-year deal.

Q. That is a Fox affiliate? A. That is, as far as I know, a Fox affiliate.

Q. And the date of that is November 23, 1942. And then I will show you this agreement dated May 18, 1944, which is marked as Government's Exhibit 266, and ask you if you recognize that as a three year deal you made with Warner? A. Two-year deal with Warners.

Q. What are the seasons involved? A. It seems to involve the season of 1944-45, and 1945-46.

Q. Doesn't that also cover 1943-1944? A. Yes, correct. You are correct, Mr. Wright.

Q. So it covers the three seasons, 1943-44, 1944-45, and 1945-46, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now that agreement, master agreement you have in your hand there, does not have attached to it, does it, all of the deal sheets which would show the precise extent of the coverage, isn't that right? A. No, sir; there is no deal sheet attached.

Q. And offhand do you know how much of the circuit that covers? A. No, I do not know offhand.

Q. Now, I want to show you this deal that was made for the 1943-44 season with the Sparks circuit, which is in evidence as Exhibit 267. That is, in general, the kind of a deal you have been making with that circuit for the last seven or eight years? A. No, sir, it is not.

Q. How does it differ from the prior one? A. Well, prior to this contract we sold this circuit on a flat basis, and here in this contract we have certain pictures playing in certain towns on percentage.

Q. Other than the fact that you got some percentage pictures in here, though, I mean the terms in general were the same as before? A. No, the terms are not the same, sir.

Q. Well, let me call your attention to this particular provision: "The exhibitor has the right to use each of the hereon mentioned features 85 times. It is understood and agreed that Exhibitor is to pay Columbia Pictures Corporation entire amount involved in each feature upon presentation and acceptance of the first play date on each feature. The exhibitor agrees to consume all runs on each feature listed hereon within a period of ten months from date of first run.

It is understood and agreed that these pictures are to be played in such theatres as they are now being served under current contracts."

Now that provision is a provision similar to one you had been incorporating in your Sparks deals for some time, is that right? A. Yes, sir; it might be, I am not sure.

Q. Now this contract simply lists under run and clearance provisions, forty-odd towns here with the statement, first and consecutive subsequent runs. Now that means, does it not, that the Sparks circuit could take your pictures and play them in each and every one of those towns on as many runs as they please as long as they stayed within that 85-time limitation, is that right? A. Yes; we know of the runs, of course, when we signed the contract.

Q. But as far as the contract is concerned, you simply gave him the privilege of showing the pictures, 85 runs in the forty-odd towns; and they could allocate and distribute the runs the way they pleased, isn't that right? A. Correct, sir. (1849)

Q. They had ten months to do that in, isn't that right? A. Ten months from the day they played the picture in the first situation, to complete all of their runs.

Q. So under this agreement that you made with the Sparks circuit, the pictures that were covered there—and I believe that covers your entire season's product, does it not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. None of those pictures could be made available or offered to any opposition theatre until Sparks got through with such runs as they wanted, isn't that right? A. I believe we sell a run in four or five, possibly six of the Sparks towns; and I do not recall any difficulty in those towns of Sparks holding up the party unreasonably as against these opposition theatres.

Q. Well, with that contract in effect, you could not sell any run in any of those towns of the kind that you normally negotiate for where you give the fellow a definite run or availability in the town or location where he operates, isn't that a fact? A. Those theatres would buy a run in some cases after Sparks theatres, and I believe in one or two cases before Sparks played all of his theatres in that particular town.

Q. Well, under the contract all you could do would be to sell him a run after Sparks; and when they got the pictures would depend on what Sparks decided to do under the contract, isn't that right, with his runs? A. If he acted in a reasonable way as regarding the contract, yes, but we force on dates on Mr. Sparks. If he tried to hold a picture back we would insist that he play it, or we may even assign it to him.

Q. I am not referring to what you would or might do; I am referring to what you do. There is no question, is there, but what you gave him the entire control of the runs of pictures in those towns for that ten-month period by that contract? A. He had ten months, a ten-months period in those towns to play the picture; ten months in all of the towns collectively, sir, not ten months in each town.

Q. I understand that. A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Proskauer: It was limited to 85 showings, is that right, Mr. Wright? I could not hear the witness.

Mr. Wright: Yes, 85 runs.

Mr. Proskauer: 85 exhibitions?

Q. Well, I take it the 85 showings means in substance 85 runs, is that right? A. Not necessarily. It depends on what you call a run.

Q. Well, what do you call a run? A. Well, as I remember this deal, I believe in one or two spots there is a run comes in before Sparks, one of the Sparks theatres. In other words, Sparks might have three theatres—I am not positive (1851) about this, but I have a slight recollection——

Q. Tell me what the 85 runs—— A. May I explain this?

Q. Tell me first what the 85 showings means?

Judge Bright: Does it say 85 showings or 85 times?

Q. Will you read that provision, Mr. Montague? A. (Reading.) "The exhibitor has the right to use each of the hereon mentioned features 85 times."

Q. Now what does that mean in terms of number of runs that he could have in each or all of these towns? A. He could have one run in each one of the theatres in those towns, but he could not have more than 85. He may acquire theatres, but this is restricted to the 85 because we know of these 85 theatres.

Q. Well, there is no limitation as far as number of theatres is concerned, is there? That is, if he wants to distribute the 85 this way, let us say, five runs in one—showing five times in one town and none in another, or two runs in one town and three in the other, under that contract he has a perfect right to do so, hasn't he? A. That was not the intention of the contract.

Q. What? A. That is not the intention of the contract.

Q. Is that what it says or isn't it? A. That is not the way the sale was made and it is not the way he played the pictures. (1852)

Q. What? A. It is not the way the sale was made, and it is not the way he has ever played the pictures.

Q. All I am trying to get at is what privilege the contract actually gives him. Now, is it not a fact that he can distribute the 45 exhibitions or the 45 times that he uses each of those pictures—I mean 85—among his theatres, all of his theatres in those towns, just as he sees fit? Isn't that the privilege you gave him in the contract? A. That might be what the contract says, but it is not the way he operates, and therefore probably knowing the way he operates, we should have been more careful in specifying all the particulars. But we have been doing business with him; we know the way he operates; and probably the one who drew this contract was not very careful as to that point. We have had no trouble as to this matter at all.

Q. When you do business with the ordinary independent exhibitor you sell him a specific run for a specific theatre under which he agrees and undertakes to play the picture at a particular time in a particular theatre at a particular admission price, isn't that correct? A. Not necessarily so, sir. We have "or" situations with the independent where he may have the right to play in this theatre, that theatre, or in the next one. Sometimes the "or" situation may run over four theatres. We have a lot of those, sir.

Q. I am talking about your normal situation where you are dealing generally with an independent, when you license him, you license him a particular run in a particular theatre at a particular admission price. That is normal, isn't that right? A. No, it is wrong. I am trying to say that the opposition to this man here in Miami does not do the way you are specifying. We sell the Wometco Theatres against Mr. Sparks, or what was known as the Sparks Circuit down there, and we do not sell him a specified theatre a specified picture at a specified price.

Q. I understand in selling Wometco and other circuits you may make the same kind of a deal that you made with Sparks here. I asked you as to your normal procedure in selling the ordinary independent account. As to that, sir, it is a fact, is it not, that you normally sell your independent a particular run for a particular theatre at a particular admission price? A. Lots of the circuits, sir, are sold, and the independents, the ordinary way to sell them, we will say.

Q. Would you try and answer the question once more?

Mr. Frohlich: He has answered. I think he should be permitted to finish his answer.

Judge Hand: I think what the witness says is all right. You may probe him further about it, if you care to.

Mr. Wright: Will you read the question?

(Question read.)

A. Independents and so-called affiliated, too, we normally sell different than these, yes, sir.

Q. That Wometco you were talking about, that is one of those situations where you just give the product to Wometco for the first 140 days in Miami and then they move it around there as they like, and then it becomes available to the subsequent-run man, isn't that right? A. I just don't remember exactly, but it is done on a basis of difference, and, of course, we always claim we gave it to him, but he says we charged him too much for it.

Q. The same thing is done in the Paramount Circuit, which is the other major product there? Isn't that right? A. Paramount Circuit where?

(1855)

Q. Sparks in Miami. A. We don't sell Sparks in Miami.

Q. Do you know what the system of clearance that is employed there is? Isn't it the same as Wometco, where Paramount has pictures for the first 140 days and then after that they become available as subsequent-run?

Mr. Seymour: I must ask you to stop this practice of eliding your questions on this record.

And, if your Honors please, I must object to a question where Mr. Wright asks about Paramount doing something, because the evidence is absolutely uncontradicted that these transactions in connection with the theatre are not conducted by Paramount, and there isn't any dispute about that in the testimony.

Judge Hand: Let him specify.

Q. The Sparks circuit. A. I am not familiar with the clearance set up in Miami.

Q. Getting back to this question of clearance generally, you say that you do not know what the clearance is that other distributors license their pictures at in a particular community? A. Oh, no, of course I do not, sir. I would not attempt to try to remember all the communities of the United States.

Q. I say, in a particular community. Let us take Buffalo, New York. Is it your testimony that you do not know (1856) in Buffalo what the clearances which govern the distribution of films in that city are with reference to other major distributors as well as your own company? A. I have it on the record, sir, but I do not know it at this moment.

Q. You mean Columbia keeps a record of it? A. Oh, yes, yes, sir.

Q. You don't know what it is, is that right? A. No, I don't know.

Q. Do you recall what happened there in the Bailey Theatre situation in Buffalo? Are you familiar with that? A. Is Bailey the independent that has some theatres in opposition to Loew?

Q. That is right, in opposition to the Buffalo theatres in which Loew and Paramount are interested. A. I have some recollection on that, yes, sir.

Q. And you recall that the Bailey brought an arbitration proceeding there? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Because they were being held behind one of the theatres in which Loew was interested? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that after the arbitration proceeding an award was entered, which said that the Bailey could play one day behind the Kensington Theatre. That was it, wasn't it? A. I am not familiar with that.

Mr. Proskauer: I would like to know what you are saying that arbitration award is.

(1857)

A. (Continuing) I am not familiar with that.

Q. You don't know what happened there? Don't you recall that prior to the time of that reward you were serving the Bailey Theatre there thirty days after first-run Buffalo, clear on Kensington? A. That could be true. I am certain.

Q. And then after that award came down you made the Bailey follow the Kensington on your pictures just as the other major distributors did, isn't that right? A. Do you know that to be so, Mr. Wright? You are telling me something. I don't know.

Q. I am asking you if it is a fact. A. I don't know, but I do remember one thing about the Bailey, Mr. Wright, I remember we did sell them Columbia pictures at different runs than they enjoyed for runs of the other companies, and this man in this Bailey Theatre, according to my memory, went on playing ours, we will say, first-run in that section and playing the others subsequent-run, and when we tried to get what we felt were reasonable terms for first-run in that situation, he refused to give it to us and said, "You are not entitled to any more than those I get from subsequent-run," and consequently we stopped selling him. Yes, sir, I remember that, and I don't remember selling it to anybody else, and I am not sure, but I think we are still out.

Q. Don't you recall that you declined to sell him except on the run after the Kensington? A. I was willing to sell him the same run as I had——

Q. Did you have these negotiations with him yourself? A. No, but this was called to my attention, an unusual situation, and that is why I have some recollection of it.

Q. What I want is exactly what, if anything, you said to the exhibitor who had the Bailey Theatre. Did you talk to him at all? A. Never met him in my life, Mr. Wright.

Q. You know, do you not, that you did refuse to sell him except on a run after the Kensington, isn't that right? A. Not to the best of my knowledge.

Q. You don't know that? A. I said, not to the best of my knowledge. My knowledge is that we offered him a run, the run that he enjoyed before, but we wanted some pictures on percentage and he said no.

Q. The transaction was handled by your branch manager? A. And district manager.

Q. You have no personal knowledge as to what the negotiations were between him and them? A. What has been reported to me.

Q. That is all you know? A. Yes.

Q. Is what your people reported to you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When it comes to how Universal and United Artists sell pictures of course, do you know the extent to which Universal, for example, is still continuing to make franchises with defendants in this suit? A. No, I do not know to just what extent, but we and our men watch them pretty carefully. They are direct competitors of ours, and we watch them most carefully.

Q. If anybody was to give testimony as to what their particular selling policy was with reference to these defendants, I suppose it would have to be some representative of that company rather than you, isn't that right? A. You would be the better judge of that.

Mr. Raftery: I object to that as speculative and argumentative.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Q. The same would be true with respect to United Artists, you don't know? A. Only from very careful observation of a competitor, sir.

Q. The terms on which they dealt with the other defendants, isn't that right? A. I don't know the terms, sir.

Q. On this list of pictures that you gave us here, first you have a list marked as C-4 in which you have labeled "First Class Pictures Produced by Independent Producers." Under the heading "Columbia," all those titles were released by Columbia, isn't that right? A. May I see it, sir? Yes, I believe they were all released by Columbia.

Q. And then under the heading "Universal," those are pictures that were released by Universal? A. I would assume so, sir.

(1860)

Q. And the other headings you have, "Walter Wanger", simply indicates the producer, with no indication as to whom he released to? A. Correct, sir.

Q. The same is true for Chaplin, Major Pictures Corporation, Howard Hughes and Edward Small? A. Yes.

Q. Pickford, Lasky, Selznick, Harold Lloyd, David L. Loew, Walt Disney, Samuel Goldwyn, Inc., Principal Production, Inc., isn't that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. As to those you have listed under Monogram Pictures Corporation, those were released by Monogram, were they? A. Produced by Monogram, but some of them have probably been released in state-right exchanges. I am not sure of that.

Q. What period of time did you cover with this list? A. Well, it is quite a period of time. I can't give you——

Q. How long? A. Over years, sir.

Q. How many years? A. Maybe eight or nine years or more.

Q. Then Grand National Pictures, that was distributed by a company of that name which is no longer in existence? A. I believe so.

Q. And the next, March of Time, Hal Roach, those you do not indicate who released them? A. No, just the producer. I don't know.

Q. Then those you list under Republic Pictures Corporation, those were released by Republic? A. Or state-righters.
(1861)

Q. You don't know which? A. I don't know which, because, I don't know, some of them might have been released before it took over the exchange.

Q. The remaining ones on the list, you don't know whom those were released by, isn't that right? A. No, sir, not here. The records would probably tell me.

Q. You have a note here, "See Schedules appearing pages 77 to 82 of the answer." What does that mean?

Mr. Frohlich: That answers your question, because it shows that this list covers a period of five years before this answer was drawn, and the answer was drawn in 1940.

Mr. Wright: All of these on Defendant's Exhibit C-4 that are included under the heading "See schedules appearing on pages 77 to 82 of the answer," those are already in your answer? Is this just a repetition of those?

Mr. Frohlich: I think it brings it down to date. Maybe it is repetitious; maybe it is some more, bringing it down to date.

Q. Mr. Frohlich says the period covered there is five years preceding the filing of the suit, is that so? A. It could be so.

Q. As to those produced since the filing of the suit, those appear on what you label here "Supplementing schedule" (1862) appearing at pages 77 to 82 of the answer? A. Well, that is just what it says.

Q. And as to those your testimony is the same as to those under Columbia, being released by Columbia? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And for those other Republic, by Republic; those under Universal were released by Universal; and the rest you do not have the names—— A. That is right.

Q. (Continuing) —of the parties who released them, is that right? A. That is right, sir.

Q. These pictures that you have introduced in evidence here as C-5 and you have labelled "Successful Foreign Pictures", do you mean pictures successful at the box office in this country? A. That is what I would call a successful picture, generally successful at the box office, of such theatres as played it.

Q. Of such theatres as played it? A. Yes.

Q. As a matter of fact, you have many pictures on there which had a very limited distribution in this country, haven't you? A. Yes, some of them had limited distribution. Some of them were successes in art theatres.

Q. The success in an art theatre is not a box office success, as you term it? A. Except in those theatres. Carnet de Bal, we happen to know, was a success in the art theatres, and was released for that purpose and not for what we call general distribution.

(1862a)

Q. Do you know what the American grosses of any of those pictures were? A. May I see them again? And I will try to refresh my memory. I do not see one called "The Invaders." That is one I released myself when we grossed well over a million dollars with it.

(1863)

Q. Of those you have on the list, did you release any of them? A. Carnet de Bal, part of the release of that one. We brought it in here and then it was released through an independent.

Q. You mean you bought it and then turned it over to an independent? A. We were part of the production of the picture in France.

Mr. Proskauer: We cannot hear you.

The Witness: We were part of the production of the picture in France.

Judge Goddard: Does the Government contend the defendant limited the showing of pictures?

Mr. Wright: Oh, very definitely.

Judge Goddard: I understand the Government contends that they limited pictures to certain of the defendants, but did they generally limit the showing of a picture, do you contend?

Mr. Wright: Their marketing control has a definite exclusionary effect on any product. There is no question about that.

Judge Goddard: I should suppose it would be to their advantage to show the picture as much as they can.

Mr. Wright: I suppose that there are differences in the kinds of advantage to be gained by showing, let us say, some of these foreign pictures and some pictures which they produced themselves.

Judge Goddard: Then you do contend that they limited the showing of pictures generally?

Mr. Wright: Yes, they have a very tight control over what can be released in the way of box office returns of any picture in this American market.

Mr. Davis: I would like to ask if Mr. Wright contends that there is any picture, as to which he has any evidence, produced or to be produced, that shows that that picture was excluded from public exhibition in whole or in part. I ask the question definitely not as to his theories of what might occur, but what is the proof to support his theory on that subject.

Mr. Wright: There isn't any question but what we contend that there is an exclusionary effect as to every picture that is produced.

Mr. Davis: I am not asking what you contend. I am asking to what particular evidence can you point to support your contention.

Mr. Wright: I am just trying to get some evidence out of the witness here, if we may proceed. As I take it, his purpose in offering these pictures is to try and show that these foreign pictures received large box office returns in this country generally, even though they weren't produced or released by these defendants. That just doesn't happen to be the fact.

Mr. Frohlich: That was not my purpose in offering them, your Honors. My purpose was to show that there is a great deal of competition suffered by this particular defendant by reason not only of American pictures, made by independent producers, as well as pictures made by the affiliates, but even foreign pictures come into this country and are shown all over the United States and we have to compete with them. That was my only object in putting them.

Mr. Wright: He went so far as to label these "Successful foreign pictures."

Mr. Frohlich: Yes, they are.

Mr. Wright: I want to find out how much he knows about what success they enjoyed or did not enjoy.

Mr. Frohlich: Go ahead, I haven't any objection.
The Witness: What is the question, Mr. Wright?
Mr. Wright: Will you read the last question?

(Last question and answer read.)

Q. Is that the only picture on the list that you had anything to do with? A. On this list, yes, sir. To the best of my knowledge, reading this over, I cannot remember any other picture on this list.

Q. Just what was it you did in connection with the re- (1866) lease of that picture Carnet de Bal? A. It was a picture done in French and the producer happened to be here at the time and he wanted an opportunity to release it to the art theatres of the United States. He felt, handled individually, he could do better than if we tried to handle it with all our other product, so arrangements were made whereby Mr. Goetz handled the picture himself.

Q. And you had nothing to do with releasing it? A. Nothing to do with it except we were used in an advisory capacity and we helped him on the art and various other things.

Q. As to the other pictures on that list, what, if any, firsthand knowledge do you have about what kind of distribution any one of those pictures got? A. I have quite a lot of knowledge on that, sir; in my experience.

Q. Do you know what they grossed nationally? A. No. A successful picture is not what it may or may not gross. A successful picture is one that generally plays in the United States a large number of theatres. That would be what I call a successful picture. I can't tell you the gross of any of these pictures. I don't know the gross.

Q. Do you know how many theatres any one of those played in? A. Not directly, but I will tell you whether or not they got what we called general distribution, sir.

(1867)

Q. Just go down the list and give me the approximate number of theatres that each one played in, if you know. A. I refuse to give it because I wouldn't know, I would be guessing, but I can tell you that Henry VIII was generally played in the United States; I can tell you Maedchen In Uniform was played considerably in the United States, and I would be very much surprised if it played less than six or seven thousand theatres, and probably played more; The Ghost Goes West, I happen to know a little about, but it was a successful picture, played a considerable number of theatres.

Q. Do you know who released it?

Mr. Frohlich: That was an Alex Korda.

Mr. Wright: I didn't ask him who produced it. I asked him whom it was released by.

A. I am not positive of this. We have records of it. Probably through United Artists.

Mr. Raftery: We will stipulate it was.

Mr. Proskauer: Mr. Raftery claims credit for it. He says United Artists did.

A. (Continuing) Mayerling, I know, had a lot of distribution in the United States; Rembrandt I don't believe got as much distribution as Mayerling had, but it was played around; Elephant Boy, I know, got distribution in the United States considerably; 39 Steps I know got a lot of distribution in the United States, successful picture.

(1868)

Q. When you say a lot of distribution, are you talking about five or six thousand? A. I would say six or seven, eight, nine thousand accounts in the United States—maybe six thousand, I don't know, but that would be what we call generally played.

Q. How many accounts do the best pictures that you may play? A. Best pictures?

Q. That you release. A. We sell a major part of our program between eleven and twelve thousand—between ten and eleven thousand, pardon me, and we have had some pictures play more than that, up to 15,000.

Q. So none of those pictures on your list ever compared even in the number of accounts that they played with your own best pictures that you released, isn't that right? A. Yes, but, of course, on the other hand my best pictures do not play as many accounts as somebody else's best pictures play, Mr. Wright.

Q. I understand that. A. That may be true of these too. We call these pictures successful foreign pictures. They got a successful run in the United States, most of them. Some of them not so successful.

Q. You mean a success for a foreign picture is one that does about half as much national business as one of your own pictures, is that a fair definition? A. I wouldn't say that, sir. I would say it gets as much run as the public want to give it. If the public wanted to buy that picture, it could have 15,000 runs in the United States.

Q. In any event, how much gross is actually realized on any picture depends to a very large extent how it is exploited and where it is played in addition to the bare number of exhibitions that it has, isn't that right? A. Exploitation is very important, sir, yes, sir.

Q. That is, the extent to which it gets into your so-called key first-run situations has a very substantial bearing on that fact, is that right? A. Yes, sir, you are right.

Q. And was to what happened in that regard with respect to any one of these pictures is something which I suppose only the records of the particular distributor who distributed it would disclose, isn't that right? A. I imagine that would be the only way to get the actu——

Q. If you wanted to get the facts of what happened to the distribution of these pictures, that is where you would have to go, wouldn't you? A. Not where I would have to go. It is where you would have to go.

Q. If we wanted to get something more out of you than just generalities as to playing a lot of accounts or having distributions, we would have to give you those records, wouldn't we? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Wright: We have nothing more at this time. We would like to see those records that he is going to produce.

Mr. Frohlich: I will produce them in the morning, your Honors, and I will produce the witness too, so he may be interrogated on them.

By Mr. Seymour:

Q. Mr. Wright asked you about a situation in Salt Lake City. Can you tell us, do you recall why you continued to license your pictures to your customer there? A. Our customer in Salt Lake City is a very satisfactory account and we believe we get materially more out of our program as a whole selling it to him than we would to the opposition.

Q. Generally speaking, where you have a satisfactory customer, whether it is a so-called affiliated theatre or an independent exhibitor, do you continue to do business with that customer? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In New Haven, which I think Mr. Wright asked about, there are theatres affiliated with three different distributors, are there not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And with which theatre do you do business, which one do you license your pictures to? A. We license our pictures to the theatre operated by Loew.

(1871)

Q. Do you go around annually to the Warner or the M. & P. theatre and see if you can license it to one of those theatres? A. Definitely not.

Q. Why not? A. Because we are very satisfied with our account there.

Q. Mr. Wright asked you something about Confidential Reports and I would like to ask you something about that since that was the first mention of the thing in this case. Your company contributes to that organization? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What does the organization do? A. It is a fact-finding organization dealing with the checking of percentage pictures.

Q. And it checks the records of exhibitors exhibiting the pictures of the distributors who contribute to its expenses? A. They send a man, in some cases it is a woman, to the theatre and that person stands, usually, in sight of where the tickets are being taken and checks the people that go in. Oftentime that checker will have a clock in his pocket or in his hand, as the case may be. Hourly he is supposed to go to the box office and ascertain the number of the ticket that has just been sold. Then he checks the day—the performance, and it may be matinee or it may be done hourly, or it may be matinee and evening. He checks and sees that the report that is sent to us by the theatre is in accordance with the check that he has made.

(1872)

Q. Do you get a report from the theatre on any pictures except your own? A. Absolutely not.

Q. Do you get a report from this checking organization on any pictures but yours. A. Definitely not. They only send to us such information that pertains to Columbia.

Q. Is there any method by which you obtain information as to the transaction between the theatre and any of the other companies who contribute to the expense of this organization? A. There is no method.

Q. Prior to the use of this organization—by the way, when did you begin to use it? A. I believe about last April.

Q. Prior to the use of this organization did you use a different organization? A. We used a different organization, sir, Ross Checking Service.

Q. What were the conditions which caused you to use the new organization? A. Well, certain information through certain suits, where exhibitors had been in and their books exposed, on the examination of those books by counsel, it brought out that the books and the reports that we had received from the theatre did not jell, so as to speak, they were different. There were inaccuracies and that went into—when we looked into it, we found out there were many such inaccuracies.

(1873)

Q. That is, a number of exhibitors kept false books? A. I wouldn't say their books were false, I have no knowledge of that, but I do say in many cases the box office receipts, signed by them and sent to us, was not in accordance with their books. It was for a lesser amount than their books exposed.

Q. Did the other organizat[illegible]at you used use checkers? A. I beg your pardon?

Q. Did the other organization which you used use checkers, checking the number of persons coming into the box office? A. The Ross Checking System?

Q. Yes. A. They were supposed to, sir.

Q. Did you find any cases where the checkers had been bribed? A. There were bribery cases, sir.

Q. Did you find any cases where exhibitors made a percentage deal with inspectors to pay them whatever amount they could get away with in connection with their false returns? A. There had been false returns made of many kinds and types.

Q. Was it because of those circumstances that you joined in the formation of this new organization? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Seymour: That is all.

Mr. Caskey: I have just one question.

(1874)

By Mr. Caskey:

Q. This Exhibit 265, Mr. Montague, contains the deal sheets, does it not? A. These are deal sheets, yes.

Q. And they are all the deal sheets? A. I would assume so, though I am not sure.

Mr. Caskey: That is all.

By Mr. Proskauer:

Q. Mr. Montague, I could not quite hear but I understood that you and Mr. Wright were having some colloquy about a theatre in Philadelphia that was in opposition to the Warner theatre there, and I thought I heard you say that you did not regard it entirely favorably. That referred to the Erlanger Theatre? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Just tell the Court what was in your mind as to that theatre. A. The Erlanger Theatre was a legitimate theatre that was taken over by a gentleman in Philadelphia, I think Goodman by name——

Mr. Frohlich: Goldman.

A. (Continuing)—Goldman, by name. Thank you for the correction. And he wanted pictures, solicited pictures for this theatre, first-run pictures. We considered it not the equal, and that our opportunities of income from that the atre would not be the equal of Warner Bros., such theatres as we had been playing in, operated by Warner Bros. in Philadelphia. We thought it was off the beaten path, we did not think it had a clientele developed, and we feared if we treated seriously his request and entered into any negotiations that we would sacrifice a great sum of money.

Q. Would you say it is off the beaten path? It is way down on West Market Street, isn't it? A. Yes.

Q. And it is a block farther from the center of the theatrical region than even the Mastbaum? A. Yes, sir, which is also off the beaten path.

Q. And it is a fact that theatre had been dark, as we say in our amusement industry, for many, many years? A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Mastbaum had also been dark for many, many years? A. Yes.

Q. The Mastbaum was only reopened at the time that we had that wave of prosperity that came from the war in Philadelphia? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the Erlanger Theatre had lain idle there down at the extreme end of Market Street, backing up on the railroad embankment for many, many years, had it not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Closed, dark theatre? A. Closed theatre. Opened occasionally, as I remember it, for legitimate shows.

Q. You were asked a question as to whether you went out in various areas and got competitive bidding on your pictures. Do you remember that, some colloquy like that between you and counsel? A. No, I do not.
(1876)

Q. You were asked whether in given areas you went out and tried to get bids on pictures. A. We don't try to go out and get bids on pictures.

Q. What would happen—I will put it this way to you: Is it feasible in your business to put pictures on the auction block and go out and say, "Who is going to make me the highest bid?" for pictures? A. No, sir.

Q. Tell me why not. A. We have a definite policy that at no time do we negotiate with two people. We find it absolutely necessary to have a continuity of releasing in a definite theatre, wherever we can possibly get it. That is not only for the benefit of Columbia but for the benefit of subsequent-runs in that situation. They too are interested in where you play your picture first-run. And what we have practiced over a period of years, and our records prove beyond a question of a doubt—and it is what we like, is to continue to play with the same accounts that we have played with over a period of years, if those accounts have been satisfactory to us. If they are responsible, and their responsibility has stood up over a period of years, we think that is good enough to go along with.

Your Honors, in many cases we play in houses where we know we could get more money from an opposition, but because we have been playing in that house for a number of years, and we have sturdy friendship, we feel it is best to continue there, but we don't feel we have lost by that—maybe we do get a little loss on a picture or two, but over all our program we feel that is much the better policy. And we change our accounts—so few accounts are changed, I would say, rather, in a period of years, it is hardly noticeable on our records, and our records will support that beyond a question of a doubt.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Frohlich:

Q. Will you refresh your recollection, Mr. Montague, as I interrogate you, from this list of the 92 cities? I have just one general question. You were asked by Mr. Wright to give instances where you sold away from Loew's to other affiliates. Will you be good enough to look at the following cities, Cleveland, Ohio,—— A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you sell away from Loew's there? A. In Cleveland, Ohio, we sell the Hippodrome and Allen, Palace—Hippodrome and Allen Theatres, to the Keith Ohio Corporation, operated by RKO, in a pool with Warner Bros.

Q. Look at Dayton, Ohio. A. Yes, sir.

Q. To whom do you sell there? A. The RKO Midwest Corporation.

(1878)

Q. Has Loew's a theatre there? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Look at Houston, Texas. Has Loew's a theatre there? A. Yes, sir.

Q. To whom do you sell? A. To Interstate Circuit, Inc. of Texas, operated by a Paramount affiliate.

Q. Please look at Memphis, Tennessee. Has Loew's a theatre there? A. Memphis, Loew has a theatre in Memphis, Malco Theatres, Inc., operated by Lightman, M. A. Lightman.

Q. Affiliated with Paramount? A. Affiliated with Paramount.

Q. Please look at New Orleans? A. Loew has a theatre there.

Q. To whom do you sell? A. Theatre operated by RKO.

Q. Please look at Wilmington, Delaware. Has Loew a theatre there? A. Loew has a theatre in Wilmington, yes, sir.

Q. To whom do you sell? A. Warner Bros.

Q. Are there other instances on that list where you sell from Loew's to independents? A. Many of them.

Q. Would that be true in Atlanta, Georgia? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In Baltimore, Maryland? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Canton, Ohio? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Hartford, Connecticut? A. Yes, sir.

Q. New York City? A. Yes, sir.

(1879)

Q. Norfolk, Virginia? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Richmond, Virginia? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Springfield, Mass.? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Toledo, Ohio? A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Wright:

Q. When you say sold from Loew to independents in those towns you last mentioned there, did Loew ever play your pictures? A. Where?

Q. Any town, those last ones you mentioned. A. In any of these cities?

Q. Yes. A. To the best of my knowledge Loew never did play them. They may have played them in some, but to the best of my knowledge they never did.

Judge Hand: We will take a recess until tomorrow morning at 10.30.

(Adjourned to November 1, 1945, at 10:30 a.m.)

(1880)

New York, November 1, 1945,
10:30 o'clock a.m.

Trial resumed.

ABRAHAM MONTAGUE, resumed the stand.

Redirect Examination Continued by Mr. Frohlich:

Q. Mr. Montague, you testified yesterday regarding a situation up in Buffalo. Do you want to correct that testimony? A. The testimony that I gave as to the Bailey Theatre in Buffalo was the situation that happened in the Rivoli Theatre in Buffalo. Probably the reason——

Q. Let me interrupt you. Did you refresh your recollection from your records last night? A. I did, sir.

Q. Now, please go on with your story. A. My memory probably failed me a bit as to the Bailey. Both situations were in arbitration, I believe, at the exact same time; both were asking for a change of clearance; both of them were in competition with the Sheas theatres. The Bailey was in opposition to the Kensington, operated by Shea; and the Rivoli in direct opposition to the Roosevelt operated by Shea. So in that case the testimony that I gave as to the Bailey was actually the situation of the Rivoli.

Q. As a matter of fact, you never sold the Kensington nor the Roosevelt? A. No, we have not sold the Kensington for many, many years, and we still do not sell them; and we have not sold the Roosevelt for many, many years, and still do not sell them.

Q. Now, let me ask you whether there are instances, just a few, where you sold away from one affiliated theatre to another in some of the large cities included in that group of 92 cities? How about Chicago? A. Yes, we sold from one affiliated to another.

Q. And who was the affiliated account. A. We used to sell originally RKO; we now sell B & K.

Q. That is Balaban & Katz. That is a Paramount affiliate? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How about Houston, Texas?

Mr. Wright: May we have the dates on those, and when?

Q. Can you give us the approximate dates or the year or the season? A. In the case in Chicago I would say, without examining the records, somewheres around between 1933 and 1935.

Q. Houston, Texas? A. Houston, Texas——

Q. Did you formerly sell the Loew account in that city? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then a time came when you switched to the Interstate Circuit? A. Correct.

Q. That was a Paramount affiliate? A. Yes, sir.

(1882)

Q. Syracuse——

Mr. Wright: Wait a minute. That was when? Will you have him give the dates on those?

Mr. Frohlich: Yes.

Q. Will you give us the date? A. Well, I should say approximately between 1933 and 1935. I do not remember the exact y ar, but I would say in that period, within that period.

Q. Now, do you recall about Syracuse, New York? A. Syracuse, New York, we sold RKO and then switched to Loew.

Q. Now, how about New York City?

Mr. Wright: May we have the date each time?

Mr. Frohlich: Oh, yes. Will you give us the year of that in Syracuse?

The Witness: That occurred about the same period of time.

Q. How about New York City? A. In New York City we used to sell what is known as the Metropolitan group of theatres of RKO, and we ceased doing business with them in 1934, I believe, and started doing business with the Loew Circuit.

Q. Well, were there instances where you changed from an affiliated customer to an independent customer? A. Many such cases, sir.

(1883)

Q. Well, let me refresh your recollection. Do you recall Akron, Ohio? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who is your present account there now? A. If you have the list, sir, I would like to have it.

Q. Suppose I give you the list and suppose you read off for the record just a few instances on the list. A. Our present customer is an account known as Chatkin & Feld.

Q. Independents? A. Independents. We formerly sold Paramount.

Mr. Wright: Can we have the date on that?

The Witness: I am afraid to trust my memory, sir, on these dates.

Mr. Wright: Can you give it approximately?

Mr. Frohlich: We can furnish the dates later on, Mr. Wright. We will look them up for you and furnish them.

A. (Continued) Duluth, Minnesota, we presently sell our pictures to S. J. Blacknow. We formerly sold to Paramount.

In Erie, Pa., we sell to Weschler, and we formerly sold to Warners.

In Long Beach, California, we sell to an account known as Milton Arthur, and we formerly sold to Fox.

In Miami, Florida, we sell to Wometco, and we formerly sold to Paramount.

(1884)

In Oakland, California, we sell to Blumenfeld, an independent, and we formerly sold to Fox.

In Oklahoma City, we sell—the name is incorrect here as to the owner—here it is Dent. I do not think it is one of the parties. We sell this theatre in Oklahoma. We formerly sold first run, Oklaboma, to the Paramount.

In Pittsburgh we sell to Johnnie Harris. We formerly sold first-run to Warner.

Sacramento, California, we sell to an independent, Blumenfeld. We formerly sold to Fox.

In Seattle, we sell first-run to Von Herberg, an independent. We formerly sold to Fox.

In San Diego, we sell to an independent, the Metzger Estate, and we formerly sold to Fox.

In San Francisco, we sell first-run to Blumenfeld, an independent. We formerly sold to RKO.

Q. Have there been instances, Mr. Montague, where one affiliated exhibitor tried to get your product away from another affiliated exhibitor? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did that happen in New Orleans? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell us—will this document refresh your recollection? Just tell us what happened in those three cities? A. Well, I was approached by Gaston Dureau——

Mr. Wright: Can we have the date of that?

Q. Can you give us the approximate date? A. Well, I would say this was maybe some four or five years ago. I was approached by Gaston Dureau for our product for the Saenger theatre, or for part of our product for the Saenger theatre, and of course we did not enter into any negotiations because I did not want to change my customer.

Q. Who was the Saenger theatre? What company controlled the Saenger theatre? A. We call it the E. D. Richards Company, an affiliate of Paramount.

Q. A Paramount affiliate? A. Yes; that is in New Orleans.

In New Haven we have been approached by Warners for part of the product and we have also been approached by Paramount. In neither case did we enter into negotiations because we were satisfied with our account.

Mr. Wright: Have you got the dates, again?

The Witness: I would say within the last two or three years, Mr. Wright.

A. (Continuing) In Boston we sell to Loew and we again have been approached several times by M & P, an affiliate of Paramount, for first-run product in that city. And we did not enter into negotiations because again we were satisfied with our account.

Q. Can you say generally that there has been competition between the Big Five for your product in the cities from time to time? A. Yes, sir.

(1886)

Mr. Frolich: Your witness.

Recross Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. With respect to these approaches you say that have been made in these cities at this time, there were, however, no negotiations, no discussion of terms, is that right? A.

We would not enter into negotiations, Mr. Wright, unless we had some reason for wanting to change.

Q. See if you can answer the question. A. I am sorry.

Q. I asked you if there were—whether it was a fact that there were or there were not negotiations? A. Maybe my interpretation of negotiations and yours might be different.

Q. There was no discussion of terms, is that right? A. No, sir.

Q. In none of those instances? A. In none of those instances.

Q. Insofar as the dates of these situations that you recounted, where you say the product went from an affiliated house to an independent, are concerned, I suppose if they occurred after the 1935-36 season, the shift, if any, would be reflected in this tabulation that you introduced in evidence here as Exhibit C-6, is that right? A. I would assume so.

Q. This, I take it, shows your customers in all of those towns? A. I would assume so.

Q. For the 1936-37 season through 1944-45? A. I would assume so.

Q. And in those occasions where you did make such shift, none of that product was offered to the independent until after it had been rejected by the affiliated circuit, isn't that right? A. No, that is not quite right, Mr. Wright.

Q. What is the fact? A. Well, I don't like to generalize because there were different facts in many of the cases. If you will ask of any particular one, or all, I will try to remember the situation.

Q. In any event, you did not get together as to terms with the affiliated circuit, and it was not until after you failed to get together that you made any offer to the independent is that right? A. In some cases, and in some cases we did not make offer at all.

Q. Do you know which those were now? Do you have any recollection on it? A. Well, in the case of M & P in Boston, we broke over one picture called Lost Horizon, and when the next season's product came out, I did not offer that product to M & P. I went out and established new accounts.

Q. That is, you broke in a number of M & P situations? A. I broke in all the M & P situations.

Q. Do you remember when that was? A. I should say (1888) about six or seven years ago.

Q. In that case the breaks, such as they were, would be reflected again in your Exhibit C-6, isn't that right? A. I assume so.

(Government's Exhibits 378 to 381 inclusive marked for identification.)

Q. I will show you these contracts between your company and the Bailey Theatre at Buffalo, New York, which have been marked for identification as 378 through 381 inclusive, and ask you if you recognize those as the contracts made with that theatre for the 1941-42, 1942-43, 1943-44, and 1944-45 seasons respectively? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I call your attention to the earliest contract here. I beg your pardon, I believe I gave you the wrong dates on those. These are 1942-43, through 1945-46 inclusive, that is right, isn't it? A. Well, schedule for the season 1942-43.

Q. Yes. That is the first one. A. That is the first one.

Q. And in that one the clearance provision on which you sold him, the only thing that it said there was "14 days clearance on Genesee theatre," is that right? A. Correct.

Q. That means he was given that season 14 days clearance over a particular theatre, that Genesee theatre, is that (1889) right? A. Yes.

Q. In the succeeding seasons I notice the clearance reads, "Immediately after Shea's Kensington theatre, 14 days ahead of the Genesee theatre," and that provision continued, did it not, in the succeeding three seasons? A. Yes, sir.

Q. As I understand your testimony, actually in none of those four seasons there had you actually been selling the Shea's Kensington, is that right? A. Correct.

Q. Do you know why that particular clearance was inserted in there? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why was it? A. He originally, or, we will say, in 1942-43, had a clearance, and that clearance, we will say, was regulated only by the Genessee. In other words, the first-run contract, the Lafayette, I believe, carries a 30-day clearance, so he could run the pictures thirty days after, or he could run the pictures two months after. That clearance was set up, and we could have put a run in between it; in other words, we could have licensed another theatre in that town for a definite 30-day clearance, which might have been in competition with this one, and then we could have run the Bailey theatre after that theatre, and our obligation was only to keep the Bailey theatre ahead of the Genessee theatre. Now I assume that the exhibitor began to become conscious of this——

(1890)

Q. I am not asking you—— A. I am trying to give you the whole story.

Q. I am asking you if you knew what the circumstances were as to why you put that provision in there? A. I probably put it in at his request, sir.

Q. Do you know? Did you have any conversation with him about it? A. No, my—no conversation with him. My conversation was all with either the district manager or the branch manager, sir. My information comes from those two sources.

Q. As a matter of fact, the reason you put it in was, was it not, that you wanted to be sure that if you decided or were able to sell the Kensington theatre, that he would have to follow, isn't that right? A. He would have had to anyway, according to the contract, Mr. Wright. His clearance was only based on the Genessee theatre, not on the Kensington.

Q. According to the contract that is in evidence here, or that is identified as 378, he did not have to follow the Shea's Kensington theatre in playing your pictures; did he? A. Does it say so there? I can't find it.

Q. Look at it. A. It said "14-day clearance on the Genessee theatre."

Q. And under that contract pictures became available to (1891) him thirty days after the run downtown, and not after any run at the Kensington? A. I would assume only if I wanted to give him thirty days after. I had to give him——

Q. That is what you were giving him, isn't that right? A. Oh, that is what I did give him, yes, sir.

Q. Then in the succeeding seasons you say that you think you put in there "Immediately after Shea's Kensington theatre" at his request? A. After the decision of the arbitration, which I believe was set up by the Consent Decree.

Judge Bright: What does that mean?

The Witness: Maybe I did not make myself too clear.

Q. You certainly did not. A. I will try to, Mr. Wright. This Bailey theatre went to aribtration as to this clearance.

Judge Bright: Bailey was an independent?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

A. (Continuing) And according to the information I have, arbitration found for him and gave him a clearance immediately after the Kensington theatre. Now that established in my opinion a run for him which was quite definite.

Judge Bright: Who was operating the Kensington?

The Witness: The Kensington theatre is operated —we call it one of the Shea theatres, and I believe it is now operated by Loew's.

(1892)

Mr. Wright: It appears from the evidence in the record, if the Court please, that it is actually operated by Buffalo Theatres, Inc., one-third of the stock of which is owned by Loew's, and one-third of the stock is owned by Paramount, and one-third, I believe, was owned by Mr. Shea, and it was known as part of the Shea operations. That is why——

Judge Bright: Go on, Mr. Montague.

The Witness: When arbitration decided for him that he should have a run immediately after, naturally, we put it into our contract. That still gave us the opportunity of selling, if we could, the Kensington Theatre, and if we did, the Kensington Theatre could have run ahead of the Bailey Theatre, as found by the arbitrators. We could not succeed in making the sale in the Kensington, so our film is still being played, not held up in any instance, is still being played at the Bailey Theatre, and he is actually playing 30 days after the first-run, which is the Lafayette Theatre, in Buffalo.

Q. That is only because you still haven't sold the Kensington? A. Mr. Wright, if I could possibly sell the Kensington, I would, and in that case Bailey would run immediately after the Kensington.

Judge Bright: You mean by "immediately" without any clearance?

(1893)

The Witness: One day.

Judge Bright: One day?

The Witness: One day.

Judge Bright: After the termination of the engagement in the Kensington?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Judge Bright: But he would still have to be 30 days behind the downtown theatre?

The Witness: Yes, sir, because that is in the downtown theatre contract.

Judge Bright: Would the Kensington also?

The Witness: Have to play 30 days, sir.

Mr. Wright: I did not hear the first question there.

(Record read.)

Q. That is, the Kensington would play 30 days after downtown; then he would play one day after the Kensington? A. It would be right; yes, sir.

Q. Not only in that case but in the ordinary case where you grant clearance to one theatre over another, you merely follow the pattern that is set by the clearances given by the other major distributors, isn't that right? A. By all distributors, sir, so-called major and those that we do not call major, such was Republic, Producers—and the other one skips my mind.

(1894)

Mr. Frohlich: Monogram?

A. (Continuing) By the way, they are growing into a major class, too, you know.

Q. When you grant it, you do not make any independent determination yourself as to whether it is reasonable or unreasonable, is that right? A. Well, we consider—if it is unreasonable, the exhibitor usually discusses it and it usually reflects in the price which we get for our film.

Q. Yes, but can you answer the question? A. May I hear that question?

(Question read.)

A. Correct, sir.

Judge Bright: You mean you take it as you find it?

The Witness: Yes, sir, we take the clearance as we find it.

Q. And in some cases you know it is unreasonable and you still go ahead and grant it, isn't that right? A. I wouldn't say that in some cases I know it is unreasonable and I still grant it. If the clearance interferes with my income, I believe it is unreasonable.

Q. You recall testifying in a pretrial deposition in this suit in April 4, 1940? A. I remember I did, yes, sir.

Q. And I will call your attention to a question and (1895) answer that occurred then and see if you recognize it as correct. Do you remember you were asked, with respect to clearance, "But even if you thought it was unreasonable, in order to protect your revenue from a particular area, you might be compelled to sell him on those unreasonable terms anyway, isn't that right?" and you answer, I believe, was "We grant a lot of clearance in the United States to circuits, independent circuits, affiliated circuits and individual theatres, that we do not believe"—"that we don't believe is absolutely necessary as claimed, but we find that in most of those cases it is standardized and it is going on and we, Columbia, do not feel we are big enough or strong enough to change it and usually comes up against a situation as to whether or not we want to sell or not, but we haven't so much trouble. In fact, I am almost ready to say that we are having more trouble today in setting clearances as between one independent against another as we have had in the case of one independent against a circuit. We find today that as a man acquires more theatres, an individual or a part of a so-called affiliated defendant here, he feels he is entitled as God's gift to more clearance. It is something that seems to grow as a weed in the garden of distribution, and we don't like it because I know when I had one theatre I was not nearly as fussy when I had three, and I guess that has gone down, down the line."

you recall having given that answer? A. Oh, yes.

Q. And that is a correct statement as of today also? A. I would not say it has changed the least bit, sir.

Mr. Frohlich: That is all?

Mr. Wright: That is all.

Mr. Frohlich: Are there any questions?

(No response.)

Mr. Frohlich: You may step down. Thank you very much.

(Witness excused.)

Mr. Frohlich: I have no further witnesses, your Honors.

Mr. Wright: If the court please, I do not believe I offered these exhibits which were identified. I offer them, and I take it there is no objection.

Mr. Frohlich: No objection.

(Government's Exhibits 378 to 381 inclusive for identification received in evidence.)

(1897)

Mr. Caskey: I call Morton Thalhimer.

MORTON G. THALHIMER, called as a witness on behalf of defendant Twentieth Century-Fox, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Caskey;

Q. Mr. Thalhimer, where do you reside? A. In Richmond, Virginia.

Q. What is your occupation? A. I am in the theatre and real estate business.

Q. What is the name of your corporation? A. The Neighborhood Theatre, Inc.

Q. Mr. Thalhimer, do you own any stock or other securities in any of the defendants in this case? A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. Does any of the defendants in this case own any stock or other securities in your corporation? A. No.

Q. Or have any profit-sharing arrangements with you? A. No, sir.

Q. You are an independent exhibitor? A. Yes.

Q. What theatres do you operate in Richmond, Virginia? A. We operate three first-run theatres: Byrd, State and Capitol theatres; one action house that is partly first-run and partly second-run, the Grand Theatre; and six subsequent-run theatres. I can give you the names if you wish them. Do you want the names of them?

(1898)

Q. Yes. A. The Venus, Ponton, the Westhampton, Bellevue and Ginter.

Q. Are there other first-run theatres in Richmond? A. Yes, sir, there are.

Q. Will you name them? A. Loew's, Inc. have the largest first-run theatre, and Fabian-Wilmer & Vincent have two first-run theatres and one action first-run and second-run combined; and also several subsequent-run theatres.

Q. I was going to ask you that. In addition to your six subsequent-run theatres, are there other subsequent-run theatres in Richmond? A. Yes, there are.

Q. Operated by whom? A. By Wilmer & Vincent-Fabian, and a man by the name of Ben Pitts, and by a Mr. Somer and by a Mr. Arcaro, of the white theatres; and then there are a number of negro theatres that are separate and apart, but they are also run independently by the Lichtman Circuit of Washington, D. C.

Mr. Caskey: Will you please mark this for identification.

(Marked Defendant Twentieth Century-Fox's Exhibit F-15 for identification.)

Q. Mr. Thalhimer, have you prepared a map of the City of Richmond showing the location of all the theatres in that city? A. Yes. I placed on this map of Richomnd the names and the ownership of the theatres in Richmond.

(1899)

Q. Now, in the downtown business area what theatres are located? A. Loew's, Wilmer & Vincent's Colonial; National and Park and the State and Grand theatres.

Q. Those are in the heart of the business section of Richmond? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, where is your Capitol Theatre? A. That is located about 30 blocks west in a residential area.

Q. And where is your Byrd Theatre? A. That is also in a West End residential neighborhood about 30 blocks west of the business area.

Q. Then your Westhampton Theatre is in the northwestern part of the city? A. Yes.

Q. And in the northern part you have the Ginter and Bellevue? A. And Brookland.

Q. And Brookland? A. Yes.

Q. And those are approximately how far from downtown Richmond? A. I would say two or three miles perhaps.

Q. And then over in south Richmond you have the Ponton and the Venus? A. Yes.

Q. And you have indicated by a legend the name of the operator of each of the theatres? A. Yes.

Mr. Caskey: I do not think it is necessary to offer it in evidence.

Q. Now, on first-run what product do you play? A. We (1900) play Twentieth Century-Fox, RKO, Columbia and Universal.

Q. How long have you played product of Twentieth Century-Fox? A. Since we first started in business in about 1927, one year after we started in business.

Q. And when you started that was with what theatre? A. With the Capitol Theatre, as a first-run theatre, and the Venus Theatre in south Richmond, as a second-run theatre or sub-run theatre.

Q. Subsequently you acquired the State Theatre? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is downtown Richmond? A. Yes.

Q. And within a few hundred feet of the Wilmer & Vincent-Fabian theatres? A. It adjoins them. They are on either side.

Q. Subsequently you leased the Byrd Theatre? A. Yes.

Q. Now, in the neighborhood theatres what products do you play? A. We play all of the products.

Q. You play in your neighborhood theatres the product of Loew's? A. Yes.

Q. Which plays at the Loew's Theatre downtown? A. Yes.

Q. Do you play the United Artists product which plays at the Loew Theatre downtown? A. Yes.

Q. And do you play the Paramount and Warner product which plays at the Wilmer & Vincent theatres downtown? A. Yes.

(1901)

Q. In your first-run operation do you take clearance on your product over all the other theatres in Richmond? A. Yes.

Q. How long is that clearance? A. The clearance is 30 days on the two second-run theatres and 45 days on the balance of the sub-run theatres of the city.

Q. And does the Loew Theatre take clearance on the product that it exhibits over the theatres which you operate? A. The identical clearance.

Q. And do the Wilmer & Vincent theatres take the same clearance? A. Yes.

Q. With respect to the product they play? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your present admission price first-run in Richmond? A. 46 cents plus 9 cents tax. 55 cents gross for the first-run theatres.

Q. Who fixed that admission price? A. Well, we fixed it so far as our theatres are concerned.

Q. How did you determine that that was an appropriate price to charge the public? A. Well, trying to be brief about it, the original prices when we started in business was 50 cents as a first-run price, which had been established there for a number of years; and perhaps in 1933 they were reduced to 40 cents so the public would not have to pay 10 cent tax. That was at the time the Federal tax was only on admissions above 40 cents. And since the increase of the cost of operation the admission price is now fixed at 46 cents plus tax, which seems to be the price that is agreeable to the public and satisfactory in the operation of the theatre.

Q. In your business judgment is that the price which is best calculated to produce the largest gross revenue in your first-run houses? A. I think so.

Q. What do you charge in the subsequent-run houses that you operate? A. 29 cents, generally speaking, plus 6 cents tax. 35 cents. In both these cases, Mr. Caskey, I have only quoted you the adult night prices.

Q. Adult evening admission price? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I will ask you whether or not in the industry when you refer to admission price, it is customary to quote the adult evening admission price? A. Well, I think so. I think I could give it to you for the children and matinees if you want it.

Q. No, that is unnecessary. Now, who fixes that admission price for those subsequent-run theatres? A. We fixed the admission price.

Q. You have a theatre in Richmond operated by Wilmer & Vincent playing 45 days first-run, which charges a higher price, have you not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What theatre is that? A. That is the Carillon. They charge 33 cents plus 7 cents tax, or a total of 40 cents as against 35 cents in the other sub-run theatres.

Q. That theatre is out near your Byrd? A. Yes.

Q. Now, in your license contracts with Twentieth Century-Fox do you make an agreement as to the admission price which you will charge in your first-run houses? A. Yes, it is written in the contract as to the price that is to be charged.

Q. And is that also true in the subsequent-run? A. Yes, it is.

Q. Has Twentieth Century-Fox ever attempted to compel you to charge a higher or a lower admission price first-run? A. No.

Q. Has Twentieth Century-Fox ever attempted or compelled you to charge a higher or a lower price in your subsequent-run theatres? A. No, they have not.

Q. Have you determined those admission prices in the exercise of your own independent business judgment? A. Yes.

Q. Now will you tell the Court the reasons why you purchase clearance from Twentieth Century-Fox on its pictures?

Mr. Davis: Will you read that question, please?

Q. (Read.) Well, when we license pictures first-run they are shown in theatres which are very much more expensive theatres as to the land and building, generally speaking, than our sub-runs or our competitors' sub-runs. And this matter of clearance so far as Richmond was concerned was (1904) in effect when we first went into business in Richmond. It was first written into our contract, so we were thoroughly aware of it, and it seemed perfectly normal and natural that it should remain that way. It protects our first-runs against our own sub-runs, and, of course, against our competitors' sub-runs.

Q. And did you build one or more subsequent-run theatres in Richmond knowing that their availability would be approximately 45 days after first-run? A. Yes, we did.

Q. Do you license some pictures on percentage? A. A good many.

Q. Do you license some on flat rental? A. Yes.

Q. Do you license some on some formula whereby the amount of the film rental varies or fluctuates with the amount of gross receipts? A. Yes.

Q. Explain to the Court, if you will, a typical arrangement of that type. A. Where it varies?

Q. Yes. A. Well, perhaps the most outstanding example is with Metro pictures, and what they call their sliding scale. For instance, if they would determine 40 per cent, the top business of a theatre on 40 per cent where the picture had been profitable for the theatre, 40 per cent film rental—we have a theatre, for example, to illustrate, in Petersburg, where $4000 a week's business was supposed to be tremendously good—well, the week is divided up into ten units—

three units for Sunday, two for Saturday and one for each of the other five days. Assuming that a picture plays a week, the units are not very material; but in smaller cities they often play part of a week. But if that picture reached $4000 on a Metro sliding scale, for example, our film rental would be 40 per cent, or $1600, which would mean that we would have $2400 left over as our part of the week's receipts. If, on the other hand, that picture in Petersburg was not as good as Metro thought it would be, and it only did, let us say, $2400 rather than $4000 for the week, that film rental would drop to 25 per cent under the sliding scale; so the film rental would only be $600. And when we deduct $600 from $2400, we only have $1800 left; so we are very much better off to pay them 40 per cent on a picture that does $4000 than we would be to pay them 25 per cent on a picture that does in the neighborhood of $2000 or $2500. So that the film rental is based on the ability of the picture to produce in the theatre, and it is based on our past experience.

We have the same thing with other contracts, and I think probably with Fox and Columbia and maybe RKO in which the picture—there is a reversion in the contract. If the picture does so much business, it is 40 per cent; if it does a lesser figure, it is 35 per cent; if it does a lesser figure, it drops to 30 per cent. I think that is due to the fact that even among great pictures they will do more business in one section of the United States than they will in another. For example, a picture exhibited south of the Mason-Dixon Line that glorifies Mr. Lincoln, or the northern idea of the Civil war, is very unpopular in our part of the territory; and we very often do not even play the pictures because the public won't come to see them. But that same picture in Boston territory might be a 40 per cent picture, whereas in our territory if we played it at all it would probably not earn over 20 per cent.

Q. Mr. Thalhimer, do you consider those methods of buying or licensing film to be fair? A. I think they are very fair.

Q. How many first-run theatres do you have in Richmond? A. We have three first-run theatres, and the Grand Theatre, which is a first-run action house.

Q. Now, how do you play the pictures in those theatres? A. Well, those pictures vary in the method of playing, depending on what we consider the importance of the picture. For example, recently Fox's picture State Fair played day and date uptown at the Byrd and downtown at the State for one week. Then it played the following week day and date with the State downtown, the same theatre it started (1907) in, and the Capitol. And then, if I remember correctly, we kept it another week in the Capitol. So it really had a total of five weeks' run, although over a period of three weeks. Now, our pictures vary first-run. One picture may play the Byrd by itself, and another may play the State by itself; another may play the Byrd and State day and date; another might play the Capital and State day and date; and a good many of them will carry over from the Byrd and State day and date to the Capitol.

Q. Are you able in your experience to book your pictures in a manner which enables you to operate your theatres on first-run which you believe will be most profitable to yourself? A. Yes.

Q. Now, you have talked about a carry-over. What is that? A. Well, a carry-over in our position is that if we play a picture at the Bryd and State, and the picture is doing a very good business, we would take it immediately at the end of its run in the Byrd and State into our smaller Capitol Theatre for an additional week.

Q. Now, this picture State Fair, as I understand it you ran it continuously for three weeks in three different theatres all told, making five weeks total exhibition, is that right? A. Well, yes, I think it is; but it was not continuous in all of those theatres for the period.

Q. That is right. But it had a first-run; it was playing (1908) first-run in Richmond for three weeks consecutively? A. That is right. I think that is right, Mr. Caskey.

Q. Yes, I think you just so testified. Now, at the time that it commenced to play in the Byrd and State, you did not know whether it would play a second week, did you? A. Well, we thought it would because we look at our first-run pictures and study them; and while we do not always predict what the public wants, in this particular case we anticipated exactly what happened.

Q. But it is a fact that the subsequent-run exhibitors' in Richmond, including yourself, availability to play that picture was dependent upon how long you ran it first-run? A. Yes, that is right.

Q. And they could not book the picture or get a play date until it had been determined how long it would play first-run in Richmond? A. That is right.

Q. Wasn't that injurious to them? A. No, I do not think so.

Q. Was it beneficial to them? A. Well, we find in our own theatres,—which are the only ones I can speak about—that where a picture has a long first-run, where it is continuously in the same house, or when it is a carry-over, that when that picture reaches the sub-run theatres it does very much better business than the pictures that simply play a week. Now, that would be true of the Loew pictures in our (1909) competitor's theatre. Loew very seldom carries over a picture, but they might take a picture in this very large house and play it as long as three weeks. Well, when it finally gets to our sub-run theatres, that picture does better business in our sub-run theatres than the picture that Loew plays only one week; which probably is due to the fact that any picture which justifies a three weeks' run in a big house like Loew's is the kind of picture, where our neighborhood theatres are located, that people want to see. In other words, the long run is indicative of a good picture.

Q. Do you consider that you are injured or your business detrimentally affected if Loew's plays a picture like Week-end at the Waldorf for three weeks at their theatre in Richmond? A. No, we don't feel we are injured in our sub-run theatres.

Q. Do they exploit the pictures that they play? A. Yes, they do. They advertise them in the newspapers, radios, and exploit them thoroughly; which, of course, benefits the pictures when they reach us.

Q. Now, referring to advertising: What types of advertising do you do in your first-run theatres? A. We advertise in the newspapers, on the radio, in street cars; we exploit the pictures by every legitimate means we know, in cooperation with the manufacturers or retailers. We do everything we can to popularize the pictures, the stars and the directors of it.

Q. Do you know a phrase "cooperative advertising"? A. Yes, I do.

Q. Will you explain that to the Court? A. Cooperative advertising is where the owner of the picture allows us an extra amount of money which he contributes, the producer contributes, towards advertising the picture. It is an increase to our own regular advertising budget, and very often it is a sum that is equal at least to 50 per cent of our weekly budget; sometimes it is considerably more, depending on the importance of the picture.

Q. Mr. Thalhimer, when you play on percentage or under one of these formula arrangements, do you by contract give the distributor the right to check your picture? A. Yes.

Q. Do you object to checking? A. No; we like to be checked.

Q. Explain that to the Court. A. Well, in each theatre, of course, there is a cashier and a doorman and a manager——.

Judge Hand: What is the use of harping on this? If they have a percentage arrangement, of course they would have some way of checking. It would be natural.

Mr. Caskey: I should think so; but the allegation of the plaintiff's brief is that it is used for some sinister purpose, as I recall it.

(1911)

Judge Hand: Well, if you think there is anything in this kind of reiteration, go on.

Mr. Caskey: Well, let me just ask this question——

Judge Hand: It seems to me perfectly inevitable.

Q. Has the right of the Twentieth Century-Fox to check your pictures or to audit your books ever been used against you to your business disadvantage? A. No, sir.

Mr. Wright: Let him say what was done. That is a conclusion that can be drawn.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Q. Now, you operate some theatres in Petersburg? A. Yes.

Q. Where is Petersburg? A. Petersburg is about 20 miles south of Richmond.

Q. And what is its approximate population? A. About 30,000.

Q. Do you have all the first-run theatres in Petersburg? A. We do now, yes.

Q. And do you play the product of all the companies? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you play pictures in Petersburgh on a clearance after Richmond? A. Clearance is immediately following Richmond.

Q. And that applies to the pictures which you play first-run in Richmond and to the pictures which other exhibitors play first-run in Richmond? A. Yes, sir.
(1912)

Q. Do you want to play in Petersburg earlier than immediately after Richmond? A. No.

Q. Why not? A. Because people in Petersburg generally read the Richmond newspapers, and Petersburg gets the advantage of the first-run advertising and exploitation of Richmond; so to a very large degree it benefits Petersburg to play the way they are now playing, in my opinion.

Q. Do you find that the extended runs or the carry-over runs in Richmond adversely affect your patronage in Petersburg? A. I do not think so.

Q. They benefit it, do they not? A. I would rather be inclined to that thought, yes.

Q. Now, you have some theatres in the town of South Boston, Virginia, do you not? A. Yes.

Q. How big is South Boston? A. Oh, about 4000 people.

Q. How many of those theatres are presently operated? A. One. We had two theatres there. One is closed.

Q. Why don't you operate the other? A. We tried to, but it is very uneconomical.

I would like to correct one statement. South Boston's population is 5250.
(1913)

Q. It was your experience that you could not successfully operate two theatres in South Boston? A. Yes, it was.

Q. Mr. Thalhimer, in the operation of your theatres have you been adversely affected by the fact that the distributors from whom you license motion pictures also own theatres? A. No, sir, we have not been adversely affected in our company by that.

Q. Have you been adversely affected by the fact that one of your competitors in Richmond is a so-called affiliated theatre? A. No, we have not.

Q. To your knowledge, has that affiliated competitor attempted to buy away from you the product which you customarily use? A. No, I do not think they ever tried to buy our product; not that I know of.

Q. You have been playing Fox product for at least 18 years now? A. Yes.

Q. You are an old customer? A. I think so.

Q. Do you consider that it is appropriate that as each new block of pictures is produced and released by Fox, that they should first be offered to you? A. Yes, sir, I do.

Q. Why is that? A. Well, we have been their customer for a good many years continuously; we have endeavored over that period of time to promote their pictures, their stars, their directors, to the very best of our ability; we have paid them, generally speaking, what they have asked us for the pictures, subject to negotiations if the pictures had not turned out mutually satisfactory; and we could not go on and operate a first-run situation like Richmond if we did not know that we would have a continuous flow of product.

Q. In your business judgment have the defendants around this table ganged up to injure you?

Mr. Wright: Now, if the Court please, that is entirely improper.

Judge Hand: What is the question?

Mr. Caskey: That is the colloquial question.

(Question read.)

Judge Hand: Objection sustained. You ought not to take too seriously the characterization of—well, it was Judge Goddard's, really, and I took it over from him—of the claims of the Government. You have to defend yourself against them, but you cannot do it by asking questions like that.

Mr. Proskauer: I guess the policy seems to be to take your Honors seriously.

By Mr. Caskey:

Q. Mr. Thalhimer, in your judgment in the operation of your business in Virginia, would you be in any way benefitted by the divorcement of the theatres which Twentieth Century-Fox has an interest in from that company? A. No, we would not be benefitted.

(1915)

Mr. Caskey: You may inquire.

Cross-Examination by Mr. Raftery:

Q. Just one question to follow up what Mr. Caskey was asking you: Would you like to enter into a bidding contest with Loew's for Fox's first-run product in Richmond? A. No, sir, we would not.

Q. If the picture were sold on the auction block in that manner, could you, as an independent exhibitor, survive, or any independent exhibitor?

Mr. Wright: Now, if the Court please,——

Judge Hand: Objection sustained.

Mr. Raftery: That is his complaint in the Schine case.

Cross Examination by Mr. Davis:

Q. Mr. Witness, pictures never are sold on the auction block, are they? A. No, sir, they are not.

Judge Hand: I think defense counsel are getting more frivolous than I am.

Mr. Proskauer: I never heard the suggestion that your Honor was frivolous.

Judge Hand: I have heard it.

Mr. Proskauer: Well, I do not want to go down the peninsula, but I want to follow Mr. Raftery's lead, which is a good lead to follow, and I want to make his question that was incompetent, competent.

(1916)

By Mr. Proskauer:

Q. What would be the effect on business if an attempt was made to sell pictures by putting them out and having competitive bidding on each picture or on each two or three pictures?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, there is not anything to indicate that he would possibly know what the effect would be.

Judge Hand: I do not see that it is competent.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor, our difficulty is that it seems to us an absurdity, and yet we have indications that that is the Government's claim, that there is something sinister in the fact that we do not go around with every picture and say, "Who will give us the biggest percentage on this picture?"

Mr. Wright: To the defendants the whole theory of competition is absurd. There is no question about that. They simply do not believe in that. There is no use arguing over that.

Judge Hand: I will allow him to answer this question, if he can make any answer to it. It does not do much good to answer such a question practically yes or no, unless he has got some rationaliza-(1916a) tion of it.

Mr. Proskauer: That is why I asked him a question that did not call for a yes or no, but called for a description of it.

Do you understand the question, Mr. Thalhimer?

The Witness: I would like to hear it again.

(1917)

Q. It has been suggested here that there is some reason why pictures should be offered generally around in competition and competitive bidding asked for from exhibitors like yourself. Will you tell the Court what in your judgment that would result in the market and whether it would be good or bad for you as an independent? A. We have three first-run theatres in the City of Richmond which we have to operate 52 weeks. We charge a uniform price for the 52 weeks of the year. When we get a picture like State Fair, which is, we will say, a very extra fine picture, the people will have to come. The next week it might be a very mediocre picture but the public pay the same 55 cents for 52 weeks in the year. We do not have a theatre as big as 2200 seats. Our largest theatre is 1350 seats. The net result of the sale of each picture on its merits would be that Loew's theatre with 2200 seats could and would buy all of the big pictures like State Fair, that type of picture, Dolly Sisters, and leave us to any picture—to run our theatre with lesser pictures both of the Fox product—product that we deal with, and the lesser pictures, the lesser product of the Metro product which would mean that the bigger the theatre the higher price perhaps they could pay and the smaller theatres would have to operate, I think, with very much inferior product, and it would hurt the business materially.

(1918)

Q. Then you find that in order to serve the great runs of large but still smaller than the largest theatres, you have to be in a position where you can make permanent arrangements with the source of supply? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is really the essence of what you are saying? A. I think it is, yes.

Q. And if you were to reduce the situation to where every producer had to go out and say, "Who will pay me the biggest price for this particular picture?" it would work very much to the disadvantage of independent operators like you? A. Yes, I think so.

Mr. Caskey: Mr. Wright.

Cross Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. Mr. Thalhimer, were you served with a subpoena in this case? A. No, sir, I was not.

Q. You just came up here voluntarily by arrangement with the defense counsel? A. Yes, I was asked by Mr. Smith if I would come up, and I told him I would.

Q. Mr. Smith, who is that? A. Mr. A. W. Smith of Twentieth Century-Fox.

Q. Can you give us a general idea of how many theatres you have altogether and where they are, what your position is in the business generally? A. Our company and its subsidiary companies operate 29 theatres in the State of Virginia, ten of them in Richmond, five of them in Petersburg; the other towns are South Boston, Pulaski, Farmville and Arlington, Virginia, and Falls Church, Virginia.
(1919)

Q. You have, do you, all of these theatres in those towns you have named other than Richmond? A. Generally, yes.

Not a hundred per cent, say. In Arlington we have some competition.

Q. There is another theatre there? When did that open up? A. Well, it is built there. Shirlington theatre.

Q. The what? A. Shirlington theatre.

Q. Has it opened? A. Well, it is about to open. It may be open. I am not sure.

Q. I mean, as of now, at least there are no competing theatres in any of your towns outside of Richmond, is that right? A. Well, we consider Arlington, Mr. Wright, a suburb of Washington, which it is, and we are in competition with the Washington theatres, which are first-run theatres.

Q. I understand that. A. And we are in competition with Alexandria, which has a certain clearance over our Arlington theatres. In the other spots we have no competition except the nearest large city.

Q. Yes. In this Richmond set-up you say you operate three first-runs there in which you play the features, and then you have another first-run where you play the Westerns, (1920) is that right? A. Play the what?

Q. Did you say you had a first-run Western house? A. Yes, action house.

Q. Action is the name you employ? A. Yes.

Q. What are the other first-run theatres? You say Loew's and the others are pooled between Loew's and Fabian, are they not? A. They may be. I have no personal knowledge of the pool. I have heard of rumors that they were pooled.

Q. How many of those are there? A. There is Loew's and there is the Colonial and National, first-run theatres. And then they have a first-run action house, the Park theatre, which is similar in every way to our first-run action house, the Grand.

Mr. Davis: What do you mean by an action theatre?

The Witness: A theatre that generally plays Western pictures and melodramas and pictures with lots of action.

Q. So that the set-up you have there is that Loew's and Fabian then have three first-run houses and what you call an action house, and you have the same thing? A. Yes.

Q. And that major product is split there between your houses and the Loew and Fabian houses how? That is, what do they play? A. Loew's theatre has always played Loew's and United Artists, and the Wilmer and Vincent theatres have played Paramount and Warner Bros., and our theatres have played Fox and RKO, Columbia and Universal. (1921)

Q. And the have Loew, Paramount, Warner and United Artists then, is that right? A. Yes, our competition.

Q. They play the first-runs over there? A. Yes.

Q. They charge the same admission price as you do? A. Yes.

Q. In the first-run? A. Yes.

Q. Then there is one situation I think you mentioned there, where there was a subsequent run house that charge 40 cents. What theatre was that? A. Carillon.

Q. That is a Fabian or Wilmer and Vincent house? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That plays what, second-run of the pictures that play in the Loew and Fabian houses first-run? A. Plays sub-run.

Q. What is the difference? A. Well, there is very little difference, Mr. Wright, except that these two downtown action theatres, the Park or the Wilmer and Vincent and the Grand of our company, if they play any of the big pictures second-run, they can get them thirty days in back of the first-run, while all the other theatres in Richmond, which are sub-runs, must wait 45 days. That is the reason I said the Carillon was a sub-run rather than a second-run.

Q. But it actually plays on second-run on pictures which (1922) play downtown in the first-run in the Loew and Fabian houses? A. It plays sub-run on those pictures. In other words, those pictures that play the Loew and Wilmer and Vincent houses, may play the second run in their Park theatre before they reach the Carillon.

Q. That is, those action houses you referred to operate on a mixed policy? A. Yes.

Q. And they play Westerns first-run, then they may play a second-run on some of the pictures that come off the first-run houses? A. And if they want to play them, they play them before the Carillon or any sub-run theatre.

Q. This Carillon then plays what product, the same pictures that Loew and Fabian play first-run? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That theatre, is that in the same section of the town where any of your theatres operate? A. It is practically next door to our Byrd theatre, which is our largest first-run theatre.

Q. Your Byrd, that is in the same playing position on the product that you play first-run in your first-run houses? A. Our Byrd is a first-run theatre. It adjoins our Byrd theatre, which is a very important first-run theatre of ours.

Q. Your first-run theatres are divided between—that is, one of them is in the outlying section and two are downtown, is that it, or the other three? How are they distrib- (1923) uted geographically? A. Well, the only downtown first-run theatre we have is the State theatre, and then the Byrd theatre is uptown, and the Capitol theatre is also uptown; the Grand theatre, the action house, is also downtown.

Q. I was wondering whether there was any—then you don't have any subsequent run house there that is in direct opposition to that 40-cent theatre there, is that right? A. No, sir, we do not.

Q. And is there any immediate opposition to any of your subsequent-run houses?

Mr. Davis: What do you mean by immediate opposition?

Mr. Wright: Subsequent-run houses playing in opposition in the same neighborhood.

A. I would say the correct answer to that would be no. They aren't too close to each other. That Carillon theatre, for example, is within about twelve or fourteen city blocks from our West Hampton theatre, but they are in different residential areas and we don't consider it too close.

Q. Other than that subsequent house that you call the Carillon, that Fabian operates, there are then no other subsequent-run houses in the city but yours? A. Oh, no; the Fabians also operate the Lee theatre, which is a very fine (1923-A) sub-run theatre, and Ben Pitts operates two sub-run theatres.

Q. The Lee theatre is where with reference to your theatres? A. The Lee theatre is about 1200 west, and their Carillon theatre is about 2800 west, and our Capitol theatre is about 2400 west.

(1924)

Q. That Lee Theatre charges what price? A. 29 and 6; same as most of the other sub-runs charge, 35.

Q. 35-cent price. This other fellow you named, that has two, he is an independent? A. Yes.

Q. Where does he play? A. What does he play?

Q. Where? A. Well, his theatres are spotted on that map in the section of the city known as Church Hill, which is generally in the eastern part of the city. The theatres that you have been talking about are in the western part of the city.

Q. You have no first-run or subsequent-run in the eastern part of the city? You have no theatres in that section of the city? A. No, he is nearest to our South Richmond theatres, which would be the closest to Mr. Pitts' East End theatres.

Q. Does he follow your theatres, or how does he play with reference to yours? A. All of the pictures are made available 45 days after the completion of their first-run to all these sub-runs.

Q. That is, you have open booking? A. They could be played day and date in the East End and the Carillon and in South Richmond.

Q. After the 45-day period? A. That is right.

Q. Those sub-runs all charge the same admission price except the Carillon? A. No, sir, we have a sub-run in South (1925)
Richmond, the Ponton, which charges 25 and 5. Our Ponton and Venus theatres are almost 100 feet of each other, and we play the better pictures at the Venus and the slough pictures at the Ponton, so the Ponton charges are 30 cents against 35 cents for the Venus. There is another independent theatre in the eastern end of the city that I forgot to mention, the Star theatre. That also charges 30 cents.

Q. He plays what kind of pictures? A. He plays the same kind of pictures as all the sub-runs, what he wants of them.

Judge Bright: Is there any difference in clearance on the 30- and the 35-cent theatres?

The Witness: No, sir, none that I know of.

Q. The pictures are made available to all the independent houses 45 days after first-run? A. I think that is so.

Q. In that case, regardless of the differentials there that you mentioned? A. I think that is so, yes.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, my attention has been called to the fact that we have in the file some correspondence with this witness, and I would like to look at it before completing the cross-examination. We were not notified that he was to be a witness, and I would like to have a recess or defer cross-examination, (1926)

so I may look at that material.

Judge Bright: How long has that system of clearances existed there in Richmond, the one that you were speaking about, the 30 and the 45 days?

The Witness: To my personal knowledge, ever since I have been in the business, which is 19 years.

Judge Bright: Has there been any change at all in that time?

The Witness: No, sir.

Judge Bright: In any of the clearances?

The Witness: No, sir.

Judge Bright: They were established before you started theatre operation?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Judge Hand: Would you like to have a little recess to look over the file now?

Mr. Wright: I would appreciate that, yes, your Honor.

By Mr. Wright:

Q. This question whether you can compete successfully or not depends, does it not, on who your competitor is, to some extent, isn't that right? A. I think so, generally speaking.

Q. You do not worry about competition in buying films (1927) or anything else, when you are dealing with somebody else approximately your own size or smaller, or someone who has no assured film supply, isn't that right? A. I don't know that I fully understand your question.

Mr. Wright: Will you read it?

(Question read.)

Mr. Wright: "who has an assured film supply."

A. Speaking only for myself, we are not worried about buying film and never been worried about buying films.

Q. Never been worried about competition in Richmond? A. No, sir, we have never worried about our competition in Richmond.

Q. What is the name of the corporation you operate your neighborhood theatres there under? A. Neighborhood Theatres of Virginia, I believe. There are a number of subsidiary corporations that operate different theatres, Mr. Wright.

Q. Yes, but the one you use to operate the neighborhood houses in Richmond is Neighborhood Theatres, Inc., or do you have several subsidiaries that operate in Richmond? A. Several subsidiaries that operate in Richmond.

Q. Neighborhood Theatres, Inc. operates which of the theatres? A. Neighborhood Theatres, Inc. don't operate any theatres. Neighborhood Theatres of Virginia operates several of the first-run theatres.

(1928)

Q. What is the name of the corporation that operates your subsequent-run theatres in Richmond?—corporation or corporations. A. The State Theatre is operated by a company called Victor Theatre, Inc.; Venus Theatre is operated by the Venus Theatre, Inc., and there are a number of corporations.

Q. How about the Bellevue? A. The Bellevue is operated by a company, either the Bellevue or the Rappahannock Theatres, Inc.

Q. That is located on Rappahannock Street, is it? A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall a former employee of yours who organized what was called the Willow Corporation? A. Yes. I do.

Q. What was his name? A. His name was Elmer Bryant, or E. H. Bryant.

Q. He had also been employed by Loew's there at one time, too? A. Yes, he had.

Q. And do you remember back in 1940 the Willow Corporation started to erect or had actually erected another theatre on Rappahannock Street there near your Bellevue? A. Yes, I do.

Q. What was the name of that theatre? A. The Ginter.

Q. Then in 1940 they were in the process of erecting another theatre on Grove Street, near your West Hampton (1929) Theatre? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then there were plans under foot, were there not, by the Willow Corporation to put some other subsequent-run theatres in against the ones you operated there, isn't that right? A. There were very strong rumors to that effect.

Q. And you knew, did you not, that the Willow Corporation was being backed by Loew's and Wilmer and Vincent, isn't that right? A. Yes, I knew that eventually.

Q. As a matter of fact, you had consultation with representatives of Loew's Inc. and Wilmer and Vincent about that threatened invasion of your suburban territory there; do you recall that? A. Yes, I had several talks with their representative.

Q. And the upshot of those talks was that you paid them both a substantial sum of money, isn't that right?

Mr. Davis: What was that?

(Question read.)

A. The upshot of those talks was that we bought the assets of the Willow Corporation, if my memory serves me correctly, not for a substantial sum of money, as I recollect, but for the amount of money that they had invested in it, which was, from recollection, reasonably close to something under $14,000.

Q. What you did was that you paid Loew's $6,794.43 and $6,794.44 to Wilmer and Vincent, isn't that right? The (1930) figures sound right to you? A. That is approximately $14,000, yes.

Q. And after you made those payments then the theatre construction ceased and that theatre was half completed, isn't that right? A. That is right.

Q. And then you have not been troubled with any competition from Loew's or Wilmer and Vincent in Richmond since that time, have you? A. We got as much competition as we have always had. They have always been our competitors.

Q. At least they have not made any further efforts to move into your neighborhood area? A. That is correct, sir.

Mr. Wright: I think that it all.

(Witness excused.)

Mr. Raftery: Stephen McGrath, called on behalf of United Artists Corporation.

STEPHEN W. MCGRATH, called as a witness on behalf of defendant United Artists, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Raftery:

Q. Mr. McGrath, where do you reside? A. St. Albans, New York.

Q. How long have you been with United Artists Corporation? A. 13 years.

Q. Judge Hand made a suggestion, during Mr. Caskey's examination of one of the witnesses, that each of the defendants prepare a chart similar to a chart that Mr. Caskey introdueed in evidence, where we would take what has been classified as the guinea pig picture and show the town, the state, the theatre, whether it is affiliated or independent, the film rental received and the play dates in the 92 situations that the Government has been talking about. By the way, Mr. McGrath, in the 92 situations furnished United Artists by the Government, there were actually 73? A. That is correct.

Q. So wherever we talk about 92, we mean 73? A. Correct.

Q. Did you at my request prepare such a chart? A. I did.

Q. And you are in charge of these records? A. I am.

Q. And this chart was prepared under your direction?
A. Right.

Q. I show you the chart and ask you if that is it?

Judge Bright: Will you tell us what Mr. McGrath's connection with United Artists is?

The Witness: Assistant contract manager.

Judge Bright: To contract what?

Mr. Raftery: All exhibition contracts.

(1932)

A. I prepared this list.

Q. That is the chart you prepared? A. Correct.

Mr. Raftery: I offer that in evidence.

Mr. Wright: Mr. McGrath, the figures here, are any of them different than those you supplied in response to the interrogatories——

The Witness: No, sir.

Mr. Wright: (Continuing) ——that the Government served?

The Witness: The schedules were prepared from the same records.

Mr. Wright: We have no objection.

Judge Bright: What is the name of the guinea pig?

The Witness: Stage Door Canteen.

(Marked Defendant's Exhibit UA-1.)

Mr. Raftery: I have a copy for the Court: I call your Honors' attention particularly to the film rentals.

That is all, Mr. McGrath.

(Witness excused.)

PAUL N. LAZARUS, called as a witness on behalf of defendant United Artists, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Raftery:

Mr. Raftery: In connection with the last exhibit of the 73 situations, we played six independent and (1933) the balance were all played in affiliated theatres.

Q. Mr. Lazarus, where do you reside? A. I reside in Mahopac in New York.

Q. Outside of a few months in the year 1924, have you been with United Artists Corporation since it was formed in 1919? A. I have been with the company continuously except for a few months in 1924 and a part of 1925.

Q. You have held many positions with the company? A. I have, sir.

Q. And for the last dozen years you have been manager of the contract department? A. That is correct.

Q. And as such, every exhibition contract taken for the exhibition of United Artists pictures passes over your desk? A. Yes, or through my department.

Q. You also are the contact man between the sales department and the producers' representatives, are you not? A. That is correct.

Q. United Artists is engaged solely in the business of distributing motion pictures, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. It produces no pictures? A. Produces no pictures.

Q. Merely to refresh your recollection I will ask you to refer to this and tell his Honors the names of the producers with whom we presently hold contracts or are distributing pictures for. A. David O. Selznick, Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, Hunt Stromberg, William Cagney, Bing Crosby, (1934)
Edward Small, Sol Lesser, Lester Cowan, Jack Skirball, Benedict Bogeaus, Seymour Benenzal, Jules Levey, David Loew, Arnold Pressburger, Charles R. Rogers, Andrew Stone, Constance Bennett, Vanguard Films, Inc., Selznick International Pictures, Howard Hughes, Preston Sturges. Angelus Pictures, a corporation known as G.C.F., The J. Arthur Rank Pictures, California Pictures Corporation, Golden Pictures——

Q. That is Golden, isn't it, not Goldwyn? A. Golden, G-o-l-d-e-n. Golden Pictures, and Morey & Sutherland.

Q. Outside of Morey & Sutherland, all of those producers produce feature pictures? A. Feature pictures, yes, sir. (1935)

Q. During the period 1935-36 we distributed pictures for Samuel Goldwyn, did we not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. For Walt Disney? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And are they still producing pictures? A. They are still producing pictures but not releasing through United Artists.

Through whom are they releasing? A. I believe both of them are releasing through RKO.

Q. The pictures that we are handling at the present time, can you tell us whom some of the directors are that direct the pictures that we are handling? A. I am not quite certain whether all of these are in current release, but they are pictures that we have handled or that we are going to handle immediately.

Q. When you say "have handled" you mean during the past eighteen months and during the next eighteen months? A. That is correct.

Q. Can you tell us the names of the stars that have appeared in these current and immediately future pictures? (1936)

A. Ingrid Bergman, Gregory Peck, Joseph Cotten, Jennifer Jones, Shirley Temple, Jane Russell, James Cagney, Linda Darnell, Sylvia Sidney, Barbara Britton, Marie McDonald, Greg McClure, Dennis O'Keefe, Burgess Meredith, Claudette Colbert, Fred Allen, Don Ameche, Charles Laughton, Paulette Goddard, Randolph Scott, George Raft, Victor McLaglen, Betty Field, Zachary Scott, J. Carrol Naish, Marx Bros., George Sanders, Jane Powell, Constance Moore, Ralph Bellamy, Constance Bennett, Gracie Fields, Laurence Olivier, Vivien Leigh, Claude Rains, Rex Harrison, Constance Cummings, Harold Lloyd, Hurd Hatfield, Francis Lederer, Akim Tamiroff, Signe Hasso, Gene Lockhart, Ruth Hussey, Rhonda Fleming.

Q. To complete the record, will you furnish us with the titles of the pictures that we are handling and will handle in the next immediate few months?

A. Picture called Spellbound.

Q. That is opening today? A. Opens today. Story of G. I. Joe. Duel in the Sun. Whistle Stop. Diary of a Chambermaid. Young Widow. Blood on the Sun. Angel on My Shoulder. The Southerner. Getting Gertie's Garter. Abilene Town. Scandal in Paris. The Sin of Harold Diddlebock. Tom Breneman's Breakfast in Hollywood. A Night in Casablanca. Blithe Spirit. Henry V. Caesar & Cleopatra. The Outlaw. Captain (1937)
Kidd, Paris-Underground. There Goes Lana Henry. Bedside Manner. Guest Wife.

Q. All these pictures are known in the trade as independent productions? A. Yes, sir.

Judge Bright: What period did that cover, those lists you have just read off?

Mr. Raftery: It will cover about twelve months back and about twelve months forward.

The Witness: That is correct, pictures in release and to be released very shortly.

Q. We handle between 20 and 26 pictures a year, isn't that about right? A. When we have a good year, yes.

Q. And we have handled as low as four? A. That is correct.

Q. In this group you have mentioned, I notice a number of British pictures? A. Yes, sir.

Q. As a matter of fact, United Artists have handled most of the important British pictures with two exceptions? A. We have handled British pictures for a considerable number of years and there was a time when—he is today Sir—Alexander Korda was one of the owners of United Artists Corporation.

Q. On that list that Mr. Frohlich had yesterday, he had a picture called "In Which We Serve"? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Mr. Montague was unable to tell Mr. Wright the gross, domestic, of that picture? A. I believe the domestic and Canadian gross was about $1,600,000; I believe that is close to it.
(1938)

Q. We have handled a number of other important British pictures and are handling them now? A. That is correct.

Q. I believe Blithe Spirit? A. Blithe Spirit is an English picture. Henry V. is English made. Caesar & Cleopatra are English made.

Q. Those are handled for the—— A. J. Arthur Rank Company.

Q. The J. Arthur Rank Company that you mentioned on your last part of your list of producers? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Mr. Lazarus, will you tell the Court the manner and method of handling the solicitation of an exhibition license application, and what happens to it once the salesman is fortunate enough to get an exhibitor's signature on one? A. When a salesman negotiates a contract or an application, rather, for the public exhibition of one of our pictures, that contract comes through to the home office. If it bears the approval of the local branch manager or the division manager—district manager—it then comes to New York and we go over that contract in the home office. If the contract is a very important deal I will discuss it with one of the divisional sales managers, and if there is an agreement by the home office sales staff that the contract is a good acceptable contract, we then submit it to the producer's representative in New York. Under our method of distribution, United Artists merely sells—negotiates the deals, but the contracts are finally subject to approval by the representative of the individual producer. He either approves the contract as we have submitted it, or he rejects the contract. If we feel that his rejection is open to question, we will discuss the contract with him, but in the last analysis his decision is final. If the contract is rejected, it is returned to the branch and there is no deal.

Q. Mr. Lazarus, are you familiar with the provisions in the various distribution agreements that we have about the right of each producer to approve or reject his own contract? A. That is in our exhibition contract.

Q. But I say you are also familiar with the provisions in the distribution contract? A. In the distribution contract, yes, sir.

Mr. Raftery: With Mr. Wright's indulgence, I intend to put this contract in through the next witness, if I may be permitted to show it to the witness, so we can read into the record just the important parts, and perhaps not to have to put the whole thing in.

Q. I have here, Mr. Lazarus, a contract dated April 10, 1944, with Bing Crosby Productions, Inc., for the marketing of a picture called The Great John L, and I call your attention to the first two paragraphs under "United's obligations," and I will ask you to read those two paragraphs. They are very short. A. Under "United's Obligations," "United agrees to devote its best efforts to the proper marketing and disposition of the motion pictures delivered hereunder in all the territories licensed hereunder wherein it customarily markets motion pictures, and to make such marketing as complete and efficient as practicable, so that the gross returns from the marketing of the product hereunder shall be as large as possible and at the same time consistent with the sound business policy of United."

The second paragraph: "United will use its best efforts to procure prices, license fees and rentals in a fair and open market reasonably satisfactory to the producer."

Q. I call your attention to the provision on page 12 regarding exhibition contracts, and I ask you to read it into the record. A. "Exhibition Contracts: The exhibition contracts for each of such motion pictures delivered herennder shall be made separate and apart from the exhibition contract of any other motion picture marketed by United, with the exception that in territories other than the United States where it is customary to include more than one motion picture on a contract, the producer authorizes United to market its product in accordance with that custom. In no event, however, shall any motion picture of the producer be used to enforce the licensing, leasing or other disposition of any other motion picture marketed by United, and in such territory where it is the custom to include on one contract more than one motion picture United shall set out the respective license fees for each motion picture after the name of such motion picture.

"United agrees upon the written direction of producer that United shall market wherever permissible the motion pictures designated by the producer or its agent as a unit, and in such case such unit shall be licensed separate and apart from any other motion picture marketed by United, with the exception that in those countries where it is the custom to market all of the motion pictures on one contract, United shall adhere to the prevailing custom."

Q. In the United States, on a few occasions, master agreements have been made with circuits both affiliated and unaffiliated, where in the original deal more than one picture has been included in the master contract? A. I believe, though, that those were all of the same producer. In other words, a deal, if my recollection is correct, I think that a deal (1942)
—a master agreement that covered two or three or four pictures, those would be the pictures of the same producer, as, for example, Edward Small, where we distribute four or five pictures made by Mr. Small in one season. I am not positive, I would have to search the record, but I don't think—I think we have an individual master agreement for each producer.

Q. Let us assume you do not, would you have individual deal sheets? A. We would have to have individual deal sheets and individual approval from any two producers who might have been on the same agreement.

Q. And you would submit to the producer's representative the deal sheets? A. For his—

Q. Which had his picture on? A. His picture only.

Q. For his approval or rejection? A. That is correct.

(1943)

Q. Now I call your attention to the next provision—that is the "Producer's Right of Approval of Exhibition Contracts," and I ask you to read the provision. A. "The Producer shall have the right to designate a representative for the territories hereinafter specified. The Producer shall bear all the expenses of such representative. Such representative must have an office in the central location of such territory, and if so United shall submit to such representative for his approval or rejection all proposed written contracts with exhibitors for that territory. The territories and their central location are as follows:

Territory	Central Location
United States and Canada	New York
British Isles	London
Australasia	Sydney

"Producer agrees that submission shall not be necessary if made impractical by conditions beyond the control of United, such as conditions arising out of war.

"If the Producer has designated such a representative for any such territory United shall submit for his approval or rejection each proposed written contract for the distributing, exhibiting or marketing of such Producer's motion pictures or any of them in the territory in which such representative is acting. No such contract shall be accepted by United if within three (3) succeeding business days following the date on which said proposed written contract has been received by the Producer or its representative the Producer or its representative shall return such proposed contract to United with its rejection noted thereon or appended thereto.

"Should the Producer or its representative reject any such proposed contract the Producer or its representative shall have fourteen (14) days from the date of rejection in which to obtain a more favorable contract. Should the Producer or its representative fail so to do the original contract shall ipso facto be deemed approved unless the Producer or its representative shall have designated its original rejection as final. No proposed contract on which the rejection has been designated as final shall be entered into by United.

"Should the Producer or its representative at any time agree in advance with United upon the rental terms or license fees for the distribution, exhibition or marketing of any motion picture in any specified theatre or situaton,

(1945)

United shall not be obligated to submit the contract containing the terms so agreed upon to the Producer or its representative for approval.

"The Producer agrees that United need not in any event submit contracts with exhibitors in licensed agency territories."

Q. Now, has this practice of producer representation been in the company since 1919? A. There has never been any deviation from that since the day the company was organized.

Q. Outside of the one picture that the company handled for William S. Hart, hasn't every picture had a producer's representative approve or reject every contract? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was in 1925? A. Hart?

Q. Yes. A. Yes.

Q. Now, at the time of the commencement of the company, you were distributing the releases of Miss Pickford, Mr. Chapman, Mr. Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith? A. That is correct.

Q. And ever since the commencement of the company, the company has tried to handle quality feature pictures as distinguished from program or second feature type pictures? A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Lazarus, how many exchanges do you maintain in the United States? A. In the United States we have 26 (1946) exchanges. Six in Canada.

Q. Well, 26 in the United States? A. Yes.

Q. I think the testimony as to the other companies has been that they have 31 or 32. A. Well, there are several situations where other companies maintain exchanges in which we do not opearate an exchange. For example, Portland, Oregon; we serve out of our San Francisco and Seattle offices. We have no exchange in Portland, Oregon. We have no exchange in Oklahoma City. We have no exchange in Memphis.

Q. Albany? A. Albany and New York has no branch office. That is four. That is a total of 30. Some of the other distributors may have exchanges in places like Butte. There was a time when some of the distributors maintained an office in San Antonio; some maintained offices in Jacksonville. We do not.

Q. And each year you have handled somewhere in the neighborhood of 20 to 26 pictures? A. In recent years that has been so, yes.

Q. Do you as a general rule have a separate contract for each picture for each exhibition and each theatre? A. That is correct.

Q. Unless you make a contract like the 63 situation contract that is referred to in the Sudekam case? A. Yes, there are what are called blanket contracts which will cover all of the situations operated by an operator who has more than one theatre, or the other exception would be——

Q. But for only one picture? A. For only one picture, except, for example, at the present time, we are distributing and currently marketing two pictures for one producer. I am referring to It's In The Bag and Guest Wife. There the same producer had the pictures; so if we can sell both pictures it is O.K. with him to have us put them both on one contract; but that is exclusively within one producer organization.

Q. During the year on an average how many exhibition contracts would cross your desk? A. Well, we average anywhere from ten to twelve thousand contracts on a picture; and my mental arithmetic isn't very good, but multiply that by about 20, and that would be of a current season's release. Now, we do not stop selling pictures when the picture is a year old; so I would say that our contract department and my desk clears all of that volume of business.

Q. Three to four hundred thousand contracts? A. Three to four hundred thousand contracts.

Q. Each year? A. Each year.

Q. And that is domestic only? A. United States and Canada only.

(1948)

Q. You classify Canada as domestic? A. Domestic.

Mr. Raftery: Mr. Wright, will you make the same stipulation that if this witness were asked the same questions that, I believe, the first witness on the trial was asked as to conspiracy, he would give the same answers?

Mr. Wright: It is so stipulated.
Mr. Raftery: Thank you.

Q. Mr. Lazarus, within this past week has United Artists had five pictures showing first-run on Broadway? A. Yes, I believe we have.

Q. Guest Wife? A. Guest Wife; GI Joe is playing; Blythe Spirit is playing——

Q. Spellbound? A. Spellbound opens today. That is four.

Q. And at the Gotham. What is at the Gotham? A. Pardon me?

Q. What is at the Gotham? Paris Underground? A. Is Paris Underground still playing there? I knew it was in the house. I didn't know whether or not it had terminated.

Mr. Raftery: Are there any question?

Cross Examination by Mr. Proskauer:

Q. You had pictures showing first-run at five independent New York theatres in the last week? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Those are large Broadway theatres? A. Yes, they (1949) are representative houses, representative first-run houses.

Q. And you sell first-runs to affiliated theatres also? A. Oh yes.

Cross Examination by Mr. Seymour:

Q. Do you license United Artists pictures to some of the theatre-operating companies in which Paramount has an interest? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you familiar with where the negotiations for those licenses are conducted? A. Well, I do not sit in on those negotiations myself but I know where the contracts come from to me. For example, any contracts for the Minnesota Amusement Company come in from Minneapolis. Contracts for the Kincey Circuit will come in from the Charlotte office, and so forth.

Q. Do you know whether it is generally the fact that the negotiations for the licensing of United Artists pictures in such of the theatres of the various operating companies as do license United Artists pictures are conducted with those companies at their home offices?

The Witness: I did not quite get your question.

Mr. Seymour: Will you read that, Mr. Stenographer.

Q. (Read.) A. With those companies at their home offices? Yes, that is correct.

Mr. Raftery: Are there any other questions?

(1950)

Mr. Raftery: All right, Mr. Wright.

Cross Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. Mr. Lazarus, you have in United Artists a general sales manager, do you not, or somebody in charge of sales? A. Yes, we have a general sales manager, Carl Leserman.

Q. And I suppose he is the man, is he not, who is in charge of the actual negotiation of contracts? A. Well, he does not actually negotiate many contracts. We have division managers, district managers, and a great—oh, the fewest—I would say that the fewest deals that have come into the home office are brought to Mr. Leserman's attention.

Q. Well, I just wanted to get what your sales setup was. You have your branch manager and your salesman in each of the branches? A. Yes.

Q. And then you have district managers over there too? A. District managers and division managers.

Q. And the district managers are in the field? A. Yes, that is correct.

Q. And each one has a group of exchanges under him? A. That is correct.

Q. And then you have division managers too? A. Yes.

Q. And those are here in New York? A. They are located here in New York.

Q. How many do you have? How do you have it divided up? A. We have three division managers here in New York.
(1951)

Q. How do you divide your divisions? A. One of the division managers has supervision over the four southern offices. That is Charlotte, Atlanta, New Orleans and Dallas.

Q. Those are the four southern district offices? A. That is the southern district; and he also supervises our selling in Canada.

The eastern division manager has, I would say, roughly the branches located east of the Mississippi. That is not the exact setup, but that is roughly it.

Then we have another one who operates or supervises the branches in Chicago and the west.

Q. And on top of those is Mr. Leserman, the general sales manager? A. Yes.

Q. And he reports to whom? A. Well, Mr. Leserman's contact would be through me with the producer's representative.

Q. No, above him in the hierarchy in the company. A. Well, the hierarchy in the company would represent Mr. Sears, Mr. Raftery and the board of directors.

Q. That is, Mr. Sears is the vice-president in charge of sales? A. Yes, vice-president in charge of distribution.

Q. And Mr. Raftery is president? A. Mr. Raftery is president of the company.

Q. Now, in selling the independent exhibitors, that, I (1952)
suppose, is principally done by the salesmen and the branch managers in the branches as they solicit the business? A. Well, it all depends on the importance of the account, regardless of whether we would call it an independent exhibitor or what I have heard called an affiliated account, if the account is a sufficiently important account from the standpoint of revenue, then the district manager or the branch manager would handle it. The accounts of lesser monetary importance are handled by the salesmen.

Q. And I suppose the most important are the division managers? A. Well, they on occasion will go out in the field and negotiate with the district managers.

Q. Now, I think you gave us some figures on gross business on the picture The Invaders. Don't you have any breakdown in the United States? A. Pardon me, I didn't give you any figures on The Invaders.

Q. Oh, what was the picture? A. In Which We Serve. We did not release The Invaders. I know nothing about that.

Q. Well, you gave us a United States and Canadian figure. Don't you have your figures broken down between United States and Canada?

Mr. Raftery: To save time, may I interrupt? We did not distribute that picture in Canada, In Which (1953)

We Serve. I am sorry that he said that. That is the domestic figure.

Q. In any event, you also released, did you not, a number of others of those pictures on the list that Mr. Frohlich put in evidence the other day? A. Some of those picture we released, yes.

Q. And can you give us the domestic grosses on those pictures? A. No, sir, I can't from memory. They are available but I have no——

Q. I say, could you get that for us? A. They could be obtained, certainly.

Mr. Raftery: If you will give me the list I will phone up and get the figures.

Mr. Wright: Now, I shall ask to have this marked for identification.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 382 for identification.)

Q. I will show you this photostat of a letter from United Artists Corporation to Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation, dated September 30, 1936, and ask you if you recognize that as one of these so-called master agreements that were referred to on your direct examination? A. Yes, it appears to be a master agreement.

Q. And that covers all of your product for the 1936-37 season of all producers? A. Yes, with each producer's pictures stipulated by the producer named.

(1954)

Q. I will call your attention to these provisions on page 3 as follows:

"The following is our understanding with reference to the eight pictures designated at 35 per cent"——

Mr. Proskauer: Mr. Wright, I would like to hear this, please.

Q. (Continuing) "The following is our understanding with reference to the eight pictures designated at 35 per cent:

"We are to receive 35 per cent if any or all reach the average gross attained by the two pictures from Fox, two from RKO, two from Paramount and two from Warner Bros. nationally designated to play at 35 per cent during the season of 1936-37. On those pictures designated at 35 per cent we are to receive 50 per cent of the excess receipts over and above the average described above. On such of these 35 per cent pictures that do less than the above described average, the percentage is to be reduced down to the minimum of 30 per cent of the gross—in steps of one per cent of the film rental for each three per cent less than said average gross, computed in the same manner as the 30 per cent group outlined below."

Now, that refers to grosses throughout the circuit? (1955)

A. On those so-called yardstick pictures——

Q. Yes. A. Grosses for the same situations that we are selling for; I presume that is it.

Q. Well, your terms here just specify percentages and the agreement does not refer to any particular runs or theatres. I think the only agreement as to that is on page 4 here, is it not, with reference—— A. Well, as I stated before, Mr. Wright——

Mr. Wright: Let me finish.

The Witness: Pardon me.

Mr. Proskauer: Mr. Wright, is the paper you are reading from that letter that I handed Mr. Neisley yesterday or the day before? I can't hear you and I am trying to just identify what you are reading from.

Mr. Wright: The letter was obtained from Warner Bros. I do not know whether you handed it or someone else.

Q. I call your attention to this provision on page 4 with reference to playing time:

"It is understood that the eight pictures designated at the top terms are to have preferred playing time. Playing time for all other pictures is to be agreed upon between Mr. Bernhard and Mr. Schaefer in the event the local representatives of United Artists Corporation and Warner Bros. cannot agree."

(1956)

Apparently this agreement simply left the actual determination of playing time with respect to amount of theatres to local representatives. A. Not the amount of theatres, Mr. Wright. It would leave the matter of whether or not a picture shall have preferred playing time or in situations where they have a flexible policy, how many days the picture shall play. If the local branch office and the local Warner bookers did not agree, then it could be referred to Mr. Schaefer and Mr. Bernhard.

Q. Well, I was trying to determine from the agreement the extent of the coverage there. I wonder if you could read it and tell me what theatres were supposed to be covered by the agreement? A. As I testified a little while ago, in the case of a master agreement of this sort, this is supplemented by so-called deal sheets broken down for each producer in which all of the theatres are listed, and the minimum playing time is included. So that this is merely a setting forth of the terms without the actual number of days to be played.

Q. I understand that merely sets forth the general terms, and it is to be supplemented by further specific agreements; but I wondered if you could tell me what the extent of the coverage in that general agreement before you is. That is, that is for the whole Warner Circuit. A. That is for the Warner Circuit.

Q. And these percentages that are referred to in there are the percentages realized throughout the circuit, is that right? A. I believe it is a circuitwise percentage, although I am not sufficiently familiar with this particular deal at this late date to know whether this was situation per district or whether it was circuitwise. I would have to search a little further on that, Mr. Wright.

Mr. Wright: I don't think I will be able to finish with this witness before lunch.

Judge Hand: All right. We will take a recess until 2:15.

(Recess to 2:15 p.m.)

AFTERNOON SESSION

PAUL N. LAZARUS resumed the stand.

Cross-Examination Continued by Mr. Wright:

Q. Now, Mr. Lazarus, this Exhibit 382 for identification, this master deal with the Warner Circuit I was examining you about before the recess, there is nothing unusual about that deal in so far as your dealings with the affiliated circuits is concerned, is there? A. I don't know what you mean by that, Mr. Wright.

Q. Well, you make similar master deals——

Mr. Davis: If the Court please, this confidential conversation does not get out into the room at all, and (1958)

I would be very happy if Mr. Wright would speak up.

Judge Hand: Yes. I think you will have to stand over there and make more noise, Mr. Wright. It is very difficult to hear you.

Mr. Raftery: Let us hear the question, please.

Q. (Read.) A. Well, this deal with the Warner Bros. Circuit in 1936 is not necessarily like any later deals that we have made with Warner's or any of the other circuits.

Q. I understand you have different terms, but even since then you have from time to time made master deals which cover the entire circuit—— A. We might have made master deals——

Mr. Davis: One at a time, please.

A. (Continuing) —that cover the entire circuit for one picture, for two pictures; but this is an old letter, and I, without going over it and comparing it with later deals, I would not want to make a statement of that sort.

Q. Let us take this Exhibit 272 that is in evidence. Those, I believe, are some deal sheets and relate to some 1943-44 pictures, are they not, that you licensed to theatres in Los Angeles, or Fox—— A. Well, you have got one—you have got two pages here of deal sheets that cover Stage Door Canteen, one picture.

(1959)

Q. In Los Angeles first-run, is that right? A. In Los Angeles.

Q. Now, there is also a reference to a letter agreement there with a 1943 date, do you see that? A. Yes.

Q. It refers to it as attached, but it is not attached? A. Yes, but that substantiates what I said before, Mr. Wright, that these letters of agreement are substantiated by individual deal sheets for individual pictures which must be approved by the individual producer. That is what this is.

Q. I understand that; but I say that letter agreement that is referred to there, that actually is a letter agreement outlining general provisions which cover all of the theatres in the Fox Circuit, isn't it?

Mr. Caskey: No.

Mr. Raftery: Just a minute. You did not get that from us, did you?

Mr. Wright: That came from you, that is right.

Mr. Raftery: From our files?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Raftery: Or from Fox?

Mr. Wright: From you.

Mr. Raftery: And nothing else came but that?

Mr. Wright: That came without the letter agreement attached. What we asked for was your first-run deal with Fox in Los Angeles, and we got the deal sheets but we did not get the master agreement.

(1960)

Mr. Raftery: I told you a few minutes ago that I was sending someone to phone to try to find the letter.

Q. Well, in dealing generally with the theatres that are part of the Fox Circuit in the last few years, you have been accustomed to work out a so-called master agreement with Fox West Coast Agency which covers the general terms that are applicable to the Fox theatres in Los Angeles, those in San Francisco and those in Denver, and even those in Kansas City and Wisconsin, isn't that right?

Mr. Caskey: Objected to as calling for the contents of some document that is not here.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

A. This particular set of sheets, Mr. Wright, for the Los Angeles exchange covers first-run and move-overs for Stage Door Canteen. I do not see any other Los Angeles runs on that on Stage Door Canteen.

(1961)

Q. I understand that.

Mr. Wright: Will you read the question again?

(Question read.)

A. What I get, Mr. Wright, are the individual deal sheets for the different parts of these different territories that you have mentioned. If there is a master agreement in existence covering that, reference would be made on the deal sheets to that, and we would check it when the deal sheets are received, but I don't want to say offhand there is a letter of agreement covering all these things.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 383 for identification).

Q. Here is an agreement dated September 1, 1941, between United Artists and Fox-West Coast Agency Corporation, marked Plaintiff's Exhibit 383 for identification, and I will ask you to look at that and tell me if you do not recognize that as the kind of over-all agreement that you have been making with the Fox-West Coast Agency Corporation on behalf of the various Fox theatre operating affiliates. A. This is an agreement made for the theatres, according to this paper in the States of California and Arizona, which deal sheets are attached hereto and made a part hereof, so that the deal sheets must have been attached to this for this particular territory, and unless I see those—well, there are several pictures mentioned in here that are covered by those (1962) deal sheets, and those deal sheets would list the theatres and so forth.

Q. This agreement also covers all the producers, does it not? A. The producers are given—I don't know whether that covers all the producers or not. There are several producers who are listed separately.

Q. Then this reference on page 6——

Mr. Caskey: Are you going to offer it, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: I want to examine him on it first. We will offer it, if you want it.

Mr. Caskey: Wouldn't it be better if you offered it and let us see it first?

Mr. Wright: You may see it, if you like.

Judge Hand: Go ahead with your examination. If he wants to see it, of course——

Mr. Caskey: I haven't seen it.

(Mr. Wright hands a paper to Mr. Caskey.)

Q. Perhaps I misunderstood the agreement. I notice that on page 6a it refers to test situations in Kansas City, Milwaukee, St. Louis, St. Lake City and Denver, and then it has a list of control figures opposite individual towns in each of those exchange areas. Now, the rental terms set forth in the agreement are dependent, are they not, on what the picture does in these so-called test situations? A. I (1963) would like to see that, Mr. Wright, before I answer the question, because I am not sure.

As I understand it, these control figures represent the gross that the picture is supposed to achieve at the box office for the playing time that is listed under the column "per tenth." And if my memory serves me correctly, there would be what was referred to earlier as a sliding scale, in the event that the picture exceeded or did not equal these control figures, so that the ultimate terms would be based on the box office performance of the picture up to a certain figure and down to a certain minimum.

Q. The rental that Fox paid, let us say, in the Los Angeles area, then, would be determined in part by the performance of the picture in the test areas listed there, isn't that right? A. Yes. Whether that would cover the area or the first situation, I don't recall. I imagine it would be the area.

Q. That was characteristic of your dealings with the Fox circuit in the last few years? A. I don't know whether we have that kind of deal at the present time or not or whether we have had it since. This was dated September 1941.

Q. You do not yourself participate in the negotiations?
A. No, sir.
(1964)

Mr. Davis: If you are through with them, may we see them, Mr. Wright? You are not using this now?

Mr. Wright: I am offering it in evidence now.

Mr. Davis: If you haven't offered them, I will see them later.

Mr. Wright: I offer in evidence the agreement marked for identification as 383 and the one that Judge Proskauer has——

Mr. Proskauer: Take it and give it back to me.

Mr. Wright: (Continuing)—382 for identification.

(Government's Exhibits 382 and 383 for identification received in evidence.)

Judge Bright: Are those the so-called master agreements, both of them?

Mr. Wright: Yes, sir.

Judge Bright: With which companies?

Mr. Wright: 382, I believe, is a master agreement with Warner—that is, United Artists pictures in the Warner circuit, and 383 is a master agreement with Fox-West Coast Agency Corporation.

Mr. Proskauer: Mr. Wright, when you are through with 382 will you let me take a glance at it?

Mr. Davis: I would like to see both of them.

Mr. Wright: I think that is all we have with this witness.
(1965)

By Judge Bright:

Q. Mr. Lazarus, was there any master agreement with any other of the affiliated theatre group besides Warner and the Fox-West Coast? A. I couldn't answer that without looking up our records. It covers a long period of time, and I have no direct recollection.

Q. Have you any master agreements with any independents? A. At the present time we have no master agreement with any independent that I know of, although we sell on a similar basis to the independents, that is to say, the so-called sliding scale, where a picture is paid for on the basis of what it produces at the box office.

Q. Have you had any master agreements in the past with so-called independents? A. Well, if you consider a franchise as a master agreement, there have in the past been master agreements with a company down——

Q. I am talking about agreements like these last two exhibits. A. Yes. In Florida we had a master agreement with the Wometco Company operating in Miami and in Miami Beach.

Q. When was that? A. I think that has expired. That expired two or three years ago. It was for a period of two or three years, I believe. We had a franchise with the United Artists Theatre in San Francisco, which theatre we don't own, but that was the name of the theatre, United Artists Theatre.

We had a franchise out there which has expired, and we had a franchise, I believe, in Portland, Oregon, with J. J. Parker. That has also expired. And that was for a number of pictures, for a season's product, or longer, and a similar agreement.

Q. Have you any of the licenses that were given to any independent theatres in the territory where Fox-West Coast operated during the period of this master agreement that has been offered in evidence? A. Well, I haven't any of those here, but, for example, I referred to Portland, Oregon. That is a territory in which Fox-West Coast or Fox Evergreen operates. That is the territory up in Portland and Seattle. We had a franchise there with J. J. Parker, which was a master agreement. And Fox does not operate in Florida, of course. San Francisco, we had a first-run agreement with the United Artists Theatre in San Francisco. Fox operates in that territory.

By Mr. Raftery:

Q. That was with Herman Cohen? A. Herman Cohen was the man with whom the license—the franchise was entered into.

By Judge Bright:

Q. Have you any license agreements here that were in effect at the same time as this Fox-West Coast master agreement, or with reference to the same picture? A. I have (1967) brought nothing with me. I don't know whether they are in evidence or not.

Mr. Raftery: The Government has put a whole group of them in evidence. I don't know the exhibit numbers and I haven't seen them. The Stage Door Canteen contracts are all in.

Judge Bright: What I am interested in finding out is whether or not rentals are similar to independents as they are under this master agreement with Fox-West Coast with reference to the same picture.

Mr. Wright: I think we can clear that up by further examination. What we have put in evidence, if the Court please, were the deals, were samples at least, for the 1936-37 and the 1943-44 seasons that this company had made with each of the affiliates. What we offered as to the independents was simply the standard form. I take it, or at least I understood from the witness's examination on direct that——

By Mr. Wright:

Q. In making your ordinary deal with an independent or small theatre operator, you simply write it up on your standard form of agreement and you sell him the picture for a particular run in a particular theatre at a particular admission price on either percentage terms or a guarantee against percentage or flat rental, isn't that right? A. I don't (1968) recall giving that testimony.

Q. That is the fact, isn't it? A. Well, no, I don't remember that that question was asked of me. There have been cases——

Q. Is or is it not the fact? A. If you are saying generally, that is the fact generally, but there are exceptions as there were in the case of Portland, Oregon.

Q. I assumed that Judge Bright's question was addressed to the general practice.

Mr. Wright: Is that what you wanted?

Judge Bright: I wanted to see whether or not you gave the same terms to independents for this picture that you gave to the Fox-West Coast under this master agreement which has been offered in evidence here.

Q. Can you answer that question? A. I could not answer that question without seeing the documents.

Q. That is, the terms would vary from situation to situation—— A. The terms would vary——

Q. (Continuing) —depending upon the kind of deal that was made? A. The terms would vary, not only pictures, but in different situations. I could not answer the question without seeing the papers.

Q. I assume in no case would the deal made with the independent be conditioned as this one is upon the performance of the pictures in certain Fox theatres, isn't that right?

A. If it was with an independent, it would have nothing to do with performance in the Fox theatres.

(1969)

Q. It would be generally based on the performance of the picture in his particular theatre, is that right? A. That is correct.

Judge Bright: I did not have any idea that his payment of rental on an independent theatre would be based on performance in any other theatre.

Mr. Wright: I was simply pointing out what I regard as one of the unique features of this particular agreement.

You say you wish to know whether there were any similar rental terms given to an independent. I assume from the witness's answer that clearly as to that particular term that was not in any independent's contract.

Judge Bright: You mean the compensation here was based upon the performance in some key theatre in that exchange?

Mr. Wright: Well, a series of key theatres in several exchange areas. The performance there determined the classification of the picture, and that, in turn, determined how much film rental was to be paid.

Judge Bright: What I had in mind was whether or not if they say they are to pay 35 per cent of that return—that is, Fox West Coast is to pay 35 per cent of that return for the use of that picture, whether or not an independent showing the same picture on the same run was charged 35 per cent or more, or less.

(1970)

Q. Can you answer that?

Mr. Caskey: San Francisco first-run and Los Angeles first-run, Mr. Lazarus.

The Witness: I would not attempt to answer that question from memory, because I can't.

Mr. Caskey: Or Portland first-run or Los Angeles first-run.

The Witness: I could not do that without reference to my records.

By Mr. Wright:

Q. In any event, I take it, Mr. Lazarus, there is no attempt even at uniformity of treatment in percentage or rental terms as between affiliated theatres and independent theatres, isn't that right? A. We don't recognize any difference. I try to get as much revenue for each of our pictures as we can, Mr. Wright, regardless of who buys it.

Q. That is right. You get the best terms that you can from any independent that you do business with, or anybody else, and you may come out with results which vary widely from situation to situation, isn't that right? A. Yes. With us, exhibitors are exhibitors, regardless of whether they are independent or affiliated.

Q. And you do not have any standard formula on which (1971) you would offer to sell the independents pictures in any particular situation, isn't that right? A. We have no fixed formula to begin with. When we know something about a picture, Mr. Wright, we try from all theatres to get the maximum that we can.

Q. Yes. You get just as much out of every one that you can, and I suppose how much you get out of any particular exhibitor depends on whatever bargaining strength he has got as against the bargaining strength you have got, is that right? A. No, it depends on what the picture does at the box office. That is what ultimately decides what we get; and even within one group of theatres, as you refer to them there, the results may vary widely from town to town.

Q. I think Judge Bright was referring to the question of the particular percentage that you get on a picture. That varies from account to account, isn't that right? A. You mean the percentage terms on which the picture may be sold to begin with?

Q. That is, you may charge one exhibitor 40 per cent for a picture that you charge another exhibitor 35 or 30 per cent for, isn't that right? A. That is correct, as between one exhibitor and another exhibitor.

Q. Yes. A. That is correct.

(1972)

Q. There is no uniformity of percentage terms? A. There is a uniformity in our effort to begin with before a picture has actually demonstrated its value at the box office. Then you frequently try to get percentage terms, which you can't get because the picture has not measured up to your requirements.

Q. And you always attempt to get the maximum percentage you can from everybody? A. Yes.

Q. And your results vary widely in that respect? A. Yes.

Q. And they vary in the bargaining power of the various exhibitors involved, isn't that right? A. No, they vary based on the box office results.

Q. I am talking about the amount of percentage. A. Well, the amount of percentage on a sliding scale varies, depending on the business that the picture does. I mean, if you have a contract like these contracts you have shown me, the percentage terms, the ultimate percentage terms will vary, depending on the business that the picture does.

Q. And it is also true that the actual percentage terms that you get from theatre to theatre vary widely? A. From theatre to theatre, they do vary.

Judge Bright: You mean what you get varies?

The Witness: What we get varies, and also on occasion the initial terms on a contract vary. There are some theatres that you just simply cannot get the asking terms for, and there are some pictures which do not live up to your original estimate of their value, so that if we start out to sell a picture, for example, at 35 per cent of the gross, that does not mean that you are going to be successful in all situations in getting 35 per cent of the gross. In other words, it is not a matter of 35 per cent of the gross or we don't make a deal. Ultimately we try to sell every account that we can.

Mr. Caskey: Mr. Wright, are you sure that this page 6-A was clipped in the original?

Mr. Wright: As far as I know, this is the way it came to me. You, I assume, have the original copy, don't you? I would be glad to have that substituted for this.

Mr. Caskey: It is on different paper.

Mr. Wright: Why don't you get the original then. Let us withdraw it and put the original in if there is any question at all about its authenticity.

Mr. Caskey: I think we should.

Mr. Raftery: I haven't got the original.

Mr. Proskauer: May I ask a question, with your Honor's permission.

By Mr. Proskauer:

Q. I want to develop a little more what I understand was implicit in Judge Bright's questions. When you start out to sell a picture, you determine what percentage of gross you would like to get? A. That is correct.
(1974)

Q. Now then, when the picture begins to be sold, you discover sometimes that in certain situations you can ask a larger percentage, and sometimes you are unable to get the percentage you start out with, and you have to take a smaller percentage? A. That is correct.

Q. Now is that difference in percentage determined by the fact whether an exhibitor is an affiliate or an independent? A. No, sir.

Q. That has nothing to do with it, has it? A. No, sir.

Q. It depends on factors like these, does it not, the box office of a picture, the character of the theatre, the seating capacity of the theatre, and the general admission price policy of the theatre, and various other business factors of that kind? A. That is correct.

Q. And you do not make one price for an independent and another price for an affiliate? A. No, sir.

Q. You make different prices, depending on these other factors that I have imported into my questions? A. Yes; those factors all enter into the price you can get.

Q. Now, I want to refer for just a moment to this Exhibit 382. That is the kind of thing you refer to as a master agreement, isn't it? A. Yes.

(1975)

Q. Now, without going into all the general terms of it, I call your attention to this phrase on the last page: "Deal sheets are to be worked out in each individual situation."

Now, have you got that in your mind? A. Yes.

Q. And what this so-called master agreement does is it outlines a general plan on which pictures that are to be sold under it are to pay, and how they are to run, and certain other general terms that are to be applicable to all pictures sold under this agreement? A. Yes.

Q. But no picture is actually sold under the agreement until the deal sheet is signed? A. That is correct, and in our case until the producer has approved the deal; the producer for his own picture.

Q. In other words, the so-called master agreement is a kind of general chart which is made effective contractually when you actually sign the deal sheet and have it O.K.'d by your producer? A. Well, the deal sheets are a definite part of that because the master agreement does not give theatres, does not give playing time or any of those details.

Q. Yes, but when you sign the master agreement, you may sign that before any deal sheets are executed? A. The deal sheets are executed as a result of the master agreement. (1976)

Q. I am agreeing with you, but I want to get it clear on the record, because I know it, and I am not sure their Honors know about this. You ordinarily sign a master agreement in point of time before you sign the deal sheets? A. That is correct.

Q. And after you sign the master agreement nothing has really happened until you sign the deal sheets? A. That is correct.

Q. And then you take up the question of what particular picture and what particular run of that picture, and so forth, is to be brought under the master agreement and you determine that by executing the deal sheets? A. Well, I don't quite follow you, Judge Proskauer, in the matter of what particular pictures are to come under the master agreement.

Q. Well, I will leave that out. The master agreement sets forth certain pictures that are to come under it? A. That is correct.

Q. But in point of fact there is no actual contract with respect to that picture, no commitment, until the deal sheet is subsequently signed?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, the agreement is there. It speaks for itself. It clearly on its face does commit the pictures to the circuit, the terms to be worked out in the form of deal sheets.

(1977)

Judge Bright: The terms are on the deal sheets.

Mr. Wright: The individual terms.

Judge Bright: As I get Judge Proskauer's inquiry, there is no specific knowledge as to just when the picture is to be played or how it is to be played until after the deal sheet has been executed.

Mr. Wright: That is right. All that the agreement does, right on its face, is to commit the pictures to the circuit. That, Judge, is done right in the master agreement. And the general terms——

Mr. Proskauer: I will call your attention to the terms of this agreement rather than have it argumentatively put in questions.

Judge Bright: That is the master agrement?

Mr. Proskauer: This is the master agreement, he said. It says, "I am reducing to writing the understanding of the discussion we have had concerning United Artists product for the year 1936."

Then it says: "There are 26 pictures covered" by it, and it lists the pictures.

Then it goes on to list under them the groups of pictures, say, six Wanger productions, two at 35 per cent, two at 30 per cent, and two at 25 per cent. That is typical of the various groups.

Then it goes on to set forth a schedule of how they are going to compute which pictures shall pay 25 per cent and which pictures shall pay 30 per cent, and which pictures shall pay 35 per cent, those terms having reference to the average gross attained by the picture in certain described situations.

Then it describes what is to be done about a double feature allowance on 35 per cent pictures, and a double feature allowance on 30 per cent pictures; and I assume your Honors know what the double feature is; I do not think we have to go into that.

Then the double feature allowance on the balance of the project.

Then playing time. It is understood that eight pictures designated at the top terms are to have preferred playing time, and playing time for all other pictures is to be agreed upon between Mr. Bernhard and Mr. Schafer in the event that the local representatives of United Artists and Warner Bros. cannot agree.

Then it says deal sheets are to be worked out on each individual situation.

Q. Now, with that description to the Court that I have given, what is contained in the deal sheets that are subsequently worked out? A. The deal sheets show each situation, each theatre that is going to play the picture; the number of days; if the picture is to have preferred playing time that is so indicated; and I believe the terms are repeated on the deal sheet if the terms have been determined at the time the (1978a) deal sheets are made out.

Judge Bright: Clearance and rental?
The Witness: Rent.

(1979)

Q. The clearances are generally understood, are they? A. Yes, they are understood, and they follow along our established custom.

Q. Now, you have told the Court, as I understand it, that you have made master agreements in some instances with independent? A. Yes.

Q. Does the fact that a theatre chain like these Warner theatres here is affiliated or not affiliated have anything to do with whether you make a master agreement or not? A. No; we have made master agreements with independents.

Q. The situations in which you make master agreements are, generally, situations in which the customer has a number of theatres? A. Wometco Circuit has a number of theatres; in Portland, Oregon, there were several theatres involved in that deal, in the City of Portland——

Q. What I mean is this; You do not usually make a master agreement with respect to a single theatre? A. A single theatre? No.

Q. And the situations in which you make these master agreements are those in which the customer has a number of theatres, and you are trying to put down in writing a general understanding that will cover a number of theatres? A. That is correct.

Q. And that is to save the burden of putting into every (1980) particular deal sheet all of these terms? A. That is correct.

Q. So you make the so-called master agreement; and then you consummate it by deal sheets with that customer with respect to each individual theatre? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And whether or not that customer is an affiliate or a non-affiliate does not enter into the picture at all? A. No.

Judge Bright: In answer to one of my questions when I asked you whether you made master agreements with independents, you said, "Do you mean franchise agreements?" Well, what is the difference?

The Witness: Well, that term of master agreement and franchise has been rather promiscuously used in the picture business. I mean by a franchise as you would mean by a master agreement, an agreement that covers more than one picture for perhaps one year or maybe for two years, if it is possible to sell the season's product in advance. It is a commitment prior to release of the pictures.

Judge Hand: Of course, franchise, I think, as it has been used here before, refers to the time contracted for and not the number of pictures.

The Witness: No, it would be for the period of time.

Judge Hand: Yes.

(1981)

Judge Goddard: How about the territory?

The Witness: Well, for a specific theatre or specific number of theatres.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honors know, of course, that since the consent decree—I think this is not controversial—there have been no franchises issued since the consent decree.

Judge Hand: Yes, I know.

Mr. Wright: There have been no franchises made for the pictures of the five consenting defendants——

Mr. Proskauer: Yes.

Mr. Wright: There have been franchises made, however, on behalf of the theatres of those five consenting defendants with other distributors.

Mr. Proskauer: Yes. I meant exactly what Mr. Wright said, that the five consenting defendants have not made any franchises since the consent decree.

Mr. Caskey: Mr. Wright, I think this document is not an integral one. I am told that at your request the clerk clipped together certain papers, which I think on their face do not belong in it.

Mr. Wright: If there is any question at all about it I will withdraw it and you produce the original.

Mr. Caskey: Well, but do you understand it has to come from Los Angeles? This is the first request for it.

Mr. Raftery: We are trying not to go to Los Angeles. That is the first time I ever saw the document, and it is on this face not right, and we are trying to get it from uptown.

Mr. Caskey: In order that there will be no confusion in the record let us physically have this withdrawn.

(Government's Exhibit 383 for identification withdrawn.)

Redirect Examination by Mr. Raftery:

Q. Mr. Lazarus, Judge Bright asked you some questions about Stage Door Canteen's contract—I do not know the number of the exhibit—with Fox West Coast, first-run, Los Angeles. As a matter of fact, Mr. Lazarus, the photoplay Stage Door Canteen was not offered for sale to anybody until after the picture was completed and first exhibited in the Capitol Theatre, New York City? A. That is correct.

Q. That was contract No. 1? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it was sold throughout the United States to approximately how many thousand accounts, do you know? A. I think it is about twelve thousand accounts now. I may be a little high, because our terms were a little stiff on that picture; but it would be something in the neighborhood of (1983) eleven or twelve thousand contracts.

Q. And you sold that picture separately and individually to all the theatres that played it? A. Yes.

Q. And at varying terms? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you start out asking exhibitors for for that particular picture? A. What we started out to get?

Q. Yes. A. Well, we started out to get 50 per cent of the gross receipts.

Q. And did you succeed in getting 50 per cent? A. In some cases.

Q. As a matter of fact, what did the picture gross domestically? A. I think it was something like four million dollars, if I remember correctly.

Q. Will four million three refresh your recollection? A. Well, it was over four million, Mr. Raftery. I do not know the exact figure, the latest.

Mr. Proskauer: $300,000 does not mean anything in this business.

Q. And that picture later played pursuant to the contract that Mr. Wright has put in evidence first-run in the City of Los Angeles? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I show you Exhibit U-A-1 and call your attention to the City of Los Angeles. Will you please advise us at what theatres it played first-run and move-over, and what rentals (1984) were paid by Fox or National Theatres, or whoever it is who runs those theatres, to United Artists? A. It played beginning July 8, 1943, at the Carthay Circle, the Ritz, Loew's State and Grauman's Chinese; and it played those theatres July 8 to the 14th, and we received the following film rentals from those four theatres:

Carthay Circle, $3,691.29; the Ritz Theatre, $3,836.18; Loew's State, $10,050.79; Grauman's Chinese, $6,081.57.

Then on a move-over beginning July 15th it played the United Artists Theatre on which we got a rental of $5,408.95; the Wilshire, on which we got $2,080.93; and the Four Star, which played a long move-over—it played from July 15 to August 25, giving us a rental of $7,262.92.

Q. Now, the picture played first-run in San Francisco, did it not? A. Yes, it must have.

Judge Bright: Would you mind telling me who owned or operated the seven theatres that you just referred to?

The Witness: Those theatres, I believe, are all operated by Fox West Coast. I am not positive of that without reference.

Mr. Raftery: Your Honor, we do not know the physical operator, but it played pursuant to the agree-(1985) ment with the Fox West Coast Agency that was put in evidence here.

Mr. Wright: The one referred to here I don't think is in evidence. All that is in evidence are the sheets. The letter agreement that is referred to is not in evidence. That I understand is one of those you were looking for.

The Witness: Mr. Raftery, I don't find the San Francisco figures here. I don't know that—oh, wait, I beg your pardon, it is abbreviated.

It played the United Artists Theatre in San Francisco, and the run began July 15 and ended on August 22, giving us a film rental of $47,964.84.

Q. That was with Blumenfeld? A. Yes; that was the single theatre run with Blumenfeld.

Q. And you played Oakland? A. Yes. We played Oakland. We played the Paramount Theatre, Oakland, from August 12th to the 25th, to a film rental of $16,280.55; and then moved to the Franklin Theatre in Oakland, August 26th to September 15th, and we got a film rental of $3844.82.

Q. Blumenfeld, the independent, operates at San Francisco, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. And this Paramount house is a Fox West Coast house? A. Yes.

Q. And Blumenfeld takes clearance over Oakland? A. Yes.

(1986)

Q. Oakland followed San Francisco? A. Yes.

Q. How many contracts, if you remember, did you have on Stage Door Canteen? A. I think we had something over 12,000 contracts on Stage Door Canteen, but I am not positive.

Q. And those contracts will indicate the exact terms upon which each engagement was played? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And have you got those contracts available? A. We have them on file in our office.

Q. And they are open to inspection of the Government at any time they want to go up and look at them? A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Lazarus, there was a time in United Artists where the general practice was to license the exhibition rights before the pictures were actually available in the exchanges, isn't that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, at the present time and for some time past what has been the practice of United Artists generally? A. The practice generally on the part of United Artists in the last few years has been not to sell a picture until the picture was completed.

Q. Is it your practice to have test engagements of pictures before you determine the selling policy? A. Oh, we do that once in a while, but it is not our general practice.

Q. Well, is it the practice when you are in any way doubtful about the box office character of the picture? A. Yes; if a picture—if there is very much of a difference of opinion between the folks in the home office, we will play 10 or 12 engagements throughout the country to, as we say, get the feel of the picture so we know what kind of a picture we have from the standpoint of public reaction.

Q. And this selling after completion of the picture has added considerably to the cost of selling, has it not? A. Yes, because particularly with United Artists we get our pictures delivered by our producers at irregular intervals. In other words, we can't start selling a picture until the producer tells us to go ahead, and they do not produce on a schedule, so that we have had periods of two or three months or four months, I believe, at one time, when we did not have a release; and then we will get two or three of them at a time.

Q. Have you such a consistency of releases that you can keep any exhibitor going in business? A. No, sir. We could scarcely keep ourselves going at times.

(1988)

Q. As a matter of fact, from Labor Day, 1943, until after Christmas of that year you did not have a single feature picture for release, did you? A. I don't remember that exactly, Mr. Raftery, but I know that for months on end we have been without a picture. We have re-issued pictures in order to keep the wheels turning.

Q. Have you ever stopped selling pictures? A. We stop selling a picture when—the only time we stop selling a picture is when the producer withdraws the picture from circulation. If he will permit us to continue the distribution of the picture, even after the terms of the distribution contract with the producer expire, we will keep on selling that picture.

Q. As regards these clearances Mr. Wright was asking you about, do clearances individually come to your attention? A. No, sir. They may or may not appear on contracts, but I never bother with the clearance. The only time a clearance will come to my attention is if there is something about the sale that is affected by a change in clearance. Then the branch manager submitting the contract, in order to explain why the contract terms may not look right in comparison with our records of previous selling in that situation, he may then explain that there has been a change in clearance, but otherwise I take it for granted that the clearance is in accordance with the established practice.

Q. It is the changes that come to your attention? A. That's all.

Q. These changes that have been brought about—by the way, you are not a party to the consent decree arbitration system? A. No, sir.

Q. When there have been changed made on the five or any one of them, by one of these arbitration boards, does that result in a change in your situation as regards clearance as a rule? A. Yes, I have had numerous letters from the branches in the last three years in which they have explained that a theatre clearance, that we had been working under for a previous period, whatever it may have been, was now changed as the result of an arbitration finding.

Q. So even though you were not a party—— A. Even though we are not a party to it, there is nothing we can do about it.

Q. If you want to sell that account you have to sell him with the new clearance? A. That is correct.

Q. In your company the sales managers has no power to approve finally a contract? A. No, there is nobody in United Artists Corporation to my knowledge who has any authority to approve a contract. That approval rests entirely with the producer or his representative.

(1990)

Q. And has to go through you and then to the producer? A. That is correct.

Recross Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. With respect to clearance, what you do in connection with the clearance under which you are serving an exhibitor, after an award comes down as to the other distributors, it depends to some extent, does it not, on how much bargaining strength that particular exhibitor has, isn't that right? A. No; I don't recall a single instance, Mr. Wright, where we have been able to operate in defiance of a changed clearance; at least, none has come to my notice at my desk.

Q. You don't recall now situations where a certain exhibitor, let us say, has insisted on your continuing to hold some smaller competitor 30 days behind him after there has been an award reducing the other distributors' clearance from 30 to 14 days? A. I know, I said, of no such case.

Q. Would you say that never had happened? A. No, I know of no such case. Those things only come to my attention when there is a change in clearance that affects our selling, and I wouldn't know.

Q. Don't you know it is a fact that in certain exceptional situations the exhibitor has been able to get from you and continues to get from you a longer clearance on your pictures than the arbitrator or the appeal board determined was reasonable upon the distributors' pictures that were arbitrated? A. I don't know of any such case, no, sir. (1991)

Q. You don't know whether there was or not? A. I don't know. No, I do not know. That is a phase——

Q. That can easily be established by simply an examination of particular contracts? A. Yes, if it exists, it exists, but I don't know of any such case.

Q. Getting back to this master agreement, as far as this particular exhibit 382 is concerned, even after you make the deal sheets, there is no final settlement of the rental under this deal, is there? A. The final settlement of the rental is dependent upon the performance of the picture.

Q. Not only dependent upon the performance of your pictures, but, under these provisions on the third page, it is dependent upon the performance of two pictures from Fox, two from RKO, two from Paramount and two from Warner in the circuit, isn't that right? A. It is still dependent upon the performance of our picture, Mr. Wright.

Q. Yes. A. Because I happen to know enough about those negotiations to know that in attempting to set terms with any—that is the Warner Circuit—in attemping to set terms with the Warner Circuit the matter of terms is always a matter that is open to dispute between the seller and the buyer, and, in order to establish whether or not the picture is entitled to top terms, when we are asking top terms for a picture, they agreed to use a standard, practically might be called a slide rule. They took from each of these companies mentioned in that top grossing picture, they averaged the results of those top grossing pictures, and if the pictures that we claim were top grossing pictures could achieve those grosses, then we got their top terms.

Q. I say, before it was determined what your final film rental was actually going to be, you had to determine what the performance or box office returns were in the Warner Circuit from those two pictures that were selected? A. Yes.

Q. For purposes of control from each of the other distributors? A. We had to prove it was a top picture. That is what is means, really. If we claimed it was a top picture, we had to prove it.

Q. The process by which you did it was to wait and see how its performance compared with that of the two pictures from each of the other four distributors named? A. That is correct.

Q. And then there was a final settlement on rental to you? A. That is correct.

Mr. Proskauer: May I ask the Court, is it perfectly clear to your Honors that the reference to the other producers here, as Mr. Wright's questions indicate, was merely to establish a criterion by which it should be determined whether his picture was a top bracket picture, in which event he was to get 35 per cent, or another bracket picture in which he was to get 30 per cent. If it did as well as the average of certain other pictures, then he was in the 35 per cent class. If it did not do as well, or did something else, then he was in the 30 per cent class.

(1993)

HARRY J. MULLER, called as a witness on behalf of the defendant United Artists, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Raftery:

Q. Mr. Muller, you are the treasurer of United Artists Corporation? A. I am.

Q. And you have been for some years? A. Yes.

Q. Prior to that you were comptroller? A. That is correct.

Q. This morning I read from a document which I identified as the original contract between Bing Crosby Productions, Inc. and the United Artists for the distribution of John L. Are you the custodian of the records of United Artists Corporation? A. I am.

Q. I ask you if that is the original document? A. It is.

Q. Under which United Artists is distributing the Great John L.? A. It is.

Mr. Raftery: Mr. Wright, with your indulgence, instead of offering it in evidence, I am content with what was read into the record.

Mr. Wright: I think that is agreeable providing, of course, we have the right to read in, at some later date, something that we might want to bring to the Court's attention.

(1994)

Mr. Raftery: Any time.

Q. Mr. Muller, in connection with the distribution of pictures by United Artists Corporation, have you the records showing the domestic results of distribution for the first 42 weeks of 1945? A. Yes.

Q. Without disclosing any figures, and subject to Mr. Wright checking them, if he wishes to, what have you to say as to whether this is the largest year United Artists has ever had since it was formed in 1919, using that period as the barometer? A. It is the largest year up to this date.

Q. In connection with your costs of distribution, have your costs been computed by you on the second sheet? A. Yes.

Q. By the way, that document you have before you is a document prepared every week and kept by you in the regular course of business, is it not? A. Yes.

Q. Has there been an increase in costs of domestic operation during this year over last year? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that cost substantial, I mean, the increase? A. A little over 10 per cent.

Q. What about last year over the year before? A. That also was greater than the year before.

Q. Has there been a progressive increase in the costs of domestic distribution of motion pictures during the past ten years? A. Yes, although in some years we may have had a reduction in costs.

Q. Those were the years that we might refer to as the lean years, when we did not have pictures? A. That is correct.

Q. But during the years we had the average number of pictures—— A. Costs have increased.

Q. Particularly as regards advertising, have advertising costs gone up? A. Yes, they have.

Q. And how does your advertising cost for the year 1945, to date, compare with the corresponding period of last year? A. It is up about 35 per cent.

Q. You have had wage increases due to union contracts and other things during the past year? A. Yes.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I don't understand the purpose of this. If it is to show what his profits are, I suppose we ought to have the profit figures themselves. I do not see what conclusion the Court can come to just from the statements about increases in costs and increases in gross. I don't see what relevance it has to any issue that is being tried.

Judge Hand: What does it have?

Mr. Raftery: It has this, to show that an independent producer, or an independent distributor, rather, has had to have increased grosses to meet increased costs and that this year is the biggest year in our history, rather than that we are passing out because of any squeeze. I will stop right here on that. I don't want to disclose these figures, to be perfectly frank with you.

Q. Mr. Muller, the United Artists Corporation has three stockholders, has it not? A. It has.

Q. You are the custodian of the stock ledger and the stock record book? A. Yes.

Q. It is not a public company in any way? A. It is not.

Q. And it operates not only in the United States but throughout the rest of the world? A. That is correct.

Q. Branch offices and subsidiary corporations throughout the entire world? A. Yes.

Q. It does not own any interests direct or indirect in any of the seven other defendants, does it? A. No, it does not.

Q. It is wholly independent of any one of them? A. Yes, sir.

Cross-Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. Mr. Muller, you had or you recently acquired a half interest, did you not, in some theatres that are operated there in Los Angeles? A. Yes, we did.

Q. You made an arrangement; that is where Mr. Blumenfeld operates four theatres for you and that you have a half (1997) interest in the operation? A. It is not quite a half interest.

Q. And those theatres, when were those acquired? A. I think it was last July.

Q. And you acquired those theatres for the purpose of getting an adequate first-run outlet for your pictures in Los Angeles? A. I don't know the purpose for which they were acquired.

Q. But since you have acquired them you have shown the United Artists pictures there first-run day and date in the four theatres, isn't that right? A. I presume so, but that is not my field.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Raftery:

Q. In connection with the theatres that Mr. Wright speaks about, Mr. Blumenfeld is the full and complete operator of those theatres, is he not? A. He is.

Q. You have nothing to do with the operation in any respect? A. No.

Q. You have no film commitments of any kind or character to those theatres? A. No.

Q. As a matter of fact, don't you know, Mr. Muller, that Spellbound, in addition to opening here today, is opening in the Fox West Coast house in Los Angeles tomorrow? A. I didn't know that.

Judge Hand: Any more questions of this witness?

Mr. Raftery: No.

(1998)

Mr. Raftery: May I ask Mr. Wright a question in private?

(Discussion between Mr. Raftery and Mr. Wright.)

Mr. Raftery: Mr. Wright has stipulated that if the president of United Artists were called to the stand he would testify in response to the, shall we call it, the Adolph Zukor questions in the same way that Mr. Zukor did.

I have some loose ends, but I will go ahead with Universal for the moment.

WILLIAM A. SCULLY, called as a witness on behalf of defendant Universal, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Raftery:

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honors, could I ask whether we are going to sit on Monday? There has been some talk around that we were not. I am not asking that we should not. I am just trying to find out whether we are going to.

Judge Hand: Oh, yes, we will sit on Monday.

Mr. Raftery: May I have five minutes, your Honor?

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Raftery: Before I start on Universal.

(Short recess.)

Q. Mr. Scully, where do you reside? A. Forest Hills, New York.

(1999)

Q. Are you associated with the defendant Universal? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you tell their Honors in what capacities? A. I am the vice-president and general sales manager of Universal Pictures Company, Inc.

Q. Have you a similar position with Big U? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you tell their Honors the different functions of Big U and Universal Pictures Company? A. Big U is a separate company operating the New York exchange. The Universal Pictures Company, Inc. is the parent company that owns the Universal Film Exchanges, Inc. and operates 30 other exchanges in the United States.

Q. How many did you say Big U operated? A. One.

Q. Where is that located? A. At 630 Ninth Avenue, New York City.

Q. What area does that serve? A. New York and part of New Jersey.

Q. Where does Universal Film Exchanges function? A. In 31 branches throughout the United States.

Q. Located from Boston on the East to San Francisco on the West? A. Yes.

Q. And you have exchanges generally in each of the cities that the five defendants have exchanges in? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What does your organization consist of, I mean division manager, etc.? Will you break it down for their Honors? A. We have one assistant general sales manager, three division managers, nine district managers, 31 branch managers and 95 salesmen.

Q. Where are your pictures made? A. In Universal City, California.

Q. At the Universal Studios? A. Universal Studios.

Q. Who is in charge of the studios? A. Mr. Clifford Work.

Q. How many feature pictures a year do you generally produce? A. 45 to 50.

Q. Do you produce anything else? A. Seven Western pictures, four serials, 15 2-reel subjects, 30 single-reel subjects and a newsreel.

Q. How many issues of your newsreel? A. Two issues.

Q. Each week? A. Yes.

Q. Or 104 a year? A. Yes.

Q. How long have you personally been in the motion picture business? A. Since 1917.

Q. Where did you start in the motion picture business? A. I started as a salesman for Famous Players-Lasky in New Haven, Connecticut.

Q. In what other cities have you operated before you came into New York? A. I operated as a branch manager for Metro (2001) Goldwyn-Mayer in New York City.

Q. When did you join Universal in your present capacity? A. January 1, 1938.

Q. Approximately what was Universal grossing when you first joined the company per year? A. Domestic?

Q. Domestic only. A. Ten million dollars.

Q. Has the gross remained static during your tenure of office? A. No, sir.

Q. What has happened? Will you tell their Honors generally? A. We have increased our gross considerably each year up to the present year, or last year, when our gross was $31,000,000 domestic and Canada.

Q. Canada represents what part of that 31 million? A. About a million eight or nine.

Q. So, approximately, between 29 and 30 million dollars was your gross for 1944? A. Yes.

Q. Those figures are all a matter of public record, are they not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What have you to say as to the quality of the product that you have been handling in relation to the product prior to the time you took the office as general sales manager? A. Our product has got better, we have made deals with different directors and producers to make top pictures, and each year we have been successful in making a little better (2002) picture and that has contributed greatly to our increased gross.

Q. You have developed some of your own stars during this period, have you not? A. We developed personalities such as Abbott and Costello, a girl by the name of Montez, and another girl by the name of DeCarlo, and Deanna Durbin was making pictures for Universal when I entered the company.

Q. Has Miss Durbin's popularity increased since you entered the company? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Generally, you are making a better quality picture and have been making progressively better quality pictures, since 1937? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How do you generally license the exhibition of your pictures to exhibitors? A. We offer all our pictures to the exhibitor at one time together with our newsreel and short subjects, and we generally offer him 55 feature pictures, 7 Westerns and our shorts and newsreel.

Q. Do you offer them all on one contract or separate contracts or how do you offer them? A. We have 50 pictures offered on one contract and we have five pictures that we sell on separate contracts, two as specials and three as outside producers' productions. Our Westerns and shorts are all in the same contract as the 50 feature pictures and our newsreel is on a separate contract.

Q. You mentioned outside producers. You have heard (2003) the term independent producer used here several times. Do you have contracts with independent producers? A. Well, they are making pictures independent of our regular line-up of pictures, such as the Walter Wanger pictures and the Skirball pictures, that we call outside producer pictures or independent pictures because we sell them on a separate contract.

Q. Do you have a company called Mayfair or some name like that? A. The Mayfair Company made pictures for us, yes.

Q. In which Jules Levey was interested? A. Yes.

Q. These outside producers have a financial interest in these pictures, have they not? A. That is right.

Q. And they are sold separately from your group of 50? A. That is right.

Q. In this group of 50 how are the pictures generally set up or classified or how are they described? A. There are so many pictures of different stars, so many pictures listed as different titles, such as two Deanna Durban pictures, two or three Abbott and Costello pictures, two or three Montez pictures, two or three DeCarlo pictures, and there are titles listed as to what various pictures that we think we are going to make, and then we have some pictures listed, what we call marquee pictures.

Q. Describe the marquee pictures a little more fully. (2004) A. We call them marquee pictures and have the titles listed on them because we explain them to the exhibitors as pictures which some one personality is in, that they can put on their marquee to advertise it.

Q. Such as? A. Well, I can't think of any. I can't think of them. Such as the Andrew Sisters or people——

Q. Radio names, bands? A. Radio names or bands.

Q. Mr. Scully, in selling or licensing your pictures, you grant the exhibitor the right to publicly perform in his theatre the copyrighted subject that is in the positive print of the picture? A. That's right.

Q. And no right to assign that performing right to anybody else? A. That is right.

Q. And only in the particular theatre or theatres listed in the contract? A. That is right.

Q. You grant him no right to lease or sell or in any way dispose of any part of the tangible property, meaning the print, to anybody else? A. Right.

Q. When the exhibition is finished what must he do with the print? A. Return the print to the exchange.

Q. And in some cases do you direct him to ship it to another exhibitor? A. Some situations do, yes.

Q. In rural situations? A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Scully, did you cause to be prepared a schedule along the same lines that Judge Hand spoke to Mr. Caskey (2005) about in the 73 situations that were propounded to Universal? A. Yes.

Q. That was prepared under your supervision? A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is no difference, as far as you know, between this and what is contained in the file cabinets that Mr. Wright has here of the records that we previously gave him? A. No.

Mr. Wright: I just noticed for the first time that there are 73 in the United Artists. I thought you were going to prepare one for the 92, so it would be comparable. The other one covers 92, doesn't it?

Mr. Raftery: Mr. Wright, I have stuck to the papers you gave us and I explained this morning to the Court your 92 counted up 73.

Mr. Wright: I was not referring to what I gave you. I had understood Judge Hand's request applied to the 92 rather than 73, so that you would have a comparable group for each distributor. That is all. I was under the impression that you had furnished us figures for the entire 92 instead of simply the 73.

Mr. Raftery: We answered every question you asked us. I have never seen the other 19. If there is anybody will be good enough to give me the 92 with the other 19 cities, we will be glad to prepare that, but I have never seen the other 19 and I don't know what they are.

Mr. Wright: I think the interrogatory data that was sent you clearly set it forth, but if there is any question, it is the 92 cities of over 100,000 population as of the 1940 census.

Mr. Raftery: I am not going to study the atlas. I have studied everything but it.

You won't tell me what the case is about, so please give me the other 19 cities and I will get them.

Mr. Wright: My impression is that they have already been given you, but if you didn't get them, I will see you get a list naming them.

Mr. Raftery: You neglect two defendants. You gave us only 73.

Mr. Proskauer: Discrimination.

Mr. Raftery: I wish to offer these 73 in evidence and I will be happy to get the others, the 19.

Mr. Wright: We have no objection.

(Marked Defendant Universal's Exhibit U-1.)

Mr. Raftery: Your Honors, the guinea pig picture for Universal is Christmas Holiday, starring Miss Durbin.

Q. Mr. Scully, in New York City for the past several years, where have you generally licensed the exhibition of your photoplays first-run? I am referring to the Island of Manhattan. A. Criterion and the Rialto.

(2007)

Q. The Criterion Theatre is located where? A. On Broadway between 45th and 44th.

Q. There was a time, Mr. Scully, where Universal pictures were exhibited first-run in the Music Hall, was there not? A. Yes.

Q. Have you been able to get any of yours shown in the Music Hall? A. I think I sold them one picture.

Q. That is one in eight, going on nine years. So you play Criterion? A. Yes.

Q. Do you consider it a satisfactory first-run outlet for your pictures? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you prefer to play the Music Hall if you could get a sufficient number of your pictures played there? A. Well, primarily I am interested in getting money for the pictures and sometimes I think I can get more money out of my pictures at the Criterion than I could at the Music Hall.

Q. You get more of your pictures played at the Criterion, do you not? A. That is right.

Q. You get more than 12 weeks playing time a year in the Criterion, don't you? A. Yes.

Q. How many seats are there in the Criterion? A. I think there are some 2000—about 2000.

Q. It is a modern, up-to-date theatre. And no stage shows with your picture there? A. No.

(2008)

Q. Where do you exhibit your pictures generally in Chicago first-run? A. The RKO Palace.

Q. Do you show your pictures in any other first-run theatre in Chicago? A. Yes, we show some of our pictures in the Grand, which is operated by RKO. We have sold some of our pictures, I think, to the Oriental Theatre.

Q. But generally, your first-run customer is RKO? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you sell any pictures at all first-run to B. & K., Paramount affiliate out there? A. No, sir.

Q. Has this condition, as regards Universal's first-run in Chicago, prevailed for many years? A. Since I have been there.

Q. Philadelphia, who is your first-run account? A. Warner Bros.

Judge Bright: Who operate the Criterion Theatre?

The Witness: The Loew interests.

Q. It is an affiliated theatre? A. Yes.

Q. In fact, every account you have mentioned so far first-run is an affiliated account? A. Yes.

Judge Hand: RKO is, in Chicago?

The Witness: That is affiliated.

Q. Except the Oriental in Chicago? A. The Oriental is an independent theatre.

Q. And the Music Hall is classified as an independent theatre? A. Yes.

(2009)

Q. Now, in Detroit, Michigan, where do you exhibit your pictures first-run? A. At the Fox Theatre, and some we exhibit at the Adams.

Q. Is that also an affiliated theatre? A. The Fox theatre is, yes.

Q. How about the Adams? A. I think the Adams is an independent theatre.

Q. In Los Angeles, California, where do you generally exhibit your first-runs? A. We exhibit some to RKO and some to the Fox West Coast.

Q. You divide your product? A. That is right. We sell half to RKO and half to the National Theatres or Fox West Coast.

Q. Well, don't Fanchon & Marco operate a theatre called the Paramount out in that city? A. Yes.

Q. Is there some affiliation with Paramount, if you know, or are they independent? A. I don't know.

Q. Were Universal pictures at one time shown first-run in that theatre? A. Yes.

Q. And since you have been with Universal you have changed your account? A. No, we sold them some of our pictures.

Q. Do you still sell them some? A. No.

Q. When did you stop selling them? A. When we haven't been able to have our pictures played off by Fox (2010)
West Coast and RKO, the time we had sold all of our pictures to RKO, and we had a backlog of pictures sometimes, and we sold some to Fanchon & Marco at the Paramount theatre.

Q. Now, in Cleveland, Ohio, which company is your first-run account? A. RKO.

Q. You have been selling them for many years? A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever sell Loew's in that town? A. No.

Q. When Warners operated there did you sell Warners or did you sell RKO? A. Since I have been with Universal we have always sold RKO.

Q. In Boston, what is your first-run account? A. RKO.

Q. Do you sell Loew's any pictures up there? A. No.

Q. In Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, what is your first-run account? A. We split our product in Pittsburgh, half to the Shea interests and half to Johnnie Harris.

Q. The Shea interests operate the Fulton Theatre? A. That is right.

Q. And Harris operates the Senate and the Harris theatre? A. That is right.

Q. And how do you divide your product, in what proportions? A. Half to each.

Q. To each account? A. To each of the accounts.

Q. I believe the testimony is that of those accounts are independent accounts? A. That is right.

Q. Now on this list, without going into any further great (2011) detail, since you have joined Universal you have sold first-runs generally to the account mentioned after the name in each city? A. Yes, I would say so.

Q. Are there any situations there where there are divisions of product with other exhibitors, because this is applicable to the one picture, this particular list you are looking at? A. Well, in Los Angeles, as I said, we split our product.

Q. Well, that has been testified to, and also about Pittsburgh. Is there anything below that line where there are divisions of product that do not show on this exhibit? A. In Jersey City we split our product.

Q. With whom? A. Half to Skouras and half to Warner Bros.

Q. And Skouras has been classified here as an independent; is that the way you classify him? A. He is not on here.

Q. No. I say in this lawsuit, the George Skouras circuit has been classified as an independent? A. That is right.

Q. Is that the way you classified him? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You sell the product to him and half to Warners, who operate the Stanley theatre, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. Now, any other situations? A. Worcester, Mass., we split our product half to Warner and half to M & P.

(2012)

Q. Do you sell any to Loew's in Worcester? A. No. In Hartford, Connecticut, we split our product, half to Warner and half to an independent, E. M. Loew.

Q. At the Majestic theatre? A. That is right. In Los Angeles, California, we split our product half to Fox West Coast and half to Milton Arthur.

Q. Is Arthur an independent? A. Yes. In New Haven, Connecticut, we split half our product to M & P and half to Warner. In Springfield, Massachusetts, we split our product half to Warners and half to Mr. Andes.

Q. That Andes operates the Bijou theatre? A. That is right.

Q. And is he an independent? A. Yes, sir. That is all on here.

Q. Now these splits that you have been telling us about, have you been selling that way for several years? A. Yes, sir.

Q. As long as you have been with Universal? A. Yes.

Q. And the remainder, where you do not split, have you been selling those accounts for the last several years? A. Yes.

Q. Have there been any changes at all in those accounts that appear in the 73 cities we have been discussing? A. Well, there was a change in Los Angeles, where we had sold all our pictures to RKO, and now we sell half to Fox West (2013) Coast.

Q. Well outside of Los Angeles? A. I think in Spokane we used to sell our pictures to Fox West Coast, and we sold it to an independent.

Q. And who is the independent? A. McBride I think his name is. I am quite sure that is it. In Reading, Pennsylvania, we used to sell our pictures to Warner and now we sell them to an independent.

Q. Who is the independent? A. J. Emanuel.

Q. What is his name? A. J. Emanuel. That is about all.

Q. Now, Mr. Scully, you told us you sold your pictures in blocks or groups. Do you have a sales convention each year? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When do you usually hold it? A. Between May and July.

Q. Now, before holding that convention do you visit Los Angeles and secure your line-up for the next season? A. Yes.

Q. And do you prepare press material and the other material needed to set up what your program is going to be for the following year? A. Yes.

Q. Where are these conventions usually held? A. Generally held in New York or Los Angeles or Chicago.

(2014)

Q. Do you hold national conventions? A. Sometimes.

Q. Or regional? A. Sometimes we hold regional conventions.

Q. Now, who attend these conventions? A. The sales department in addition to the bookers; and the executives of the home office.

Q. When you say the sales department, does that include all the salesmen, branch managers? A. Salesmen, branch managers, district managers, divison managers, and sales managers and bookers.

Q. Now, without going into any great detail, what happens at those meetings. A. There is an explanation of the pictures that we expect to make for the next year, and those that we are going to market for the coming season; and we generally explain each and every picture and give them as much knowledge of the story as we can, plus the personalities we expect to put in the picture; what we anticipate it is going to cost us and what we would like to sell our pictures for. And in addition to that we give them printed matter that they can explain to the exhibitors, who is in the pictures' and whether they are black and white or color, or anything that goes to help make the salesman—or generate a little enthusiasm in the salesmen to sell the merchandise.

Q. Do those meetings break down into smaller meetings?

(2015)

A. After the general meeting, there are generally smaller meetings of the district managers with their various branch managers, or managers and salesmen.

Q. And then finally, branch managers with their sales force? A. That is right.

Q. Now, after this regional or national convention—depending on which the O.D.T. would let you have, what happens as regards selling? A. The salesman given the route would call upon various accounts, and they go around and solicit the exhibitors as to the product, and try to sell our product to each and every account that is a possibility; and I guess they do the best they can. Sometimes they are successful on the first call and sometimes it might take two or three different calls to sell an exhibitor. And they do that every day in the week, and they report back to the manager, and the next week they are sent out on a different route, or the same one.

Q. Each salesman has his own specified territory, does he not? A. That is right.

Q. And he has accounts he has to call upon and solicit for license application? A. That is right.

Q. Are these sales persons generally successful in selling all the product they offer to each individual exhibitor? A. No.

(2016)

Q. By the way when you joined Universal, how many accounts were Universal servicing? A. 7200 or 7300.

Q. And how many are you servicing now? A. Between 11,500 or 12,000.

Q. To go back to these applications that are taken, once a salesman takes an application, what happens to it? A. He submits it to the branch office, and the branch office makes up different forms and with a recommendation sends it to the home office for approval; and the contract is reviewed by the sales manager of the home office, and either approved or rejected, or sent back to the branch, the branch receiving two copies of the contract if it is approved, and retaining one for their files and sending one to the exhibitor.

Q. Are contracts ever rejected by the home office? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that a regular practice? A. No, sir.

Q. In short, most that come in are accepted; is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have no producers' representatives to worry about? A. No, sir.

Q. Now in these contracts that come in generally, is there any selectivity as far as the exhibitor is concerned? A. Yes, quite a lot of exhibitors have selectivity. Most of the exhibitors insist upon right of cancellation of a certain group of our product, and the majority, I think ten or twenty per cent, where they buy all of our product, and a lot of exhibitors buy half of our product and some buy a little more.

Q. Is there any different norm as regards selectivity in relation to the affiliate and the independent? A. I don't understand what you said.

Q. Are there any different rules applied as regards the granting of selectivity to an independent or the affiliated theatres? A. No, sir.

Q. Do the independent exhibitors demand and receive the right of selectivity in your contracts? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it the infrequent thing or the rule as far as independents are concerned? A. Generally the rule.

Q. Does the same apply to the affiliated? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you see any great difference between any exhibitor in the demands he exacts of the distributor? A. I do not see any difference in those he wants from me.

Q. And gets from you? A. That is right.

Q. As matter of fact, Mr. Scully, the exhibitor is trying to buy as much of your product as he possibly can with as little obligation as possible to play it; isn't that the ex-hibitor's desire? A. I would say that he buys our product as few as he can, so that he can have a greater selectivity of our pictures and play all the good pictures.

(2018)

Q. And he likes to pay you as low a license fee as he possibly can get away with; isn't that the fact? A. All exhibitors are like that.

Q. Now, have you had any resistance from exhibitors on selling a large group rather than selling a split-up number of small groups? A. No.

Q. What have you to tell this court about the general reaction of exhibitors to that method of selling? A. Well, the exhibitors like to be assured of a constant flow of pictures. Sometimes they cannot get all of the good pictures or buy all of the good pictures, and they like to buy as many pictures as they can, so if sometimes they didn't have a good picture they might play one that is not so good, and they generally like to buy as many as they can, and they generally contract for all your pictures, with the right to select what they think they can absolutely use.

Q. Well, have you had——

Judge Hand: What does that mean, that they want an option on the whole thing?

The Witness: That is right.

Judge Hand: And not to be compelled to take anything they don't want?

The Witness: They make as minimum a commitment for the pictures as they possibly can negotiate, with the understanding that they will use say half of your product or sixty per cent of your product; but they always have the opportunity of using them if they need them.

Judge Bright: Does your license agreement provide for such selectivity?

The Witness: We provide for it in the negotiation when we enter into the contract when the exhibitor wants to buy so many pictures——

Judge Bright: Is it in your contract?

The Witness: Selectivity?

Judge Bright: Yes.

The Witness: No. We give the man the right to cancel a certain percentage of the product.

Judge Bright: That achieves the same result, doesn't it?

The Witness: Yes.

Q. Mr. Scully, you mean it is not in the printed form, but selectivity may be typewritten in or written in in pen and ink by the salesman? A. That is right, when he is negotiating the deal.

Q. And each separate contract tells the extent of the selectivity the exhibitor has been able to bargain for, isn't that right? A. Right.

(2020)

Q. Now, as your product has improved in quality have you been able to better your position on selectivity? A. To some extent.

Q. To any appreciable extent? A. No, I would not say that.

Q. So notwithstanding the improvement in quality of Universal pictures, you still have the same demands for selectivity from all exhibitors, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. Now, in connection with 17,000 theatres—I think somebody has said——

Mr. Proskauer: Eighteen.

Mr. Raftery: Well, it has gone up to eighteen since I last looked.

Mr. Davis: It is still going up.

Q. Evidently there has been an increase in the number of theatres in this country during the period from 1936-37 up to 1944-45; and by "theatres" I mean motion picture theatres; isn't that right? A. There would appear to be, yes.

Q. Well, in a city like New York theatres that were formerly legitimate theatres are now motion picture theatres? A. Right.

Q. Such as the Winter Garden? A. Yes.

Q. The Gaiety? A. Yes.

Q. And others, isn't that right? A. Yes; and the Globe. (2021)

Q. Have there been many new theatres built since the beginning of the war? A. I don't think so.

Q. Whereby restrictions prevented the building of more theatres? A. Yes.

Q. But a great number of theatres are now opened that were closed prior to the period of prosperity we now have? A. Right.

Q. And of these theatres how many of the 17 thousand or 18 thousand theatres would you say are of a class, one theatre in one town or one theatre in the one neighborhood of a larger subdivision? A. I don't understand you.

Q. Well, let us take it this way: How many first-run theatres do you think there are in this country, important first-runs, in cities of 10,000 or over? I think the Government says there were four hundred and something in cities of 25,000 or over? A. Probably 2500.

Q. In other words, numerically a great many of these theatres are located in situations or towns where it is one theatre in the situation; isn't that the fact? A. Right.

Q. And that exhibitor in that situation has a call on the product of all these defendants and everybody else that exhibits pictures; isn't that the fact? A. Yes.

Q. Now, in those situations generally, how do you fare on selectivity or even getting into them? A. We sell less pictures, of course, in those situations; and in a number of (2022)

situations we do not even obtain representation.

Q. Are there any important situations in this country where you can't even get in that you can recall now? A. No.

Q. How about Mr. Sudekum? Have you been able to license your product to that circuit this year? A. No, sir.

Q. Last year? A. No, sir.

Q. The year before? A. No.

Q. How long has Sudekum left you out? A. I think about four years.

Q. Sudekum is classified as an independent in this case, is he not? A. Yes.

Mr. Raftery: I think the Government concedes that. Is that right?

Mr. Wright: Mr. Sudekum is what I would call a quasi-independent.

Mr. Proskauer: Wait a minute, let us not pass that with a jest. Mr. Sudekum is not connected with any of the five so-called major defendants.

Mr. Wright: He does operate the Paramount Theatre in Nashville on a profit-sharing basis with Paramount.

Mr. Proskauer: Well, that is one exception you can make.

(2023)

Mr. Seymour: Mr. Wright, so we won't have any matter on the record which we will have to correct later, I am told that the theatre which you refer to is merely leased to Mr. Sudekum. Is there any dispute about that?

Mr. Wright: As I understand it he leases it under an arrangement whereby he agrees to play Paramount pictures and he also gives Paramount a share in the profits of the operation generally.

Mr. Seymour: I assume that he pays rent for the theatre that he leases, yes.

By Mr. Raftery:

Q. And Mr. Sudekum operates a great many theatres down in Tennessee and the environs, doesn't he? A. Yes.

Q. And he has shown a single Universal picture in a great many years, has he? A. I think about four.

Q. I believe there is a man named Richards in New Orleans. A. Yes.

Q. And do you sell Mr. Richards any pictures? A. No.

Q. How many theatres does he operate? A. Oh, I think somewhere around 80 or 100.

Q. What is the name of his company? A. It was the Saenger Amusement Company, as far as I know.

Mr. Raftery: Well, to keep the record straight Mr. Seymour,——

Mr. Seymour: Publix-Saenger is the corporation in which Paramount has some interest—oh, I beg your pardon. Paramount-Richards.

Mr. Raftery: Paramount-Richards?

Mr. Seymour: Yes.

Mr. Raftery: And is part of that operation down there affiliated or not?

Mr. Seymour: The Paramount-Richards Company is one in which Paramount has a 50 per cent interest. Mr. Richards himself also, as I understand it, operates some theatres in which Paramount has no interest.

Mr. Raftery: And that, I believe, is called United something or other?

Mr. Seymour: There are two companies, as I understand it, the United Theatres and Theatres Service in which Mr. Richards is interested but in which Paramount has no interest.

By Mr. Raftery:

Q. Well, at any rate, in the theatres that Richards operates down in that New Orleans area, have you been able to sell him any Universal pictures for the past several years? A. Not for seven years.

Q. How long? A. Seven.

Q. And any representation you get down there you have to get from other sources? A. Yes.

Q. Are there any other situations that you can think (2025) of now where you have been left out; and by "you" I mean Universal? A. Well, we were left out of the Schine Circuit, I think, we did not sell for one year. There was the Skouras Theatres in New York which we did not sell for one year; the Century Circuit in New York which we did not sell for one year.

Q. We have heard about the Schine and the Skouras. What is the Century Circuit in New York? A. That is a circuit run by A. H. Schwartz in Long Island.

Q. And where are their theatres located? A. In Long Island and Brooklyn.

Q. Are they representative theatres? A. Yes.

Q. Large theatres? A. Yes.

Q. And their circuit extends quite a bit out in Long Island, does it not? A. Yes.

Q. Do you know how many theatres they operate? A. Oh, I would say about 50.

Q. And have you had a run available for them for all those theatres of all your pictures? A. Yes.

Q. And they did not buy any? A. That is right.

Mr. Raftery: I have pretty well exhausted this particular point as far as this man is concerned.

Judge Hand: We will adjourn until 10:30 tomorrow morning.

(Adjourned to November 2, 1945, at 10:30 a.m.)

(2026)

New York, November 2, 1945,
10.30 o'clock a.m.

Trial resumed.

WILLIAM A. SCULLY, resumed the stand.

Direct Examination Continued by Mr. Raftery:

Q. Mr. Scully, when we adjourned last night we were talking about situations where Universal had been left out by exhibitors. Have you any other situation that you wish to call to the Court's attention? By the way, what is that paper you are looking at? A. List of our exchanges.

Q. Just the names of the cities? A. Yes. There is the S. & S. Circuit in Chicago.

Q. How long were you left out of the S. & S.? A. Three years.

Q. Is that a small circuit or a large circuit? A. They have about 80 to 90 theatres.

Q. No Universal pictures were exhibited in any of those theatres during that three-year period? A. No, sir.

Judge Bright: What was the reason for that?

The Witness: We could not negotiate a proper deal with the circuit.

(2027)

Judge Bright: Was there some fight on or something?

The Witness: No, just a question of trying to obtain the terms that we thought we were entitled to and we could not consummate the proper deal.

Q. Was there anything extraordinary in the demands that you were asking for your product? A. No.

Q. Any other circuits there or individuals? A. Cooperative Theatres in Detroit, Michigan, that we did not sell our pictures to for a year.

Q. The Cooperative in Detroit, is that a buying combine? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long has that been in existence? A. I think, to my knowledge, 10 or 15 years.

Q. And what is the nature of the combine? A. They have a gentleman buying pictures for various theatres in Detroit, City of Detroit and outlying territories.

Q. How many theatres? A. Oh, probably a hundred.

Q. Hasn't there been a time in the history of that combine where the individuals who were buying had no interest of any kind of character in the theatres they were buying for? A. Yes.

Q. Haven't there been times when they have refused to pay you, grant you, any percentage terms for any of your pictures? A. Yes, sir.

(2028)

Q. And insisted on paying a flat rental only? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Raftery: I would like a concession from Mr. Wright that the Government has never at any time taken any steps against that combine or any buying combine.

Mr. Wright: Up to the last three words there, you were all right. We haven't taken any steps against Cooperative. We regard the present suit as directed against the very largest buying combines in the industry.

Mr. Raftery: I would like——

Mr. Proskauer: Any other than this one, this alleged one.

Mr. Raftery: I would like a concession from Mr. Wright that he has never taken any steps against any combine similar to Cooperative that exists in the United States, leaving out the five buying defendants here.

Mr. Wright: Well, I would say that the Schine, Crescent and Griffiths circuits all represent buying combines and in an intensified form.

Judge Hand: Why waste time on it, trying to get a stipulation like that out of him? Nobody would make that stipulation in his position.

Mr. Raftery: It is a very simple stipulation.

Judge Hand: All right, he wouldn't make it. It may be simple.

(2029)

Q. Are there other buying combines in this country besides Cooperative, similar to Cooperative? A. Yes; there is a Cooperative circuit in Pittsburgh; there is the Affiliated Theatres in Boston; there is the Allied, I think it is, Allied Theatre Company in Chicago.

Q. Mr. Scully, continue with the exhibitors or combines who have left you out.

Judge Bright: When you say "left out", you mean who refused to buy from Universal?

Mr. Raftery: That is right, although the product is available.

Judge Bright: Are these independent buyers?

Mr. Raftery: Yes, sir.

Judge Bright: Not affiliated?

Mr. Raftery: No, sir. The only affiliate we mentioned yesterday was Richards.

Judge Bright: What is your point in this proof?

Mr. Raftery: The point is that this is an exhibitor's market; they can buy or not buy from distributors as they see fit; that the product is available, and that it really is the fact that there is nothing that they can complain of about any of the distributor defendants in the case, and I am confining it, when I say that, to the two that I represent. We have product and they won't buy it.

(2030)

Mr. Proskauer: May I suggest to your Honor in answer to your question that there is another aspect of this that we deem important. The only way we have of legitimately protecting ourselves against these buying combines is that, if we have our own theatres and they gang up on us, to use a conventional phrase, we can put the shows in our own theatres.

Mr. Raftery: I have only one or two more that I want to refer to.

Judge Bright: I am not trying to shorten the examination.

(2031)

Q. Is there any other one that you see there—not on your list, but if your memory is refreshed by looking at your exchange territory? A. Is there any other what?

Q. Independent situation where you have been left out by the exhibitor? A. Yes, at Fall River, Massachusetts.

Q. Who is the exhibitor in Fall River, Massachusetts, first-run? A. Mr. Yamins.

Q. What theatres does he operate in Fall River? A. He operates the Durfee, Capital, the Plaza and the Strand, and there are two other first-run theatres; I can't recollect the names of them. The Plaza and the Strand are two subsequent run theatres.

Q. Well, does he operate all the first-run theatres or did he operate all the first-run theatres in Fall River, Massachusetts, up till recently? A. No, there was one theatre that was in opposition there, called the Academy.

Q. What happened to the Academy? A. Mr. Yamins I think bought the lease on the theatre and closed the theatre.

Q. Well, after that he operated all the first runs? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, how many years did he leave you out of Fall River? A. Two.

Q. Now, have you been able to sell him the product up to this time? A. No.

(2032)

Q. What did you do? A. I tried to promote someone to take over the Academy theatre, and I was successful in having a man—I think he bought the building of the Academy Theatre—and when the lease runs out, Mr. Yamins' lease runs out, I think he will operate the Academy theatre.

Q. Now, whom did you promote to take the Academy theatre? A. Mr. Zeitz.

Q. Is he an independent exhibitor in Massachusetts? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where does he operate? A. In Portland, Maine, and New Bedford, Massachusetts.

Q. Has he gotten possession of the theatre yet? A. No.

Q. Do you know when he is going to get possession? A. I think it is some time this August.

Q. Next August? A. Yes, next August.

Q. So up until next August you have no deal and have had no deal in the past two years in Fall River? A. No. I have sold my pictures in Fall River at the present time to Mr. Zeitz when he opens the Academy theatre.

Q. For exhibition next August? A. That is right.

Q. Universal has no interest in Zeitz, in the theatre property? A. No.

Q. Now, when you had your trouble with Richards down South, what did you do? A. I tried to sell as many theatres as I could, and in some situations I was successful in selling second-run theatres pictures to play first-run. And where there was any opportunity of selling a first-run theatre pictures, I sold them our pictures.

(2033)

Q. And you are still playing your pictures in those converted second-runs and third-runs and first-runs in that area? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you sell franchises, Mr. Scully? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I ask you to look first at the New Orleans sheet. Did you sell franchises generally in the New Orleans area to every theatre that you sold your first-runs to in opposition to Richards? A. I believe we did.

Q. Now will you tell the Court the reasons for selling the franchises to those theatres? A. The exhibitor in converting his theatre from second-run to first-run, wanted to be assured of product and wanted a steady flow of first-run product, and generally insisted that we sell him a two or three-year deal; and as we thought that that would be the best way to market our pictures to obtain revenue out of New Orleans territory, we sold him a two and three year deal for our pictures.

Q. Now, did these exhibitors expend moneys in improving their theatres to convert them from second or sub-runs to first-runs, as a general rule? A. I think so. Some exhibitors that had only one theatre were fortunate enough to convert something else into another theatre at certain times.

Q. Well, generally speaking, the Richards houses were superior to the houses that were down there when you got into your difficulty? A. That is right.

Q. And these houses were converted? A. Yes.

Q. And you sold them two and three-year deals to protect them on their new investment? A. That is right.

Q. How many franchises would you say you have made with independent exhibitors during the period you have been at Universal? A. Probably five hundred.

Q. How many of them are in effect today? A. I think they are all in effect.

Q. Now, do these documents contain a list of every franchise, as far as you know, that Universal has with both independent and affiliated exhibitors? A. Well, they are franchises in two and three-year deals.

Q. Now, in addition to the list you had in your hands, the remaining list contains the rest of the United States, does it not, by exchanges? A. I think so.

Q. That list was compiled under your direction? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Raftery: I am going to offer it.

Judge Bright: This is just a list of franchises?

Mr. Raftery: It does more than that, your Honor. (2035)

It has the town and State; the theatre and circuit, signed by the name of the exhibitor; the date of the franchise; the length of the franchise; the starting year and the finishing year.

Mr. Wright: We have no objection. We would like a copy.

Mr. Raftery: Yes. I will give you the one I am using, Mr. Wright.

(Marked Defendant Universal's Exhibit U-2.)

Mr. Raftery: In addition the exhibit shows, if it is more than one theatre, it will say 8 situations or 18 situations, or how many theatres are covered by the document.

Q. Mr. Scully, I show you three sets of contract forms for two-year deals for Universal product for the year commencing 1942-43, and 1943-44, 1944-45, 1945-46, and 1946-47. Are these the forms used by your company on these two-year deals? A. Yes.

Mr. Raftery: I offer those, and by tearing them apart you can get a copy.

Mr. Wright: Thank you. We have no objection.

Judge Hand: What is this to show?

Mr. Raftery: Manner and method of selling the product.

Judge Hand: What?

(2036)

Mr. Raftery: It shows the manner and method of selling the Universal product.

(Marked Defendant Universal's Exhibits U-3-A, U-3-B and U-3-C in evidence.)

Q. Now this form of contract in this type of field is offered to affiliated exhibitors and independent exhibitors alike? A. Right.

Q. On your three-year deals that are included in that schedule, do you offer those to the affiliated and independent alike? A. Yes.

Q. Now, what type of exhibitor has availed himself more of the opportunity of buying your long-termed deals, the independent or the affiliated, numerically? A. Independent.

Q. In a much greater degree or—— A. Well, it would be, because naturally there are more independents than there are affiliates.

Q. In selling all exhibitors, whether you sell them a one-year deal or a partial deal, or any kind of a deal, do you discriminate in any way as between the affiliated and the independent? A. No.

Q. Your product is open for all? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Raftery: You will concede that Mr. Scully will give the same answer to the Zukor question?

Mr. Wright: Yes, indeed.

(2037)

Mr. Raftery: Are there any questions here?

Mr. Seymour: Yes.

Cross Examination by Mr. Seymour:

Q. Mr. Scully, does Universal license its pictures for exhibition in some of the theatres operated by the theatre operating companies in which Paramount is interested? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know where those negotiations for those film licenses are conducted? A. In the various offices of the fellows running the theatres.

Q. That is, in the field at the office of those theatre operating companies? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Seymour: That is all.

Cross Examination by Mr. Davis:

Q. Mr. Scully, does Universal license films to Loew's first-run theatres in New York City? A. The Criterion theatre.

Q. The Criterion only? A. We have played some pictures in the Capitol theatre.

Q. What? A. We have played pictures in the Capitol theatre.

Q. But you regularly license to the Criterion, do you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many films a season? A. We don't have any number. They play all our good pictures.

(2038)

Q. Do you license them in groups or individually? A. We have an agreement with the Loew people that they play all our good pictures in the Criterion Theatre and, as the pictures come out, they play them.

Q. What clearance do you give to the Loew's Criterion over the next run? A. They have seven days clearance over greater New York and Long Island and New Jersey.

Q. Seven days? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is the length of the clearance in your contracts with the Criterion dependent on the admission prices charged by the next run? A. No, sir.

Q. It is a flat clearance of seven days? A. Yes, sir.

Judge Hand: Mr. Wright?

Cross Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. Mr. Scully, with reference to these license agreements that have been just offered here, there is in evidence, I believe, an agreement for the 1943-44 seasons previously supplied by your company. Now, as I understand it, it is your testimony that your regular method of selling films that season was on this two-year form, marked in evidence as U-3-A, covering the 1942-43 and 1943-44 seasons rather than on a form providing for the single season? A. No.

Q. You mean that when you do make a two-year deal as distinguished from a one-year, this is the form you generally use, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether there are any differences in the printed provisions here and those you use in the one-year form? A. When we make a two-year deal with an exhibitor, we use the contract of the current season's product, and when we make the additional year, we make it on that form.

Q. The difference between this form U-3-A and this Exhibit 290, which is in evidence as the 1943-44 form of yours, is simply that your U-3-A covers two seasons product and the 290 just covers one; otherwise is there any difference of substance in the provisions, do you know? A. This contract covers one-year product for the season of 1943-44.

Q. I say, other than the difference in season covered, can you tell us offhand whether there is any difference in the contents of the forms? That is what I am getting at. A. The only difference in the contents of the form, I don't think this has any printed matter on the back and this has.

Q. Then when you make——

Mr. Raftery: Mr. Wright, I think we can save a lot of time if you will just read the first paragraph.

Mr. Wright: I haven't seen the form.

Mr. Raftery: I did not, until five minutes ago.

(2040)

Q. Mr. Raftery calls my attention to the fact that these agreements for two years, that you refer to, are actually used as supplementary forms, that is, the exhibitor signs the agreement on a form such as 290 there, which has the printed provisions on the back, and then also executes one of these two-year forms, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. Did I understand you to say that you made your films available to all exhibitors without discrimination? A. I make my product available to a run to an exhibitor.

Q. Do you want the Court to believe that you make your product available to all exhibitors playing the same run on the same terms? A. No.

Q. In so far as the rental terms you make in your agreements are concerned, you vary them greatly, do you not? A. Right.

Q. That is, from every exhibitor you do business with on any run you try to get the highest terms that you can get out of him and the most film rental regardless of what terms you are selling his competitor on, isn't that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you are frequently successful, are you not—— A. Sometimes.

Q. —in—just let me finish the question. A: Pardon me.
(2041)

Q. —in securing much higher terms and film rentals from independent exhibitors on a particular run than you do from the affiliated theatres which may be playing in opposition on the same run, isn't that right? A. I wouldn't say so, no.

Q. Would you say you had not? A. I don't think the independent exhibitors pay us any more for the same run than an affiliate does or would.

Q. You don't think so. Well now, do you know? A. No, I don't know, unless you are talking about something specific.

Q. Let us talk about something specific. A. All right.

Q. I call your attention to the interrogatory answers furnished by your company with reference to Philadelphia. You see the Model Theatre there, exhibitor, Warner Bros., which——

Mr. Raftery: We cannot even hear the name of the theatre.

Mr. Wright: The Model.

Q. —Warner Bros. played a fourth-run in Philadelphia on Christmas Holiday at a rental of $187.50, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That run began on September 19th or September 17th and then concluded on the 18th, right? A. That is right.

Q. Then I show you this fourth-run in the Ambassador of William Greenfield. A. Where is the run?
(2042)

Q. The run is up at the top. A. Oh.

Q. Paid you $321.91 for a run that began on the same day, September 17th, and continued through September 20th, right? A. Yes.

Q. And then there is a fourth run in the Oxford Theatre, Warner Bros. house, played September 19 and 20, film rental was $183.69, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you played a fourth run in the New Colonial from September 20 to September 23 inclusive and he paid you a film rental of $550.41, didn't he? A. Yes.

Q. Then you played a fourth run in the Warner Bros. Sedgewick Theatre, September 21 through September 23, and they paid you a rental of $100, did they not? A. (No answer.)

Q. And you also played a fourth run in the Liberty Theatre of Warner Bros., September 22 and 23, a film rental of $137.50, isn't that right? A. Can I see it a minute?

Q. Yes.

Mr. Raftery: Are those flat rentals, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: It is a little difficult to say.

Q. Can you tell from looking at the rentals there whether they are flat or percentage? A. Yes.

Q. Which are flat and which were based on percentage? (2043)

A. Here is the Colonial Theatre. I would assume it is a percentage. Here is the Oxford Theatre. I would assume is percentage. Here is the Ambassador Theatre. I believe is percentage. And I think the other three are flat rental.

Q. In other words, you sold the Warner houses on a flat rental and you got percentage out of the independents, is that right, in that situation? A. No, we sold Warner on percentage too.

Q. On the fourth-run? Which was the fourth-run Warner, which was on percentage? A. The Oxford Theatre. I don't know whether it is on percentage or not. From the rental returns of $183.69, it would lead me to believe it was on percentage. I am not positive.

Q. Other than the Oxford, the other runs that were flat rental are the Warner runs, isn't that right? A. That is right.

Q. As a matter of fact, when it comes to percentage terms you actually get, in many situations, a higher percentage for the same pictures which independents play on a subsequent run in the same area than what you get from an affiliated exhibitor playing the pictures first run in the area, isn't that right? A. What area?

Q. Well, let us take——

(Discussion between Mr. Raftery and Mr. (2044) Wright out of the hearing of the Court.)

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Raftery: I just wanted to make sure that all this stuff is in because I have no idea what went in in the wholesale offer in the early part of the case.

Mr. Wright: I would like to ask to have this marked for identification.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 384 for identification.)

Judge Goddard: Mr. Scully, does the seating capacity of a theatre enter into the amount of percentage?

The Witness: No.

Judge Goddard: In fixing the percentage?

The Witness: Does not enter into the amount of percentage. Seating capacity has a great deal to do with what film rental you are going to obtain because you have more seats with more people in it.

Q. I will call your attention to an agreement that is in evidence here as Exhibit 259, a memorandum of a three-year deal with Warner in Philadelphia, covering the 1941-42, 1942-43 and 1943-44 seasons. The terms stated there generally provide five pictures at 35 per cent, 2½ per cent off for double bill; 5 at 30 per cent, 2½ off for double bill, 5 at 25 per cent, 5 per cent off for double bill; balance commitment 20 per cent; if double bill, 15 per cent or flat rental; then the following terms to be negotiated and agreed upon between Mr. William A. Scully and our zone managers. That means between you and the Warner theatre managers in the various zones in which they operate? A. Yes.

Q. Now then, there is also a deal sheet attached here, is there not, signed by you and—can you read that signature? A. Mr. Hinchey.

Q. He is the manager in the Philadelphia zone? A. No, he was a film buyer.

Q. Film buyer for Warner? A. In the Philadelphia zone.

Q. Dated December 1, in which you then fixed the precise rentals for the first-run theatres in Philadelphia, is that right? A. Right.

Q. There you provide for five pictures to be played in the theatres listed there as the Warner first-run houses at rentals varying from 20 to 35 per cent, depending upon what they gross, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. As those were your first five top pictures, in the first bracket; those were the choice pictures of your season's release? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In selling those top pictures to the independents who played the second-run—— A. Just a minute.

Q. —or played subsequent-run—there are no independent second-runs in Philadelphia, or there weren't at that time? A. I think there is an independent second-run in Philadelphia.
(2046)

Q. When you get down to wherever there were independents and you offered those top pictures to those independents, did you offer them any of your top pictures at 20 per cent of the gross? A. 20 per cent? No.

Q. Yes. A. No.

Q. You tried to get and, in most cases you did get, from 35 to 40 per cent of the gross, isn't that right? A. Subsequent-run exhibition?

Q. Yes. A. If I was, I was awfully lucky.

Q. On your top pictures. A. I don't think we got 40 per cent of the gross for subsequent-run theatres in Philadelphia.

Q. 35? A. Yes, might be.

Q. In any event, it was a higher percentage than what you were getting in some instances on your top pictures first-run, isn't that right? A. No, because I had an opportunity of earning 35 per cent for my pictures in first-run Philadelphia.

Q. I understood you had the opportunity. I say, the percentage that you got there varied from 20 per cent up to, what is it, 35, depending on what the picture did, isn't that right? A. That is right.

Q. In selling those subsequent-runs, is there any case (2047)

where you made a deal with a subsequent-run independent in Philadelphia where under any circumstances he would get that same top picture that you sold to Warner Bros. first-run for a rental, a film rental of 20 per cent? A. I might have sold it to him on a flat rental basis where he would get the film rental at 20 per cent.

Q. I am talking about the contract terms now. A. You mean on a percentage basis?

Q. Where you sold it on a flat rental basis, you would not know what percentage of his gross you got? A. Right.

Q. But I am referring where you sell on a percentage—where you sold on a percentage basis, where he agreed to pay you a percentage of his gross. A. Would we sell it for 20 per cent?

Q. I am asking you if you can point to any deal you actually made with an independent subsequent-run in Philadelphia where your contract said that he could have the picture or he would pay 20 per cent of the gross of the picture under any circumstances set forth in the contract. A. No.

Q. You referred to the so-called buying combinations—or, before you get to that, let us take this situation of Richards down there in New Orleans. Of course, the majority (2048) of those theatres that Richards buys for are those in which Paramount doesn't have an interest; do you know that? A. Yes.

Judge Bright: "Doesn't", did you say?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Q. That is, he himself operates as a buyer for a very large number of theatres in which he has varying interests himself, isn't that right? A. That I don't know.

Q. Well, he buys for 90 or 100 theatres down there, isn't that right? A. Yes.

Q. Or more than that. Then you say when you broke with Richards you broke with him for all the theatres he bought for, isn't that right? A. That's right.

Q. And then you say you were able to encourage some independent opposition. You did that by giving them franchises, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. And, as a matter of fact, you had to give them franchises, did you not, because they knew that if they did not have the franchise, any time you and Richards got back together again, they would lose the product you had given them without any opportunity for continuing the run at all?

Mr. Seymour: I object to what they knew. I think it is plainly incompetent.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

A. I don't understand what you said.

(2048a)

Q. It is a fact, isn't it, that in those cases the exhibitors were the ones who insisted on the term deal, that is, the term deals that you made, isn't that right? A. They insisted upon it, yes.

(2049)

Q. And the reason that they insisted upon it was that they knew, did they not, that no matter how much film rental they were paying you in a particular situation, that if you and Richards got together again over Richards circuit, you would take those pictures away from them without their being given any opportunity to negotiate for a continuance of the run, isn't that right?

Mr. Seymour: If your Honor please, that is certainly argumentative.

Judge Hand: It is improper in form. I do not know that it makes any difference——

The Witness: Shall I answer the question?

Judge Hand: Instead of saying "they knew" it might be framed to read "it would be possible for them to do so and so."

Mr. Wright: Let me put it this way:

Q. You knew, as a matter of fact, that if you had not committed yourself in those situations under a deal and Richards offered you for the Circuit more money than these particular independents as a group was paying, you would have taken the pictures away from them and given them back to Richards regardless of whether in any individual situation the independent was paying you better terms than Richards had or would or not, isn't that right? A. No, sir.

Q. Now, these buying groups that you spoke of, composed of independent exhibitors—have you any idea why those groups were formed? A. To buy pictures easier and cheaper, I think.

(2050)

Q. Precisely. And in each of those areas where those so-called buying combines operate there is, is there not, a very large affiliated circuit which in terms of buying power considerably exceeds any of the so-called independent buying combines; isn't that right?

Mr. Seymour: If your Honor please, I object to that as argumentative and incompetent. He has got a lot of conclusions in the question. He is just arguing his case.

Judge Hand: Of course, really all of this is argumentative.

Mr. Seymour: Well, it seems to me that had better be spelled out in a brief rather than in a question.

Judge Hand: It is not factual. You are making just arguments now and putting them in the form of questions. Lawyers often do that. And he refuses to answer very often in your favor.

Mr. Wright: I agree that it is argument, and the only reason that I went into it was that I felt that his direct examination was pure argument, and was permitted; and I thought we might hear some of the arguments of the other side; but it can well be deferred until after the witness is off the stand.

That is all.

Mr. Raftery: Just a few questions.

All of this is in evidence; we will save it for the brief, and we will try to find out whether the houses are percentage and what the contracts were, and so forth, and argue on the brief. However——

Judge Hand: Yes. Do not have such minutiae that nobody can understand it except a research man in a very limited field.

Mr. Raftery: We will accept a limit on the length of the brief.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Raftery:

Q. Mr. Scully, his Honor, Judge Goddard, asked you about the size of the theatre affecting the amount of percentage that you can get in a given situation. Can you get as high a percentage of the gross receipts from a theatre like the Music Hall, with a seating capacity of 6200, as you can in a theatre like the Criterion? A. If the picture earns it, yes.

Q. Well, that would come in the overage, wouldn't it, rather than in the initial percentage? A. That is right.

Q. In other words, the larger the theatre the lower the percentage starts, but your ability to earn comes from the (2052)

Q. Now, Mr. Wright tried to compare first-run exhibition terms with second-run exhibition terms. In your percentage deals over this period of years, what has been the number of pictures that you have been able to get percentage from exhibitors, generally, selling in the field? A. On an average, about ten.

Q. About ten pictures? A. Yes.

Q. Now, in the sliding scale percentage that appears here, where the amount of your earning depends on what the picture does in the box office, do you usually sell pictures in the second-run on sliding scale? A. Yes.

Q. Did you have any sliding scale deals at that time with other exhibitors, independent and affiliated in the subsequent-run? A. Yes.

Q. That is a common form of deal in the industry generally, is it not? A. Yes.

Q. In these theatres that are included on that list that Judge Proskauer has in his left hand, is there anything to indicate whether those theatres are directly competitive, that Mr. Wright asked you about? A. No.

Q. Is there anything to indicate the seating capacity or the ability to pay? A. I don't know. Let me see it, will you, Judge?

(2053)

Q. These are merely answers to interrogatories where we are asked to tell the film rental we got in given situations, that is all. A. No, but it says in here that these theatres are fourth-run, and they are all marked fourth-run; but I see the Ambassador here, although it is marked fourth-run, it played on September 17th to 20th; and the Warner Liberty Theatre marked fourth-run played on September 22nd and 23rd. Now, it might have been fourth-run in a certain section or it might have been fourth-run in the City of Philadelphia. Now, one of these theatres might be at one end of the town and the other might be at the other, I don't know.

Q. And you have different numbers of playing days? A. That is right.

Q. Now, is there any way that your can compare film rentals from those documents as to whether one was fair film rental or an unfair film rental, or an adequate film rental? A. No.

Judge Bright: Well, he called your attention to the fact that you were charging 35 per cent on fourth-runs in those several instances as compared to 20 per cent on first-runs in the same city. Can you explain why that is so?

The Witness: Well, the 20 per cent on first-run in a city like Philadelphia is the starting point; if a picture grosses a certain amount of money we obtain 20 per cent; if it grosses a certain amount more, we get 25, 27½, 32½, or 35 per cent. When a picture grosses a certain amount of money in a theatre we get 35 per cent of the gross receipts. And when Mr.

Wright says that we are selling pictures at 35 per cent in subsequent-run, probably we are, I don't know, in Philadelphia. And when he asked me whether we sell pictures at 20 per cent to subsequent-runs in Philadelphia, I answered him no.

Judge Bright: Why did you charge more for fourth-runs than you did for first-runs? That I think was what his inquiry was directed to.

The Witness: We don't charge the fourth-run more. We have an opportunity of earning 35 per cent of the gross receipts in the first-run. It is a question of how much the picture takes in at the box office. If the picture is a quality picture and can gross at the box office, we get ourselves 35 per cent. If the picture is not quality and the people do not like it, and it does not take in any money, we obtain 20 per cent of the gross receipts, or 25, or 27½, or whatever it is.

Judge Hand: To what extent in Philadelphia do you sell first-run pictures to independents?

The Witness: We do not sell first-run pictures to independents in Philadelphia.

(2055)

By Mr. Raftery:

Q. Mr. Scully, in the downtown first-run area where these pictures play first-run Philadelphia, what type of theatres are they exhibited in? A. I don't understand what you mean.

Q. Are they large theatres or small neighborhood houses? What type of theatres are they? A. These?

Q. Where the first-runs are exhibited on your sliding scale contract? A. Pictures are exhibited at first-class theatres in Philadelphia, as good as there are in any other city.

Q. At the highest admission charge in the city, isn't that right? A. Yes, I would assume so.

Q. And your opportunity to earn the 35 per cent depends entirely upon the box office performance of the picture? A. That is right.

Recross Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. I had this agreement identified. I hand you this printed document marked for identification as Exhibit No. 384, an agreement, between Universal Film Exchanges, Inc. and Fox-Midwest Amusement Corporation, dated January 16, 1939. That is apparently a two-year deal for the 1938-1939, 1939-1940 season. A. Yes, two years.

Mr. Wright: I will offer this agreement in evidence.

(2056)

Mr. Caskey: As I understand it, it is only the printed book that is offered and not the single attached deal sheet, and there is no objection.

(Government's Exhibit 384 for identification received in evidence.)

Recross Examination by Mr. Proskauer:

Q. Mr. Scully, I would like to clear up what seems to be a little confusion here: These papers that were referred to as being in my left hand contain the words "Christmas Holiday." Now, "Christmas Holiday" is the name of a film, is it not? A. Yes.

Q. It does not refer to a time? A. That is right.

Q. Now, Gerson Amusement Company, the New Colonial Theatre—that is an independent, is that right?

Judge Goddard: Is this Philadelphia, Judge Proskauer?

Mr. Proskauer: Yes.

A. I would assume so.

Mr. Proskauer: That is true, isn't it?

Mr. Wright: As far as I know, I think it is.

Q. Now, take this form here; that shows, doesn't it, that you leased Christmas Holiday to Warner Bros. for a first-run in the Savoia Theatre for—and I am reading from the column headed "Play date"—for the first, second, third, Theatre—that is an independent, is that right?

(2057)

Q. And for that they paid you $1,043? A. And 97 cents.

Q. All right, you can have the 97 cents. Now, when you came to the fourth-run you leased it for September 20, 21, 22, 23rd, four days, similarly, four days to Gerson Amusement Company at the New Colonial Theatre, and you got $550 for it? A. Right.

Q. So for a four day fourth-run you got from Gerson Amusement Company just about half of what you got from Warners for a five-days third-run, $550 in one case and $1,043.97 in the other? A. That is right.

Q. Now, then, when we come to this next sheet, those were both Warner Bros., so I will leave that one out. When you come to the Ambassador Theatre, that was an independent theatre, wasn't it, William Greenfield? A. Yes.

(2058)

Q. And you leased the picture for four days? A. That is right.

Q. And he paid you for that $321? A. That is right.

Q. Now, going back to that sheet that I skipped, when you leased to Warner Bros. at the Logan theatre for four days— A. Where?

Q. Right here, look at it, Warner Bros., Logan theatre, for four days, you charged Warner Bros. $557? A. This is a new sheet. I have not seen this before.

Q. Well, whether you saw it before or not, there it is. You charged Warners $557 for a four-day run of this picture fourth-run? A. That is right.

Q. And you charged Mr. Greenfield $321 for a four-day run of this picture fourth-run on this sheet? A. That is what they earned.

Q. What? A. That is what they earned, I think, on percentage.

Q. They were on percentage, were they? A. I think so.

Mr. Proskauer: I have just gone into these typical ones. We will take the rest of them up on briefs if there is anything to be said on that. I want to indicate to your Honors merely that in this examination we entirely overlooked in Mr. Wright's cross-examination the length of the run and the character of the ultimate return. That is all.

(2059)

Mr. Raftery: Wait. We have got to separate those things. Some belong to Mr. Wright——

Mr. Proskauer: Render unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's.

Recross Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. Mr. Scully, you did not want the Court to understand, did you, from this recent examination, that you would never charge or never get from an independent more film rental for a following run than you get from an affiliated theatre for a prior run, did you? A. I don't know. What situation are you talking about?

Q. Well, as between runs, there are frequent situations where your affiliated house paid you less for a prior run in film rental than you get from an independent for a following run, isn't that right? A. Probably in some cases.

Mr. Wright: That is all.

Judge Hand: Any more questions of this witness?

Mr. Raftery: That is all.

Mr. Proskauer: I would like the Court's permission to call Mr. Benjamin Kalmenson—oh, have you something else?

Mr. Raftery: We are waiting for Mr. Caskey.

Mr. Wright: Of course, we might have some examination on that franchise list if we ever get a copy.

Mr. Raftery: You have got a copy.

(2060)

Mr. Wright: Well, we would not be able to do it now. I assume he will be available for further examination on this?

Mr. Raftery: I do not think you will want to examine him after you read it.

This document yesterday that got all mixed up here, nobody knows where it came from or what happened, but I just got word that one of the originals is on the way down. Now, it may require a detailed motion to strike out all of the evidence that Mr. Lazarus gave about the documents that Mr. Wright was examining him on.

Mr. Wright: We would, of course, expect the opportunity to examine him on the original document.

Mr. Raftery: We will bring him down for you.

Judge Hand: Is this the thing that is coming from California?

Mr. Raftery: No. His was coming from California, but I found one in New York. So outside of that I shall suspend now in favor of Judge Proskauer.

Mr. Proskauer: We will call Mr. Benjamin Kalmenson.

BENJAMIN KALMENSON, called as a witness on behalf of defendant Warner Bros., being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Proskauer:

Q. Mr. Kalmenson, where are you employed? A. I am (2061) employed at Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corporation in New York.

Q. And that is the Warner company which licenses and distributes the motion pictures to exhibitors? A. Yes.

Q. What is your position with the company? A. I am the sales manager.

Q. So that in the general local parlance of the trade you are in charge of distribution at Warners? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you been in that position? A. Since the latter part of October, 1941.

Q. And prior to that——

Judge Hand: Is this the main office supervisor of the whole business at Warner?

Mr. Proskauer: Yes.

Judge Hand: I see.

Q. You are the top of the distribution department? A. I am the general sales manager, sir.

Q. Before you became the general sales manager, what were you before 1941? A. I first entered the motion picture business in Pittsburgh as a salesman in the latter part of 1927. I remained in that capacity until about April 1930, when I was sent to Albany as the branch manager. I remained there until the latter part of 1931, when I was sent to Omaha as the branch manager; was there for a short period, as nearly as I can recollect, about four or five weeks, when I was transferred to Kansas City as the branch manager——
(2062)

Q. Let me interrupt you a minute, Mr. Kalmenson. Mr. Wright interrupted me to ask you whether all these employments were with Warner Bros.? A. I started with First National Pictures and it became Warner Bros. when the companies were amalgamated.

Q. So it was always with some company or interest which either was Warner or subsequently became Warner? A. Yes.

Q. You have been a Warner boy ever since—— A. Ever since my start in the motion picture business.

Q. Go ahead. A. I was transferred in the latter part of 1931—as I repeat, I spent a short period as the branch manager in Omaha, and then was transferred to Kansas City for a very short time; and on or about January 1, 1932, I was sent to Pittsburgh as the branch manager. I remained in that position until some time in 1934, when I resigned from Vitagraph, Inc., and obtained a position with Warner Bros. theatres in the Pittsburgh area as their buyer and booker. I remained in that capacity for approximately two years, when I resigned that position and went back into Vitagraph, Inc., as their central district manager with headquarters in Pittsburgh.

Q. You were distributing again there? A. Yes.

(2063)

Q. So your excursus into the theatre business was a brief two years? A. Yes, sir. I stayed in Pittsburgh as a central district manager for less than a year—I don't remember offhand the exact time—when I was transferred to New York as the Eastern district manager.

Then in or about 1938 some time I became the Western and Southern sales manager; and in 1941, as I told you, I became the general sales manager, my present capacity.

Q. Now, will you tell the Court just how your sales department is organized and how you do your business? A. I have an assistant who is known as the assistant sales manager. We have a Western and Southern sales manager, an Eastern sales manager, various and sundry clerical help and departments in the home office for the purpose of conducting distribution. Our field forces are made up of 31 branches throughout the United States, and 31 branch managers, with their individual sales personnel; and we have eight district managers in the United States.

Q. Now, all that organization functions for the purpose of selling pictures? A. Yes.

Q. And when I say selling pictures, of course I mean licensing them for exhibition? A. Yes.

Q. And you have to have, you find by experience in your business, that elaborate organization to go out and market your product among the exhibitors of the country? A. (2064)
Yes, sir.

Q. And the exhibitors of the country include affiliates and non-affiliates? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, since the consent decree, your general policy, I believe has been to sell your pictures singly? A. We started out marketing in groups of five or less, and in the last couple of years we have been selling on a single picture basis.

Q. That is, immediately after the Consent Decree your block booking was reduced to blocks of five? A. Five or less.

Q. Or less. And since the time you mentioned, you found it advantageous to sell your pictures singly? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I see Mr. Wright taking a note. I am sure he is going to ask you whether you have any master agreements of the kind described here yesterday where occasionally you make an over-all memorandum called a master agreement, which recites general terms that are imported into your deal sheets when you sell a particular picture. You do that on occasions, do you not? A. Yes.

Q. That is not very frequent, is it? A. There are some; not many.

Q. Without holding you to the exact figure, about how many master agreements would you say you had in the whole country at this time? A. I do not call them master agreements. We are marketing at this particular time, and for the last couple of years we market our pictures on a single picture basis. We find it necessary by reason of the fact that our printed form of contract has a very small space for additional clauses; we find it necessary to use a letter form to embody all the special agreements which might prevail in these individual situations. I do not call it a master agreement. It is a letter agreement for that particular picture.

Q. It was described here fully yesterday as just a statement of the general terms which do not ripen into a real sale until the deal sheet is made, and the deal sheet imports into itself these general terms that are in what we have been calling the master agreement? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And about how many of those do you have a year? A. To the best of my knowledge there would be very few. I would like to think there were less than ten or twenty.

Q. Now I will ask you a leading question, with Mr. Wright's permission, because I do not think it involves anything controversial, and we will get ahead. The way your pictures are sold—the salesman goes out to the customer, doesn't he? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he takes from the customer what is called an application? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That application is the form of contract which is already in evidence here as Exhibit 284, I believe. Now after the customer, the exhibitor, signs this form, 284, what happens to it then? A. The salesman sends it to the branch, to his branch manager, who in turn submits it to the home office for approval together with his recommendation.

(2066)

Q. Yes, I notice on the form there is a space, "Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Company by" with the legend, "The above signature of Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Company is made only for the purpose of authenticating this application and is not an acceptance thereof," and then down on the bottom lefthand of the form there is the legend, "The foregoing application is accepted, Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Company by (blank) General Manager of distribution." That last signature is the one that validates the contract? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that signature is put on either by you or by one of your subordinates in the main office here in New York? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In fixing your prices, do you make any distinction between an affiliated or a non-affiliated exhibitor? A. No, sir.

Q. In fixing your clearance or any of your other terms, do you take into account in any way whether it is an affiliate or a non-affiliate? A. No, sir.

Q. Referring to clearance a minute, as a matter of fact, clearances have been pretty well set through the country for a great many years, haven't they? A. Yes.

Q. And they have been acquiesced in by exhibitors, producers, independents, affiliates and everybody until there has grown up a kind of system of clearance? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Wright: I do not object to a moderate amount of leading, but I think it ought to be kept to the factual field.

Mr. Proskauer: I do not hear a word.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Mr. Proskauer: Talk to me nicely, so I can hear you.

Mr. Wright: I said I did not object to leading——

Mr. Proskauer: Off the record, Mr. Davis said to me yesterday that he was a physical wreck from trying to hear Mr. Wright. I have a stronger constitution and I am not a wreck, but it is an awful strain on you.

Judge Hand: I cannot help it. Go on.

Mr. Proskauer: I think it is a wonderful technique of Government counsel to wear us down.

What was the last question?

(Question and answer read.)

Q. What I mean is, save for the complaints that we have heard of here that came before the arbitral tribunals, you do not very often, or at least you most rarely ever have a question arise as to the negotiation of a clearance? A. Well, clearances have generally been established over a period of years. However, there does arise from time to time (2068) some dispute about it.

Q. I know that, but those are rare, are they not? A. Yes, I would say they are rare.

Judge Hand: They may be relatively rare but they make up practically all of these arbitration disputes, don't they, before that arbitration tribunal?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Proskauer: Yes. Out of 18,000 theatres there were only about 400 of them. That is one of the things we are going to put in evidence in here in a little more detail on Monday.

Judge Hand: That is painful.

Mr. Proskauer: But your Honor is quite right, most of those disputes related to comparatively, as we shall show, trivial clearance disputes.

Judge Hand: You are trying to make us a sort of a court of appeal over that august board with its own system of reports and jurisprudence.

Mr. Proskauer: Oh, no, we are not going to appeal from it. We have been delighted with what they did. We are going to show you that it was the greatest contribution to the stability and decency of this industry that was ever made.

Judge Hand: You may be making statements against interest now. You can't tell.

(2069)

Mr. Proskauer: I didn't hear you.

Judge Hand: You may be making a statement against interest now. You can't tell.

Mr. Proskauer: If I am, I will stand on it.

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Proskauer: But I am not.

Q. Some reference has been made here to the use of admission prices with respect to clearance. So far as you know, did you ever, since 1938, make a contract with any exhibitor in which you agreed that you would require a subsequent exhibitor to name any price?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I don't think a question like that is proper. The contract speaks for itself as to what the agreement was. If he wishes to elaborate on the form of the contract, all right.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Q. Do you know of any instance since 1938 in which you ever had in any agreement a covenant on the part of Warner to require a subsequent exhibitor to charge any particular price? A. No, sir.

Q. It is a fact, however, is it not, that in certain portions of the country, particularly in the West, and to a comparatively small extent, contracts frequently refer in the clearance provision to a clearance over subsequent-runs that charge a certain admission price? A. Yes, sir, it is.

Judge Hand: Now you are showing or attempting to show that Warner is free from this alleged taint, is that right, that exists elsewhere?

Mr. Proskauer: No, there is no taint. Nobody, in our view, is tainted for this reason——

Judge Hand: I said "alleged." I am not asking you to admit that you are tainted or anybody else.

Mr. Proskauer: I am trying——

Judge Hand: Far from suggesting it.

Mr. Proskauer: I am trying to show a course of conduct, which I believe is entirely legal.

Judge Hand: No, but I thought you were showing that this situation, so far as you were concerned, was peculiar to Warner's, to some extent, that in the West they have another system.

Mr. Proskauer: Oh, no. No, your Honor, what I am proving——

Judge Hand: All right, then I misunderstood the purpose.

Mr. Proskauer: May I state exactly what I understand the witness's testimony to be? We never make a contract with an exhibitor by which we say we will require a subsequent exhibitor to do something.

Judge Hand: Yes, I understood that.

(2071)

Mr. Proskauer: Most of our contracts do not refer at all to subsequent admission prices as a criterion of clearance.

Q. That is true, isn't it? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Proskauer: But in a small number of instances, particularly in the West, we sometimes refer to clearance as so many days over a subsequent-run house charging X cents admission.

Judge Hand: I understand.

Q. I have stated that correctly, have I not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. A very large proportion of these applications that come to the home office are approved, are they not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it very rare that one is not approved? A. It is not rare. Some of them are rejected.

Q. How many times a year would you say you rejected it? A. Well, there——

Q. Oh, just roughly. A. It all depends on the picture. If we are having difficulty getting terms that we think we are entitled to and the boys seem to send in contracts that are objectionable, we send them back. There may be, in some instances, there may be a great number, at least first until we convince our boys as to just what we want them to do. Sometimes they go right through; some pictures go through with few objections.

(2072)

Q. Your criterion in accepting or rejecting one of these applications is whether you think a fair price and fair terms to Warner Bros. have been obtained? A. Yes.

Q. Do you ever accept or reject an application on any consideration that involves whether the theatre is an affiliate or an independent? A. No, sir.

Q. What criteria do you use in selecting the customers to whom you endeavor to sell? A. We try to select the best customer in every situation.

Q. There are many cities in which you cannot sell the best customer, aren't there? A. I would like to think that we find the best customer in every situation, at least for us.

Q. At least that is your endeavor? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Some reference has been made here to the possibility of going out and saying A would give you 30 per cent and B would give you 25 per cent and you want to sell to A. Is it a fact that the percentage is just one element, though an important one, in the advisability of the contract? A. Yes, sir, it is.

Q. The other considerations, as have been testified to here, are the character of the operation, showmanship of the exhibitor, the size and location of the theatre, its seatage and a number of other elements of that sort. That is correct, is it not. A. Yes, sir.

(2073)

Q. Do you receive any information whatever from your theatre department of Warner Bros. as to what pictures—as to the details of their contracts for the pictures they purchase? A. Do not.

Q. There was put in evidence here by some of the other defendants a form that seems to be usual in the trade, where you get from the theatre department just a list of what they are playing, in the form that I show you here.

Mr. Proskauer: (To Mr. Wright) Just the same as the others. I am not going to give you anything new.

Q. (Continuing) You get a form like that? A. Yes, I get this form.

Q. This also goes to the advertising and to the distribution department? A. I know that it reaches my desk. I don't know just who else in the company gets it.

Q. And through that you get a notion, do you not, of what the public is going to see in your theatres? A. Yes, it acts more or less as a guide as to the type of pictures that the public is accepting; gives you general information as to what business is being done in these Warner theatres.

Q. I put a very illuminating note on my memorandum here. It enables you to feel the public pulse? A. Yes.

Q. As to what they are going to see? A. Yes.

Q. Do you use it for any other purpose whatever? A. No other purpose—if our own pictures were playing on there and some other pictures were playing, it gives you some comparative idea of how your pictures compare in the classification against other pictures.

Q. Do you use the information on there as a criterion in determining whether you will sell your picture or not sell it to any given exhibitor? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you ever take into account in any way what other people are selling Warner's? A. No, sir.

Q. I mean, in the sale of your own pictures? A. No, sir.

Q. How many positive prints do you make of each picture? A. We use about 360 on our better pictures and it ranges down to approximately 175 on some pictures that we have had.

Q. I have a schedule, which I am going to put in later, which uses $130 as approximately the average cost of a black and white print. That is about right, isn't it? A. That is about right.

Q. Varies between $125 and a higher figure. How many accounts do you service, generally? A. Oh, some of our better pictures, a good many of them, we have averaged about 14,000 accounts.

Q. And you got to make these 350 prints stretch out among 14,000 theatres? A. Yes, sir.

Q. It has been testified here the positive print takes the cost of being sent to one theatre, then it is either sent back to the exchange, in turn to be sent to another theatre, reconditioned at the exchange—— A. Inspected.

Q. ——or in some instances it may be, on your direction, sent from one exhibitor directly to another, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. But the essential thing is that you have got to stagger the exhibitions of these pictures so that your 350 prints will last for the 14,000 theatres? A. We allocate——

Q. I am using those figures arbitrarily. A. We allocate our prints into the various branches, sufficient to take care of their needs consistent with the playing arrangements which prevail in those individual territories.

Q. With respect to your own theatres, where you show your own pictures in your own theatres—of course, Warner shows pictures in Warner theatres? A. Yes.

Q. How do you negotiate with the theatre department for the exhibition of those pictures? A. We sell them those pictures the same as we do everybody else.

Q. And you really have an arm's length negotiation with them? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that has been going on ever since you have been sales manager? A. Yes, sir.

(2076)

Q. Do you find that the exhibition of your own pictures in your own theatres is of value by way of exploitation, advertising, development and general promulgation of the sales value of the picture? A. Very definitely.

Q. Does that redound to the benefit of both first-run exhibitors and all subsequent-run exhibitors? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that one of the outstanding advantages of your having your own theatres in key cities in which to show these pictures? A. That is one of the outstanding advantages, yes, sir.

Mr. Proskauer: We have been taking a tour here of 92 cities. I am going to try to avoid taking that tour, your Honors. And I would like, with your Honors' permission, if the record would show at this point that Government's Exhibit 129, which is our admission of fact, and the interrogatories 6 through 11 inclusive already contain the information as to what our first-run accounts are in all cities, including these 92 or 73, or however you figure it, and I am not going to burden your Honors with going around the whole lot.

Q. I will ask you this general question: In selecting the customer to whom you endeavor to sell your first-run product in these 92 cities, these 73 cities, or in any city, do you try to get the best available customer that will yield you (2077)
the best revenue? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And is there any other consideration taken into account by you or your department? A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever used any scheme or device, clearance or anything else, to discriminate or monopolize against any independent exhibitor? A. No, sir.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I think there ought to be some limit on the extent to which the defendant's argument can just be put in the witness's mouth. I agree it does not make much difference one way or the other.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Mr. Proskauer: Now will you stipulate the regular stipulation, that this witness, if asked, would testify as Mr. Zukor did, and as contained in Mr. Skouras's deposition or statement here, in denial of all conspiracy, agreement, and all the other terrible terms which are imported into antitrust cases?

Mr. Wright: So stipulated.

Mr. Proskauer: You may cross-examine.

Cross Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. Mr. Kalmenson, there was one answer you gave that I did not quite understand, in which you said the exhibition of Warner pictures in your theatres was of some special benefit to subsequent-run exhibitors. Did I understand you correctly? A. I said that they were—what was that question again?

(2078)

Mr. Wright: Will you read the question?

Q. (Read.)

Mr. Proskauer: What he really said was the exploitation in the first-run theatres.

A. The ability to have theatres and play Warner pictures in them for the purposes of getting them established in territories is of benefit to Warner Bros. and all exhibitors, whether they be subsequent-run, or any particular area, or throughout the entire country.

Q. I just wanted to get what the precise benefit to the subsequent exhibitor was that arises from showing a Warner picture in one of your theatres as distinguished from another first-run theatre? A. The ability to exploit them in the manner that we deem best establishes the picture in that area for that subsequent-run exhibitor, so when he exhibits it, he cashes in on the manner in which we have established the picture.

Q. You establish and exploit your pictures in many areas in first-run theatres that you don't own or operate, isn't that right? A. Yes, that is right, but we cannot get the same cooperation in situations that we don't own or operate, as we do in Warner theatres.

Q. What has that got to do with the subsequent-run exhibitor? A. It establishes the value of the picture for all exhibitors, subsequent-run or otherwise, and that is what I understood to be the question.

Mr. Wright: Were you going to offer this (indicating)?

Mr. Proskauer: I had not intended to. I don't care one way or the other. It is just exactly like the other forms that were in evidence.

Mr. Wright: Do you want it marked with your number? I think it would be simpler. I would like to have it in.

Mr. Proskauer: I have no choice. If you want it in, you may mark it with my number.

Mr. Wright: I think it would be less confusing if we did make that W-1.

Judge Hand: Is this to be really marked as offered by you or by Judge Proskauer?

Mr. Wright: Well, I am perfectly willing to offer it. I just wanted to make it clear from the number that it was a Warner exhibit produced by Warner, that is all.

Judge Hand: I am not suggesting you offer it, far be it from me.

Mr. Wright: I understand that. Let us have it marked.

The Clerk: As a Warner exhibit or Government exhibit?

(2080)

Mr. Proskauer: Whichever Mr. Wright says.

The Clerk: Is it a Government exhibit?

Mr. Wright: All right, give it the next Government exhibit number.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 385.)

Q. This Exhibit 385, that is a form that you receive daily, is it not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the theatres that are listed on the form, those are not all of the theatres that Warner operates, is that right? A. No, sir.

Q. Those are selected, what you call key runs? A. Key, yes.

Q. I believe you testified on your direct examination you did not receive the information as to the details of the contracts which Warner theatres made with other distributors. What is it you did receive with respect to those contracts? A. Just this—with respect to what contracts?

Q. The contracts that the Warner theatres make with other distributors. A. I don't receive anything in that connection in any shape, manner or form.

Mr. Proskauer: Except that exhibit.

A. (Continuing) This has nothing to do with contracts. This is simply—let me see if I understand you correctly, (2081)

Mr. Wright. Let us see what it says here. It says here, "Date October 29, 1945, Monday. In the Albany zone, the Strand Theatre in Albany played Uncle Harry as one feature and On Stage Everybody is the second feature. Current day's receipts were $601 and for the week it was $10,178," and shows the picture that played the previous week under the same circumstances, and its gross. There is nothing about any contracts in any shape, manner or form in connection with it.

Q. The information that is recorded on the report there marked in evidence as Exhibit 385, that is the only report—the only information you receive as to the terms on which the Warner Bros. theatres license the pictures of other distributors, is that right? A. This is what it says. This is a record of the theatre's receipts. No terms or anything there.

Mr. Wright: Would you read him the question again?

A. (Continuing) The questions don't fit in with this.

Q. (Read.)

Mr. Proskauer: I object to the question because it imports into it that this has information as to the terms. I have no objection to a question, is this the only information you receive about what is being exhibited in Warner Bros.' theatres

(2082)

Judge Hand: All right. That is a valid objection. Your question could be modified.

Mr. Wright: That is agreeable to me.

Mr. Proskauer: That is what is bothering the witness.

Q. Is that right? A. This is the only information I receive with respect to these pictures in Warner theatres.

Mr. Wright: Would you read him the question as directed by his counsel, and then let us get a yes or no answer to that.

(Record read.)

Mr. Wright: That is the question you are to answer.

Judge Hand: He has answered it already.

Mr. Wright: That can be answered yes or no.

Judge Hand: No, he just doesn't have to answer it yes or no for some slavish tradition or reason. He has answered it clearly.

Mr. Wright: To me his answer was equivocal.

Judge Hand: I don't see why.

Mr. Wright: Would you read——

Judge Hand: If you want to probe him more on it, go ahead.

Mr. Wright: Would you read the prior answer that he made?

(Record read.)

(2082a)

Mr. Wright: I submit that answer——

Judge Hand: What his answer was is that this is the only information.

Mr. Wright: —is less extensive than the question. I wanted to get the question answered.

Judge Hand: Ask him about anything else, if you want to, besides the Warner theatres.

(2083)

Q. Is it or is it not a fact, Mr. Kalmenson, that you receive no other information from the Warner theatres as to what pictures they are playing than such as is contained on this Exhibit 385? A. It is.

Mr. Proskauer: Wait a minute. The question was, is it or is it not a fact, and I do not know what the answer means. Would you let me put a question?

The Witness: Let me clarify it.

Mr. Proskauer: Do you get any information——

Judge Hand: No, do not put questions for Mr. Wright.

Mr. Proskauer: All right, I beg your Honor's pardon. I wanted to help him.

Mr. Wright: That fault is mine there.

Judge Hand: That is old stuff.

Q. Is it a fact, Mr. Kalmenson, that the only information that you receive as to what pictures the Warner Bros. theatres are playing is the information contained in reports such as this one marked in evidence as Exhibit 385? A. I don't know as I understand you, Mr. Wright, but that form that was placed before me——

Mr. Wright: I do not see why that cannot be answered yes or no, if the Court please.

A. (Continuing) That form——

Judge Hand: Have the question read to the witness. It is perfectly capable of being answered yes or no.

(2084)

Q. (Question read.) A. That is the only information I get in those theatres.

Q. Can you just answer the question yes or no? A. I could if I understand it. I am trying to make sure there isn't something about the thing that isn't in accordance with the facts.

Mr. Wright: Will you read the question again?

Q. (Question reread.) A. Well, it is a general question. There are many other theatres. One picture, Warner pictures themselves, I get a report on every one of them, but that is the only report I get, that contained in that sheet, that contains other than Warner Bros. pictures in Warner theatres.

Judge Bright: Do you get any information from any other source?

The Witness: No, sir.

Mr. Wright: That is all.

Mr. Proskauer: That is all.

Mr. Seymour: I have one question.

By Mr. Seymour:

Q. Does Warner Bros. license its pictures for exhibition in some of the theatres operated by theatre operating companies in which Paramount has an interest? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are the negotiations for those licenses conducted at the offices of those companies, as far as you know? A. They are, with one exception.

(2085)

Q. What is that? A. The Newman theatre in Kansas City, which I understand is negotiated for with Mr. Hyman in the New York office.

Q. In the course of those negotiations with the various theatre operating companies for the licensing of Warner Bros. films for exhibition in theatres operated by the several companies, do the negotiations or arrangements which the Warner theatres may have made or may be making for the exhibition of Paramount pictures play any part? A. No, sir.

JASON S. JOY, called as a witness on behalf of defendant Twentieth Century-Fox, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Caskey:

Q. Mr. Joy, where do you reside? A. 630 Warner Avenue, West Los Angeles, California.

Q. What is your present occupation? A. I am an executive of the Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation. I specifically have charge of all professional personnel at the studio with the exception of actors.

Q. How long have you been employed by—— Judge Bright: Exception of what?

The Witness: Actors and actresses, sir.

(2086)

Q. How long have you been employed by Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation? A. Since December 1932.

Q. Where is the studio of Twentieth Century-Fox located? A. At 10201 West Pecos Boulevard, Los Angeles.

Q. Will you describe the studio very briefly? A. The studio covers about 350 acres, situated a little west of Beverly Hills, between Santa Monica and Pecos Boulevard. It has 16 sound stages; it has administration buildings, departmental buildings and what we call a back block where our outside sets are erected and remain; it has a large lake and rail facilities, etc.

Q. Does Twentieth Century-Fox produce motion pictures at this studio? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you have under contract a number of producers? A. Yes, sir, we have sixteen producers under contract.

Q. Tell the Court what a producer is? A. A producer is a man whose responsibility it is to select material, story material, either in play form, story form, or original form, who is capable of supervising its writing, its adaptation to script form, who is competent to supervise the casting of the picture, and who can work with the various departments, wardrobe, set construction and the rest of them in the development of the physical aspects of the production of the picture, and who can supervise its direction, its editing, its (2087) cutting, its scoring and final release, final form of release.

Q. A man who can start with an idea for a picture and end up with a finished product? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was the producer of The House on 92nd Street? A. Louis de Rochemont.

Q. He is the original producer of March of Time? A. He, as I understand it, he with his brother organized and originated March of Time. Louis came with us—Louis de Rochemont came with us—about a year and a half ago and his first picture was The Fighting Lady, which he made in cooperation with the Navy, and his second picture is The House on 92nd Street, which he made in cooperation with the F.B.I.

Q. Who is the producer of Dolly Sisters? A. Dolly Sisters was produced by George Jessel. That is his first production at the studio.

Q. How large a number of recognized producers are there in the industry? A. That is hard to say, sir, because I haven't tried to count them, but I should imagine that if there were fifty recognized producers that would be—if I should say fifty, that would be about correct.

Q. Is there competition between Twentieth Century-Fox and the other studios to employ these producers? A. There is always competition in Hollywood on almost every subject, sir, and that includes producers.

(2088)

Q. And have you under contract now producers who formerly were employed by other studios? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are there producers now employed by other studios which at one time in the employ of Twentieth Century-Fox? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And these sixteen producers you do not classify as independent producers, do you? A. No, sir.

Q. What is an independent producer? A. In my view an independent producer is a man who is responsible to no one but himself, concerning the financing, the production, the story, the casting, its release. In fact he is the head of a separate company to produce a picture or a series of pictures without reference to anybody else.

Q. Do such independent producers from time to time use the studio facilities of some of these defendants? A. I understand so.

Q. These sixteen that we are talking about are in the employ of the company? A. Yes.

Q. Over them is whom? A. Darryl F. Zanuck.

Q. What is his title? A. He is vice-president in charge of production.

Q. Does he also produce certain pictures himself? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And assist in supervising the production of others? A. All the rest.

(2089)

Q. He was the producer of Wilson? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does Twentieth Century-Fox have under contract to it directors? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many directors does it have under contract? A. I think we have 25 directors who are under term-contract and we have three who are under one-picture contracts.

Q. Will you explain that latter phrase? A. Well, a term contract means that a man is available to us for any picture we want him to direct over a period of time. A one-picture deal or a two-picture deal, in this case each of the three is a one-picture deal, they are employed to direct only the picture for which they were employed to work for us. When that period is over they are free to go, unless we want to re-employ them, free to go to some other studio and do whatever they want to do.

Q. What number of recognized directors are there in Hollywood? A. I should say about 300.

Q. Is there competition between Twentieth Century-Fox and the other studios in securing the services of directors? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I hand you page 1935 of the stenographic minutes and call your attention to a list of directors which Mr. Lazarus testified yesterday were directing or producing pictures which were distributed through United Artists. Have any of those directors directed pictures for Twentieth Century-Fox? A. (2090)
Quite a number of them, sir.

Q. Such as whom? A. Alfred Hitchcock did Lifeboat; William Wellman did Thunderbird, and he did other pictures for us; Jean Renoir did Swamp Water; Archie Mayo was a contract director for us, and so was Frank Tuttle, and so was Allan Dwan, and so was Frank Lloyd and Gregory Ratoff. Harold Schuster made two or three pictures for us, the most notable one being The Wings of the Morning, which he made for us in England; and Preston Sturges made one picture for us early—I can't remember the name of it now.

Q. Are some of these directors who are now making pictures which are being released through United Artists so-called independent producers? A. Yes, some of them.

Q. They have developed or enlarged from the status of director to producer? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many pictures a year in the current market does a director make? A. That depends, sir, on the type of picture, its budget, its shooting time, and its character. If, for example, you should consider Henry King, who made The Song of Bernadette, and then Wilson afterwards, you would consider that a director could make, probably half a picture a year, but if you consider a low budget picture, which has 18 or 24 or 30 days shooting, he might conceivably make four or five a year.

Judge Bright: What does the director do?

(2091)

The Witness: Your Honor, a director assumes command of the picture. He becomes associated with the picture about, usually about two or three months before the final draft of the script is finished. After the first rough draft of the script is finished, usually a director is assigned to it, so that he may then begin the process of the development of the various assistants that he needs, sets, wardrobe, all of the other departments, the mechanical and service departments, that have to come into the making of a picture. He also contributes toward the final draft of the script his own suggestions which are, of course, very important.

Once the picture gets on the stage he is in command. He decides what scenes he will shoot, what angles he will shoot, how the characters will deliver themselves. He looks at the first cut of the rushes—he looks every day at the previous day's rushes and decides on what various takes he will assemble through his cutting into the picture, and he has the first crack—excuse me—first opportunity at the rough cut of the picture before it is sent to his producer and the executives of the studio, to help in final assembly of the picture. He is captain of his crew while he is in front of the cameras.

(2092)

Q. And in association with the producer and the executive producer, and possibly others, does he participate in the casting of the picture? A. Yes, sir, most definitely.

Q. Now, in addition to the producers and directors, does Twentieth Century-Fox have a stock company? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is a stock company? A. In our parlance a stock company consists of any player who is under term contract. Now, by "any player", in our vocabulary is meant anybody from the very top star down to the least, most insignificant dance girl, boy or girl, who has just come in on a very small contract trying to learn the business of acting.

Q. That is, the word "player" is all-embracing? A. "Player" means anybody who is employed to stand in front of a camera.

Q. And what is the definition of "actor"? A. Same thing.

Q. Now, these actors or players, however, are classified, are they not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And beginning at the top what is the first classification? A. We call them stars, either male or female. Then come feature players; then come bit players; then come specialists, dancers, or whatever specialty they may have; then come atmospheric people, extras—before atmospheric people, extras who are registered in scenes, and then the crowd, the atmosphere.

(2093)

Q. Mr. Davis wants to know where the Roman populace comes from? A. From Central Avenue, out our way.

Judge Hand: What is all this for, anyway, to show the difficulties or distinction between so-called art? What is it?

Mr. Caskey: It is to show the circumstances under which motion pictures are produced today, and the fact that these pictures of Twentieth Century-Fox are produced in competition with other companies; that there is no monopoly or attempt to monopolize with respect to any ingredient that goes into motion pictures.

Judge Hand: I do not think you have to go into all this detail to show that.

Mr. Caskey: I will roll along as fast as I can.

Q. Approximately how many persons are under contract at the present time? A. About 125.

Q. And have you the figures there for the past years? A. Well, they run about that——

Q. Some years? A. Yes, anywhere from 120 to 140 or 150.

Judge Hand: These extras and so-called atmosphere players are taken from a pool that any one of the producers can use?

The Witness: Yes, they are not under contract.

Our situation at the moment, we have 125 under contract, of whom around 10 to 15, depending on whose judgment it is, are stars; 110 to 115 are feature players, and stock; and then we employ on the average of 350 free-lance players who are under contract to no one, who are engaged picture by picture by studios. We have under contract 16 multiple non-exclusive players; by that I mean they are engaged to make feature pictures for us, but they may also work for other companies. And we have also four players who are under one-picture contracts to us.

Q. And this group of players under contract includes actors, feature players, specialists, and the like? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are there other studios who maintain similar stock companies? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In addition to the stock companies maintained by Twentieth Century-Fox and the other studios, are there a large number of freelance players? A. Probably, of all kinds probably running up to ten thousand—well, no, about seven thousand freelance players.

Q. What is a freelance player? A. A freelance player is one who engages himself to a company for one picture and does not work under a term contract.

Q. Are there persons who are classified as stars? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who are freelance? A. Yes.

(2095)

Q. Can you name a few? A. Many of those who were named yesterday in releases by United Artists are freelance players. Claudette Colbert, for example, and Ronald Coleman. I cannot think at the moment of a lot of important ones, but some of them are very important.

Q. Are there a substantial number of feature players who are freelance? A. A great many. A great many. There are more than those who are under contract.

Q. Now I call your attention to page 1936 of the stenographic minutes, and a list of the stars that Mr. Raftery assures us are going to play in forthcoming United Artists pictures or have played in very recent ones. Have some of those stars played in pictures produced by Twentieth Century-Fox? A. Gregory Peck was in Keys to the Kingdom; Jennifer Jones was in "Song of Bernadette"; Linda Darnell was in many of our pictures; she is under contract to us. Dennis O'Keefe is just finishing Doll Face for us; Claudette Colbert has worked in several of our pictures; Don Ameche was under contract with us for a great many years; Charles Lawton has worked for us; Randolph Scott has been under contract to us; George Raft is under a one-picture contract with us; Victor McLaglen was with us for years; J. Carrol Naish has worked for us frequently; George Sanders has been under contract with us; Jane Powell has worked for us once or twice; Constance Moore worked for us; Constance Bennett has worked for us. I think she has a one-picture contract with us now. Gracie Fields was associated with us for years; Rex Harrison is just joining us from England; Constance Cummings has worked for us, and Francis Lederer, Signe Hasso, Gene Lockhart—the last two in The House on 92nd Street.

Q. Now, is there competition between Twentieth Century-Fox and any other studios producing pictures to place stars and feature players under contract? A. Well, the answer is yes, of course.

Q. Is there competition between Twentieth Century-Fox and the other studios to secure particular players for parts in particular pictures? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there competition among Twentieth Century-Fox and the other studios in the securing of special acts, name bands and the like for particular pictures? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you lend—as the phrase is used—some of these actors and actresses who are under contract to other studios? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you prepared a detailed schedule of that for the purpose of your testimony? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you lend them to studios which are affiliated with the defendants in this case? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you lend them to other producers? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Independent producers? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, what is the basis for determination as to whether or not you will make a so-called loan of a star or feature player? A. If a person is available so far as work is concerned, and willing so far as his or her own career is concerned, and if the borrowing vehicle, the picture in which he or she is to go, will advance his or her career, or, at least, not hurt it, then we are disposed to loan anybody we have who do not deprive us of that privilege by their contractural relations with us. I think there are only two or three we have under contract whose contract says we may not loan them. But anybody else that anybody wants, if they can prove to us by their script, by the set-up, by the director they are going to use and the balance of the cast, and in any of the several ways that are important, and prove to us that this will will help our player and the player is available so far as work is concerned, and willing, then we are happy to loan our people, and it does not make any difference to us what the affiliation is of the borrowing people.

Q. And it is a fact that there are a considerable number of independent producers making pictures in Hollywood at this time who are dependent upon the borrowing of stars and feature players from Twentieth Century-Fox and other studios for the casting of their pictures? A. Yes.

Judge Hand: They have their own studios?

The Witness: Your Honor, most of them do not. Most of them rent space in service studios, places that are available for them; and most of them, because they make only one picture at a time, or one picture occasionally, it is impossible for them to own the equipment that is necessary to make a picture, and it is equally impossible for them to employ and keep under contract the stars and the players that they need to make pictures with, and therefore they are dependent upon the freelance market in Hollywood, and their borrowing power from other established studios.

Judge Bright: Would you mind giving an illustration? I have just seen "Along Came Jones." That is an independent production?

The Witness: Yes.

Judge Bright: How was that handled?

The Witness: Well, I am not familiar with that. That was Gary Cooper's picture, wasn't it?

Judge Bright: Yes.

The Witness: I am sorry, your Honor, that I am not going to be able to give you the details that will be sufficiently clear——

Judge Bright: Well, is he a star?

The Witness: He is a star.

Judge Bright: Employed by any one of the defendants?

The Witness: No, sir, he is not. As I recall it—and I am not familiar with that particular situation—he made that in association with International and released it through RKO. I think that is right, sir, but I wish somebody who really knows would answer for me.

By Mr. Caskey:

Q. I notice on this list that you have recently loaned Joan Blondel for a picture. A. She was loaned to M-G-M, as I recall it.

Q. And do you recall the picture? A. She is still over there. That is 1945?

Q. 1945. A. We sent three people over for that particular picture; Tommy Mitchell, Joan Blondel and James Gleason.

Q. And are they stars or feature players? A. Well, it would depend upon who says so, they are either stars or feature players. Gleason obviously is a feature player. Sometimes Mitchell has the leading role, but usually we call him a feature player, and so would we call Joan Blondel, although she would like not to have me say that.

Q. Her agent would say that she was a star? A. That is right.

Q. Now, I notice that you recently loaned Carol Landis for a picture. To whom was that? A. That is an Arnold (2100) production, isn't it?

Q. Yes. Who is he. A. Arnold Pressburger; that is an independent producer, released through United Artists.

Q. Is she a star? A. Of a minor calibre. She is more than feature player.

Q. There are even graduations among the stars? A. Yes.

Mr. Davis: One star differs from another star in glory.

Mr. Caskey: And I think, Mr. Davis, you can give me the citation for that.

Mr. Davis: Certainly.

Q. Now is there any distinction as to whether the producer is affiliated or not affiliated with one of these defendants in coming to a conclusion as to whether you will lend a star or a feature player? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you also have under contract camera men? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And other technicians? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you secure the services of those men in competition with other studios? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it necessary to put a camera man under contract? A. In the business of making motion pictures, sir, the demand so far exceeds the supply of top flight people, that in order to be sure that when an important production is ready for the cameras, that we have a camera man who is skillful enough to handle that production, it has become necessary for us to put cameramen under contract. I think we began (2101)

that practice about three years ago.

Q. Twentieth Century-Fox also has on its lot various facilities which from time to time rents or loans to other producers, does it not? A. Yes.

Q. Will you describe some of those? A. Well, for example, we have a large lake on the top of our lot. It is the only lake of its kind in the business out there. We have some ships that actually float and are properly rigged, that are the only ships out there like that. We use our lake only once in a while. Anytime anybody wants to rent it from us when we are not using it, they are perfectly welcome to come, and our production department charges them the same rate that it charges a production of our own for the use of those facilities.

We also have a railroad station and some track and some cars of sorts that we use ourselves occasionally, and we rent those out.

We have the only street that looks exactly like a New England street, to a Westerner at least, and that is loaned out occasionally.

We do rent out our set facilities and we do go to other studios and rent their set facilities sometimes when they have things that we need. We do not, because of shortage of material and the availability of facilities—we are not able to rent out sound tracks—I mean sound equipment and camera equipment, and things of that sort, because we are down, as all the other studios are down, and will be until we get replacements.

Q. That is a war-time condition? A. That is right.

Q. Now, in lending or renting these facilities, is there any distinction made as to whether the lessee is an affiliated producer or unaffiliated producer? A. No, there is not. I have not any figures here, but I imagine that we rent to the unaffiliated, so-called unaffiliated, much more than we do the affiliated, because they are without these facilities more often than the affiliated ones are.

Q. To your knowledge, has Twentieth Century-Fox ever withheld the use of any of these facilities to a producer who requested it? A. Not if they are available. No, sir.

Q. Do you ever withhold them for the purpose of hampering or impeding the production of another picture? A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Joy, what are the sources of the motion picture story? A. Well, they come from all sources: the published play, or book, or story; the unpublished book or play or (2103) story; an article, which is not fictional, or what we call an original.

Now a book or play needs no explanation. An unpublished book or play comes to us through, or is found by us, or is delivered to us by our story department, and the fact that it is not published or has not succeeded, does not necessarily mean that it is not good material for our purpose, because it may not have been well equipped for the stage, but by our process we may be able to make it into what we call a good story.

The story department—do you want me to continue?

Q. Yes, if you will, tell about the story department. A. Our story department, with offices in Hollywood, New York and London—and before the war they were in Paris, Budapest and Vienna, and other places—and will be again, I hope, bye and bye—we have about 35 people in Hollywood and in the New York offices, and a few of them are executives but most of them readers and researchers and analysts. In London we have three executives and ten readers.

Now the function of the story department is, of course, a very important function. In the first place, they are suppose to know and catalogue every piece of printed matter in any language that is currently produced. Now the first reason for that—of course their records go back for years and years and years——

(2104)

Judge Goddard: Will you please speak just a little louder.

Mr. Caskey: Turn a little towards the court.

The Witness: I am sorry, your Honor.

A. (Continuing) The first function of the story department is to find material that we can use readily. The second function is to encourage and to direct the writings of important writers toward motion picture material.

The third function is to encourage unpublished writers, new authors, or authors that have had only one publication—encourage and help them in what they are preparing; and the fourth function—I think it might be called the fourth—is to guard ourselves against possible plagiarism suits; and the fifth is to encourage or help the adaptation of what we have purchased, getting it into channels in the studio so they can be transferred into script form.

Now on the subject of helping to guide new writers—for example, Centennial Summer, which we purchased a little while ago, by a man by the name of Idell—he consulted at long length with our people in the development of the story. There have been many instances of that. Then we engage noted writers to write a story specifically for us, not on salary, but which would be purchased when it is finished. We have a man by the name of Galligan, who is now writing a whaling story for us; we did employ John

Steinbeck to write the Lifeboat story for us, and we are doing that sort of thing quite frequently.

Q. What do you do to encourage younger writers? A. We have writing scholarships which we have made available so far only to service men or ex-service men, and women, encouraging them by reason of the money grant to further their education and their experimentation and the development of their writing ability. I do not know exactly how these men are chosen, but they are chosen as a result of examination of material submitted.

Q. So that with respect to printed manuscripts, you from time to time purchase a published book; you from time to time assist or encourage a writer to write a novel which you think will have motion picture possibilities; and you stimulate the writing of material directly for your motion pictures? A. That is right. I did not cover the subject of originals.

Q. No, I have not come to that yet. A. Excuse me.

(2106)

Q. In preparation for your testimony today, did you cause to have an article inserted in the trade papers about the awards to service men? A. No, sir.

Q. Well, there is a reference to it there, is there not? A. Yes.

Q. That gives the details of the award? A. I notice $1500 is the award given.

Q. Now, in addition to these published books, are a certain number of motion pictures made from original stories? A. Made from original ideas.

Q. Original ideas, and written by—— A. By Staff writers.

Q. Under contract to you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Give us an example of recently produced pictures? A. Well, when we call them original, we do not mean that the subject matter or the principal theme is original with us. We mean that we have taken a subject or a theme and have developed it ourselves rather than having bought something from somebody else.

Judge Hand: Are you responsible for the selection of them in your company?

The Witness: Am I personally, sir?

Judge Hand: Yes, sir.

The Witness: No, sir. Wilson is an example of what we call an original; Purple Heart is an example of what we call an original—if I may refer just a second I probably could give you many—Laura, was not; Take It or Leave It was; Something for the Boys—no. Molly and Me; the Bull Fighters; Billy Rose's Diamond Horseshoe; Nob Hill; Captain Eddie; the Dolly Sisters; The House on 92nd Street. That is all of this year.

Q. Well, that is enough to illustrate it. Now are these writers under contract, in part at least? A. Yes, sir. We have 28 under term contract; and we have 35 who are on special assignment, or they are on what we call a weekly basis. Now the people who are on contract are there for a year with options; the people who are on a week to week basis are there for just their assignment, and can be continued on with the mutual consent of the writer and the studio. Those who are brought in for one specific assignment usually come for a guaranteed number of weeks, and when that assignment is finished then they are either re-engaged for a new contract for something else, or they depart and go to some other studio.

Q. Now, is there competition between Twentieth Century-Fox and the other studios in the placing under contract of these term writers? A. I think that the most, or perhaps equal, almost, now, to the competition concerning actors and actresses, is the competition concerning writers. There is very keen competition.

Q. Does that apply not only to the contract term writers but to the special writers you employ from time to time? A

Well, that is a little different. There are a great many very competent writers who do not desire to be under term contract. They would much rather work from picture to picture, because they have then the selection and refusal of the work they will do. There is a great deal of competition in the securing of these so-called term writers because they are in great demand by every studio; and there are relatively few of the thirteen hundred that are recognized as writers who are really outstanding writers in the freelance field. So that those twenty or thirty who are outstanding are always in demand, and therefore there is great competition to secure their services or in the securing of their services.

Judge Bright: Who wrote Wilson?

The Witness: Lamar Trotti wrote Wilson.

Judge Bright: Is he one of these freelancers?

The Witness: No, sir. He has worked for Fox and Twentieth Century-Fox since 1932. He is a Georgia boy who came up through the newspaper field and came into Fox as an assistant in the story department; his first story was with another writer, Dudley Nichols, called Judge Priest; and since then he has written Alexander's Ragtime Band; Young Mr. Lincoln; Alexander Graham Bell. He worked on

Lloyd's of London, several other stories of that sort; and then two and a half years before Wilson was released he started to work on that.

Judge Hand: These were not preceded by stories?

The Witness: No, sir; although in all of them there is a very great deal of material, background material, research material.

Judge Hand: Oh, yes. We shall adjourn until two-fifteen. This afternoon we shall adjourn at three-thirty.

(Recess until 2:15 p.m.)

(2110)

AFTERNOON SESSION

Mr. Caskey: Mr. Raftery, you want to produce?

Mr. Raftery: In the United Artists testimony, Mr. Wright asked for the production of some grosses on foreign pictures that Mr. Frohlich had put in and I have already given the grosses. Is there anything you want? Do you want them in evidence or what do you want? I am not offering them.

Mr. Wright: Have we got a list of them? That's all right. We can put them in.

Mr. Raftery: You also asked for the contract for Stage Door Canteen. I have a copy which I assure you is a copy of the original, dated June 24, 1943, for the exhibition of Stage Door Canteen in the Los Angeles and San Francisco, California, exchange territories. The percentage terms stipulated are on a sliding scale, starting at 20 per cent low and going to 50 per cent. In that agreement it refers to a schedule —it refers to an agreement dated December 7, 1942, and I have also produced a copy of that.

Mr. Wright: Thank you.

Judge Goddard: With whom is the contract?

Mr. Raftery: Fox West Coast Agency Corporation, as agent.

The other controversy was this, and I think Mr.

(2111)

Wright and I have agreed on it. You will remember yesterday when Mr. Lazarus was on the stand there was a page 6a in a document which Mr. Caskey discovered was not really a part of the document. Well now, that is the fact, so Mr. Wright has asked for the production of all our contracts for that year with the various Fox companies. So I have produced first a document dated the 1st day of September 1941 between United Artists Corporation and Fox West Coast Agency Corporation. That is the document that had the erroneous page 6a in it, which Mr. Marcus tells me was not produced by United Artists but was given to the Government by one Eddie Small, who released pictures through United Artists. I also have——

Mr. Wright: Can we have that one marked?

Mr. Raftery: I will give you the whole book. This has nothing to do with that one.

I have an agreement here between United Artists Corporation, dated the 1st day of September 1941, between United Artists Corporation and Fox Intermountain Amusement Corporation; an agreement dated the same day between Fox Midwest Corporation and United Artists; an agreement dated the same day between United Artists and Evergreen Theatres Corporation; an agreement dated the same day between United Artists and Fox Wisconsin Amusement Corporation; and the deal sheets are all attached.

And this is Mr. Muller's, the treasurer's, original.

Mr. Wright: I would suggest that we have this marked then with the number that was on the withdrawn exhibit, as Government's Exhibit 383, and we will offer this.

Mr. Raftery: Will you stipulate, Mr. Wright, that all testimony asked in reference to page 6a either by—or all questions asked and all answers given in regard to page 6a of the exhibit that is not in evidence be stricken?

Mr. Wright: I would agree that they be stricken but I would want to have the—that is, I think the substance of what we would bring out if you changed the examination in this way can be handled without calling Mr. Lazarus back and examining him on the new exhibit that has been put in. Let us see if this won't do it. At page 1962, if my question is changed to read this way, instead of saying, "I notice that on page 6a it refers to test situations in Kansas City, Milwaukee, St. Louis, St. Lake City and Denver", if you substitute for that, "I notice that on page 6 it refers to test situations in the Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle exchange territories", then I take it his testimony would be in substance just as it is now, that there is no——

Mr. Raftery: I have no quarrel with that.

(2113)

Mr. Wright: —problem there.

Mr. Raftery: I have no quarrel providing it is also our understanding that if he were here he would testify—or, rather, that this contract has to do with theatres in that area that he is talking about.

Mr. Wright: Well, I think that clearly appears, as I say, from the subsequent testimony.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 383.)

Mr. Raftery: Are you going to offer those other contracts that we have produced?

Mr. Wright: Well, I wanted to see where they fit in. These, I think, should go with an exhibit that is already in evidence, and I was going to ascertain the number of that exhibit and offer these as A and B.

Mr. Raftery: That is all right, that is, with the deal sheets that you have already put in on the Stage Door Canteen.

Mr. Wright: Yes, it should be. It will be offered and given numbers A and B as soon as I can determine that number.

Mr. Raftery: Now, as to the rest of the examination, most of it was by Judge Bright, and I think that the Court will stipulate with me that as to 6a, anything you elicited based on 6a may go out, as well as what Mr. Wright has talked about?

(2114)

Mr. Wright: Well, as I understand it, the testimony remains in the record as it is with that modification that I suggested?

Mr. Raftery: All right. As long as we have got the facts, that is all that matters.

Mr. Caskey: Now, I should like to have Mr. Wright stipulate with me that I may supply, without calling a witness, the actual percentage which was paid for first-run Los Angeles on Stage Door Canteen under this sliding scale arrangement.

Mr. Wright: Haven't we got that already in answer to interrogatory 6? We do have the actual rental.

Mr. Caskey: We have the actual rental, and I want to show the percentage.

Mr. Wright: The actual gross too.

Mr. Caskey: I think it was 37½ per cent, what it actually worked out to.

Mr. Wright: Well, we have no objection to that.

Mr. Caskey: May I recall Colonel Joy?

JASON S. JOY, resumed the stand.

Direct Examination continued by Mr. Caskey:

Q. Mr. Joy, what is the bargaining process for the acquisition of novels or the screen rights for novels? A. That depends in what manner they are brought to our attention or we find them. Normally literary agents handle literary properties, and unless a property is suitable only for one company because they have the kind of facilities that that particular story needs to use, or because that company has a star or players that fit only the story, normally the literary agents solicit the interests of all of the companies. Now, they do that in New York if the literary agent is here by giving an early indication of the type of story that the author is writing and by sending galleys to the various story departments in New York who, in turn, make synopses of them and send them directly to the studios for consideration. If the literary agent has a partner or correspondent in Hollywood—and most of them have—the literary agents in Hollywood call upon the studio story departments personally and try by word of mouth as well as by the synopses which have been submitted to interest the various studios in this particular property.

Sometimes they have a beginning asking price for the property; more often they really throw it open to competitve negotiation. It is not quite bidding, but they will come to us and try to negotiate for a certain amount, and tell us that some other studio is interested in it also; and the result is that either a story is sold quickly for a reasonable price, or after consideration it is sold for a large, increased price.

Q. What have you been paying currently for motion picture rights of well known books? A. Well, they, of course, vary, mostly in terms of competition, and somewhat in terms of availability of studio facilities and personnel. We have recently purchased a play——

Q. Well, let us take books first? A. Well, a book, The Dark Corner, which is not yet published but will be, we paid $40,000 for; The Party Line, the story of a small town telephone exchange, a very simple story, $35,000; Honeyfogling Time, still unpublished, $140,000; Daisy Kenyon, still unpublished, $185,000; Black Rose, which is published and out, $87,000. For Razor's Edge we paid $250,000.

Q. That is the Somerset Maugham book? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do these prices represent an increase over prices that were paid some years ago? A. Well, I could not say that there have been in times past very high prices paid for certain properties; but on the whole prices today are quite a good deal higher, the average price, the normal prices is quite a good deal higher than has ever been paid before.

Q. What do you attribute it to? A. Well, demand and supply. For example, we paid $50,000 for How Green Was My Valley in the early 1940s, and How Green Was My Valley probably was a little wider read than the Razor's Edge, but a very fine property, and turned out to be a very successful and interesting picture.

About the same time we paid $30,000 for Three Blind Mice, which was a successful play, and became a very successful property for us because we made it first as a straight picture and then later as a musical.

Q. You say that these books are priced according to the demand and the supply. What represents the demand? A. The demand is represented in this fashion: Normally there are anywhere between 425 and 450 to 500 pictures, feature pictures, made in Hollywood each year. If there are 25 very popular novels published each year, that would be a good many; so that you can see that the demand far exceeds the supply; and that obtains also in terms of plays and in terms of usable magazine stories.

And then there is another reason: The publishing business, the writing, the authorship and the publishing is delayed just as the making of the motion pictures is delayed. It takes time. The change in public demand for pictures comes rather quickly, particularly during a war period and as the war period ceases. And the great supply of stories pertaining to war itself are not now usable; so that such stories as we have been buying, and all other companies have been buying, during the last six months, are all either, if they relate to war at all, they are about the consequences of war, or about some phases of war, without the battle and bloodshed, and so forth; but mostly they are about other things that pertain rather to the postwar period than exact demobilization and ceasing of hostilities, which makes a further lessening of the supply, and therefore the increased cost of purchase.

Q. You also produce motion pictures from stage plays? A. Yes.

Q. Current stage plays? A. Well, as current as this: I am not competent to give you the full explanation of the delays in production of stage plays. In some instances I know by hearsay mostly that if a play is purchased it cannot be released as a motion picture for a certain length of time after it has ceased its Broadway run, and so forth; so I imagine in most cases there is a considerable delay; but we have purchased The Late George Apley, for example; we paid $275,000 for it; and we purchased Chicken Every Sunday, for which we paid $275,000; and the last one before that was quite a ways—Something For The Boys—which is quite a ways back. We made Laura, the story, first, before it was dramatized; and we also made A Bell For Adano before it was dramatized.

Q. What about Junior Miss? A. Junior Miss—you are quite correct—we paid $430,000 for Junior Miss, which has just been released.

Q. And you did not release it for exhibition in motion pictures until it had finished its Broadway run as a legitimate play? A. I imagine that is correct, sir. I say, I only know of this kind of agreements by hearsay.

Q. Now, what do you do with respect to scouting the plays? A. Well, we have, as I started to say this morning, we have a story department in Hollywood, and one here, and one in London, and soon. From Hollywood we scout the minor productions, like the Pasadena Playhouse and the University and Little Theatre movements for original plays. We have here a group of people who look at every try-out, if it is within getting distance, Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, and so forth, and we have people who observe each play as it opens, and if they are uncertain they keep on going until they have satisfied themselves we ought to try to have it or not to try to secure it. And the same is true currently in London.

Q. And before the hostilities it was true in Europe also? A. Yes, in a good many places in Europe.

Q. Now, in scouting these plays and in purchasing the right to produce motion pictures therefrom, are you in competition with the other defendants in this case? A. Most evidently, yes, sir.

Q. And with other producers of motion pictures? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And has that competition been one of the factors which has increased the price of the material? A. Yes, sir, very definitely, sir.

Q. What are the principal sources of your actors? A. Well, the following are the sources—which is No. 1 and which is No. 2, and so forth, I don't know—I think the greater number, not the higher quality, but the greater number come from Little Theatre movements and from school plays and people who have had little or no real professional experience; and those people we take in on our stock contracts at a small amount of money and train them in our own school in diction, riding, walking, whatever the things are that are necessary to acquaint a person with motion picture technique, and use them as often as possible on the stages and in front of the cameras to get them used to it, and give them a line here and a line there, until finally, we hope, each one we sign—that at least one out of each ten can become a star. I guess that is asking a little bit too much, but we do get a lot of useful talent out of that method.

Another method is the theatre itself, proven people or (2121)
people who have come into the higher class of Little Theatre, summer stock, and so on, who come out for special parts; and another is the radio and show business generally, the entertainment business; and from all of these sources, I suppose, each company—at least I think probably our experience is that we actually sign up five or ten of really potentially fine people each year, and then maybe fifty or sixty are what we call hopefuls. When I say hopefuls, I mean the younger stock company people.

(2122)

Q. Is there competition among the various studios for the services of these people? A. I know that all studios have the same kind of organizations and go through the same motions and have the same successes and failures. There is a very decided competition, because in this also the demand is greater than the supply.

Q. Some of your principal actors come from the legitimate stage? A. Yes, sir. Sir Cedric Hardwicke did. Let me just look at a list here for a moment. Milton Berle came from vaudeville. Lloyd Nolan had stage experience. Jack Oakie had stage experience. Jack Benny came from radio.

Q. That is enough example. A. A good many of them did, of course.

Q. In the production of motion pictures, am I right in saying that the essential elements are a story, producer, director, cast and the mechanical equipment necessary for the photography of the picture? A. Yes, including the writer.

Q. The writer? I should have included the writer. A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does Twentieth Century-Fox have a control of the supply of any one of those elements? A. No.

Q. And is it in competition with all the other producers of motion pictures for those elements? A. Yes, sir.

(2123)

Q. What type of motion picture does Twentieth Century-Fox make? A. We make, at the West Coast we make only feature length pictures and those, I suppose today, they are divided about 20-10 between what we call high-budget pictures and low-budget pictures. Are you asking me concerning the type of story?

Q. Type of entertainment. A. Well, there is a changing formula. In the late thirties, for example, we were making —well, in 1936 and 1937 we were making what we call pretty much straight entertainment. Beginning about 1938 there came in some pictures that had to do with the war. I think the first was concerning the last war, called Lancer Spy. Then gradually as time went on and the interest of the country and the people of the country became more interested in war, more and more pictures concerning the war were made. In 1938 and 1939 we made Submarine Patrol, and in 1939-1940 we were commencing to get away a little bit from our biographical period, which we had been in for the last two years, that is, such pictures as "Young Mr. Lincoln," and "Alexander Graham Bell", and so forth, and by 1941 we were really at it as far as the war is concerned, Yank in the R A.F, Confirm or Deny, Remember the Day, To the Shores of Tripoli, and then This Above All.

In 1942-43, Little T[illegible], Berlin Correspondent, They Came to Blow Up Ame[illegible], Thunder Birds, and Immortal

(2124)

Sergeant. The Moon is Down, Crash Dive, Manila Calling, Fighting Chetniks, Margin for Error, Night We Raided Calais, and Bomber's Moon, but in that year came the first turn towards something else. We had two pictures that were designed to give spiritual comfort to those who saw it, and one picture especially designed and tailored to help the people to commence to think about, to talk about and argue about the peace which was to come, two spiritual pictures, "The Song of Bernadette" and "The Keys of the Kingdom," and the picture designed to help influence people toward the development of a peace was "Wilson."

In 1944-1945 whatever reference to war we had was a sort of left-handed one. Something For the Boys was a story, a musical, how boys could be entertained near a camp; Sunday Dinner for a Soldier was a homey comedy, nothing about fighting; Colonel Effingham's Raid was about the difficulties of a retired soldier in a southern town during the war period. We had, however Bell for Adano, which is the aftermath of the war in Italy and designed to tell us or the audience how we were administering civilian affairs of a town in Italy, and we also had, belatedly, Winged Victory, which showed the training of our AAF boys in this country and a little bit of what they had to go through with when they got abroad.

Now we are headed, I think, completely away, unless there be some comedy, I think we are headed completely away from war stories, my guess is, which is no better than anybody's else, irrespective of his experience in this business. How soon we will get back to it again, I don't know. After the last war it took a number of years. It may begin this year, although in the meantime there may be some comedy reference to it.

I think we are looking toward biographical pictures. I think we are looking toward pictures with some social significance and spiritual significance, not necessarily religious, although that is not a tabooed subject whatsoever.

Q. During the last ten years has the cost of producing motion pictures increased? A. Yes, sir, very much.

Q. Both in the aggregate as to the year's program and on the average? A. Well, in 1940 we produced 44 pictures for a total of $19,000,000. In 1943-1944 year we produced only 28 pictures for a total of $35,282,000. The cost of everything in pictures went up very rapidly beginning in about the end of 1941 or the beginning of 1942.

Q. It is a fact, is it not, that—— A. I just wanted to give you the comparison.

Q. Go ahead. A. In 1940 we had only five pictures that (2126) cost a million dollars or more; and in the 1944-45 schedule we had seven that cost over two million and fourteen that cost over a million.

Q. Are these higher costs generally applicable to all the companies in the business? A. Yes, I am certain of that. I am certain it is. And I am certain that it is the result of a combination of all the various factors in motion picture making and not an extravagance on the part of the management at all. Our back lot, for example, costs, the back lot being those who work behind the cameras, like blacksmiths and electricians and so forth, our average hourly increase from 1941 through 1944 was 18 per cent. Our average take-home pay was 71 per cent higher among the crafts on the back lot. All of the items, from nails and lumber, up to the beads and jewelry that go into the making of pictures have increased tremendously. Our manpower has increased in price and is not diminished very much in number, if any, despite the fact we are making fewer pictures than we used to. We are making fewer because that is all we can make under the present restrictions.

Q. During the war and until very recently there were restrictions on the amount of raw stock that could be used? A. The raw stock, meaning film, on materials, meaning lumber and hardware and everything of that sort. For example, we were limited to $5,000 per picture set, I mean for sets for one picture we were limited to the expenditure of $5,000 on new material. We might use up any amount of our inventory, if we wanted to. Of course, they commenced to get pretty low before the war was over.

Q. During this period of the last five years has there been an increase in the number of independent producers? A. Very large number.

Q. Are there a considerable number of individuals who formerly were producers or directors under contract to Twentieth Century-Fox who are now independently producing pictures? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you give us a few of those names? A. William Goetz was the executive vice-president of our company. He is now the president or vice-president, I don't know which, of International, and we designate him as an independent producer, because he releases through another company. Nunnally Johnson is an independent producer, having made one or two independent pictures. Frank Lloyd is an independent producer; used to be a director for us; Jesse Lasky used to be a producer for us and now is an independent producer; Milton Sperling, while he is associated with Warner Bros., I understand has a completely independent unit. I am not certain about Mark Hellinger, whether he has an independent set-up at Universal comparable to Walter Wanger or not, but I think he has. And Harry Joe Brown, also a former producer of ours, is an independent producer.

Q. In addition to this group of men who have left Twentieth Century-Fox to produce pictures for themselves, are there numerous other independent producers in Hollywood? A. Many, many more.

Mr. Caskey: You may inquire.

Mr. Wright: We have no cross-examination.

Mr. Proskauer: I would like to ask just one question.

Cross-Examination by Mr. Proskauer:

Q. These conditions that you have described as to competition for books and plays and manpower, you know enough about the general business around Hollywood to know that applies generally to all companies just the same as it does to you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what you have given for your company is a fair picture of what exists for all these companies? A. I think so, Judge.

(Witness excused.)

Mr. Caskey: Mr. Wright, I understand one of your associates asked for a copy of the 1937-1938 contract, and while I am sure that you have a great many copies in your files, I will produce another one. I have nothing further.

(2129)

Mr. Proskauer: I can read in Mr. Warner's testimony that I have stipulated with Mr. Wright. Did you have something you wanted?

Mr. Whittlesey: No.

Mr. Proskauer: It is stipulated that Harry M. Warner, if called as a witness, would testify as follows and this stipulation is made with the same force and effect as though he had taken the stand and been sworn. That is correct, Mr. Wright, I take it?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Proskauer: "I am the President and chief executive officer of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., and have held that position since the organization of the corporation on April 4, 1923.

"I have complete familiarity with the fundamental policies of said company and its subsidiaries since its inception.

"I deny that said company is or has at any time attempted to monopolize, or monopolized, any part of the motion picture business, or that it has contracted, conspired or combined with any person or persons, or company or companies, so to do. I deny each and every charge in the amended and supplemental complaint herein.

"In 1906, I and my three brothers, Sam, Albert and Jack, started showing pictures in a storeroom in New (2130)
Castle, Pennsylvania. The room seated one hundred. The admission price was five cents. We started with $200.00 capital, but, despite what seemed to us exorbitantly high license fees which we had to pay for our pictures, we soon found ourselves making profit of about $300.00 a week.

"Subsequently, we went into the distribution of pictures, first at Pittsburgh and later at New York. We had our ups and downs but, on the whole, we were moderately successful.

"In 1916, my brothers, Sam and Jack, leased a small place in Hollywood and started production, while Albert and I arranged in New York for the distribution of pictures, including those of my brothers.

"The beginning of our success really dates from the year 1917, when we produced and distributed a picture from Ambassador Gerard's 'My Four Years in Germany'. It yielded a profit to us of $130,000.00. In those days, only a few of our pictures were of sufficiently high quality for exhibition in the best first-run theatres in the country, but many other of our pictures proved profitable despite their failure to achieve exhibition in the best first-run theatres in the country because of their lower cost. The best first-run theatres will pay much larger film rental than a first-run of exhibition in a smaller theatre, but the cost of producing one of the very finest pictures such as are exhibited in the best first-run theatres is often today more than twenty times the cost of one of the large number of pictures which secure their initial exhibition in less pretentious theatres. As an example, our pictures today average a negative cost of approximately $1,000,000.00. Some of our pictures, however, cost several million, and some of them as little as $200,000.00. If the higher cost pictures are successful, they generally yield appropriately large revenues from exhibitors and at the box office, but the low cost pictures are also a fertile source of revenue, especially in the thousands of smaller theatres in smaller communities and at the subsequent-run theatres in the larger communities."

And as part of this, I am going to call your Honors' attention to some figures which show the enormous importance to use of the independent small theatres.

"On April 4, 1923, we transferred our entire business to a corporation known as Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. in return for three-fifths of its authorized capital stock. Following incorporation, the business continued as a family affair and along the same lines as the partnership.

"Beginning in 1925, the Warners began the work of developing sound pictures under license and agreements from Western Electric, culminating in the production of such sound pictures as 'The Jazz Singer' starring Al Jolson in October, 1927, and the first 100% talking picture 'The Lights of New York' in the summer of 1928.

"We were at this point far ahead of any of our larger competitors in the 'know how' of making talking pictures.

"A serious difficulty, however, confronted us which we feared might prevent us from realizing a full financial reward on our development of the talking motion picture.

"Our pictures could not be exhibited in theatres which had not installed sound machines, the minimum cost of installation being at that time approximately $25,000.00 per theatre. Theatres were in those days hesitant to make this outlay because of the public prejudice which had theretofore existed to talking motion pictures owing to the inept and unsuccessful earlier attempts at sound pictures.

"The only way to solve the situation then confronting us seemed to be the rapid acquisition of a large number of theatres. We looked about to see whether, in return for stock in our company, we could acquire a ready-made chain of theatres in sufficient number to assist us.

"As luck would have it, the Stanley Company of America, with about 250 theatres situated principally in and around Pennsylvania and New Jersey, had just lost its chief executive, Stanley Mastbaum, and its directors felt that the company was in need of trained management to take his place. Negotiations were accordingly begun with the view to exchanging stock of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. for the stock of Stanley Company of America, a primary inducement to the substantial owners of Stanley Company of America being the experienced management which the Stanley theatres could secure if they were combined with the Warner organization.

"This transaction, consummated late in 1928, gave us 250 theatres which could be immediately equipped with sound installation. It enabled us to demonstrate to other exhibitors the advantages of sound installation. In the year and nine months immediately following, we likewise were fortunate enough to secure, in a similar fashion, several other circuits of theatres owning theatres in the same general locality and a smaller number of theatres scattered in various other parts of the country. In 1931, we had an interest in 591 theatres, the largest number of theatres in which this company has ever had an interest.

"I deny that our theatres, or any of them, were acquired so as not to be in competition with the theatres of any other company, or that there was any agreement or understanding, express or implied, to any such effect. All our theatres were acquired in open competition with any other person or corporation, who or which might have desired to acquire such theatre or theatres. Some of the theatre circuits which we acquired in 1930 and 1931 were acquired in competition with competing companies producing motion pictures.

"Another advantage to our company as a result of the acquisition of Stanley Company of America was the acquisition of Stanley's one-third of the stock of First National Pictures, Inc., a corporation engaged in the production and distribution of silent motion pictures, which had been organized as far back as 1917 by approximately 24 exhibitors on a cooperative basis for the purpose of acquiring film of first quality for exhibition in their own theatres, as well as for distribution by them to other theatres in respective territories in which they operated. The owners of Stanley were unwilling to sell the Stanley theatres to us apart from Stanley's First National stock. Since all the stock of First National was subject to a voting trust, it was necessary for Warner to acquire more of the stock of (2135)

First National if it was to be able to use the production and distribution facilities of First National Pictures, Inc. Accordingly, at or about the same time or thereafter, Warner purchased another one-third of the stock of First National from other First National stockholders, and, with its two-thirds' control, dissolved the voting trust. Subsequently, in 1929, Warner acquired the remaining one-third of the stock of First National from Fox. The acquisition of First National thus gave us increased facilities for the production and distribution of pictures, and enabled Warner immediately to double the number of pictures produced.

"The acquisition of First National was not for the purpose of suppressing competition in the field of production or distribution. Before the Government"—and I interpolate, the United States Government—"was fully apprised of the nature of the Stanley acquisition and the consequent acquisition of the stock of First National, it caused to be instituted a proceeding in equity in this Court under the Clayton Act, with a view to causing our company to surrender its interest in First National. After the facts were explained to the Attorney General's office, however, the Government discontinued this suit.

"Since the peak of its acquisitions in 1931, the Warner companies have had no policy for the expansion of theatre holdings. Today, fourteen years later, Warner has an interest in 547 theatres, a net reduction of 44 since its peak holdings of 591 in 1931. Any theatres acquired since then were to protect our business and meet the varying economic conditions, shift of populations, or needs caused by obsolescence that have arisen with the changes over the last fourteen years. Some of the independent competitors of Warner have increased their theatre holdings more rapidly than Warner, and have acquired theatres which Warner had formerly operated. Three such examples in Philadelphia are: Goldman, our theatre manager in the Philadelphia district prior to 1933, at a yearly salary of $78,000.00, left our employ in that year (while his contract still had nine months to run) to go into the exhibition business, and has, since that date, acquired a chain of theatres in the Philadelphia territory which, as Goldman testified, have yielded him a profit of more than $100,000.00 a year, exclusive of the Keith, Karlton and Erlanger Theatres now to be mentioned. The first two are downtown theatres, formerly operated by Warner but which, while Warner was operating them, were acquired by Goldman in direct opposition with Warner. The Erlanger was a theatre in which Warner acquired a one-third interest through the Stanley Company of America, but which had proved so unsuccessful by 1931 that it was abandoned by its co-owners, and in 1932 Warner had paid $400,000.00 to be relieved of its obligation on the mortgage bond, abandoning the theatre. Warner could have re-acquired this theatre at any time after 1932 up to 1941 when Goldman leased it, and is now running it in competition with Warner. Incidentally, another one of Warner's best theatres in Philadelphia, which it had under lease from Fox since 1936, has recently been surrendered by Warner and returned to Fox. Warner has never sought to acquire all of the best first-run theatres in downtown Philadelphia. They were all in common ownership at the time of the acquisition of the Stanley Company of America, with the exception of the Fox Theatre, which was rented from Fox in 1936 at Fox's request.

"The Government has, I am informed, charged that Warner conditions the licensing of its pictures to the other major defendants on the other major defendants license of their product to the Warner theatres. I deny any such conditioning of licenses.

"To make certain that the distribution and exhibition branches of my company would each operate at highest efficiency, and each respectively attempt to earn the greatest amount of money possible for the company—I have insisted that each department operate as a unit, separate and apart from the other department, and that if any question should arise which affected more than one department, the question should be cleared through me directly.

"Before our company acquired theatres, its profit came, generally speaking, from pictures which were not of a quality sufficient to justify what the Government describes as 'first run', or what might more accurately be described as a first run in the very best theatres in the downtown districts of large cities. As our quality improved, a large number of our pictures found initial exhibition in the very best theatres in the hearts of the centers of the population. But, with the increase in quality and the intense competition between producers, the costs skyrocketed and consequently we had to depend upon a greatly increased revenue to produce the higher quality pictures.

"In the past our foreign business has been exceedingly profitable, but with the cessation of the war our foreign markets are being severely restricted. Country after country is adopting quota systems and state monopolies in order to promote their own motion picture production. During the war England, our chief foreign market, was unable to produce its own pictures. Hence we were able to derive a very substantial revenue from England. At one time during the war England threatened (and did for a time) block our funds derived from exhibition in England and was only dissuaded from doing so by being convinced that the American companies could not continue to supply England with quality productions if their English revenue were shut off altogether. With the cessation of hostilities, England is launching on production on a large scale and the dangers of a quota system or restrictive measures in some other form are pressing. The more our foreign revenues decrease, the more vital it will be for us to have the profits from our theatre operations in order to maintain our present standard of production.

In this industry the public may see within a comparatively short time every picture at whatever price it prefers to pay and every exhibitor we license may exhibit the same pictures in its theatre at whatever price it prefers to charge depending upon its policy of operation and the price level to which it caters.

"Most of the seventeen thousand-odd theatres in the United States are able to license the same product within a comparatively short space of time at rentals below the cost of the positive price which they project on to their screens. Thus, a positive print of our picture which had the greatest number of bookings in 1943/44, 'Princess O'Rourke', cost about $130.00. Out of a total of 14,090 bookings, 12,926 were for an average price of $78.40, or substantially less than the cost of the positive print. These figures have been furnished to me as compilations from the Warner 1945 Answers to Interrogatories 6 through 11, submitted in evidence by the Government, and may be verified from said interrogatories. The remaining 1,164 bookings averaged approximately $943.

"This structure of the industry will, in my opinion, be jeopardized by divorcement of theatres from production, with hardship not only to our company but to the attendance of many millions who go to the motion picture theatres in the United States, and the approximately 15,000 independent theatres in this country."

Now the rest of this statement consists of a repetition, Mr. Wright, as you know, of the identical questions that appeared in Mr. Skouras's statement, and I am going to suggest to the Court, if Mr. Wright will consent, that the stenographer just copy those in without my burdening your Honors with listening to them.

Mr. Wright: That is agreeable.

(2147)

Mr. Seymour: Mr. Wright, we might perhaps at this point put in the stipulation in regard to Mr. Barney Balaban which I spoke to you about the other day.

Mr. Wright: I don't seem to remember about that.

Mr. Seymour: The questions negativing conspiracy. You said you would stipulate.

Mr. Wright: Yes, that is all right.

Mr. Seymour: It is stipulated that if called Barney Balaban, president of Paramount since 1936, would answer in the negative the questions put to Mr.

Zukor; and that this stipulation has the same force and effect as if he were actually called as a witness.

Is that agreeable, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Proskauer: While we are in a stipulating mood, may we have the same stipulation as to our branch and exchange managers and our other officers?

Mr. Wright: Oh.

Mr. Proskauer: Well, you made the same stipulation with respect to the others.

Mr. Wright: We will discuss that question with you, but that has not heretofore been brought up.

Mr. Proskauer: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Wright: There is no point of trying to put in a wholesale group of stipulations. We have confined it heretofore.

(2148)

Mr. Proskauer: All right. Now, I think Mr. Niesley was going to offer that definition of Mr. Bernard. Are you ready to have that read in or do you want that to go in Monday?

Mr. Niesley: To go in Monday.

Mr. Frohlich: If the Court please, I have just completed the preparation of the line as to the picture Cover Girl for the season 1943-1944, which Judge Hand suggested early in the trial, giving the rentals received. I should like to offer it in evidence. I will give Mr. Wright a copy of it.

Mr. Wright: We have no objection.

(Marked Defendant Columbia Exhibit C-9.)

Mr. Proskauer: Mr. Wright, I am going to ask for a very innocent stipulation now, that the corporate name of the Vitagraph, Inc. has been changed to Warner Bros. Distributing Corporation, Inc., the same corporation with a changed name.

Mr. Wright: I believe that appears in the data you furnished on the supplementary interrogatories.

Mr. Davis: If the Court please, I have a stipulation in behalf of Loew's, but if the Court wants to recess at 3:30 precisely, I had better not begin it.

(2149)

Judge Hand: All right.

Now, are you all through except Mr. Leisure, practically? Is that your last?

Mr. Davis: No, sir. I have some statistical data and some exhibits I want to put in, and I want to call one very short witness on Monday.

Mr. Proskauer: We have some statistical data also, which we do not want to put in at this late hour.

Judge Hand: I think you have done wonderfully well. I think Mr. Wright started out with a splendidly abbreviated program, and you have all cooperated in shortening the case, which looks to me now as though it were nearly ready for rebuttal. Mr. Leisure's representative here, Mr. Whittlesey, says that he expected to take about a day.

Mr. Whittlesey: That is correct.

Judge Hand: Is that right?

Mr. Whittlesey: Yes. We will start on Monday.

Judge Hand: Will you be ready to go on?

Mr. Whittlesey: We will be ready to go on.

Mr. Seymour: And I shall have a very short witness, perhaps, Monday.

Judge Hand: I see. I am sure all of us here thank you very much, because I think in the end it will add to clarity and everything else.

(2149a)

Now we shall adjourn to Monday at 10:30.

(Adjourned to Monday, November 5, 1945, at 10:30 a.m.)

(2150)

New York, November 5, 1945;
10.30 o'clock a.m.

Trial resumed.

WILFRED J. EADIE, called as a witness on behalf of the defendant Twentieth Century-Fox, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Caskey:

Q. Will you give the address of your residence to the reporter. A. 14 Overhill Road, New Rochelle.

Q. What is your occupation, Mr. Eadie? A. I am comptroller of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation.

Q. Are you also a director? A. And a director.

Judge Bright: What did you say you were?

The Witness: Comptroller.

Q. How long have you been comptroller? A. Since 1932.

Q. Mr. Eadie, during the 1943-44 season how many pictures did Twentieth Century-Fox distribute? A. May I refer to my papers?

Q. Yes, indeed. A. Released 34 pictures.

Q. How are those pictures classified? A. 26 were produced by the corporation, one was purchased, one was distributed for an outsider, four were reissues and two were documentary films.

Q. What was the total negative cost of those 34 pictures? A. The pictures produced by the corporation itself cost $28,211,902.

Q. Will you speak louder? A. $28,211,902.

Q. What additional cost was there? A. Costs of distribution.

Q. How much were they? A. They were at least 13 million dollars.

Q. That gives you an aggregate of how much? A. Over 41 million.

Q. What was the domestic revenue from the United States on those pictures? A. 34 pictures in the United States, $40,657,152.

Q. Is it fair to say that the cost of producing and distributing the pictures in the United States does not equal the domestic revenue? A. The cost of the pictures exceeded the domestic revenue.

Mr. Davis: What was that question?

Mr. Caskey: Speak a little louder.

(Question and answer read.)

Q. Has that been true over at least the last nine years? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Eadie, have you prepared——

Judge Bright: When you say the United States (2152) that does not include Canada?

The Witness: No.

Q. (Continuing)—have you prepared a chart showing for the last nine years the number of pictures released by the company and the negative cost and the average negative cost? A. This chart covers ten years.

Q. Ten years?

(Marked Defendant Twentieth Century-Fox's Exhibit F-16 for identification.)

Q. This Exhibit F-16 shows the negative cost and the average negative cost during the last ten years? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what is the increase in the average cost of the pictures? A. The season 1935-36, the average cost of a picture was $376,014; the season 1944-45, the most recent season, the average cost of a picture was $1,350,000, an increase of almost a million dollars.

Mr. Caskey: I offer F-16.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, the purpose of the offer is not apparent to us. I do not see what this increase in costs has got to do with any aspect of the case or what this is supposed to prove.

Judge Hand: It may have some bearing on reasonableness, I don't know.

Mr. Caskey: Exactly.

Judge Hand: I don't know whether his claim is that he has to have theatres in order to get anything, really, out of it. It might be hard to demonstrate that in general, inasmuch as three of your independents make a lot of money here without any theatres.
(2153)

Mr. Wright: Everybody likes——

Judge Hand: I don't know; it is just as clear to me as some of your evidence. That may be my own mental defect, and it may be the difficulty of the subject; it may be the fault of counsel; I don't know. I can't attempt to pass on that, but I will allow the exhibit to go in.

(Defendant Twentieth Century-Fox's Exhibit F-16 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Proskauer: We are going to have a similar schedule and when I put it in I will try to indicate to your Honor why it is important.

Judge Hand: I have doubt whether physically it will emerge.

Q. Have you also prepared a schedule showing the negative cost and the average negative cost over the last nine years and the domestic film rental from those pictures? A. Yes, I have.

Q. The revenue on the 1944-45 pictures has not yet been fully received, has it? A. That is correct.

Q. There is some slight revenue yet to be received on the (2154)

1943-44 product? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the total amount of the domestic film revenue during those nine seasons? A. The total is $282,596,433.

Q. What is the cost of distributing those pictures in the United States? A. The cost is, at least, conservatively, 40 per cent, and that would equal $113,038,573.

Q. And leave how much? A. We have left $169,557,860.

Q. As against negative cost of how much? A. $215,944,644.

Q. So that the domestic revenue, after paying the cost of distribution, was $46,000,000 short of paying for the negative cost? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Caskey: I offer F-17 for identification in evidence.

Mr. Wright: Same objection. There is no apparent relevancy that I can see in these figures. May I say this, your Honors, in elaboration of our objection, as I understand it, there is no suggestion in any of the proof that has been offered that these costs have not been passed on to the public, or that the distribution and production and exhibition of these pictures has not been enormously profitable to these companies. I just do not see where this leads.

Mr. Proskauer: That proof will be supplied by us.

(2155)

Judge Hand: That sounds as though there is a charge against Mr. Caskey of inadequacy.

Mr. Proskauer: That is the last charge you can levy against Mr. Caskey. I am sure he is going to supply it; but I am going to show that that with this enormous increase in cost, substantially none of it has been passed on to the public.

Judge Hand: I did not know you were going to take a competitive position, even among counsel. It is received.

(Defendant Twentieth Century-Fox's Exhibit F-17 for identification received in evidence.)

Q. Mr. Eadie, have you made an analysis of the sources of film rental, domestic film rental since 1933 as among Twentieth Century-Fox theatres, the theatres of the other four defendants, and independents? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Caskey: Will you mark this for identification, please.

(Marked Defendant Twentieth Century-Fox's Exhibit F-18 for identification.)

Q. Will you describe to the Court Defendant's Exhibit F-18 for identification? A. This is an analysis of rentals, complete domestic totals from 1933 through 1944. It is analyzed between the amounts received from each of the defendant companies.

(2156)

Q. Now, taking 1944 for an example, the figure of $47,659,900 is what? A. That is the domestic revenue, total domestic revenue, including Canada.

Q. And the revenue on feature pictures alone? A. No; it includes features, shorts, news, advertising, accessories; total billings.

Q. And this is on a fiscal year basis, is it not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And is not allocated to motion picture seasons? A. No, sir.

Q. But this is the way the records were kept in the office of the company? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, what percentage of that total domestic revenue comes from theatres in which Twentieth Century-Fox has an interest? A. 14.12 per cent.

Q. That is, treating the whole as a dollar, 14 cents comes from theatres in which Twentieth Century-Fox has an interest? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What percentage comes from the theatres in which Loew's has an interest? A. 1.26 per cent.

Q. That would be 1¼ cents? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What percentage from the theatres in which RKO has an interest? A. 5.52 per cent.

Q. And what percentage from theatres in which Warner has an interest? A. 4.82 per cent.

(2157)

Q. Now, at my instructions did you group together all of the theatres in which Paramount has an interest? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And treating them as one for the purpose of this chart, what percentage came from those theatres? A. 13.46 per cent.

Q. And what is the total then from the five? A. The total affiliated is 39.19 per cent.

Q. And eliminating Fox, the total is what? A. 25.07 per cent.

Q. So that of the domestic revenue, 25 per cent comes from theatres which are affiliated with one of the four defendants? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And 14 per cent comes from the theatres affiliated with Fox? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the balance from all the other theatres in the country? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Caskey: I offer that in evidence.

Mr. Wright: We have no objection to this exhibit.

(Defendant Twentieth Century-Fox's Exhibit F-18 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Seymour: May I see that, please?

(Exhibit handed to Mr. Seymour.)

Mr. Seymour: If the Court please, I think Mr.
(2158)
Caskey has made it plain in his interrogation of the witness that for the purpose of this statistical comparison he has treated all of the theatres in which Paramount has an interest together. The heading here is simply "Paramount," but on the basis of the testimony there are no payments from Paramount as such, but from these various theatre companies which are individually operated.

Judge Hand: This statement, as I remember it, is evidence of what you said in argument at the beginning, 40 per cent of the whole business as against the independents; isn't that so? Isn't what you said? Perhaps it is what the Government said. I had it in my notes somewhere.

Mr. Seymour: I think various percentages have been mentioned. I do not remember myself mentioning 40 per cent. The point I want to make plain is that this exhibit gives certain figures received from Paramount, which is merely a convenient label given by the witness and Mr. Caskey for that purpose.

Judge Hand: Yes.

Q. Mr. Eadie, do you know where the revenue that comes from the theatres associated with or in which Paramount has an interest is paid? Do you know where the company gets the revenue? A. The bulk of it comes from Paramo nt in New York, but we receive it in exchanges throughout the country where Paramount have theatres or interests.

Q. And it is received at the various exchanges throughout the country? A. Yes, sir. This analysis is made up from the information that we have in our records that these are Paramount or Paramount-controlled theatres. I might add, that is the opinion of the exchange manager servicing these theatres throughout the country.

Q. And that is how the chart is made up? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Caskey: Will you mark this, please, for identification.

(Marked Defendant Twentieth Century-Fox's Exhibit F-19 for identification.)

Q. Now, Mr. Eadie, have you made a distribution of the revenue on these 44 pictures released during the 1943-44 season? A. 34 pictures in the 1943-44 season, analyzed in various ways on this schedule.

Q. First of all, what is the total film rental? A. $40,657,152. That is up to March 31, 1945.

Q. And that is from the United States only? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, taking it first of all by population groups——

Mr. Wright: Is this another chart?

Mr. Caskey: Yes (handing copy to Mr. Wright).

Q. How much of the revenue came from the theatres in the cities which have a population of 100,000 or more? A.
(2160)
A total of $18,329,890.

Q. And that is what percentage of the total revenue? A. 45.1.

Q. Now, how much of it came from the group of cities that had a population of twenty-five to a hundred thousand? A. $7,075,966; a percentage of 17.4.

Q. And how much of it came from the balance of the country? A. $15,251,296. The percentage is 37.5.

Q. Now, what percentage of that 40 million dollars revenue do you attribute to the affiliated theatres? A. About 40 per cent.

Q. And you have arrived at that 40 per cent on the basis of the calculations contained in Exhibit F-18? A. Yes, sir.

Q. The percentage on F-18 was 39.1 per cent? A. That was the maximum percentage, yes.

Q. And you have used 40 per cent here? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And applying the 40 per cent to the $40,000,000 figure, what dollar amount of revenue came from the theatres in which the five defendants had an interest? A. A total of $16,262,861.

Q. Now, are you able from your figures to distribute the revenue which came from the communities of less than 25,000 among the five defendants? A. In total, yes, sir.

Q. But can you distribute that among each of the defendants? A. No, sir, not within the time we had at our disposal.
(2161)

Q. Now, of this $16,262,000, how much of it came from these cities which have a population of 100,000 or more? A. $11,425,754; a percentage of 28.1.

Q. Of the total revenue of the country? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And of that 28.1 per cent how much of it came from the theatres in which Twentieth Century-Fox has an interest? A. 10.3 per cent.

Q. And the balance of 17.8 per cent is derived from theatres in which the other four have an interest? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what percentage was derived from the theatres which are classified as independent in those same 92 cities? A. 17 per cent.

Q. So that confining yourself to the 92 cities which have a population of 100,000 or more, 10.3 per cent of the total domestic revenue comes from theatres in which Fox has an interest? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And 17.8 per cent comes from theatres in which the other four defendants have an interest? A. Yes, sir, 17.8 per cent.

Q. 17.8 per cent? A. Yes.

Q. And 17 per cent comes from theatres in which none of the defendants have an interest? A. Yes, sir.

(2162)

Mr. Caskey: I offer Exhibit F-19 for identification in evidence.

Mr. Wright: There are a couple of questions I would like to ask him preliminarily before it goes in.

Preliminary Cross Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. In preparing this exhibit identified as F-19, did you work from the interrogatory figures you had supplied the Government in the interrogatory answers as to the 1943-44 film revenue? A. Well, we worked from our books and records. I presume the other figures were taken from the same source.

Q. Well, what I am getting at is this: Is there any difference in this total that you have given us here for first-run revenue in the communities of over 100,000 population and the total to be derived from your interrogatory answers giving the same figures? That is what I want to know. A. Well, I can't say, sir. I do not have the other for comparison, but these figures are prepared from our books and records.

Q. Well, you did not make any check to see whether the data here corresponds with similar data derived from your interrogatory answers? A. No, sir.

Q. This 40 per cent figure that you had at the bottom, as I understand you to say, you say that that was some kind of an arbitrary allocation you made in the first instance? A. We used a figure in excess of the highest figure shown by our analysis in order to be on the conservative side.

Q. This 40 per cent was for an arbitrary figure, is that right, the arbitrary percentage? A. Well, we were unable to determine the exact figure and that is within, I would say, one per cent of the correct figure.

Q. Then you took your 40 per cent figure and you applied that to what? What was the starting figure that you actually got out of the books? A. The total rental $40,657,152.

Q. That is your total rental as per your books? A. Yes.

Q. Then you made your best guess as to distribution between independent and affiliated theatres; that is, you assumed the percentage of 40 for the affiliated theatres, and a percentage of 60 for the independents, isn't that right? A. Not quite. We have a detailed analysis of the 38.2 per cent of the 40. That is a computed figure from the records. The estimate, the difference which we do not have analyzed, is 1.8 per cent of the total.

Q. Down to the communities of less than 25,000 the figures you have there represent actual computations from your records in all cases, is that it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it is only the communities of less than 25,000, then, where you made an arbitrary estimate of the percentage distribution, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you make any check in these figures as to the data as to the towns of 25,000 to 100,000 to see whether there was any variation between the percentage results you get here and the percentage results you would have from computations based on the selected pictures that were given in the interrogatory answers? A. I did not make a comparison between the interrogatory answers and this computation.

Q. That is, you know that you furnished in response to interrogatory answers your film rental on, I believe, a single picture for all of the towns of between 5,000 and over.

Mr. Caskey: No, Mr. Wright, we did not furnish that. You never asked for it and we never furnished any such thing.

Mr. Wright: No, I beg your pardon. That is right. On a single picture with respect to certain selective runs, that was what I believe you furnished.

Q. You made no computations, then, with respect to the total percentages of rental reflected in the interrogatory answers that you furnished, is that right? A. I did not refer to the interrogatories at all in making this schedule up. The (2165) answers were both prepared from the same source. Whether they are the same material or not, I can't say—recall. We answered them both correctly to the best of our ability.

Q. In determining which theatres were to be included in what you term here Twentieth Century theatres, what criterion did you use, those that they controlled? A. Those are all the theatres serviced by National Theatres Corporation, and ourselves.

Q. That includes theatres for which they bought films, but in which they might not have a proprietary interest? A. Yes, sir. If the billing was made by the exchange to, and bill paid for by National Theatres Corporation, then it is in this group.

Q. As to the other defendants' theatres, what was the test that you used there in determining which theatres were included in that category? A. The same test.

Q. As to whom you billed for the product? A. Well, the determination of the classification of theatres was made by the manager in the exchange.

Q. Was a uniform criterion—were uniform criteria employed? A. Yes, I believe so.

Q. What was it? What did you tell him to do when he made the classification? A. We asked them for the analysis of the rentals by the affiliated companies.

Q. What was he supposed to do in determining which (2166) theatres were supposed to be classed as affiliated and which not? A. Supposed to use his best judgment.

Q. Then you did not give him any set standard for making that determination, is that right? A. We simply asked him for the rentals and the theatres of the various affiliates.

Q. So that in situations where there might be a minority interest you don't know whether those are included in here or not? A. In all cases where we knew the pictures were being bought for or by Paramount, or, for example, they were in Paramount theatres.

Q. I am talking about a situation where Paramount or some other distributor might have a minority interest in certain theatres. Do you know how those were computed on your chart here? A. If the manager believed—if the exchange manager believed them to be Paramount theatres, they were scheduled as Paramount theatres.

Q. But as to what—how the judgment was exercised in any particular instance you don't know, isn't that right? A. No, sir.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, on the basis of the witness's testimony I do not think we have here a very illuminating document on this question of affiliated and non-affiliated split of run.

Mr. Caskey: This represents, sir, what the company believes is the source of its revenue. The in-(2167) structions, as Mr. Eadie has said, were, each exchange manager was asked to classify the theatres in his exchange area as to the source of revenue, and if the exchange manager said that the Poli Theatre in New Haven is operated by Loew and Loew pays the film bill, it was treated as a Loew theatre. I submit there could not be any better basis of doing it. And it is inconceivable that the errors in classification should be of any consequence. It might fluctuate a tenth of one per cent or something. Substantially speaking, it is the only feasible way of making up the chart.

Direct Examination Resumed by Mr. Caskey:

Q. These classifications, Mr. Eadie, were all reviewed by the home office, where they not, as to the theatres in towns of 25,000 or more? A. Yes.

Q. And an I. B. M. card punched for every single theatre in these cities of 25,000, and more? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have had occasion within the last week to review those classifications? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do you believe them to be correct? A. I do

Judge Goddard: If the companies that operated the theatres were subsidiaries of Paramount, did you include them?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

(2168)

Judge Bright: In the Paramount column?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Judge Hand: We will allow it.

(Marked Defendant Fox's Exhibit F-19.)

Q. The 1943-44 season, Mr. Eadie, have you prepared a schedule showing the ten pictures which grossed the most, the United States revenue and the average per booking? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Caskey: I offer that.

(Marked Defendant Fox's Exhibit F-20 for identification.)

Q. Have you the Sweet Rosie O'Grady chart? A. No, I haven't.

Mr. Wright: We have no objection to F-20.

(Defendant Fox's Exhibit F-20 for identification received in evidence.)

(Defendant Fox's Exhibit F-21 marked for identification.)

Q. Mr. Eadie, have you prepared or caused to be prepared a chart analyzing the source of the film rental on Sweet Rosie O'Grady in the first-run and extended or move-over engagements in the 92 cities with a population of 100,000 or more? A. Yes, sir.

Q. This is similar in form to the chart which was prepared in reference to a Tree Grows in Brooklyn? A. Yes, sir.

(2169)

Q. What was your domestic film rental on Sweet Rosie O'Grady, total? A. To October 13, 1945, at which time it had completed most of its runs, $2,821,772.

Q. Of that sum what percentage was received from the first-run in these 92 cities? A. $775,334.

Q. That is what percentage of the total? A. 27.48 per cent.

Q. Of that how much was received from theatres in which Twentieth Century-Fox has an interest? A. 10.56 or $298,008.

Q. With regard to the Paramount affiliates, each of them is set forth separately on pages 1 and 2 of the schedule, are they not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Treating them in the aggregate, what percentage came from those affiliates? A. 21.99.

Q. No, no—that is of the first-run revenue, is it not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And of the total United States gross, 6 per cent, is it not? A. Total United States gross is 6.04 per cent, correct.

Q. And you have separately shown the Standard Theatres in Oklahoma City and the Butterfield Theatres? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Caskey: I offer it.

Mr. Wright: No objection.

Mr. Caskey: They should check, Mr. Wright, with the answers to the interrogatories.

(2170)

Mr. Wright: Of course, you get a difference——

Mr. Caskey: That is right. Well now, Mr. Wright raises the point that the figure here is to October 13th, but I have already put in evidence the figure of March 31st, which is in the interrogatories; which is about $2,806,272. So that you will see there has only been $15,000 come in in the interval.

(Defendant Fox's Exhibit F-21 for identification received in evidence.)

(2171)

Judge Bright: F-21 does not include, in the recapitulation, any figures of Fox receipts?

Mr. Caskey: Yes, sir, National Theatres, including the Roxy, is the third classification.

You may examine.

Mr. Seymour: I would like to ask one question before Mr. Wright.

Cross Examination by Mr. Seymour:

Q. You were asked, I think, from what geographical source Fox received the film rental which came to it from the various theatre operating companies in which Paramount is interested. Isn't the fact that those checks come in from the exchanges in the various areas where those theatre operating companies are located? A. Where the pictures are sold through an exchange area, yes, sir.

Q. They do not come in from Paramount, they come in from the theatre operating companies, isn't that so? A. Where the theatres are sold in the operating districts, yes, sir.

Mr. Caskey: I neglected to ask one question.

By Mr. Caskey:

Q. The Roxy theatre is operated by a subsidiary of Twentieth Century-Fox, is it not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. It does extensive advertising on the first-run of Twentieth Century-Fox pictures? A. Yes, sir.

(2172)

Q. I show you this memorandum and ask you if it is not the fact that on many pictures the amount spent on advertising by Twentieth Century-Fox is greater than the film rental? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the purpose of that expenditure? A. Well, we have to properly merchandise our product in the area and we spend a lot of money to get them off to a good start in our first-run theatres. It is the first-runs that sell the subsequent runs.

Mr. Caskey: You may inquire.

Cross Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. I call your attention to this exhibit, F-21. That, I believe, shows, does it not, that more than 80 per cent of the first-run rental that came out of the 92 cities of more than 100,000 population was from affiliated theatres, isn't that right? A. 80 per cent, sir?

Q. Yes, more than 80 per cent, I said. More than 80 per cent of the total first-run revenue. A. I haven't made the addition.

Q. You can tell that—— A. (Continuing). Or calculation.

Q. ——by looking at it, can't you? A. The figures are there. If it is 80 per cent, it is unavoidable.

Q. Now, in this, do you attempt any computation as to the total percentage of first-run revenue that came out of (2173) affiliated theatres, limiting the computation to the towns where there were affiliated theatres? A. I did not get your question, Mr. Wright.

Q. In many of these 92 cities, or in some of these 92 cities of more than 100,000 population, there are no affiliated theatres at all, are there? A. I don't know.

Q. What I wanted to know, if you have computed a figure which would show the extent of the total first-run revenue in cities of this size which came from affiliated theatres in towns where affiliated theatres were operated?

Mr. Caskey: Just a moment. As I understand it, there are only four such towns in the United States, and my addition shows that they accounted for $13,000 of this $775,000 revenue.

Mr. Wright: Can we have some testimony from the witness?

A. I did not compute those figures by themselves.

Q. But, of course—— A. I can't say from my own knowledge.

Q. —you know what the percentage of affiliated first run revenue would be, excluding those wholly independent towns? A. No, sir.

Q. You made no effort to compute the total affiliated rental that came out of any of these towns, is that right?

A. One schedule there, Schedule 3—I don't know what exhibit number it was—that shows first-run revenue there from affiliates and independents.
(2174)

Q. Yes, I say— A. Total $92,000.

Q. —there is nothing on this exhibit or in any other computation you have offered that enables anyone to determine the total percentage of revenue that came out of any one of these towns that came from affiliated theatres, is that right? A. We took the 92 cities altogether. We did not pick out any individual cities. We have a computation of each of the individual cities, of course.

Q. You have no computation as to any individual city which shows the extent of the total revenue coming out of that situation, that came from affiliated theatres, have you? A. We have a complete analysis of all the figures that we have in here by towns, by theatres.

Q. Can't you answer the question? A. You are asking if I have—if I can recollect, as I understand it, any individual city results. I cannot.

Q. I am just asking you if you have made any computation as to the percentage of the total—of the total revenue that comes out of any of these cities that comes from affiliated theatres on all runs? A. I don't quite get what you are driving at, but this column shows all the rentals that came from all runs from all affiliated theatres in the 92 cities.
(2175)

Q. Which column? A. For 12 cities.

Mr. Wright: I think we have different exhibits in our hands.

Judge Bright: What is this column you refer to?

The Witness: I don't know what the number is, sir, but schedule 3. It is in evidence as an exhibit. This is the total——

Judge Bright: That is F-19.

Mr. Caskey: F-19 shows the very thing he is talking about.

Judge Bright: That is F-19 he is talking about.

Q. Certainly there is nothing in F-21 then to indicate the percentage of revenue that came out of any town that came from affiliated theatres on all runs, isn't that right? A. Is this the Sweet Rosie O'Grady analysis?

Q. I am talking about F-21, yes, Sweet Rosie O'Grady. A. I think the exhibit speaks for itself. I do not know just what you are driving at. The analysis is complete in the exhibit.

Q. Yes, I understand that, but apart from this exhibit, have you made any analysis to determine the percentage of the total revenue that you got out of any of these towns with more than 100,000 population which came from affiliated theatres, that is, all exhibitions in the town of the picture on all runs? A. The entire 34 pictures are shown on F-19. (2176).

Mr. Caskey: It is right here.

Q. That shows all the releases, not just one picture. F-19, as I understand it, does not undertake to show the percentage of revenue in any particular town that came from affiliated theatres on any picture or on a season's pictures, isn't that right? A. It shows the entire 92 towns.

Q. Yes. A. If you are interested in Philadelphia, Atlantic City, or some other town, we would have to compute it for you.

Q. That is what I am trying to get at, as to whether you have in fact made any computation which would show what the percentage of the total revenue in any particular town was that you got out of affiliated theatres in the town on all runs? A. We can get any—we have the cards punched for all these things. We can get any information we require out of it in detail.

Q. Can you give us the percentage—let us take these 92 cities of more than 100,000 population. With respect to each of those cities, you can, then, give us, can you not, on this picture, Sweet Rosie O'Grady, the percentage of the total revenue in each of the towns in question that was derived from affiliated theatres on all runs, isn't that right? A. Yes, sir.

(2177)

Q. Could you supply——

Mr. Caskey: Just a moment. I do not think that is a proper question. If we want to put it in evidence, we will. If you want something, I should think you should request counsel to give it or subpoena it.

Mr. Wright: I think, in order that the Court may have a full picture, this Exhibit F-21 should be supplemented with a town-by-town breakdown which will show the situation as to affiliated and independent revenue in each place. This thing is highly misleading and shows only part of the picture because of its inclusion of areas where affiliated theatres do not even operate. Our contention, of course, is that this is a highly selective control, where both control of admission prices and film rentals is maintained by maintaining control in key areas, which in turn control other areas. Certainly, for our purposes and for the Court's purpose, I think the only analysis that is going to be helpful is one which will show the extent and nature and quality of the control in the specific areas in which these defendants operate theatres.

Judge Hand: Go on with your cross-examination.

Mr. Wright: As to these two charts, I have no further cross-examination, if counsel is willing to supply those figures.

Mr. Caskey: I suggest he cross examine the witness and we will produce what we think is appropriate to our case. If you want something else, why, we will discuss it or you may subpoena it. It hasn't anything to do with conditioning of cross-examination.
(2178)

Judge Bright: Before we leave that, Mr. Wright, on this F-21, the last column shows percentage of U. S. gross at October 13th. What is the basis of those percentages?

The Witness: That is a tabulation, sir, of billings, individual invoices. That means October 13, 1945, which was the latest available figures that have been tabulated on this picture.

Judge Bright: I still do not quite understand. Do you mean, taking the first line, Paramount affiliates, that they had 6.04 of the billings?

The Witness: Yes, sir. That means that the $170,527.06 in the first column represents 6.04 per cent of the total United States billings on Sweet Rosie O'Grady, which is the figure on the last line of the sheet of $2,821,772. So we received——

Judge Bright: So that particular column does not refer to dollars?

The Witness: No, that is a percentage of these dollars over here in relation to the total revenue from the United States, 6.04 per cent of $2,821,000 which came from Paramount affiliates in first-run situations. The total of that righthand column, sir, is 27.48 per cent, and that is total first-run revenue received in the United States from the exhibition of Sweet Rosie O'Grady.

Judge Bright: You mean the total of all your revenue.

The Witness: All first-run revenue, 27.48 per cent of the total revenue, $2,821,000, and of that $2,821,000 we got from first-run Paramount $170,000, or about six per cent. Is that clear, sir?

(2180)

Q. I think you answered one of Judge Bright's questions wrong. This percentage of gross does not refer to percentage of billings; it refers actually to percentage of dollar volume, isn't that right? A. Yes, sir, except our billings are dollar volume.

Q. Yes, but there is nothing on the chart to show the number of billings that the gross was represented by, in any event, is there? A. Not the number, no, sir.

Q. Now, this F-20—have you got that in front of you? That is the chart headed "Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation 10 Highest Gross 1943-44 Features as of March 31, 1945." A. Yes, sir.

Q. I notice the first picture you have there, Song of Bernadette—that picture was not generally released in that season at all, was it? A. No, sir; it was what is called roadshowed at advanced admission prices.

Q. These bookings that are listed there were all for road showings, is that right? A. Yes, or advanced prices, is the accurate term.

Q. Now, when you were referring in your testimony to what you call distribution costs, I take it those costs are not reflected in any of this tabular material that was offered, are they? A. I believe there is one schedule that shows it, sir (examining)—no, there is not. It is not shown anywhere.

(2181)

Q. I notice this F-17 which gives negative costs in domestic film rentals gives no data as to distribution costs at all.

Now, of course, you operate a world-wide distribution system, do you not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, you distribute films or license them all over the world? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And this distribution cost that you are talking about, —that is simply an estimated allocation that you attribute to domestic distribution? A. It is a very conservative figure. It is quite a little bit below the actual by years.

Q. Well, just tell me how you arrive at this distribution cost figure that you were talking about. A. Distribution costs include such items as positive prints, advertising, cost of operating domestic exchanges; the sales departments; the accounting departments; the legal departments—all the costs of getting our revenue out of the pictures outside of the negative costs which terminate when the picture leaves the studio.

Q. You include in negative costs everything or all expenses that are incurred in connection with production of any kind? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How about your overhead costs? Where do those go, in your distribution or in your negative costs? A. Studio overhead goes in production costs and distribution overhead goes to distribution costs.

Q. Then how about your home office or your overall overhead? Do you allocate that? A. We consider that part of distribution.

Q. Well, that entire cost there goes into your distribution cost? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you make some kind of allocation, do you, to determine your domestic distribution cost as against your distribution costs in any other area? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you allocate your general overhead home office expenses there? A. Yes, we keep the foreign costs separate from the domestic.

Q. I say, what do you do with your home office overhead there? A. The domestic home office overhead is part of domestic distribution costs.

Q. Well, you have here in this country a home office which supervises the worldwide distribution, isn't that right? A. We have a separate foreign distribution company, and those costs are segregated and kept in the foreign costs.

Q. Well, that is wholly owned, is it not, by you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that you take your top company, home office overhead cost and you allocate all of that to domestic distribution, is that right? A. That part that belongs to domestic,
yes, sir.

Q. Well, how do you determine which part belongs to the domestic and which part is foreign? A. Well, we have a foreign international corporation which is headed by a president and has a full board of directors and officers, and has its own expenses, including its own telephone bills, its rent, its light, depreciation of its equipment, all the expenses that apply to it.

Q. But all the costs other than those separately billed to that foreign corporation are allocated to domestic distribution, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, do you keep separate profit and loss figures for domestic performance of a picture as against over-all performance? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You do have those figures on every picture which would show a profit or loss on the picture? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you do not publish in your annual statements, I believe, any profit or loss figures which attempt to break down distribution from production profits, is that right? A. No, sir, we don't analyze them that way.

Q. You simply figure on overall profit on your production and distribution activities? A. Consolidated, yes, sir.

Q. And how about your theatre operations? A. They are all consolidated in our published statements, sir.

(2184)

Judge Bright: Do you keep them separately?

The Witness: Oh, yes, we keep them separately; but Mr. Wright is talking about our published statements, and they are on a consolidated basis.

Q. In your published statements you consolidate all three, but for your own bookkeeping purposes you have a profit and loss statement on the production activity separate from the distribution of the film? A. Not a profit and loss statement. We keep the cost separately.

Q. The only separation is in cost, and when it comes to profit and loss, you simply have one figure for the picture which covers both your production and your distribution activities in connection with that pieture, is that right? A. On each individual picture?

Q. Yes. A. We make a calculation of our profit and loss on each individual picture, using an allocation, yes, sir.

Judge Bright: What do you mean by using an allocation.

The Witness: Showing our domestic costs and distribution, and our foreign costs and distribution, so we know what our foreign profits are and our domestic profits.

Judge Bright: Do you allocate your profits to the three branches of production, distribution and exhibition?

(2185)

The Witness: No, sir; we just allocate it to domestic and foreign distribution.

Q. And you make no profit allocation as between production and distribution on any picture, is that right? A. No, sir.

Q. But you have profit figures for each picture? A. We have a picture profit and loss report on each picture, yes, sir.

Q. I suppose you do not have any personal knowledge as to the extent to which these increased costs you have reflected here have been realized in the form of increased admission prices? A. No, sir.

Mr. Wright: That is all.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Caskey:

Q. Mr. Eadie, where are the books of National Theatres Corporation kept? A. The main books are kept in the home office in Los Angeles.

Q. And where are the subsidiary books kept? A. They have several division offices.

Q. Do you keep those books? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you supervise the keeping of those books? A. No, sir.

Q. Now, those books are audited by a firm of certified public accountants? A. Yes, sir.

(2186)

Q. What firm is that? A. Lybrand, Ross Bros. & Montgomery.

Q. And who audits the books of Twentieth Century-Fox? A. Touche, Niven & Company.

Q. Since you have acquired 100 per cent of National's theatres in 1943, has it been required that the company publish a consolidated statement? A. You mean National Theatres, sir?

Q. No. Did Twentieth Century-Fox publish a consolidated statement? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who does the consolidating? A. It is under my supervision.

Q. From the reports of the two firms of independent accountants? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, there is just one other point I want to make perfectly sure about: Will you take Exhibits F-19 and F-21. On Exhibits F-21 the total revenue first-run in the 92 cities on Sweet Rosie O'Grady was what percentage of the total national revenue? A. 27.48 per cent.

Q. Now, what percentage of all 34 pictures was it as shown on Exhibit F-19—— A. 25.7 per cent.

Q. And the figure on F-19 of 25.7 per cent is the comparable figure to 27.48 per cent on the one picture Sweet Rosie O'Grady? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was the highest grossing picture of the year of that season's release, or one of the highest? A. One of the highest.

Mr. Caskey: That is all.

Recross Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. I notice when you include your entire 34 feature pictures there, you then get a lesser figure for total percentage of affiliation than you get from simply your higher grossing pictures? A. Will you just repeat that, Mr. Wright?

Q. Well, it is a fact, is it not, that on your higher grossing pictures you have a higher percentage of rental from affiliated theatres than you do on your low grossing pictures, is that right? A. I don't have those figures. I do not think it necessarily follows.

Mr. Wright: That is all.

Mr. Caskey: That is all.

Mr. Leisure: With the Court's permission I am going to call the president of RKO at this time.

Mr. Rathvon, will you please take the stand?

Judge Hand: Are you all right to go on, Mr. Leisure?

Mr. Leisure: Yes, sir. Thank you very much.

(2188)

NATHANIEL PETER RATHVON, called as a witness on behalf of defendant RKO defendants, etc., being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Leisure:

Q. Your name is N. Peter Rathvon? A. Yes.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Rathvon? A. Mamaroneck, New York.

Q. How long and in what capacities have you been associated with Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation? A. I first became associated with the company in 1936 when I was working on problems of reorganization on behalf of a banking group.

In July, 1939, I became a director of the company then in receivership, and also a member of its executive committee. I became chairman of the executive committee that same year.

In 1941 I became a vice-president of the company and in June, 1942, I became its president.

Q. Will you state the names and functions of the principal companies of Radio-Keith-Orpheum organization, please. A. RKO is primarily a holding company. Its distributing and producing function is primarily in one company known as RKO-Radio Pictures. The only exception to that is the production of our newsreels and certain shorts that are handled by a company or made by a company known as Pathe

News, but they are also distributed by RKO-Radio Pictures.

There are several theatre-holding companies in the RKO group: They are B. F. Keith, RKO-Orpheum, RKO-Midwest and RKO-Proctor.

The actual physical operations are handled by three service corporations, one known as RKO Service, the other RKO Film Booking, and the other, a vaudeville booking company of small importance.

Q. Will you please state what if any important positions you hold in the subsidiaries you have mentioned, Mr. Rathvon? A. I am president of the subsidiary B. F. Keith, and I am chairman of the board of all the rest of the subsidiaries.

Q. When was Radio-Keith-Orpheum organized? A. 1928.

Q. And what were the circumstances that led to the organization of RKO? A. RKO was created, really, as the result of the advent of sound in motion pictures. As early as 1926 there was a great deal of experiment in sound in motion pictures, and two of the companies that were active in that field were Electrical Research Products Company, a subsidiary of Western Electric, and Radio Corporation of America, known as RCA. Those were the two leading companies.

The first sound pictures made by Fox and Warner in 1926 used techniques controlled by Electrical Research (2190) Products, generally referred to as Erpi. So that the early studio equipment was Erpi-equipped.

By the time Radio Corporation of America was ready to to enter this field a couple of years had gone by; and when they stepped out to market their Photophone process, they found that most of the studios in Hollywood had been pretty well equipped with the Erpi equipment, and they were in many of the leading theatres.

So they undertook to get into this field by acquiring production facilities that were not equipped and acquiring theatres. In other words they went into this field which was partially closed to them by going into the picture business.

Q. What steps were taken to secure production and distribution facilities? A. Well, the first step RKO acquired a producing distributing company. It was a company known as FBO Productions, Inc., organized in 1920. It was not an important producing company. It made minor pictures. But it did have a distributing organization of about 34 exchanges, and that gave them a foot in the door of production and distribution.

RCA then set about acquiring a position in theatres, and to do this it organized Radio Corporation of America, the existing company. It exchanged its holdings in——

(2191)

Q. Radio-Keith-Orpheum, did you mean? A. Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, I am sorry, sir, the company of which I am now president. And into that company they transferred this production and distributing company that they had acquired, FBO Productions, and then they set about acquiring theatres by exchange of stock. There was Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, the vaudeville exchange, and there was an offer made to the stockholders of that company to exchange stock of RKO for their KAO stock. There was a similar offer made to another circuit, Orpheum Circuit, Inc., and by acquiring these groups of vaudeville houses RKO got into the exhibition field. And these vaudeville houses had a problem of their own at that time. With the advent of the bigger palace movie houses, vaudeville had started its decline. These houses had all been built for vaudeville; most of them had two balconies; and with sound coming in the vaudeville theatre was somewhat weakened; so it was a fairly logical combination, for a new company coming into the sound field to acquire the vaudeville theatres rather than any other.

Q. How many were acquired, Mr. Rathvon? A. Well, KAO, at the time of its acquisition, owned and leased close to a hundred theatres. It also owned entirely a subsidiary called B. F. Keith, which had an interest, a majority interest in 19 theatres, I believe, and a minority interest—that is, below 50 per cent—in 90-odd additional theatres. The Orpheum Circuit, the other one, had varying interests in a number of theatres scattered all over the United States.

After these acquisitions, which continued up to 1929, 1930, they took over another chain known as Proctor that had five big theatres in New York. They acquired theatres in the midwest, Cincinnati, Columbus, and Dayton.

Judge Hand: Does RKO own completely the Orpheum Circuit?

The Witness: The Orpheum Circuit has long since changed its form. At the time it acquired those original theatres Orpheum Circuit in its entirety was one of the companies taken over through exchange of stock.

Judge Hand: In the receivership?

The Witness: Yes, in the disasters of receivership that circuit was entirely broken up.

Q. What, if any, efforts did RKO made in those years to improve its production position? A. Well, it spent some seven million dollars on the production facilities it had acquired in Hollywood, and bought some additional facilities from Pathe Exchanges, Inc.; and at the cost of about five million dollars it acquired certain production assets from Pathe Exchanges, Inc., largely bought for the benefit of some star contracts.

(2193)

They also spent about eight million dollars on these vaudeville houses, rejuvenating them and equipping them with sound.

Q. Mr. Rathvon, what was the general nature of the theatres acquired by RKO in 1933? A. Well, with few exceptions they were the vaudeville theatres. They were generally large, well built theatres, well located, in large important cities; one or two to a city.

Q. Now, I believe you said in response to Judge Hand's question, or you intimated, at least, that RKO at one time was in receivership. When was that, please? A. RKO went into receivership in January 1933.

Q. And when did it come out, do you know? A. Not until January 1940.

Q. And was RKO named as a defendant in this case while it was in receivership? A. That is correct.

Q. What effect did the receivership have on RKO's production, distribution and exhibition of pictures? A. Well, all during the receivership RKO maintained its producing and distributing facilities just about as they were then they acquired them. It was in the theatre end that they lost during this period, lost some 57 theatres.

Q. Will you tell the Court briefly the extent and nature of RKO's present theatre operations? A. Yes. RKO today operates 106 theatres. 62 of these are so-called first-run (2194) theatres. The rest are second or subsequent run. And of the 106, 72 were former vaudeville houses acquired in the early stages of the company.

Q. Have you had prepared under your direction a list of the theatres operated by RKO? A. I have.

Mr. Leisure: I ask to have it marked for identification, please.

Mr. Wright: Is this any different from the one that has already gone in evidence? We have a list of RKO theatres in. It may be confusing——

Mr. Leisure: I will just have it marked for identification at this time and use it in connection with the witness's testimony; and if it is already in, Mr. Wright, I assure you I shall not offer it again. But I am informed it is not in evidence.

(Marked Defendant RKO's Exhibit RKO-1 for identification.)

Q. Was that list prepared under your direction, and is that a correct representation of the theatres? A. Yes, I believe it is a correct list of the 106 theatres I mentioned.

Mr. Leisure: I offer it in evidence.

(Defendant RKO's Exhibit RKO-1 for identification received in evidence.)

Q. Mr. Rathvon, has there been or is there any agreement or understanding between RKO and any other defendant as to the cities or areas in which they should respectively acquire or operate theatres? A. There is not.
(2195)

Q. From your activities in the discharge of your responsibilities, are you familiar with the general policies and practices governing the production and distribution and exhibition activities of the various RKO companies? A. I am; as director of each of the companies, I am familiar with it; and as chief executive officer of the company I am charged with the responsibility of seeing that those policies are carried out.

Q. Now, very briefly, Mr. Rathvon, will you just describe to the Court in general the organization and functions of the production department of RKO? A. Why, our production department, except for our newsreel and small amount of short production, is entirely on the Pacific Coast in Hollywood. It is under the direction of Mr. Charles Koerner, who is the vice-president of RKO-Radio Pictures, and he has complete charge of the production end of our business, typical of all companies, that goes from the beginning when you first purchase the story until the completed picture is finally delivered to the distribution department.

Q. Will you also please briefly describe to the Court the organization and functions of the distribution department? A. Well, our distribution department is organized on a worldwide scale. We have separate foreign and domestic distribution departments. The domestic distribution department is under the supervision of Mr. Robert Mochrie. He has 34 offices under him, and he also has the offices in Canada. Each of those are in charge of a manager, with salesmen working under them. That department has the activity of exploiting and selling the pictures, handle the physical distribution of those to the theatres in which they are exhibited, and also is charged with the duty of collecting the rentals.

Q. Now, finally, Mr. Rathvon, will you just continue and describe to the Court the organization and functions of the theatre-operating companies? A. RKO operates its theatres in two main groups. Those in Greater New York are under the supervision of Mr. James Brennen, as general manager, and all theatres outside of that area are under the supervision of Mr. Sol Schwartz, as general manager of those theatres.

The booking of pictures into all theatres is conducted by our booking company, which is under the direction of Mr. Harold Mirish.

The physical operation of the theatres as distinguished (2197) from booking, and so on, is under the direction of Mr. Wilbur England. The theatre operation, of course, includes the maintenance and the care of the theatre.

Q. Now, from your description of the RKO organization I gather that the production and distribution activities are not carried on by the same corporations that control the exhibition activities? A. That is right. There is one small exception. Our RKO Service Company does certain clerical work for the RKO-Radio Pictures, but with the exception of that small amount of clerical work, that is correct.

Q. To what extent do the producing and distributing corporations and the exhibition corporations have the same officers or personnel? A. Well, the offices are in the same building, 1270 Sixth Avenue, although the theatre-operating departments are on different floors than the distributing departments.

Q. Are the physical offices of the theatre corporations and the offices of the production and distribution corporations the same? A. No, they are on different floors.

Q. I think you misunderstood my first question: I want to know about the officers of these different companies. A. (2198)
Oh, there is a number of executive officers who are officers of subsidiaries that have to do with the theatres and also with the subsidiaries that have to do with distribution and exhibition. RKO is not as large a company as some of the others, and at the top executive level there are four or five officers who hold office in the various subsidiaries. At the operation level, however, that is not so. The operating men in the theatre companies are an entirely distinct group from the operating men in the distribution organization.

Q. Will you tell us, Mr. Rathvon, if you know, the RKO policy with reference to the interchange of information between personnel charged with distribution and those charged with the theatre operations? A. Well, our policy is that there shall be no exchange of such information other than our daily theatre reports showing the amounts the pictures are grossing at given theatres at various dates. Daily theatre reports are available to the distributing organization.

Q. And do the executives have access to this information? A. Well, I, for example, have access to all information. As I said, there were several other executives that have that same privilege. Those executives, however, are not active operating men, and we look upon our use of this combined knowledge as important in policy forming, and it is not used in operation.
(2199)

Q. Well, does this executive access which you have described in any way affect the decision of the operating personnel of the distributing company as to the theatres it will license? A. It does not——

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, that is a speculative matter which I do not see that he is competent to answer.

Judge Hand: Well, I do not think it is very convincing merely because it comes from this source; but I will allow it.

Q. And does this executive access which you have described in any way affect the decisions of the operating personnel of the theatre companies as to the features they will license to RKO theatres? A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Rathvon, can you give the Court any idea of the relative size of RKO in the motion picture industry? A. Yes, I can.

Mr. Leisure: Before you answer that, I am going to ask permission to have marked for identification a chart.

(Marked Defendant RKO's Exhibit RKO-2 for identification.)

Q. Mr. Rathvon, will you just tell us the source material of this chart? First tell us if it was prepared under your direct supervision? A. It was.

Q. And tell us the source material, please. A. Well, other (2200) than the company's own records we used the Film Daily Year Book for 1945, which is a fairly well recognized source of general industry statistics.

Mr. Leisure: I offer RKO Exhibit 2 for identification in evidence, please.

Mr. Seymour: May I see it?

Judge Hand: Was RKO-1 for identification?

Mr. Leisure: RKO-1 was offered for identification and then admitted, your Honor.

Judge Bright: Has it been admitted?

Mr. Leisure: Yes.

Mr. Wright: I think, if the Court please, we put in evidence a list of the RKO theatres as of December 31, 1944, as Exhibit 158, and I do not know if there are any changes on this. If there are I suppose these ought to go in, but if it is just a duplication, it adds nothing.

Judge Hand: Did you say as of 1944?

Mr. Wright: We had previously offered and there had been received a list of RKO theatres as of December 31, 1944, as Exhibit 158, as supplemented by a letter from RKO's counsel dated July 13, 1945. Now, I do not know whether this is intended as a further supplement or not. If it is I suppose we ought to have it; but if it does not supplement anything that is already in evidence, it seems to me it just adds nothing to the record.

(2201)

Mr. Leisure: May I explain that?

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Leisure: Obviously we are not going to offer anything that is already in evidence, Mr. Wright. The list which Mr. Wright refers to covers all theatres in which we have any interest whatever. Now, Mr. Wright and I have a little private feud on this question of affiliated theatres. Mr. Wright believes if I own 10 shares in General Motors I am affiliated with General Motors. I take the position I am a practicing lawyer and not affiliated with General Motors. His list covers every theatre that we have any interest in whatever. Our list merely refers to the theatres operated by us.

Mr. Wright: I think the list we put in is broken down so that it shows separately the theatres operated by RKO and then those in which they have other less direct interest.

Judge Hand: Can you do that, or have you done it?

Mr. Wright: I think it has been done in the list we put in.

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Leisure: The point I am interested in now with this exhibit and with this witness are the theatres operated by RKO, without any dispute as to stock ownership of 10 per cent or anything of that kind; so I think it is admissible.

(2202)

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Leisure: Now, Exhibit RKO-2 for identification has been offered at this time.

Mr. Wright: I would like to examine him on it.

Judge Hand: All right.

Preliminary Cross Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. Calling your attention, Mr. Rathvon, to this RKO Exhibit 2 for identification, I notice under the heading "Features Released," you have a figure "Total Industry 442." Now, do you know what period of time that covers? A. That is in the calendar year 1944.

Q. Those are the features released during the calendar year, is that right? A. That is correct.

(2203)

Q. And when you say "total industry," does that mean total industry in the United States? A. That is the 442 pictures reported as features released within the United States that year by the Film Year Book.

Q. But you don't know whether those are—are those all features released by domestic distributors, is that it? Does it include features that might have been released and distributed in this country by foreign distributors? That is what I am trying to get at. A. I do not know of any foreign distributors that distribute pictures in the United States directly. I imagine if there are any such they would be part of the 442.

Q. This represents the total number of features actually distributed in the United States regardless of origin, is that right? A. That is what the Film Year Book says.

Q. This is simply taken from the 1945 Year Book, is not that right? A. That is correct.

Q. You did not make any investigation of your own to determine the accuracy or inaccuracy of those figures? A. I did not.

Q. This figure, film rentals received, that represents the film rentals received by whom, that $469,000,000?

Judge Bright: What was that question?

Q. Question read.) A. That represents the Year Book's (2204) estimated film rentals received by the distributors who put out the 442 pictures mentioned in the first column..

Q. That again is just a figure taken from the Year Book. Have you got the page reference to the Year Book so that we can see where those things are? A. I don't carry a Year Book around with me, I am sorry.

Q. You don't know the precise part that came from? A. No.

Q. In any event, that was just taken from the Year Book and you made no—— A. All these statistics were taken from the Year Book and we take the book for what it is worth as a fairly well recognized source book for industry figures in our industry.

Q. But there was no attempt to check these particular figures? A. None at all, neither those figures nor the others that are cited from the Year Book.

Q. That is what I am trying to get at: those that come from the Year Book, these figures, theatres operated, in the third column there, 18076, that is also simply a Year Book figure? A. Your questions on any one of the columns are the same, as far as the Year Book, goes on all of them, just taken from the Year Book for what they are worth.

Q. The only figures that came from your records, as to which you had any firsthand knowledge, were these figures which are reflected by the red shaded portions of the chart, is that right? A. Yes.

(2205)

Mr. Wright: I must say, if the Court please, I do not know exactly what the purpose of this is. Our own experience is, in such checks as we have been able to make, that the accuracy of these Year Book figures is open to serious question. Now it may not be of significance in view of the purpose, but inasmuch as the purpose is not clear to me, I would press the objection.

Judge Bright: Are we going to have more accurate evidence upon this subject?

Mr. Wright: As to gross admissions and weekly average attendance, there are, of course—the situation, as I understand it, is this, as to gross admissions: of course you do have reasonably accurate figures, I think, in the Government entertainment tax receipts of over-all admissions, but there is no breakdown there as between motion picture theatres and other places of entertainment. I would say that insofar as I know, no one has assembled accurate figures on this question of the gross theatre admissions and weekly average attendance, total theatres operated and total film rentals received.

Judge Bright: We have had three figures already of the total theatres operated.

Mr. Wright: Yes. As far as I know, there are none—I have never seen any which, I think, are recognized as accurate. It is a constantly shifting total.

(2206)

It is very difficult to ascertain because houses are constantly being closed and opened.

Judge Bright: Have you submitted any proof on any of the five columns of this proposed exhibit?

Mr. Wright: I don't think we have. We have confined our proof, I believe, in each case to the actual figures produced by the various defendant companies.

Judge Bright: Does your proof show the percentage of each one of these five companies with reference to the totals in the industry on any particular item?

Mr. Wright: No, it does not.

Judge Bright: Does your proof show the totals of the industry in any of these items?

Mr. Wright: We have offered, I believe, no proof of industry totals. I think that is correct, your Honor.

Judge Goddard: Have you cited the Year Book at all as your authority?

Mr. Leisure: It has been constantly referred to.

Judge Goddard: Is that right, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Have I—

Judge Goddard: Perhaps you did not hear. I was asking you: my recollection is that the Government has cited the Year Book as authority for certain statistics.

Mr. Wright: As our record stands, I do not believe that anything we have in evidence is based upon

(2207)

Year Book figures. That is my impression.

Judge Goddard: Hasn't it, in the course of this litigation, been cited by the Government? I think so.

Mr. Wright: I don't recall, but we may have referred to it. As I say, we have never been able to obtain what we regard as accurate figures setting forth these over-all industry facts.

Mr. Leisure: I think in the constantly shifting total, such as opening theatres and closing theatres, you would never have any two figures that may agree, but may I ask a question which I think will fully clarify this question?

Direct Examination continued by Mr. Leisure:

Q. Mr. Rathvon, is the Year Book to your knowledge a book that is used constantly in your industry and regarded as a reliable book for the information which it is supposed to contain? A. It is.

Judge Bright: By whom is it published?

The Witness: It is published by the publishers of one of our trade magazines, Film Daily.

Judge Bright: Is it published by any of the dedendants here?

The Witness: No.

Judge Bright: Or by the group of them?

The Witness: No.

(2208)

Judge Hand: We will allow it.

Q. Addressing your attention to the column on your left, Mr. Rathvon, I would like for you to just start and explain to the Court what the column purports to show, giving the figures as you go down to the last figure, 91.6 per cent? A. The whole purpose of this chart is to show relatively the niche that RKO occupies in this industry. I think whether the over-all comparative figures are highly accurate or not, they are certainly accurate enough to indicate broadly what RKO's activities are in relation to the whole industry.

We approach it first from the number of features, showing that RKO as a distributor, released 37 out of the estimated 442, or 8.4 per cent of all the features that were released, and that of the film rentals received, only 7.6 per cent went to RKO as a distributor.

Judge Bright: Do I understand that film rentals received column is film rentals received from features only?

The Witness: I am not quite sure whether those two figures are—if it isn't, it would include shorts, which is a relatively small item.

Judge Bright: Would it cover any of those Trans-Lux theatres where they have just news?

(2209)

The Witness: Well, if it includes what I have called shorts, it is news and shorts. I think that means the total film rentals received by the companies for features and shorts as well, but I don't know.

A. (Continuing) The remaining columns have to do with theatres. It shows that we operate 106 out of 18 thousand, or only six-tenths of one per cent of the total. Weekly average attendance: out of the estimate of 95,000,000, our weekly average is 1,844,000, and represents 1.9 per cent of the total. Out of gross admissions collected, it is 2.6 per cent of the total.

On the whole it shows that as a distributor we do around 8 per cent of the business, and as a theatre operator we do around in the range of one to two percent.

Q. Mr. Rathvon, the Butterfield companies have been mentioned here from time to time. Do any of the RKO companies own stock in the W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc.?

A. Yes. B. F. Keith owns ten per cent of the stock of that company.

Q. What is the business, please, of W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc? A. It operates theatres in Michigan.

Q. What is the interest of B. F. Keith in that corporation? A. It owns part of the common stock. There are three classes of common stock, A, B and C. The C stock, which represents ten per cent of the total, is owned entirely by our subsidiary, B. F. Keith.
(2210)

Q. When did B. F. Keith Corporation acquire this stock? A. Oh, that stock was acquired before RKO came into existence. It was in that company at the time its stock was exchanged into RKO.

Q. Does B. F. Keith Corporation exercise any control over the operation of W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc.? A. None at all.

Q. Does B. F. Keith Corporation have any control over the management of W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc.? A. No.

Q. And does B. F. Keith elect any directors? A. C stock is entitled to one out of six directors. We have on the board a representative of RKO.

Q. Who is that? A. That is Major Leslie Thompson, who is head of our labor relations department. He used to be in theatre operations at the time he went on the board, but he has now been in charge of labor relations for a long while and we haven't bothered to make a change in the representation.

Q. Based on your experience, Mr. Rathvon, does the stock interest of B. F. Keith Corporation in W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc., give any advantage to RKO in licensing features for exhibition to the Butterfield Theatres? A. No.
(2211)

Q. The Butterfield Michigan Company has also been mentioned here. Do any of the RKO companies own any stock interest in Butterfield Michigan Theatres Company? A. Yes, B. F. Keith owns 33⅓ per cent interest in that one.

Q. What is the business of that company, please? A. That also operates theatres in that general area.

Q. What is the interest of the B. F. Keith in that corporation? A. It has a stock interest of about one-third of the common stock. Both of those acquisitions came in connection with vaudeville booking arrangements back in the days when they were operated entirely as vaudeville houses and those securities were resting in the B. F. Keith Company at the time they became part of RKO.

Q. Again, as to this company, does B. F. Keith Corporation exercise any control over the operation of Butterfield Michigan Theatres, Inc.? A. None whatever.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I think we have an agreement there which sets forth the relations between the companies, which is the best evidence as to the existence or non-existence of control. A copy of that was given to us after Mr. Beatty of the Butterfield Corporation had testified, and I have sent for it now, but I think that agreement is the best evidence rather than these statements of this man as to what the control of the situation is.

Judge Hand: Probably it is. You are going to put it in, I suppose.

Mr. Wright: Yes, I was going to ask to put it in.

Judge Hand: Go on.

Q. Does B. F. Keith Corporation have any control over the management of Butterfield Michigan Theatres, Inc.? A. It does not.

Q. Does it elect any directors? A. It has a director, the same Major Leslie Thompson, who is on the other Butterfield board.

Q. Based on your experience again, Mr. Rathvon, does the stock interest of the B. F. Keith Corporation in Butterfield Michigan Theatres Company give any advantage to RKO in licensing features for exhibition in the Butterfield Theatres? A. No.

Q. There is another group that has been mentioned here from time to time, called the Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc. Do any of the RKO companies own any interest in that company? A. Yes, B. F. Keith owns a 20 per cent interest in that company.

Q. What is the business of that company, please? A. It is a real estate holding company, its real estate assets being theatre property.

Q. When did B. F. Keith acquire its interest in that (2213) company? A. In 1935.

Q. Will you explain that to the Court, please, the circumstances under which that came about? A. Well, Metropolitan Playhouses is a company that grew out of the receivership of the Fox Metropolitan Theatres. It had been organized by Mr. [illegible]ck in 1928 and it had been a hastily organized circuit in this metropolitan district here in New York and shortly after 1929 and 1930 the circuit began to disintegrate. It never had any product other than the Fox and half of Warner, I believe, and half of Paramount, and their film rentals were not such that they could hold all of that product, as a result of which it was finally left just to the Fox product to support these expensive theatres, and the operation went into receivership.

After a period in receivership, it emerged as Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc. as far as the real estate holding end of it.

The operation of those theatres, however, during the receivership and afterwards, and I suppose before even the receivership, was in the hands of operating companies.

Metropolitan Playhouses emerged as the holding company of the theatres of that receivership, and RKO at that time acquired a 20 per cent interest—when I say "at that time", I mean when the receivership ended—pursuant to a contract we had entered into in June of that year, which was approved by the Court under the Metropolitan receivership.
(2214)

Q. Again, based on your experience, does B. F. Keith exercise any control over the operation or the management of that company? A. No, but that is not an operating company.

Q. And does it have any directors? A. It has one director in nine. Our director is Mr. Malcolm Kingsburg, vice-president and treasurer of our company, who was formerly head of our theatre operations.

Q. There are two groups, Mr. Rathvon, whose names have been mentioned here from time to time, and that is Skouras and Randforce Corporation. What if any is the relationship between Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc. and Skouras Theatres Corporation and Randforce Amusement Corporation? A. Metropolitan Playhouses own 50 per cent interest in each of those companies.

Q. And would you tell us the business of Skouras Theatres? A. Well, it is a theatre-operating company whose activities are confined largely to parts of New York City.

Q. And the business of Randforce Amusement Company? A. It also is the same thing, only their theatres are largely concentrated in Brooklyn.

Q. Do RKO companies own any stock in the Skouras Theatres? A. No.
(2215)

Q. Do they own any stock in Randforce Amusement Company? A. No.

Q. By reason of its 20 per cent ownership of stock in Metropolitan Playhouses, does B. F. Keith elect any representatives on the board of either Randforce or Skouras? A. No.

Q. Does B. F. Keith Corporation have any control over or voice in the management of the theatres operated by Skouras Theatres Corporation or Randforce Amusement Corporation? A. No.

Q. And based on your experience, Mr. Rathvon, does RKO Pictures secure any advantage in the licensing of its pictures to either Skouras or Randforce by reason of the fact that B. F. Keith Corporation has 20 per cent stock interest in the Metropolitan Playhouses, which in turn has a 50 per cent stock interest in Randforce and Skouras? A. No.

Q. Another company: Do any of the RKO companies have any interest in a corporation known as Affiliated Theatres, Inc? A. Yes, RKO-Orpheum has a 10 per cent interest.

Q. How did that come about, if you know? A. Well, that interest was acquired by the—it was an asset of the Mort H. Singer Theatres and it had been acquired by the theatre interests of that organization prior to that time, (2216) and it came into our possession when we first acquired the Mort H. Singer Company. It is a very small item and it stands on our books at only between 7 and 8 thousand dollars.

Q. I neglected to ask you what the business is of that company. A. It operates six theatres in Sioux City, Iowa.

Q. Does RKO have its own first-run theatres in Sioux City? A. It does.

Q. Are the theatres operated by Affiliated Theatres, Inc. regular customers of RKO? A. No.

Q. Does RKO have any representation on the board? A. No.

Q. And do they buy our product either first or second-run, Mr. Rathvon? A. Not regularly. There have been a few spot bookings in the last few years, the only transactions of any kind.

Q. Will you say that the stock interest of RKO-Orpheum Corporation in Affiliated Theatres, Inc. gave any advantage to RKO-Radio Pictures in the licensing of features distributed by it? A. Well, obviously not. They don't buy our pictures.

Q. Mr. Rathvon, from your account of the development of the RKO companies, it appears that RKO from its organization has operated as an integrated unit? A. That is correct.

Q. Based on your experience as president of the company, (2217) does the fact that RKO operates as an integrated unit, including production, distribution and exhibition, offer any advantages which would not be present if the companies were separated? A. Offers very great advantages.

Q. Will you be good enough to outline the advantages to the Court which you have observed with particular reference to the operations of RKO? A. I will. The mere ownership of theatres by a producer distributor, regardless of whether those theatres are first-run or second-run, or any run, no matter what type of theatres they are, the mere ownership of them is a great safety factor and a great stabilizing influence in what is essentially a very hazardous and very speculative business.

For a number of years RKO has received about one-half of its gross revenue from theatre admissions. In good times and bad, a fair share of those theatre admissions have found their way through to net profits.

This theatre business is a stable, predictable retail business. In the last ten years the number of people who have attended RKO theatres, that is, our average admissions, has varied very slightly. In that ten-year period there has been no year when the number of admissions has varied five per cent from the average. Therefore, the variation in net profits in the said years have been due to variations in admission prices or variations in film rentals, but in every year the theatres have been able to show substantial net profit from those admissions.

Production is entirely another story. With production, well, in 1936 RKO made two million dollars on about 18 million dollars worth of film rentals. Two years later, on a greater amount of film rental, it lost $570,000. In fact, in the five years from 1938 to 1942, inclusive, RKO lost four million —it was in the red constantly in those five years, and we lost five million dollars on our production-distribution operations, and yet in those very same five years we made nine million dollars profit on our theatre operations.

RKO never could have emerged from the receivership in 1940 if it had not have been for the theatres and the earnings of the theatres and the stabilizing influence they gave our operations. In fact, I am quite confident that RKO would have sunk back into receivership in 1942 if it had not been for the theatres, because in that year we had to pledge our theatre holdings to borrow three million dollars to keep on making pictures.

That era of five years, when the theatres, so far as RKO are concerned, supported us, kept us out of receivership and kept us up, were not what you would call bad times in our industry. RKO was suffering particularly in those five years because, coming out of receivership, it had very few production assets, very few stars, and we were struggling to get back on our feet and get on a competitive basis.

The progress we have made in operation in the last few years has been made possible by the stability, and the confidence and the boldness that we could go ahead, because we had these theatre earnings to go on.

But every so often our industry does run into hard times when all production generally is on an unprofitable basis for a period of time. That has happened historically in the past. It is at times like that when the distributor producer knows that he is faced with a period when his production generally is going to be losing, that the stability and the strength of these theatre earnings are most important to him.

Every time we are prosperous in this industry and the revenue from our producing activity goes up, our production costs go right up along with it, and then when times aren't so good and the curve turns down and crosses this cost curve, why we are in trouble.

(2220)

There are many reasons why we cannot control cost with facility in our business. One is the fact that we make tremendous inventories ahead of the time they are going to be distributed. Most of the companies have pictures made now which will not find their way to the screen for eighteen months or maybe two years. So, in the first place, you have a high cost inventory, that is, high cost in relation to the time that is coming, when we go into one of these periods, I will say; and the things you have in production, you have laid out your costs way ahead of time, on even projected pictures you are in trouble because of the contract system that exists there on labor, and to a certain extent with stars and expensive people. And those pictures, each time one of these periods comes along, it may be said with us, we know we are faced with a situation where production is going to be a losing proposition. When those periods come, these independent producers can readily take cover and go out of business for a year or two because they have no responsibility to keep this flow of pictures going, but the so-called major companies, who are the backbone of this industry, they have just got to keep plugging along, and we cannot cut down on the number of pictures. The minute we slow down on the number we are in trouble because in bad times the playoff of the pictures are accelerated, run a lesser length of time in exhibition, so you need more pictures instead of less. You cannot cut down in quality in those periods because the motion picture goer is a shopper, he becomes more a shopper at the time when his dollar means more to him, but more importantly still, we cannot cut quality because we have to maintain these foreign markets of ours, and we must keep the quality up, to do that. This industry has enjoyed extensive revenue from foreign markets for so many years that our whole cost structure is based on the expectation of substantial revenue from abroad. For a number of years upwards of 30 per cent of our total revenues, I am talking industry-wise, and it is true of RKO, have come from foreign markets. When 30 per cent of any revenue or any business, of your gross revenue, comes from one source, all your profit and part of your costs come from that source.

So the stability and strength which our theatre ownership adds to us, to our situation, reaches even into the maintenance of these foreign markets and helps permit us to maintain the prestige of the American picture abroad.

So when these hard times come, it falls on the producer, and that is so. The exhibitor does not take up much of the slack or difference between the results of good times and the results of bad times. The exhibitor looks on what he receives at the box office as falling into three slots, first, to pay the cost of his operation, second, to pay his film rental, and third, to pay his profit. The only flexible thing in there, from the exhibitor's point of view, is the film rental, so when times are bad, it is the film rental that shrinks rather than the exhibitor's profit or the cost of his operation.
(2222)

I have tried to present the situation from the purely broad point of view of ownership of theatres, regardless of what the location of those theatres are, the run of the theatres, or anything of the kind, but when that theatre ownership falls into certain patterns, then it has got a greatly enhanced value to the producer-distributor who owns it.

One of those patterns is the RKO first-run pattern. There may be other patterns, where these extra assets that establish that pattern add extra dividends to the producing and distributing company that owns it, I don't know, but I do know that this RKO pattern is very valuable and enhances the value of our holdings to RKO, and that pattern is inherited from vaudeville. It is the chain of theatres located, well managed, big theatres located in big cities, one or two to a city. It is a thing that we have—that has been spoken of largely as a showcase operation. It is more than a showcase, it is a demonstration center of great importance to the producer-distributor. What happens in the first-run key city engagement tells the story of what happens in a great many engagements that follow that, and for that reason that key city engagement is a very important one. If the engagement is a success, the producer-distributor gets subsequent rentals that he is entitled to with a successful picture. The exhibitor can buy the picture with confidence because success has been proven.

If the effort is a failure, well, the exhibitor is the only beneficiary then because he finds ways not to buy the picture or he buys it on his own terms. This exhibitor is a pretty conservative fellow. The average exhibitor, he wants nothing but the so-called automatic picture, with two or three fine star names based on distinguished books and plays. The producer has learned that he can make only a few of those in a year and he cannot make the rest of his program a spurious facsimile of his good picture. He has to reach out and try, if he is going to hold his public, he has to take terrific gambles with new ideas. Always, the producer is the fellow who must go out and gamble with something fresh or new to hold the motion picture public and keep up his attendance in our theatres. Constantly he must try to build unknown people into stars because there are not enough stars for our pictures. As a result of that, when we make pictures costing a million dollars and upwards, the gamble that you take when you make these guesses as to what the public wants, are always tremendous gambles. The producer has got to find out, at great expense, whether the public likes what he thinks they are going to like, and he may or he may not be right, but that is the gamble he takes.

Now, if the company that has taken those gambles, this producing company, has access on the terms of playing time and timing to these important first-run theatres, they have got something that goes a long way to mitigate that gamble.

In the first place, if you have got an unsuccessful picture, your first-run outlets that you control let it get into the flow of distribution and that is very important, because if you have an unsuccessful picture and your first-run exhibitor has no responsibility to you, you are foreclosed from that whole territory if you fail to get it into first-run theatres. So it is, for your unsuccessful pictures, it gives you a chance to get some revenue back because you forced it into the flow of distribution. On your more successful pictures, or on all pictures, these first-runs are of particular value in what we have come to call the setting up of the picture, establishing the prestige of the picture, getting it set for that territory.

At least, if you can handle the exploitation, if you can time your releases and so on, you know that these gambles that you take won't bog down from poor timing and poor exploitation.

I have talked—answered at considerable length. I would like to give a few examples of the type of thing I mean.

Q. Will you please. A. That gamble that the producer takes and what it means. I will give a few examples. Walt Disney, up until some years ago, made nothing but so-called short cartoons. I know that they cost him around $50,000 maximum to make these cartoons. He conceived the idea some years ago that the public would like to see full length animated pictures and he found when he got making it that he was gambling a million and a half dollars—that is the alleged cost of the picture; I don't know what it actually was, but in any event RKO was his distributor, so we undertook with Mr. Disney to make that gamble a success. A great many of the exhibitors throughout the country, when they heard this picture was forthcoming, were quite sure that the picture public would not sit through a full length cartoon, but a very elaborate campaign was worked up, the whole thing was carefully set up and established, and I must say in that case it was not a hard case to convince the exhibitors after a few showings that the public was very much—very much wanted to see a full length cartoon, because it became the greatest grossing picture of its year.

Judge Bright: What was its name?

The Witness: That was Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs, the first Disney cartoon that was beyond one reel that was ever made.

A. (Continuing) I would like to give a less spectacular example of a very recent one in my immediate experience, to show another type of gamble we took. RKO has not got many stars. We have to reach around and find them where we can get them. We try to build them but that is a matter of great difficulty and takes lots of time, so we comb the field over sometimes behind some of the others.

There was a young, or a man in Hollywood named Dick Powell, who had had a career as a singing juvenile. He played in musical pictures. He attained quite a degree of popularity and then his popularity waned and he was pretty well forgotten in Hollywood. I think he could have gotten in some job as a singing juvenile, but he conceived the idea that he could come back in an entirely different type, the so-called hardboiled Humphrey Bogart type. Well, who could tell? It required a gamble, and we decided to take the gamble with him and make the picture.

If we had announced the picture with Dick Powell the (2227) public, in the first place, would have assumed it was a musical picture and, in the second place, they would have stayed away from it, so our whole campaign was based on the new Dick Powell. We did not depict him at any time without a gun in his hand, and we played this character up and advertised him, so on, until we created public curiosity as to what the new Dick Powell was. In our first-run we launched that with a handmade campaign, which we controlled, we launched that picture and it turned out, for its cost, a very successful picture, so much so that we have finished a second picture with Dick Powell and we think we have got a, not a great star, but a star that we can count on as a steady earning star for a long time to come.

I could give you a lot more examples but I think those two examples will illustrate what I am saying.

Q. You have laid great emphasis on the importance of the producer having control of the first-run for the purpose of setting up his picture, of establishing their prestige. To what extent do the early engagements contribute to the success of the picture? A. The early engagement contributes very greatly to the success of the picture, and I am thinking more of the exhibitor than I am of the public generally because the grosses these early exhibitions make are published (2228)

in trade papers and they are picked up all over the country by exhibitors and the picture gets characterized as a big grosser, or a medium grosser, or some other kind of grosser. Exhibitors, like motion picture audiences, will hear a picture is good or they hear it is not good, and that tells whether or not, in their minds, as to what that picture is. So these early runs, particularly in their effect on the exhibitors of the country, are very important.

Q. To what extent does the national campaign and exploitation contribute to the success of the early engagements? A. Well, of course, the whole exploitation idea is to get people to know about your picture; they may not like it, but you get them to know about it. That is step number one, and your whole national advertising campaign is the first step in that thing, and you play it as far as you can up to what we call penetration, that is, the percentage of the movie going public that know about this thing, so your national campaign of advertising and exploitation in articles in magazines and everything else you can do carries you up to the point where the local campaign, the point where you hold your first exhibition, comes in. When they come in, they add the additional penetration on top of what you have built up on your national campaign. And our experience is you can build up more in local campaigning than you are able to build up in your national. In other words, the total amount of penetration you get will come more from your local campaign than from your national campaign. I am talking only of important pictures because those are the only ones we advertise extensively nationally.

As far as the less important ones go, they get all their penetration from the local newspaper campaign and local exploitation.

Q. What have you to say as to this; is local effort more effective where the early exhibition is in a theatre operated by RKO than it is in a theatre not affiliated with RKO? A.

It has been my experience, particularly when we have good pictures that require special handling, we do very much better in theatres operated by RKO. That Dick Powell picture I cited a little while ago would be a good example, where, in our own theatres, and with special effort, we do these things.

Q. Do you have any factual data, Mr. Rathvon, which confirms this? A. Yes, I have accumulated a great deal of data from time to time on the relative importance in relation to specific pictures and groups of pictures on this matter of penetration. In fact I have been at it for a long while. The story goes back to eight or nine years ago, when Dr. George Gallup conceived the idea that he might apply to the amusement business the ideas of market sampling that (2230)

he has used in other fields, and he experimented with this for a couple of years, and at the end of a couple of years he decided that it did have some valid application, and at that time RKO and Gallup got together and made arrangements whereby he set up a special organization known as Audience Research Institute, and we have been operating with them for over four years. It is an extensive organization; we spent a great deal of money on it. And at first we were concerned only with production items, things like the rating of stars, who were popular, who were becoming popular, and story tests, and trends of public taste in stories, but as time went on we got into marketing problems. As we got into the marketing problems we began to find these factors I have been talking about. We began to be able to evaluate them and we learned a lot, and the system that we have followed, which I think demonstrates not only the importance of first-run engagements, but demonstrates what it means when you have those first-run engagements or under arrangements with you that you can exploit the pictures the way you want to—I think an ex...nation of the results of what we have done demonstrates that on a dollars and cents basis. In other words, we can show with our own exchanges and our own exploitation, and especially where we can accomplish results, that where a picture gets off to a mediocre—as against a picture that gets off to a mediocre start, outlets of different types, the results run into hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Mr. Leisure: I have some charts, Judge Hand, over back of those cases, and if we can adjourn now, it will save the time of the Court, I believe, if we get them out during the noon period.

Judge Hand: We will adjourn until two-ten.

(Recess until 2:10 p. m.)

(2232)

NATHANIEL PETER RATHVON, resumed the stand.

Direct Examination continued by Mr. Leisure:

Q. Mr. Rathvon, before lunch we were discussing the importance of key first-runs and the added importance of the runs in your own theatres. I think you said that you had certain factual data with regard to that? A. I have.

Mr. Leisure: I ask permission to have marked at this time a chart for identification.

(Marked Defendant RKO's Exhibit RKO-3 for identification.)

Q. Now, Mr. Rathvon, would you just please explain the type of information developed in this research? A. I had mentioned before the recess the use of the Audience Research Institute, this organization which we caused to be set up with Dr. George Gallup.

The purpose of this chart is to show how it works, because from the data that we gather we arrive at the conclusion of the importance of the key first-runs and also the importance of having those key first-runs our own first-runs.

In regard to every important picture we try to find out two factors, and it is on the knowledge of those two factors and the interplay of those two factors that we draw these conclusions.

The first of those factors we call "want-to-see". Want-to-see simply is the percentage of the movie-going public that wants to see a picture. Thus, if we say that the want-to-see of a picture is 72, it means that 72 out every 100 movie-goers want to the see the picture.

Now, after checking and testing hundreds of pictures over the last two years we find that the average want-to-see vote on A pictures, or the important pictures—let us take the top hundred of any given year which we test and study—is 72. That is the average.

Now, we arrive at this want-to-see by a very elaborate system of tests that begin way back when the picture is an idea, and go on through to the time when we show the picture actually to cross-section audiences. And it is the composite of all those tests that make up this final want-to-see, which on the average of these tested pictures is 72.

Now, that is only shown in the chart over on the left with the black, with the thermometer-like figure there, and the black shows the average, and the blue and the orange show two different types of want-to-see votes that we have taken.

We finally consolidate those into one on our ordinary study of this thing, but this chart was made up at a time when we were using two different ones that had not been consolidated.

In one system it arrived at a 73 and another at a 75 at that particular point. But this picture Enchanted Cottage we therefore knew was slightly better than the average on the basis of the public interest in the picture.

Now, the other factor that we strive to find out about every picture is this thing called "penetration", which I mentioned earlier, which is simply the percentage of the movie-going public who know about a picture at any given time. So if we say that the penetration at some given point is 25, we mean simply that 25 out of every 100 movie-goers know about the picture, can prove they know about it by identifying it.

Now, the penetration is the guiding star and the paramount figure all the way through in these studies. It obviously is never a constant figure, because as the picture goes on through its production and its distribution, and more and more of the public come to know more about it, the penetration figure is bound to rise. Therefore it is a moving figure. We are very interested in that figure from the very time we start a picture right up until we finish, because it shows how many people do know about it, and then in conjunction with the want-to-see we can tell pretty well the size of the audience we have to deal with.

Now, in this particular chart the green line is this penetration.

Now, I must first describe the heavy black line that is crossed by the green line, because a moving figure like penetration has got to be considered in relation to some constant point. In our early experiments we would use the date of release, the date a picture was released anywhere, and we found that that was not a satisfactory constant to use simply because pictures have their initial release in so many different ways. Some pictures are released in ten cities at once on their initial release; some in twenty; some in one. So in the search for a constant we finally arrived at a point when a million people have seen the picture, that give us a fair comparison. In other words, all pictures can be considered as against that constant rather than the date of the initial release.

So you see on this particular chart we picked up the want-to-see line back several months before the picture was actually released.

Q. When you say "want-to-see line," do you mean the penetration line? A. I mean the penetration line. The want-to-see line I will not mention at this point. It is the green line (2236) which is the penetration. At the time we picked it up it had a penetration, you can see, of one or two, meaning only one or two out of every hundred movie-goers at that point had heard of it. Probably at that time there had been some articles in fan magazines, and so on, so some of the more ardent movie-goers knew about it. And that line, therefore, did not begin to change until we got much closer to the time of release.

Now, you will notice it starts upward at a point where the red lines come in. Those red lines represent our national advertising campaign, and the height of each red line represents the circulation of the combined magazines used in any week. The first of those red lines was the first week we had any advertisements of those pictures, and if you will look at the key at the right, it tells in which magazines those advertisements appeared—Look and Movieland.

Q. Excuse me, Mr. Rathvon. Those are the red lines at the bottom righthand corner you are talking about? A. That is right. That is correct. Those lines of varying height——

Q. Represent national advertising? A. Yes.

Q. And is the key over on the right those typewritten numbers? A. On the right, and as to the media that we use in our ads; but right beside the red lines — a circulation indication so that you will know what circulation was reached by the magazines at any given week.

You will notice in the first week with Look and Movieland we reached a circulation of about a little under two and a half million; the second week that we advertised, using five different magazines, that came above four million. The third week we hit a higher number with Collier's and Woman's Home Companion; and the fourth week the highest of all, with another combination. And then the rest of it, it shows the circulation reached.

Now, naturally, the penetration goes up under the impetus of this advertising; but the effort up to this point is national in its character. We have now reached or we have expanded our national campaign, and we have brought this picture up to a point where it is about to open in various cities.

In those cities we then start our local campaigns. As I testified this morning, on the strength of what we have learned from those studies, you get more penetration on the average out of your local campaigns than you do on the national campaign.

Now, the point at which the orange and purple lines begin on this chart is where the first showings took place. This picture opened between April 18 and April 26 in a list of cities that are shown here on the chart near the top, with a date, and those were the first-runs that opened the picture.

Now, the minute we have started to show this picture, our penetration, which up to that date has really represented the national effort, now breaks itself into two parts, because in areas where the picture has been shown we have naturally a higher penetration than for any areas where it has not been shown. Therefore we begin to show on our chart, instead of one line for penetration, we now show two. The purple line at the top starting with the April 18th date shows what the penetration was in those cities where we had opened the picture. The orange line shows the situation in the rest of the country. The green line, or the point of starting of these other lines is simply a composite of those two.

Now, the important thing here is the fact that the national campaign had brought this picture up a little better than 25 before we had these first openings, and due to the strength of our local campaigns in the cities in which it opened, we opened with a penetration of 55. That shows where the blue line begins. Therefore we know that we accomplished about half of the penetration which we got when these pictures came into those first-runs by our national campaign, and the remainder, the greater part is as a result of the local campaign.

I think that outlines the various features of this chart.

Q. Would you just tell us, Rathvon, now how this information is utilized in planning the distribution of RKO pictures? A. Yes. We utilize it, of course, in a great many different ways; but the principal way first is to check the potency of our national campaigns, and then we check whether our local campaigns are adding as much as they should to a picture, because penetration to us is the important thing.

I think I can illustrate that, I can show that best by using an illustration: We will assume a city with a hundred thousand movie-goers, and assume you have got a picture with a want-to-see of 80; you have got an important picture, because that is well above the average of 72; and we go into these first-runs and we find as we go in, let us say we have a penetration of 40. That means that only 40 out of every 100 movie-goers in that town know about it, and we know that 80 per cent of those want to see it.

So our theoretical audience is 80 per cent of 40 per cent of the hundred thousand movie-goers in that town. In other words, our theoretical potential audience is 32,000 people.

I call it theoretical because many things affect it,—the weather, competing entertainment, the type of theatre that you are able to get in, and many other factors. It is only a theoretical.

But let us assume you have another picture with the same want-to-see of 80, the same number of people, but you are able to attain only a penetration of 20. That means only 20 out of every 100 know about it and only 80 per cent of those want to see it, so that you have a theoretical potential audience of only 16,000. Therefore you can see your potential audience is only half as great, and I think that illustrates as graphically as I can illustrate the value of penetration. And it is on penetration that our whole exploitation program is based.

Mr. Leisure: I offer the chart in evidence.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I am completely lost on this one. I haven't the faintest idea as to what this is offered to prove in relation to any issue in the case.

Judge Hand: I suppose it is the kind of theory that he was expounding before in his oral testimony.

The Witness: If the Court would permit me, I will elaborate that example I used and perhaps give a little better answer.

Mr. Wright: I take it there is no dispute as to the importance of control of these key first-run theatres as between the defendants and the Government.

Judge Hand: Proceed, Mr. Leisure.

Mr. Leisure: Yes. I offered it.

Judge Hand: Oh yes, that is admitted.

(Defendant RKO's Exhibit RKO-3 for identification received in evidence.)

Q. Does the operation of showcase theatres by RKO make more effective its distribution activities based upon this extensive research, would you say? A. Very much so, yes. I can illustrate that by using again an example of the city with a hundred thousand movie-goers, and a picture that want-to-see indicates is going to be a very important picture. Now, let us assume that we spend a substantial amount of money on a national campaign, and let us assume, as we have to find out sometimes, that it was not a very successful campaign; that instead of attaining the average of 25, which is the average we hope to attain, we attain only an average of 15. Now, we know we should have 50 or 55 if we are going to do that picture justice, but we have only got an average of 15. That means when we turn to our local campaign we must put on special effort, because if we fall down on that we fall down on penetration, and our picture gets off to a bad start.

So the first thing that would happen is that one of our field exploitation men would go to the exhibitors of the first-runs where we expect to run this, and try to induce them, on the representation that this is an important picture, to assist him in developing a high local penetration on this thing.

Now, he may propose an early advertising campaign in newspapers; he may propose spending a lot more money; he may propose that an extra trailer run earlier, a teaser campaign, and various other showmanly activities to try to build up the penetration of the picture.

Now, if he goes with that picture into an exhibitor who is just taking a picture every week or two and is not particularly concerned with it, he may get a very indifferent reaction to this urging of his to get this picture into the flow of things with the proper penetration. It will depend a lot on the type of exhibitor he is talking with. If he is a good showman and wants to cooperate he probably will; but if he is not, and he has got a fishing date, he probably won't. If he has to spend any money or work very hard about it, the chances are he will not cooperate.

And let us assume then that instead of attaining the 55 we could expect, we attain only 35. Now, it may appear a very tiny thing that the difference between the penetration of 35 and 50 in one key city first-run is not very many dollars, (2242a) but that is the tiniest part of the damage that is done by not getting the penetration you should have, because right away that picture becomes characterized as a picture of the lesser type than it should be if you had the right penetration. (2243)

As I said this morning those figures in those key first-runs are published in the trade newspapers. They are picked up by exhibitors all over the country, and not only those exhibitors who play subsequent runs to this particular community, but first-run exhibitors in other communities come to characterize that picture on the basis of this first-run; and we have found time and time again that an indifferent exploitation in the early key runs can mean hundreds of thousands of dollars in the final gross of those pictures.

And when we can take them into our own first key runs and give them the proper exploitation, when we see a great gap coming between the penetration we have and the penetration we ought to have as we go into those key first-runs, why, we can turn our people loose and put on the proper exploitation campaigns to bring it up there.

Q. Now, Mr. Rathvon, you have told us the importance to the distributor of the key first-run showings from the point of view of setting it up or establishing its prestige. Does the distributor expect any other value from that? A. Very much so. Besides the prestige and the setting up of the picture, the distributor is entitled to a substantial rental from his first-run.

Q. Could you give the Court any idea of what percentage of national gross of an average important picture comes from these so-called key first-runs? A. Well, I am not quite sure what "key first-runs" means for the purpose of your question. I have heard discussed here a group of 92 cities having population of 100,000 or more, and for purposes of convenience I imagine that is a suitable barometer of first-runs. Actually there are several cities in those, in that list of a hundred, that are not properly key first-runs. There are several cities there, such as Yonkers, New York, that are near great metropolitan centers that are not, for film purposes, considered key first-runs. On the other hand, there are great many smaller communities in less populous states that have not populations of 100,000, but are key first-runs for the purpose of selling our pictures. So I can't give you any very accurate figures on that. However, I can give you some figures along the general line that I think will illustrate very clearly the importance of that.

Q. What do those figures show, please? A. Now, these are figures that were primarily put together over the past by Audience Research Institute for other purposes than this, which I think serves to show the importance of this situation.

The average A picture, the kind I have been talking about here, Audience Reaction find has 18 million patrons. In other words, when you have got an average A picture, you can expect it will play to 18 million patrons——
(2245)

Mr. Wright: Excuse me just a minute. Now, if the Court please, we are going into a field where he is simply retailing second-hand information as to something Audience Research has done.

Judge Hand: Well, I shall let him give his philosophy here. I think, however, he is doing it at great length, and it is really by way of argument——

Mr. Leisure: I will make it short, Judge Hand.

Q. This research you have discussed, do you use it every day in your daily work? A. Yes.

Q. And it contains facts that you rely on and you form judgments on? A. Definitely.

Q. Does it? A. Right.

Q. Will you continue, please? A. Of the 18 million patrons who see an average picture, four million of them see them at 110 theatres, at an average admission price of 65 cents. The other 14 million pay an average admission price of 38 cents, and see it in all the rest of the theatres in which it plays. It might be eight or nine or ten thousand theatres.

Mr. Wright: If these figures are offered for any purpose as being valid in themselves, we certainly object to them. The mere fact that they are figures in his files that he gets and he relies on does not make them competent evidence of the facts he is reciting here. If we are going to have those figures, and if they are important, they ought to put it in by the representative that compiled them.

Judge Hand: What about that, Mr. Leisure?

Mr. Leisure: Well, he is really giving the figures he relies on. He is not giving the figures as being facts. They are not offered for that purpose. He is merely showing the figures he relies on. We are not offering it as to the truth of the assertion as to whether the figures are correct, so there can't be any objection to hearsay on it.

Judge Hand: Well, I should think that that would only be competent on cross-examination if you were attacking his testimony. I do not see why he should give the figures that he relies on. He does not know anything about them, whether he relies on them or not.

Mr. Leisure: Well, he is giving such figures as he relies on, and he is going to tell us now what he does as a result of that.

Now, I am not offering the figures as to the truth of the figures; I am not interested in that. He is merely telling us how he operates.

Judge Hand: I must say I do not see its relevancy.

The Witness: Well, if your Honor please, these figures show to me that 45 per cent of our film rentals come from 110 theatres, and those are, naturally, mostly the first-run theatres.

Judge Hand: Well, go on.

The Witness: I merely want to show that the first-run rental is the substantial rental as we get it, and that is the type of rental we should get; and these figures lead me to believe that 45 per cent of our total film rental in an important picture comes out of the first 110 theatres in which it is shown.

Judge Hand: Haven't we got exhibits stating all this kind of thing in evidence already?

Judge Goddard: This relates to your own pictures, does it not?

Mr. Leisure: Yes, we are talking about RKO. This is our first day in court, your Honor, and I do not think we have been able to give this.

Judge Goddard: I do not think this is in.

You have not put it in, Mr. Wright, have you?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, we offered, of course, these interrogatory answers for the express purpose of showing the degree of concentration of revenue of each of these distributors in the first-run houses; and I certainly do not see what the advantage is in dealing with some other figures on which we have no check, where there is nothing in evidence——

(2248)

Judge Hand: I do not either.

Judge Goddard: These are his own figures on his own pictures.

Mr. Wright: We have the precise rental data on a selected feature for his company in the 1943-44 season.

Mr. Leisure: Perhaps I can ask a factual question that will clear it up, if the Court please.

Judge Bright: You mean, Mr. Wright, that your proof shows how much revenue they received from first-run and how much from subsequent-run on any particular one picture.

Mr. Wright: Yes; we selected the highest grossing, or I believe the picture with the maximum number of exhibitions for the 1943-44 season from each distributor, and then had tabulated the actual rental received from that picture in the first-runs in all cities of over 25,000 population, showing the particular engagement and the rental for each of those first-run engagements in all of those cities.

Now, we assume that that would give us a typical picture, and, as I understand it, there is no claim that the percentages that would be obtained from that sample are misleading. I take it there is no purpose in this, is there, to show the data that was offered in response to interrogatories is somehow unusual or not representative of what has occurred before or since?

Mr. Leisure: No.

Judge Bright: As I understand what he is testifying to now, he is comparing what he gets from first-run as compared to what he gets from subsequent-runs.

Judge Goddard: On RKO pictures.

Mr. Wright: I thought it was a little more than that. He was talking, as I recall, about the key. He said he got 45 per cent of his revenue from 110 key first-run theatres. Now, as I say, as to this one picture, we have the same data in more precise form; that is, showing exactly the first-run theatres in the towns of over 25,000 population.

Judge Hand: Yes, but have you got the subsequent-runs?

Mr. Wright: Only as it is reflected in the total. We have in evidence the total revenue received domestically from the feature from all runs. That is right.

(2250)

Judge Bright: I thought his information went a little further. You have a dollar value of the first run and he is saying it came from a limited number of theatres.

Mr. Wright: Our data also shows the exact distribution of that dollar value among the theatres which play it the first-run, and we also show the overall number, the total number of exhibitions and the total film rental received from all runs in the country. We are both aiming at the same goal, as far as I can see, proving the same thing, essentially, but it seems to me it makes a confused record if we get into these generalities when we have actual data in the record which is susceptible of more accurate analysis.

Mr. Davis: It seems to me a long time ago, but your Honors may remember that when I was introducing proof on behalf of Loew's I put in a chart which showed exactly this distribution of revenues, which I take it is what this witness is now undertaking to do for RKO, and that chart showed the first runs, and the second and third and fourth, and the subsequent runs, if I can call it back to your Honors' memory, although, as I say, it seems to me a long, long time ago.

Judge Hand: Yes, painful end of it.

Mr. Leisure: Someone said, Judge Hand, this is the fifth run.

(2251)

Judge Hand: It has been suggested that equity is equality, or something like that, and I think we would need the same consideration, but do cut this short. It is very confusing with all these exhibits.

Mr. Leisure: I will do that.

By Mr. Leisure:

Q. Judge Bright just made a suggestion a moment ago, Mr. Rathvon, as to the first-run, and I want to ask you what percentage of your revenues do you try to get from your first-run theatres—in key cities, of course? A. Percentage of the total revenue that we get on the picture?

Q. Yes. A. We feel we are entitled to a very substantial part of our revenue. There is no one figure we shoot at. The point I have been trying to support here is simply that the key first-runs yield a substantial part of the revenue of any important picture. That is all I have been trying to support.

Judge Bright: There is no dispute about that, is there?

Mr. Wright: No, that is what we attempted to show in the first instance through the interrogatory data that we offered.

Judge Hand: It is reiteration.

Q. Mr. Rathvon, I want to take up New York in a minute but before we do that, you have described the key first-run theatres as the de luxe operations of showcase theatres designed to introduce your films and to draw a fair proportion of the revenue from any exhibit area. Are all your theatres key first-runs of this type? A. No.
(2252)

Q. What, if any, are the notable exceptions? A. Our holdings in Cincinnati and in New York City.

Q. Taking up Cincinnati, would you describe the Cincinnati situation, please? A. In Cincinnati we own or operate nearly all of the first-run theatres and in the theatres which we own and operate the product of nearly all the major companies, or rather, I should say, nearly all the products of all the major companies are played by our theatres.

Q. Do you see any advantages to the RKO type of theatre operation from the ownership of these several first-run theatres in Cincinnati? A. Well, in our pattern of operation, with emphasis on this form of vaudeville setup, with one or two key theatres in each important center that we can get in, the Cincinnati operation is of no particular value to us. From my own point of view, I would rather have five or six of those theatres in some other cities where we are not represented as key first-runs.

Q. You said you would like to have them—how did you acquire them? A. That goes back to, again, before the beginnings of RKO when that central group of theatres in Cincinnati were in a single control.
(2253)

Q. In other words, you inherited them? A. We inherited them in a compact group, handling the product of nearly all the companies.

Q. Coming back to the New York situation, I have some charts here.

Mr. Leisure: I would like to have them marked for identification if I may. There is really only one map, it being New York City.

(Marked Defendant RKO's Exhibit 4 for identification.)

Mr. Leisure: I have four maps there, if the Court please. It is really only one map, that being New York City, but we had to divide it into the four Boroughs where the theatres are located.

Q. (Continuing) Mr. Rathvon, would you just explain to the Court the sources of the information on this Manhattan chart? A. This map shows the location of theatres in New York City; the size of the circles indicating the theatres shows the run; the larger circle the first-run; next size circle, second, and so on. The color of the circles on the map indicates their ownership.

Q. This legend up here describes the different size circles, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. The larger circles indicate what, please? A. That is (2254) the first-run, the Broadway first-run in New York; the next size, the second run; and then third and subsequent runs.

Q. What do the different colors indicate, please? A. The ownership of the theatres. In other words, the one at the top here is RKO, and the circles of that color are theatres which RKO operates in Greater New York; the next one is green, shows Loew's; next, Paramount; next, Warner; next, Fox; and then others. Those we classify as independent are shown in red.

Q. And the headings there on the left—— A. That is a key to indicate—there are numbers on those theatres and that key indicates the theatre, the size of the theatre also being indicated there.

Q. And this center part here, that is taken right out of Manhattan, what is that? A. That is the so-called Broadway district, where there is a concentration of New York first-runs.

Q. And you gave what the colors indicate? What the colors indicate, have you given that? A. That is correct. I went through those colors, and you can see them apply it there, as far as Broadway first-runs are concerned. I understand that the red——

Mr. Proskauer: Does red in the middle show independent first-runs in the Broadway area? Is that what you said?

(2255)

The Witness: Wherever red appears, it is an independent run; smaller red ones indicate subsequent runs.

Q. The double numbers, have you explained those? A. One is the key to the name of the theatre and the other is the number of seats of the theatre.

Q. Mr. Rathvon, you have indicated in each situation you attempted to have one theatre that accomplishes two things, one that gives you the prestige you want for your picture, and, second, that gives you the revenue that you want for that particular picture. Have you such a situation indicated there on Manhattan? A. Yes. It is a modification of what I have called the sample showcase formula, because it is obvious, as you get into larger and larger communities, a single theatre, showing a given run, will get a lesser percentage of the revenue from that larger area than will a theatre of comparable size in a smaller community, so that this single showcase theatre is subject to modification as you get into larger and larger communities. In fact, when you get into cities above two millions, if you hope that your first-run will get anything like the revenue a first-run is entitled to, there has got to be substantial modification.

In the City of Los Angeles, a great sprawling city, spread over a wide area, with many centers of heavy population, it has taken an entirely different pattern from New York. There we have what we call multiple first-run; in other words, two, three, even four first-run theatres playing the same picture at the same time. In that way you not only build your picture, and set it up, as we say, but you get an adequate revenue from the size of the territory.

New York is very different from Los Angeles. Our first-run concentration is all in one spot, so we cannot have multiple first-runs in order to get the revenue. So Broadway has come to be a place where you set up the prestige and get the penetration on your picture but you do not, except in rare instances, get a revenue that means anything to you for this great first-run area. And RKO is a typical example because we have of all those Broadway houses just one. It is the Palace theatre, a house well located, but it is a former vaudeville house, has only 1667 seats, it has got two balconies, and we depend on that to set up our pictures. Occasionally we get a picture in another theatre of the same type, or once in a great while we get a picture in the Music Hall.

As far as Broadway is concerned, if you want revenue, you have but one chance to get it, and that is to play a considerable length of time in a very large theatre. If Radio
(2257)
City Music Hall, plays a picture for eight or ten or twelve weeks, the distributor gets a pretty substantial revenue out of it. Whether it is commensurate with the size of this great area, I don't know, but it is certainly a substantial revenue. Some of the other, bigger theatres, of course, will get some revenue. You can take some of the smaller theatres and play two pictures for three or four or five or six months and you can get a fair revenue.

Two independent producers recently rented a theatre on Broadway in which they expect to show just four pictures a year, in the hope that they will get some revenue out of Broadway that way, expecting pictures to run a minimum of three months. RKO with its one little theatre, and having its full program showing, and being unable to get its pictures in the larger theatres—the Music Hall is our only chance and we have had one picture each year for the last two years there—we must use the Palace theatre and we cannot keep pictures there so long that we clog up the flow of our pictures. So as a result, we show our pictures there for two or three or four weeks and almost invariably we spend on advertising all the rental we get from that picture, and very often more. So that by the time our pictures move out of the Broadway first-run, we have gotten none, or substantially no revenue from them at all.

So that in a place like New York, or, let us say, in New York, because there is no other place like it, Broadway sets your pictures up, gives you the prestige for all the rest of the territory, but there must be some way to get this quick, concentrated revenue which is customary in the first-run, and in New York that is done by this so-called second run. That second-run is a very fast playoff. A picture moves into this so-called second-run, either into the RKO group of theatres or into the Loew group, where they play only five, very seldom more than five, days, and then with the clearance of only seven days, sometimes five, some with no clearance at all, they move into the subsequent runs.

The situation on Broadway is complicated to this extent, that picture after picture runs for many weeks and they play off in odd ways. There may be weeks when no picture moves out of Broadway; there may be other weeks when five or six have finished their Broadway run. Therefore, if they all move out of Broadway just as they finished, you would have six pictures, maybe, moving one week, two the next week, none the next and none the next. So that what happens, at least two a week are needed to flow out into this orderly second and subsequent-run setup, so that sometimes a picture will move right off Broadway into second-run; sometimes it will be held up for months before it moves, but

Broadway, itself, is a sort of pool. The pictures play there, wait there, and then two a week move out into these runs, and once they have moved out into these runs they move into subsequent runs in a fairly orderly manner.

Q. And the blue dot represents the Palace? A. That represents our only Broadway theatre, which is the Palace.

Q. And the red ones represent the independents? A. That is right.

Q. And this is lower Manhattan and this is Upper Manhattan (indicating)? A. That is correct.

Q. And these small blue ones that you have here are your—— A. Those are the RKO theatres in our second-run group, showing their location on Manhattan.

Q. You have been testifying as to Manhattan. Does what you have said with respect to Manhattan, Mr. Rathvon, apply to the other boroughs in New York City? A. That is correct. The run pattern goes out through Brooklyn, the Bronx, Queens, Richmond, just the same as it does in Manhattan.

Q. And you try to accomplish the same pattern in exploitation in Brooklyn as you have described already in Manhattan? A. Yes. The location of the RKO theatres is interesting in that it also is a heritage of vaudeville and it also shows how it develops for the community. The greater number of those RKO theatres are former vaudeville houses. Vaudeville, just like first-runs today, in smaller communities, there would be just one in the communtiy non-competitively playing vaudeville. New York City was so large that it supported a group of vaudeville houses separated into the larger neighborhoods of New York, and that is the pattern of the RKO second-run chain. They are more or less strategically located. It is on the old vaudeville formula. Our 41 theatres that play this run are spread all through the Boroughs of New York.

Q. And I understand that the same testimony will apply to the other boroughs—— A. That is correct.

Q. —of the Bronx and Queens, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the same designation as to coloring is true so far as the maps are concerned? A. That is true.

Q. The light blue is RKO. And this is the one of Queens. Your testimony applies the same as to that? A. That is correct.

Mr. Proskauer: I hope the Court can see red on some of those charts.

Judge Hand: What?

Mr. Proskauer: I suggested that I hoped your Honors would see red on some of those charts.

(2261)

Mr. Leisure: I offer the maps in evidence, if the Court please.

Judge Hand: They are admitted.

(Marked Defendant RKO Exhibit 4 in evidence.)

Q. Mr. Rathvon, are you familiar with the policies of RKO with reference to the distribution of features and short productions which are produced by organizations which do not have their own distribution facilities? A. I am.

Q. Will you please state to the Court RKO's policy in this respect and indicate the extent to which this policy has been effectuated. A. Our policy has been to distribute for producers who have no distribution outlets of their own a very large number of the releases which we put out. For a good many years RKO itself has not produced the number of features which its distribution organization can well handle, and it has been our policy for many years to supplement our own production, our own pictures, with pictures of independent producers.

Mr. Leisure: I ask to have marked for identification a table.

(Marked Defendant RKO's Exhibit 5 for identification.)

Q. Will you just explain the table, Mr. Rathvon, please. A. This table shows over a number of seasons, total of nine seasons, the relative importance of the—in number of features and in rentals received—product handled for so-called independent or outside producers. Thus, in the season 1935-36 RKO released 43 pictures, two of which were from these outside, or, here called, non-integrated producers. The income from those two pictures represented 4.4 per cent of the total product distributed by RKO. That season's product, the whole thing, showed gross rentals of $14,598,000, and on those two pictures from outsiders, $662,618, or 4.3 per cent of the total revenue received from those pictures. Then, as you go on, from season to season, it shows in most seasons an increased number of independent pictures handled by RKO and an increasing amount of the total film rentals received being applicable to the product of these outside producers.

Q. Mr. Rathvon, in the fourth column you said that it was the total. You mean the total of RKO, don't you? A. Total from the rentals from the whole product.

Mr. Leisure: I offer the table in evidence.

The Witness: Those two dollar figures represent the division between RKO's own pictures and the outside pictures, the two dollar columns.

Mr. Leisure: Has that been received, your Honor?

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Leisure: Thank you.

(2263)

(Defendant RKO's Exhibit 5 for identification received in evidence.)

Q. At the present time, Mr. Rathvon, are you distributing independent product? A. Yes, sir, at the present time we are distributing perhaps a little more product than we did in the 1943-44 season.

Mr. Leisure. I would like to have another chart marked, if I may.

(Marked Defendant RKO's Exhibit 6 for identification.)

Q. Will you describe this chart. A. This happens to be not a chart that was prepared for the purpose of this trial. It is a sample, in fact, it is the actual chart I used for my own purposes in watching monthly the division of the total revenues between the pictures we distributed for independents and our own pictures. And the whiter part of the chart represents the revenue in each month, that is, our own productions, and the upper part represents the productions of independents. This is really not a running chart; it could be shown better in columns than in this way, but each of the white cross lines is the end of a month. For instance, take the very first line, January, 1944. In that month, of the rentals we received, 66 per cent came from RKO's own productions and 34 per cent from two productions of independent producers.

Now, the same goes, at varying rates; some months the (2264) productions of independent producers account for almost half of the total rentals received—in fact, there is one month, April, 1945, when rentals collected in that month were in greater quantity for independent producers than for our own pictures.

Mr. Leisure: I offer the table in evidence. May that be received?

Judge Hand: Yes.

(Defendant RKO's Exhibit 6 for identification received in evidence.)

Q. Mr. Rathvon, will you tell us whether or not during the past ten years RKO could have operated as a distributing company using only its own product? A. It could not have operated successfully.

Q. Has this distribution of independent product been affected by the fact that RKO has theatre outlets of its own? A. In the competition to secure the desirable independent product for distribution, I think it has counted very substantially.

Q. I think you said that RKO distributed Walt Disney's pictures? A. It does.

Q. Would you just explain that, please? A. We have distributed the short product made by the Walt Disney Company for a great many years. They had previously been distributed by United Artists. When a given contract had (2265) run out there, we got in competition and bid against United Artists with Disney and finally persuaded him to give us his pictures, and we have distributed the shorts product ever since. We made also, at that initial time, a contract to distribute Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs. Since then Disney has made a number of feature length pictures, and in each case we have had a separate negotiation for it. We have been successful in all cases but one. One of their features they sold away from us to United Artists, but the next one, we won out, and we have distributed the Disney features ever since.

Q. What about Goldwyn products? Do you distribute them? A. We have distributed Goldwyn productions for the past several years.

Q. How did that come about? A. There again, they had been distributed previously by United Artists, and there again we competed for that product and, by offering very attractive terms, were able to procure it, and it means approximately three important pictures a year added to our distribution.

Q. International Pictures, Inc., do you distribute that? A. International Pictures is a very important independent producing company that was formed quite recently; been operating only a little over a year; but it was formed by important and experienced producers, and they have delivered some very important product. They make from somewhere, probably, from four to six pictures a year. I think to date we have distributed six pictures for them, and they have all been very important pictures. In that case we got the distribution contract with them at the time they organized; and I don't know how many companies competed for it. I know we had many meetings with them and negotiations, finally resulting in our getting the contract.

Q. As to the productions of Frank Capra? A. Frank Capra and two other important producers are in the process —they just formed a new independent unit and have not yet delivered a picture. They are just getting ready to get under way. They expect to have about three pictures a year, too, and we have negotiated with them and have made an arrangement to distribute eight pictures for them.

Q. In addition to these productions, Mr. Rathvon, does RKO Radio Pictures distribute the releases of any other outside producers? A. Yes, several. Very often, or in almost every year, there will be some producer who makes a single picture and we will distribute for him. One producer, Mr. Sol Lesser, has a series of pictures known as Tarzan pictures. We have distributed those for several years. Then, Jesse Lasky now is making a picture, and that currently is a picture that is being made on our lot and we are going to distribute that one. Another picture of the same nature, that (2266a) the producer is making only one picture, so far as we know, is a picture being made by a producer named Hakim, which, on our lot, is now being manufactured.
(2267)

Q. Have you lost the product of any outside producer? A. We have, yes. For seven years we distributed March of Time, and at the end of seven years, in a competitive effort with Twentieth Century-Fox, we lost the distribution of March of Time to Twentieth Century-Fox, and they have distributed it ever since, and I mentioned a Disney film that we failed to get, which went to United Artists. That was Victory Through Air Power.

Q. In the distribution of its pictures does RKO license films to independent first and subsequent-run theatres as well as to affiliated theatres? A. It does.

Q. Have you checked the principal sources of revenue from the various groups of theatres paying film rentals to RKO for features released during the season 1943-44? A. I have.

Q. What did that check reveal, please?

Mr. Leisure: I would like to mark at this time, if I may, another chart.

(Marked Defendant RKO's Exhibit 7 for identification.)

Q. (Continuing) Mr. Rathvon, this chart purports to be based on the answers to the Government's interrogatories, in which rentals from all theatres believed to be affiliated with any of the defendants either by direct ownership or through subsidiary corporations are lumped. Does that correctly reflect the records of RKO as of April 26, 1945? A. As the sources of film rentals received 1943 and 1944.

Q. Will you just describe the chart, please? A. It shows graphically the source of film rentals; in other words, the blue part shows the amount of money and the percentage of the total for the period received from RKO; and similarly, by colors, are shown the source from the other defendants in this case; and the red shows the total of all the unaffiliated theatres. In the case of Paramount, of course it isn't from Paramount pictures, but from the companies in which Paramount has an interest, which we do business with; which is not all of the Paramount companies.

Mr. Leisure: I offer the chart in evidence.

Mr. Wright: We have no objection. I take it those are the same figures we put in Appendix A of our trial brief.

Mr. Leisure: That is correct, Mr. Wright.

(Defendant RKO's Exhibit 7 for identification received in evidence.)

Q. Mr. Rathvon, does RKO distribute enough features to occupy fully the playing time of the RKO theatres? A. It does not except in the case of perhaps two of our theatres.

Q. Why is that? A. Because pictures, except in very populous places, like our Palace theatre on Broadway, where you have long runs, the number of pictures we distribute in any one year will not fill the needs of the rest of our theatres.

Q. Could RKO profitably close its theatres when it had played all the RKO product? A. No, it would be very uneconomical to do it. In fact, in the past there have been times when RKO had theatres that had only its own product, when we did have to close them down for a period. Those theatres were always substantial losers when we had only the RKO product.

Q. In licensing films of other producers in RKO theatres, what policy does RKO follow? A. RKO tries to get the best pictures it can at the best rental, regardless of where they come from.

Q. In licensing those features, does RKO use product of other distributors that don't themselves have theatres? A. It does.

Mr. Leisure: I would like to have permission to mark for identification a table and chart.

(Chart marked RKO Exhibit 8 for identification; table marked RKO Exhibit 8-A for identification.)

Q. Will you describe the chart, please, Mr. Rathvon? A. This shows product exhibited in RKO theatres on the basis of number of billings, in our first-run and metropolitan circuits. The data here were taken from our own records, the records of our booking corporation, and it shows the number of feature billings in those RKO theatres. RKO played 2402, 23.1 per cent of the total; the combination of the other defendants played 3000, or 29.6 per cent total; and other sources than the defendant companies, 47.3 per cent.
(2270)

Q. You mean the integrated defendants? A. The integrated defendants, 29.6, that is, the integrated defendants other than RKO itself.

Q. Yes.

Mr. Leisure: I offer the chart in evidence.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, these figures appear to be different from those previously furnished. I would like to examine into it before it goes in.

Preliminary Cross Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. This statement at the top here, first-run and metropolitan circuit run, that includes what? A. That includes New York.

Q. You mean all that you have on the chart here are the— A. The combination of——

Q. The feature billings in the New York City first-run theatres, and what other theatres? A. This is the billing in all our first-run theatres, in our New York metropolitan circuit.

(2271)

Q. Have you got a list of those theatres? A. I have.

Mr. Leisure: I gave you one of those.

Mr. Wright: May we have that, so we will know just what is included?

Q. Are those the theatres that are named on this chart that is marked RKO Exhibit 8-A? A. That is correct.

Q. So this does not purport to be an analysis of the use of features of others throughout the circuit, but only in the theatres that are named on the list, RKO 8-A, is that right? A. Which is 90 plus per cent of our total circuit.

Q. When you say number of feature billings, that is substantially the equivalent of the number of engagements or number of runs that were played, is that right? A. I mean billings.

Q. Do you mean—— A. A billing results in a run.

Q. Do your percentages here refer to dollar revenue—— A. No.

Q. —or do they refer to the number of—— A. Showings.

Q. Showings? A. If you want to call it that.

Q. So your chart that you have here then indicates nothing as to the relative rental payments that were made on the billings, is that right? A. This particular chart does not show——

Q. This is purely nothing but the number of billings? (2272)

A. Billings.

Q. As a matter of fact, of course, when you get down there to Republic, Monogram and the others, the actual percentages of rental paid for those billings would be much smaller than the percentages there that you have got for the number of billings, would they not? A. Compared with what?

Q. I say, the percentage figure that you show, for example, from Monogram, of 7.9 per cent of the billings, if you were to give a figure which purported to show the percentage of total revenue of all these billings that was paid to Monogram, that would be a much smaller percentage than 7.9, isn't that right? A. It might not be as compared with Loew's, for example. If you were to ask me whether a single billing from Monogram gets a much smaller rental than a single billing from one of the integrated companies, I would say yes, but when the accumulation of billings becomes a great deal in number, I cannot say that the total of those—the numbers might not compare favorably with the lesser number of billings that we have with some of the other companies. For example, Paramount had only 343 billings, Monogram had 817. I cannot say that—I would presume that we paid more to Paramount for 343 than to Monogram for the 817, but I would not presume we paid more to Paramount for the 343 than we paid Universal for 1718.

(2273)

Q. In any event, you have not attempted to make a comparison which would show the relative amounts of—— A. What disgharge——

Q. —money that were paid? A. Isn't shown in dollars.

Judge Hand: He has said that. This is the second or third time.

A. (Continuing) Shows you the playing time all our theatres were occupied with Monogram pictures, plus as many hours as some others.

Q. The number of billings is not necessarily a measure of playing time, is it? A. Doesn't necessarily measure the number of days of playing time.

Q. You may have one billing for—— A. Six days, another for five.

Q. So it does not reflect the distribution of playing time either? A. It reflects the distribution of playing.

Mr. Leisure: I offer the chart, if you please.

Mr. Wright: I think, if the Court please, it is misleading in its present form there. It is objectionable on that ground.

Judge Goddard: What is that, Mr. Wright.

Mr. Wright: I think it is objectionable as misleading. It does not give a true picture of the distribution of playing time or film rental among the companies covered there.

(2274)

Mr. Leisure: We cannot give it all in one chart. We will cover it very quickly, I hope.

Judge Hand: All right.

(Defendant RKO's Exhibit 8 for identification received in evidence.)

By Mr. Leisure:

Q. Mr. Rathvon, from the figures you have just stated, I note that certain features distributed by Fox, Loew's, Paramount and Warner, are sometimes licensed for exhibition in RKO theatres? A. That is correct.

Q. In booking a picture distributed by Paramount, is there any understanding, express or implied, that RKO Radio Pictures will give any preference to a theatre affiliated with Paramount as against a competing unaffiliated theatre? A. There is not.

Q. Is the same true with reference to features which RKO theatres license from Fox, Warner and Loew's? A. That is true.

Q. When RKO, as a distributor, licenses a film for exhibition in a theatre affiliated with Paramount, is there any understanding, either express or implied, that the Paramount distributing organization will give preference to theatres affiliated with RKO on Paramount releases? A. There is not.

(2275)

Q. Is the same true of features licensed by RKO for exhibition in theatres affiliated with Fox, Loew's and Warner? A. That is true also.

Q. Mr. Rathvon, have you made any examination of the records of the RKO companies with particular reference to the charge made in the present case that RKO gives preference to the features released by other integrated companies, in consideration of an express or an implied agreement that those companies will give a reciprocal preference to RKO pictures? A. I have.

Mr. Leisure: I ask to have this chart and table marked for identification, please.

(Chart marked Defendant RKO's Exhibit 9 for identification and table marked RKO's Exhibit 9-A for identification.)

Q. Will you explain the chart? A. The chart shows graphically the data that is in the tabulation that goes along with it, and it is a comparison of the average per theatre rental received by RKO Radio Pictures, and as compared with the rentals paid by RKO theatres. It takes each of the companies separately. The tabulation itself shows the total dollars in each case of rentals received by RKO and the rentals paid by RKO, and the chart shows this on the basis of the average per theatre.

Mr. Leisure: I offer the chart and table in evidence.

(2276)

Mr. Wright: It is not at all clear to me from the witness's examination as to what this chart actually covers. I think I will ask him a question or two on it before it is received.

Preliminary Cross Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. This average rentals received that you have in the first column there, that is in blue, has a figure, 43,020. How was that computed? A. That is the average rental received per theatre.

Q. You mean you took the total amount received from all of the RKO theatres and then divided it by the number of RKO theatres and got $43,020? A. That is right.

Q. And that was without reference then to how many pictures were used or what runs they were used on or any of those factors, is that right? A. Will you repeat that?

Q. (Question read.) A. The number of pictures used of course is important. The run is not important. It is average rental per theatre.

Q. And you used the rental per theatre—— A. If you would use some other column than the first, where RKO has dealt with itself, it would be easier to explain.

Q. Let us take the Fox column then. That figure, $4,335, I take it, was computed by taking the total rental that you received from 499 Fox theatres, and then dividing that figure by 499, is that right? A. That is correct.

(2277)

Q. And the same—— A. For the other figure we took the amount that 93 RKO theatres paid, $2,181,515, and found the $23,455.

Q. That is confined to feature rentals, is that right, in each case? A. As distinguished from short subjects?

Q. Yes. A. Yes, this——

Q. Does this include shorts and newsreels? A. Shorts, I am sure, are not included in this chart.

Q. Feature rentals only? A. Yes.

Q. But no attempt was made to give weight to the particular number of features used by any theatre or the run in which they were played, is that right? A. No, it is on the basis of the total number of theatres in each company as against the 93 in RKO.

Mr. Wright: I submit the chart has no meaning in this form.

Mr. Leisure: We have offered it in evidence.

Judge Hand: I do not understand you.

Mr. Leisure: And the table with it.

Judge Hand: What?

Mr. Leisure: We would like to have the table, 8-A and the chart offered together, if the Court please.

Judge Hand: Well, I don't understand what meaning it has.

(2278)

Judge Goddard: Mr. Leisure, I do not understand what relation the green has to a number. What is the significance of it?

Mr. Leisure: Well, they go together, if the Court please. You will look at RKO, and you see the green and the red there, and then you look at Fox. I think I will let the witness answer that, if I may.

Judge Goddard: There does not seem to be much relation there.

Mr. Leisure: That is what we want to show, if the Court please, that there is no reciprocity here——

Judge Goddard: I am not talking about reciprocity. I mean the relation between the green and the red, the numbers.

The Witness: Shall I try to explain that, Judge Goddard?

Judge Goddard: Yes, I wish you would.

The Witness: I would like to take that Fox, for example——

Judge Hand: I should think this whole business is getting very complicated—the multitudinous seas incarnadine, making the green ones red. It is a mess. Why can't this thing be stated without such detail?

Mr. Proskauer: Will your Honor let me make a suggestion as to the way I read this chart? The objective, I take it, is to show that there is no back-scratching in the sense that that term has been used.

(2279)

Judge Hand: Yes?

Mr. Proskauer: Now, if you offered in evidence merely the amount of rentals paid as against the amount of rentals received, you would be met with the objection that they did not signify much because it was a varying number of theatres. So the chart, which I have seen for the first time, obviously breaks it down into a comparison of theatre by theatre, and takes into account the varying number of theatres. And having done that, it shows a wide discrepancy between what RKO got from us, for example, and what we got from RKO, theatre for theatre.

Judge Hand: Yes.

Judge Bright: Is that a correct statement of that, Mr. Rathvon?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Leisure: May I ask the witness just one question on that? I think it will clarify it for you.

Judge Hand: Yes.

By Mr. Leisure:

Q. Just take Fox alone, Mr. Rathvon, and just explain that without going through the other theatres? A. The total amount of money from Fox divided by the number of theatres that Fox had means that each of those theatres paid (2280)

RKO on the average $4,335. The total amount of money that RKO paid Fox for the showings in its theatres, in its 93, averages out $23,455 per theatre.

Q. So as Judge Goddard observed, there is not much relationship between those two, is there? A. Exactly.

Q. Mr. Rathvon, has there been or is there any agreement or understanding between any RKO company and any other defendant that RKO theatres will license the releases of such defendants for exhibition in RKO theatres on the condition, express or implied, that RKO features will be licensed for exhibition in theatres affiliated with such defendant? A. There is not.

Q. I have just one further question, Mr. Rathvon: In this case the Government seeks to have RKO divest itself of all of its theatres and to enjoin it from thereafter acquiring any theatre outlets. Based on your experience what effect would such action have upon the operations of RKO? A. Well, to cut us off completely from the ownership of theatres would weaken us very seriously. I have tried to show that RKO has been dependent for its very existence in the past on its theatre ownership and the assurance of steady revenue from those theatres. Now, RKO is stronger now, but in the six years out of receivership it has made money on its production distribution activity in only three years, the (2281) current year, and the two preceding years; and I doubt if we are so fortified with earned assets or earnings accumulated over these three years of high taxes to withstand another period that we are bound to face some day when production will no longer be profitable. And to foreclose RKO from theatre ownership entirely would not benefit anybody and would impair our company very seriously.

Mr. Leisure: Are Exhibits 8-A, 9 and 9-A received?

Judge Hand: Yes, they are all admitted.

(Defendant RKO's Exhibits RKO-8-A, 9 and 9-A for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Leisure: Are there any other questions?

Mr. Proskauer: I just want to ask one or two questions.

Cross Examination by Mr. Proskauer:

Q. Mr. Rathvon, you referred to the fact that you got your pictures into the Music Hall once or twice a year, or something of that sort. A. We have had one last year and one the year before.

Q. And you referred to the fact that it was important for you to make a showing in these first-run theatres, entirely apart from the immediate revenue. Now, when you sell to one of these very big first-run theatres, the de luxe theatres, that have stage shows and all that sort of thing; do you (2282) usually get, irrespective of the question whether it is affiliated or independent, do you usually get as big a percentage contract as you sometimes get from subsequent-run theatres? A. You speak now of a big theatre in New York City?

Q. Well, I will start with the Music Hall? A. A good average run in the Music Hall in New York would not give you an amount of money equal to the total of the subsequent-run rentals.

Q. I am not talking about the amount of money; and I am directing your attention to a question that Judge Bright asked here the other day, as to why it was that in some cases a subsequent-run theatre would contract to pay a percentage that might be a higher percentage than a prior-run theatre paid. That does happen at times, doesn't it? A. I presume it does, yes.

Q. Now, take the Music Hall. Do you remember what percentages you get from the Music Hall? A. Well, the Music Hall has a peculiar way of licensing. They have a set amount, and then you split above a fixed amount.

Q. Exactly. You start at 15 or 20 per cent, which is it? A. I am not sure, but it is something of that kind.

Q. Well, it is a small percentage, like 15 or 20? A. The percentage from the Music Hall, in terms of percentage, could be termed less than of a subsequent-run that had a picture on a straight percentage basis.

Q. Exactly. And the Music Hall has a big stage show? A. That is correct.

Q. And it is an enormous theatre? A. That is correct.

Q. A very expensive theatre to operate? A. Yes.

Q. But your gross money return out of it, in view of all that, may be much more even if you start out with a smaller base percentage? A. That is so, sir.

Mr. Proskauer: That is all.

Mr. Leisure: Any other questions?

(No response.)

Mr. Leisure: Your witness, Mr. Wright.

Cross Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. This RKO Film Booking Corporation that you spoke of on your direct examination, which Mr. Mirish acts as the agent for—— A. Is the manager of.

Q. —is the manager of—that corporation, I think you referred to it as booking the films for the RKO theatres. Actually it also buys and negotiates the licenses for those theatres, does it not? A. That is correct, yes.

Q. And that film buying activity is something that you have nothing directly to do with at all, is it? A. I have nothing to do with the direct operation of picture buying. I am familiar with what is done.

Q. In so far as others tell you; but I mean, you have no (2284) firsthand experience in the actual booking and buying of films; isn't that correct? A. I am not a booker or a buyer.

Q. And the same is true with respect to experience in either selling or licensing films on the other end as a distributor, isn't that right? A. That is equally true, that I am not a film peddler, but it is equally true that I am not a projectionist in the theatre booth either.

Q. I am not referring to what you were; I am referring to what your experience had been. A. Well, in my past experience I have never been in any of those capacities.

Q. You have never sold films or bought films; is that correct? A. That's correct.

Mr. Wright: Will you mark these for identification, please?

(Marked Government's Exhibits 386 and 387 for identification.)

Q. Now, I hand you this agreement marked Government's Exhibit 386 for identification and ask you if you recognize that as the agreement to which B. F. Keith is a party, relating to the Grand Rapids theatres which are operated by Butterfield Theatres Corporation? A. I have never seen this before, but I have no doubt that it is if you say it is.

Q. It was, I believe, produced by Mr. Seymour as (2285) that agreement from the Paramount files. A. Well, it is dated the 24th of August 1933—I will read it if you like——

Mr. Leisure: No. We concede it is if you say it is, Mr. Wright.

Q. I just wondered, had you read that agreement before you testified here as to the relationship between RKO and Butterfield Theatres, Inc.? A. Is this agreement dating back to the vaudeville days when an agreement between Publix Theatres and——

Q. This is an agreement of 1933. A. —and B. F. Keith and Butterfield?

Q. Yes. A. I have not read it. I have had it described to me.

Q. I call your attention to this provision which is at page——

Mr. Leisure: Mr. Wright, may I ask, is that 1928 or 1933?

Judge Bright: 1933.

Mr. Wright: 1933.

Q. In this agreement at page 9, I call your attention to the provision which reads as follows:

"With respect to the booking and exhibition of feature motion pictures in the theatres, the MANAGER"——

I take it that refers to Butterfield——

(2286)

"agrees to book and exhibit therein, during the term of this agreement, such number of motion pictures distributed by RKO Distributing Corporation (or any corporation taking over the business thereof) and subject to such terms and conditions as are specified in Article 20 of an agreement made September 24, 1926 between Walter S. Butterfield, Famous-Players-Lasky Corporation, Balaban & Katz Corporation, Publix Theatres Corporation and B. F. Keith Corporation."

Mr. Proskauer: Did you say Warner?

Mr. Wright: What?

Mr. Proskauer: Did I hear the word Warner?

Mr. Wright: You did not.

Q. (Continuing) I will show you this agreement bearing that date to which those corporations are parties, which has been marked for identification as Exhibit 387— A. That is an agreement of December 24, 1926?

Q. Yes. A. That is the agreement I had in mind when I said I had not read it but I had it described to me. I was wrong when I said that about this particular agreement.

Q. Well, this agreement that I show you, you recognize that as the 25-year agreement that was made in 1926 and is referred to in that paragraph I just read?

Mr. Leisure: We concede that it is, Mr. Wright, if you say it is. Let us save some time.

(2287)

Q. You say this agreement which is identified as Government's Exhibit 387 had been described to you? A. It had been described to me when I asked the question how we ever happened to own this Butterfield stock, that it was the result of a vaudeville booking arrangement with the then owners of the theatres and Paramount-Publix. If there were other parties I did not know it at the time; and to me it is just an investment that I inherited, and what its history was in the past, I am afraid I am not very well qualified to testify on, because it has been nothing but an investment ever since I have had anything to do with RKO.

Q. And the relations between RKO and Butterfield as to management and film buying are set forth, are they not, more accurately in these two agreements rather than anything you testified to? A. No; what I testified to are what the conditions are now and have been for some time past in relation to it. I can testify from the time I became president of this company Butterfield has been nothing but an investment; we have done nothing about attempting to manage them or in any way have anything to do with their operation. To me it has meant nothing but an investment which I would like very much to sell if someone would offer the right price for it.

Q. Now, I will call your attention to this paragraph 20 of the 1926 agreement marked for identification as Exhibit 387, which provides for the licensing of a certain number of films each year by a corporation, or released by a corporation designated here as P.D.C. or any corporation producing or distributing feature motion pictures substituted by Keith for said P.D.C. That, I take it, refers to the Producers Distributors Corporation which was at that time a distributor of the name of the distribution organization which was affiliated with RKO, isn't that right? A. No.

Q. Would you know what that did refer to? A. P.D.C.?

Q. Yes. A. That was a distributing organization which passed out of existence a long, long time ago.

Q. I understand. A. And to the best of my knowledge it was never owned by RKO, and as far as I know it was owned only by an individual named Jeremiah Milbank, but it is way back in history and I do not know a great deal about it.

Q. Do you know what was done under this agreement with reference to designating a substitute for this P.D.C. pursuant to the terms of this agreement identified as Exhibit 387? A. Did I understand you to say that B. F. Keith had that right to designate?

Q. It is so set forth in paragraph 20 of this agreement. A. I must only answer on the assumption that if B. F.
(2289)
Keith had that right, at some stage they may very well have nominated someone as a substitute for P.D.C.

Q. Well, that would be at the present time RKO Film Distributing Corporation, isn't that right, or RKO-Radio Pictures, Inc.? A. No such relationship exists today, I assure you.

Q. Well, do you know, what, if any—— A. They may have designated it in the past, maybe for a time some distributing—maybe RKO Radio Pictures—I am testifying only to the time I have been associated——

Q. Just listen to the question. Can you tell what if any modifications have been made with respect to these two written agreements I am showing you here, 386 and 387 for identification, since they were executed? A. From the paragraphs you have shown me in this 1933 agreement, there obviously was a modification, and the paragraph you called my attention to indicated a continuation of the—I assume the provision you are talking about in that agreement for the length of this contract; and unless you point to me the term of that contract I would not be able to know how many years that is.

Q. Well, the contract will speak for itself as to the term. A. May I refer again to the paragraph you pointed out to me? Is this it (indicating)?
(2290)

Q. Yes. What I want to find out from you is what if any modifications have been made subsequent to the execution of these agreements, if you know? A. This in itself appears to be a modification and extension.

Q. I understand. A. And it must have an expiration date, I assume, and I assume it expired. But what that expiration date is, I don't know.

Q. Well, this basic agreement here has an expiration date of 25 years from its execution. I take it you have no doubt that the basic agreement has not expired; is that right?

Mr. Proskauer: I object to that as a conclusion of law. Here are two papers in evidence——

Mr. Seymour: They are not in evidence.

Mr. Proskauer: — and he is continually examining this witness as to what the papers mean.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

A. This paragraph you pointed out to me seems to indicate that it carries forward into the provision of this contract the provision which is Article 20 of the earlier contract, which is the right to substitute, the right of substituting for P.D.C.

Q. And I call your attention to the fact that the earlier contract, marked for identification as Exhibit 387, says: (2291)

"The term of agreement shall be for a period of 25 years from and after January 2, 1927."

Now, may I ask you again, do you know what if any modifications in the terms of these two written agreements that are before you have been made since they were executed? A. I don't know of any other contracts modifying that term. All I can say to you is, what is stated there is not being carried out today. Whether there is a contract to carry it out still in existence, I don't know.

Q. And you don't know whether the reason why it is not being carried out today is due to some further written modification or not, is that right? A. That is right.

Mr. Wright: We offer these two agreements in evidence.

Mr. Seymour: If your Honors please, as far as the first one is concerned, which is the agreement with respect to the Grand Rapids operating agreement, which is relatively short, I have no present objection to it. The other document is a long printed document, and I object to it as irrelevant.

Your Honors will recall how this arose. Mr. Beatty, called by me as a witness, testified both as to the operating agreement in Grand Rapids and with respect to the way Butterfield was actually operating. He was president of the company. While he was on the stand Mr. Wright asked to have the agreements, and we produced them, and we held him in New York until Mr. Wright excused him, saying he did not want to examine him. Now, I think at this stage to have that long agreement received in its entirety is an unnecessary burdening of the record. If there are individual parts offered not in contradiction to the witness, but for another purpose, we won't object. But here is a lengthy document, and if it is going to be received now, then I am put to the burden of bringing that gentleman back, or somebody else, and I think it is unnecessarily encumbering the record.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, you recall that I told Mr. Seymour in open court at the time these were produced that I proposed to offer them in evidence, and that if he desired any explanation of them from Mr. Beatty, he had better keep him here; but I, however, did not desire to cross-examine him on it.

Now, these agreements set forth the manner in which the Paramount, RKO and Butterfield interests were originally consolidated in that Michigan area, and is, in my view, far better evidence of what the parties had in mind at that time and what they did than any possible oral testimony that could be elicited from either Mr. Beatty or Mr. Rathvon.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

(2293)

(Government's Exhibits 386 and 387 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: I think that is all.

Mr. Leisure: That is all, Mr. Rathvon.

Mr. Leisure: This morning Mr. Davis was good enough to let me go ahead of him when he had some work prepared, and with the Court's permission I am going to let him proceed now with some charts that he has.

Judge Hand: Have you got anything more?

Mr. Leisure: Yes, sir.

Judge Hand: How much?

Mr. Leisure: I have another witness who will take almost as long as this witness. Then I will be through, except for some charts that I want to put in.

Mr. Davis: If the Court please, some time last week I introduced Exhibit L-7, which was a statement of domestic feature film license fees billed by Loew's to all exhibitors during the fiscal years 1936 to 1944, both inclusive. I now wish to withdraw the exhibit which was then admitted in evidence and substitute another exhibit of the same sort. I have found errors in the exhibit after it was filed. I withdraw the present exhibit L-7 and substitute this. The errors were in computation. There is no change in the form.

(2294)

(Statement referred to marked Loew's Exhibit L-7 in substitution for statement previously marked Loew's Exhibit L-7.)

Mr. Davis: I offer tabulation showing the feature film license fees paid by Loew's Metropolitan Theatres for the fiscal years ending August 31, 1931 to 1944.

Judge Hand: Have you examined it, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: I am just looking at it now.

Judge Hand: Mark it for identification.

(Marked Defendant Loew's Exhibit L-8 for identification.)

Mr. Davis: Has that been admitted?

Judge Hand: That will be admitted. Received.

(Defendant Loew's Exhibit L-8 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Davis: I offer in evidence a tabulation showing the feature film license fees paid by all Loew theatres in the United States (including Buffalo theatres) for the fiscal years ending August 31, 1931 to 1944, showing what percentage of the total was paid to the defendants at the bar and to miscellaneous producers.

Judge Hand: Mark it for identification.

(Marked Defendant Loew's Exhibit L-9 for identification.)

Mr. Davis: I now offer a table showing in contrast total feature film license fees received by Loew's as a distributor from all domestic exhibitors, 1937 to 1944, and the total feature film license fees paid by Loew's as an exhibitor to all domestic producers in the same period.

(2295)

I did this in order to show that there is no correlation between the receipts and the payments; and I might say also to prove that it is more blessed to receive than to give.

(Marked Defendant Loew's Exhibit L-10 for identification.)

Mr. Davis: At page 1117 of the printed record Mr. Caskey introduced a chart showing the simultaneous first-run release of the film to which it then related. Your Honors suggested that a similar table from the defendants might be helpful for comparison.

I offer a chart showing the first-run release of the film As Thousands Cheer beginning September 13, 1943. If your Honors will have those before you, I want you to note one striking phenomenon about it.

(Marked Defendant Loew's Exhibit L-11 for identification.)

Mr. Davis: I am offering it in evidence.

Your Honors will notice, with this chart before you, that the exhibition at New York began on September 13, 1943, and continued until November 21, 1943. That was a preliminary release showing at the (2296)

Astor Theatre. General release came on December 23, 1943. And then you will notice a series of releases at or about the New Year, which indicates that those contemporaneous releases were shooting at the holiday trade. From then on it goes down, as shown by the chart.

I offer in evidence a chart showing the total operating theatres in the United States compared with Loew's total operated theatres from the years January 1, 1932 to January 1, 1945. I offer this chart to show the contrast between the acquisition of theatres operated by Loew's and the growth of the theatres in the United States during that same period.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, the use of these Film Daily Year Book figures for this purpose I think is particularly misleading. They do not indicate or even purport to indicate, as I understand it, theatre acquisitions by anybody. All that you have reflected is, I believe, only the reopening of certain theatres which were formerly closed, which, of course, is a natural phenomena when there is an increase in business prosperity generally. I do not see how these data that are reflected in the chart here are a proper basis for proving what Mr. Davis says they prove.

Judge Hand: Overruled. That is a matter of argument later.

(Marked Defendant Loew's Exhibit L-12.)

Mr. Davis: When the witness Rodgers was on the stand I offered in evidence a list of the first-run theatres in the 92 critical towns.

Judge Hand: Just a minute.

Mr. Davis: In examining the witness Rodgers about the first-run theatres, Loew's and others, in the 92 critical towns, I offered a list of the first-run theatres in those towns, with the statement of their respective seating capacities. It was agreed, as I understood it, or, if not agreed it was tacitly understood, that that list should be checked, and it was handed to Mr. Wright for that purpose, and I have had it checked myself. I wish to offer it with certain corrections. In the testimony the theatre Bijou at Knoxville was erroneously stated to be a first-run theatre. It is not. The Marlo at Salt Lake City was erroneously stated to be a first-run theatre. It is not. The Florida Theatre at Tampa was erroneously stated to be a first-run theatre. It is not. The Capitol Theatre at Rochester we understand not to be a first-run theatre. The Downtown Theatre in Detroit was listed on that list as owned and operated by Howard Hughes. We now understand it to be operated by the Downtown Amusement Company. The Palace and Gary theatres at Gary, Indiana, were listed on the first list as affiliated. That is in error, as the names of the operators are Young and Boucher. The seating capacity of these theatres we have had checked by our district managers in the districts where the theatres are located. We now believe this seating list to be accurate. I offer that list.

Mr. Wright: We have no objection providing we can find out now, which we could not find out when Mr. Rodgers was on the stand, what definition of first-run theatre was used in making these classifications. That is, what the term "first-run theatre" means as applied to these theatres on this list. That is something we ought to know.

Mr. Davis: I think you will find all that in Mr. Rodgers' testimony. He identified these theatres and identified those which Loew's licensed to him.

Mr. Wright: If the Court will recall, at the time Mr. Rodgers testified we tried to find out what the basis of the selection was and we could not do it. As to whether or not he took as a first-run theatre those which had no regular first-run of any major product, or whether he did not. Now, I do not know as to this list. Some of these theatres, as far as I know, are not theatres which are first-run theatres according to our definition. That is, one which has a regular first-run of some major product. Now, I do not ask that he use our definition necessarily, but I just want to know what definition was used in compiling the list, and what the term "first-run theatre" as it is used in the list means.

Mr. Davis: If there is one phrase in this case which up to this time seems to have not occasioned any dispute at all, it is what is first-run and what is subsequent-run. It did not occur to me that there is any room for dispute in the definition about that. And the witness took that as the list of the first-run theatres in these critical towns. I offer it.

Judge Hand: The objection is overruled. Received.

(2300)

Mr. Davis: At page 566 of the record the statement was made that in the 416 cities with more than 25,000 population As Thousands Cheer showed in 3631 theatres. The reports on the admission prices were available in 3237, and there are 346 cases where the minimum admission price was exceeded by the licensed theatre. Mr. Wright asked for a breakdown between first-run theatres and subsequent-run theatres, independent and affiliates, as to that increased price. I offer such a tabulation which shows that the first-run theatres which exceeded the minimum admission numbered 127; that the second and third and sub-run theatres exceeded the admission price—219 of them.

Judge Hand: Received.

(Marked Defendant Loew's Exhibit L-14 in evidence.)

Mr. Davis: Now, I hesitate to offer maps of New York after the splendid map which RKO has offered.

Judge Hand: I feared those blueprints when I saw them down there.

Colloquy

Mr. Davis: These have but one possible merit over those which have been offered by Mr. Leisure, and that is they are a little more compact and transportable. I offer a map of each borough of the City of New York showing the location of the Loew theatre and the location of all others. It is to demonstrate the fact that (2301)
whatever else the citizens of New York may suffer from, they are not suffering from a lack of moving picture houses.

(Marked Defendant Loew's Exhibit L-15.)

Mr. Davis: I offer as an annex to those maps an index of the theatres owned by circuits other than Loew's in Greater New York, Long Island and New Jersey, with the numbers of the theatres.

(Marked Defendant Loew's Exhibit L-15A.)

Mr. Davis: Do your Honors wish to continue?

Judge Hand: No. Have you more of this documentary evidence?

Mr. Davis: I have one or two documents; and then I have a stipulation which I will want to offer.

Judge Hand: The clerk says that L-9, L-10 and L-11 were marked for identification only.

Mr. Davis: Everything that I have tendered I have offered in evidence.

Judge Hand: They are received in evidence.

(Defendant Loew's Exhibits L-9, L-10 and L-11 for identification received in evidence.)

Judge Hand: Now, what more is there if you can state it, before the defendants rest?

Mr. Frohlich: I have just one tabulation, your Honor, which will take just a few minutes.

Judge Hand: All right. Now, Mr. Leisure has a (2302) witness?

Mr. Leisure: That is right, and then a witness with some exhibits, which will take, I think, a full day.

Judge Hand: You have two witnesses?

Mr. Leisure: One factual witness and one who will identify certain exhibits.

Judge Hand: Any other witnesses?

Mr. Seymour: I expect to have one or possibly two witnesses, relatively short; but there will be a lot of documentary stuff.

Judge Hand: You will have a lot of documentary matter?

Mr. Seymour: There will be some of this stuff. I have not any maps but I have everything else.

Mr. Proskauer: For Warners, your Honor, we are going to have a very small number of very clear charts. We are going to remember that it is more blessed to receive than to give. We shall also have a stipulation regarding one witness's testimony, and I think that is probably all excepting that we are all jointly thinking of offering some general tabulated evidence about the arbitration awards. We are trying to see if we can get them into some kind of tabular form. I am not sure whether we shall succeed or not, but I think that is about all we have to offer, and I suppose I could get through in an hour, assuming, (2302a) as I have every reason to believe, that Mr. Wright and I are going to agree.

(Discussion off the record.)

Judge Hand: All right, we shall adjourn until Thursday at 10.30.

(Adjourned to Thursday, November 8, 1945, at 10.30 o'clock a.m.)

(2303)

New York, November 8, 1945;
10.30 o'clock a. m.

Trial resumed.

Mr. Raftery: Mr. Wright has asked for the production of documents in a letter; and there is Universal's contribution——

Mr. Seymour: I can't hear you, Mr. Raftery.

Mr. Raftery: Mr. Wright has asked us to produce a group of franchises and other documents from Universal; and I am delivering them with this admonition. These are current contracts in daily use. The Government is free to photostat them or do anything they want, but they have got to give them back.

And here is United Artists' contribution. Same conditions.

Mr. Frohlich: Mr. Wright has asked me to produce the franchises of Columbia Pictures Corporation. While the original franchises are scattered all over the country, we have a franchise book from 1935 down to the present; and I have compiled a list of all of the Columbia franchises both with independents and affiliates. I should like to offer that in evidence. I have given a copy to Mr. Wright. They go from 1936-37 down to the present time, and some of them run as far as 1942, 1945, 1946 and 1947. There is no 10-year franchise; there is no 5-year franchise. There are two 4-year franchises to independents, and the rest are 2 and 3-year franchises.

Judge Hand: I do not see why they did not get these things before and put them in by stipulation. You do not want all these papers around.

Mr. Wright: He was offering this, if the Court please, as his exhibit.

Mr. Frohlich: Mr. Wright asked me for them, and I have produced them; and I would rather have them in the record than just informally handing them over to him.

Mr. Wright: What he is doing is making an offer in evidence of material that he furnished us at our request. We have no objection to its going in, but it is not at our insistence that this is being made a part of the record.

Mr. Frohlich: It is my responsibility, your Honors. I want to complete my record.

Judge Hand: Then you have nothing to complain of, being the one encumbering the record.

Mr. Frohlich: I am the guilty party; but I think I need it for my record.

Judge Hand: Maybe you do. Then do not lament over his building up the record.

(2805)

Mr. Raftery: I will take mine back if he does not want them.

(Marked Defendant Columbia's Exhibit C-9).

Mr. Frohlich: When Mr. Montague was on the stand, the Court will recall that he testified in certain cities he sold away from affiliates to independents, and Mr. Wright asked for the dates. Well, I have obtained these dates. I have a short list here, which is one page. I should like to offer that in evidence. I will have a copy in a minute.

Mr. Seymour: May I see it?

Mr. Frohlich: Yes, I will give you a copy of it.

(Marked Defendant Columbia's Exhibit C-10).

Mr. Frohlich: Now, in answer to one of our interrogatories we gave the Government the gross income from production and distribution of Columbia, and the net profits from 1935 down to 1938. And I want to supplement that with a brief statement of the gross income and the net profits down to 1944.

(Marked Defendant Columbia's Exhibit C-11).

Mr. Frohlich: Now, here I am offering in evidence a list of eight or ten independent circuits and the income which was derived by Columbia Pictures in 1943-1944 from those circuits.

(2306)

(Marked Defendant Columbia's Exhibit C-12.)

Mr. Frohlich: And at Mr. Wright's request, he has asked me to give him a detailed statement of the moneys received by Columbia from Paramount in 1943-44 which is one page and a half. I have compiled that. That represents a list of particular affiliates and the rentals received.

Mr. Seymour: May I see it, Mr. Frohlich?

Mr. Frohlich: Yes, sure.

(Marked Defendant Columbia's Exhibit C-13.)

Mr. Frohlich: I have no further offer.

Mr. Leisure: May we proceed now, your Honor?

Judge Hand: Yes.

ROBERT MOCHRIE, called as a witness on behalf of the RKO defendants, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Leisure:

Q. Your name is Robert Mochrie? A. Yes.

Q. And you live in Manhattan? A. Yes.

Q. Are you associated with RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.? A. Yes, I am.

Q. What is your position with that company? A. I am the general sales manager of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.

Q. How long have you occupied this position? A. Since the summer of 1942.

(2307)

Q. Will you please state your general duties in this capacity, please? A. Yes. As general sales manager I am responsible for the sales and distribution of RKO pictures in the United States and Canada and of independently produced pictures in the United States and Canada.

Q. Distributing RKO pictures? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you please state your experience in the motion picture business, Mr. Mochrie? A. I started as a salesman in the Cleveland territory in 1925; and in 1926 became Albany branch manager for the same company, Producers Distributing Corporation; and in 1927, Pittsburgh branch manager; that company was merged into Pathe and I went for them to Philadelphia as branch manager in 1928; later they were bought by RKO and I remained as branch manager in Philadelphia for RKO-Pathe until 1932, at which time I became branch manager for Warner Bros.; and in 1934 I became assistant general sales manager for Warner Bros.; in 1937 I became southern district manager for United Artists; and in 1939 southern district manager for the present company, RKO, having authority over the southern branches of Oklahoma City, Dallas, Memphis, New Orleans, Atlanta and Charlotte; in 1940 I became eastern and southern division sales manager for the same company; and in 1942, general sales manager, which position I now occupy.

Q. Was it in 1931 that RKO bought Pathe, did you say? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you just outline briefly the distribution department of RKO Radio Pictures, please? A. Yes. I have assisting me in the work two division managers, one in charge of the West and the other in charge of the East and South. Each of these men has under him four or five district managers out in the field, each district manager having two to four branches under his jurisdiction. There are 32 branches in all in this country and six in Canada. Now, each branch is operated by a branch manager and he has under him an office manager, handling the clerical work, who has a group of salesmen, who has a group of bookers, a cashier, and then there are, in addition, film inspectors and film shippers. And there are also, usually at the rate of one man per branch attached to these branches, field exploitation and publicity men and they are under the immediate jurisdiction of a director of field exploitation, Terry Turner. There are, as well, traveling auditors; and in the home office there are various service departments, mechanically serving the branches, and that is under my jurisdiction.

Q. Can you tell us approximately what the annual cost of operating the RKO distribution system is? A. It is somewhat in excess of seven million dollars, domestic distribution. (2309)

Q. Without taking time to go into it, Mr. Mochrie, at this time, are the mechanics of RKO distribution generally the same as has already been described by representatives of other companies here? A. Yes, sir, they are.

Q. Do you participate in planning the production program of RKO Radio Pictures? A. I do. The production is entirely headed up by Mr. Charles Koerner, who operates the studios and is responsible for the production of the pictures. From time to time Mr. Koerner confers with people in the East and we are able to furnish him at times with information in respect to star values, and type of story values, things of that nature, which we have learned from our work with the exhibitors who in turn are in immediate touch with the public.

Q. Mr. Rathvon, the president of your company, testified here Monday that in the 1943-44 season RKO distributed 32 of its own pictures and distributed six pictures produced by independent producers. Can you tell us how these six independently-produced pictures compared from the standpoint of popularity and revenue with the other pictures which RKO distributed in that season? A. Yes, I can. The average that season of all our pictures played was some 8000 engagements per picture. The average of the independently-produced pictures that season was some 10,000 engagements per picture. The engagement per picture is a mark of the volume of distribution obtained. In money that year, we grossed, in this country, in excess of a million dollars on 13 pictures. Of those 13 pictures, four were independently produced.

Q. You mean a million dollars each on the pictures? A. A million dollars each, of course.

The highest-grossing picture of the season was independently produced. It was Mr. Goldwyn's "Up In Arms", which grossed approximately two and three-quarter million dollars. The second highest-grossing picture that season was also independently produced, "Lady Takes a Chance", which grossed just a few dollars short of two million dollars. That is domestic gross.

Q. How many outside produced pictures did RKO distribute in the 1944-45 season? A. That season we distributed eight.

Q. How many pictures of its own did RKO distribute in that season? A. 22.

Q. Will you tell us how the eight pictures which you have just referred to compared with the other pictures distributed by RKO? A. Yes. There again the average of the eight pictures played two more engagements per picture than the average of our own 22. And in money, we had, that season, 14 pictures each of which grossed in excess of a (2311)

million dollars and six of which were independently produced. Also, the highest-grossing picture for the 1944-45 season was Princess and the Pirate, and the next highest was Casanova Brown. Casanova Brown was produced by International Pictures.

Q. Who produced Princess and the Pirate? A. Again Mr. Goldwyn—Sam Goldwyn.

Q. What has been the policy of RKO with reference to its willingness to distribute outside produced pictures? A. Why, we are very willing and, in fact, desirous of distributing independently-produced pictures. The criterion as to whether or not we will take on a picture, subject to being able to negotiate terms for the distribution of the picture, is the quality of the picture. If it is in our opinion desirable, with prospects of excellent grossing in the theatres, we are interested; if in our opinion it is not desirable, we are not interested.

Q. In this case the Government charges that RKO and the other distributor-defendants combined and conspired to monopolize the distribution of motion pictures and to exclude from that business independently-produced pictures. Has your company to your knowledge ever taken any such action? A. No, sir.

Q. It has no such understandings or agreements? A.
(2312)
None whatever.

Q. Have you ever discussed with any representative of any distributor-defendant whether RKO should or should not distribute a picture produced by an independent producer? A. No, sir, I have not.

Q. If in the 1943-44 season you had had no independently-produced pictures to distribute, would that have affected your competitive position? A. Yes, it surely would have.

Q. Would you just tell the Court how? A. Yes. In selling my pictures, I am competing, and did compete that season, with some companies who have a pretty large number of top quality A pictures. In obtaining the six pictures we did that year, of independent production, we materially added to the number of A quality pictures that our own studios produced, which, in an over-all sense, enabled us to contact, in our sales work, the exhibitors on a much more competitive basis as an important company, the source of quality pictures.
(2313)

By Judge Bright:

Q. On what is your compensation based in the distribution of pictures from other producers?

The Witness: Will you repeat that, sir?
Mr. Leisure: Will you please read it?
(Question read.)

A. The compensation is based upon the gross rentals we obtain from the theatres—that is, the gross business we do.

By Mr. Leisure:

Q. And you get a percentage, Mr. Mochrie? A. Yes, sir, we do. The percentage varies in accordance with the particular deal for the particular picture. There are all sorts of various arrangements, but it is based—it is a percentage in one way or another of the total business we get for that picture; the total money we get for that picture.

By Judge Hand:

Q. Do you say that is true whether the licensee is an affiliate or an independent? A. Well, the money that we get for the picture comes from all the theatres to whom we sell that picture, some of which theatres may be affiliated and some of which may be independent; but it is the total money that we get from the picture from all sources.

By Mr. Leisure:

Q. And you get a percentage whether they are affiliated (2314) or not? A. Yes, of course. We get percentage on the total money. There is no distinction where the money comes from.

Mr. Leisure: That was Judge Hand's question, as I understand it.

The Witness: Yes.

Q. Now, does RKO offer the features which it produces in blocks of five? A. Would you mind repeating that?

Q. Does RKO offer the features which it produces in blocks of five? A. Yes, we do.

Q. Do you include pictures produced by outside producers in those blocks? A. Sometimes, yes, and other pictures are sold individually and separately.

Q. Why, Mr. Mochrie? A. It depends upon the distribution contract that we have with the independent producer. Some independent producers have a contract with us specifying that their pictures shall be distributed individually, sold individually, and others do not.

Q. Is RKO required to offer its own pictures in blocks of five? A. It was required under the consent decree; and when that provision of the consent decree no longer became operative, RKO continued to offer in blocks of five.

Q. Now, when RKO licenses its features in a block of five to a given theatre, are several films licensed simultaneously or is each licensed separately? A. Well, the entire five may be licensed simultaneously, but each of the pictures is negotiated for separately. The negotiations take place for each picture, although at one time the license may be made for the five pictures, or the application for license may be made.
(2315)

Q. And how do you select the features to be included in such a block of five? A. Well, that is dependent first of all on the pictures, on what pictures are available from our studios that the studios have completed producing and have delivered us positive prints of; and then within that limitation we try to put together a balanced block; that is, balanced from the point of view of different stars, different types of pictures, a musical or a drama, and also different value pictures, balancing a high-cost production picture with a low-cost production picture, which, in turn, makes a well-rounded group to present to the exhibitor trade, with pictures of all sorts of use and all sorts of possibilities, for deluxe theatres and for the reverse.

Q. Now, when you have made up one of these blocks of five, is it your policy to insist that the exhibitor buy the whole block? A. Well, as a seller I make every possible effort to sell each exhibitor the entire block. I am very frequently unsuccessful in that, so that if the exhibitor for one reason or another will not buy five, I sell four; and if he won't buy four, I will sell three; and if he won't buy three, I will sell two.

Q. Could you illustrate that, Mr. Mochrie? A. Well, you can illustrate that by the results of the distribution of a picture. The first block in the 1943-44 season contained five pictures: Lady Takes a Chance, Fallen Sparrow, Adventures of a Rookie, So This Is Washington, and The Seventh Victim. Now, the best grossing picture of that group was Lady Takes a Chance and that picture played to 14,000 engagements in this country. The reverse of that is The Seventh Victim, the poorest grossing picture of the group, which played to only 6,250 engagements in this country; that is less than half; and an intermediate picture, So This Is Washington, played 8500 engagements. That is, on the best picture we wrote many more contracts than we did on the poorest picture.

Q. Was that block typical of the 1943-44 releases as a whole? A. Yes.

By Judge Goddard:

Q. From your testimony it would appear you tried to sell a block of five and no more than five; but if the exhibitor won't take five you will sell him a lesser number, is that right? A. I do the best I can, sir.

Q. You do sell a lesser number? A. Yes, sir. That is (2317):

evidenced by the fact that I have endeavored to sell the five pictures to all the theatres that I can. In the case of the best picture I was successful in selling 14,000 theatres. In the case of the poorest of that block I was successful in selling only 6250 theatres. So there were many, many theatres that I did not sell that poor picture to.

A. But you do sell in less than blocks of five? A. Yes, I do, indeed. I sell as few sometimes as one of the five.

By Mr. Leisure:

Q. And you do not refuse—if I may supplement Judge Goddard's questions—you do not refuse to sell a theatre if it does not take the whole block of five? A. No, I do not.

Q. Now, does RKO trade-show its features making up a block before they are licensed? A. Yes.

Q. Will you tell us about RKO trade-showing, please? A. Yes. After the block is put together of the five pictures, we then arrange that each of the five pictures be screened in each of the exchange cities of the country, usually in a screening room in the exchange city; and the five pictures usually are screened on two or three successive days. We advertise the place of the screening, the time of the screening and the date of the screening for each picture in the trade journals prior to the event.

(2318)

By Judge Goddard:

Q. One other question I should like to ask you: In selling to independents or selling to affiliates, do you make any distinction between them whether you will insist on a block of five or not? A. None whatsoever, sir.

By Mr. Leisure:

Q. Mr. Mochrie, have you found trade showing beneficial to you as a distributor? A. Yes, I have.

Q. Will you explain, please. A. Yes. Up until the time I have trade-screened a block of five I do not have a contract on my books, which means that I have no contracts at the time my pictures are ready for showing to the exhibitors, and for exhibition in their theatres; that is, there are prints delivered in all the exchanges of the country, which means I start from zero, which, in turn, means the burden is placed where I think the burden should be. It is placed on the back of the producer of the picture. He knows that I have no contracts for his picture until such a time as that picture is shown the exhibitors of the country. I start from zero. And if he has made me a very fine picture, it means I will get very fine terms and very wide distribution; and if he has produced a poor picture, it means I will get poor terms and poor distribution; and it puts the burden on him to give me a quality piece of merchandise.

Q. Has RKO made any franchise agreements with any theatres since 1940? A. No.

Q. Does RKO-Radio Pictures give any pereference to RKO theatres for first-run of its features? A. Yes, sir, we do. We endeavor to place our pictures with RKO first-run theatres.

Q. And would you explain that, please? Why do you do that? A. Well, first of all, where there are first-run RKO theatres, those theatres exhibit the picture on such an excellent basis, and the theatres in themselves, in my opinion, are of such a nature that I receive the best possible immediate rental for the actual showing of the picture in that theatre. That is the first reason, although perhaps not the most important.

Secondly, I am able to place our pictures in RKO first-run theatres nearly as rapidly as I wish and as frequently as I wish, which insures an even flow of product moving through these large cities of the country. Through the theatres, and becoming available to the theatres of that territory in which that large city is located, both subsequent-runs and general towns around that city. That is very important, because that means I am assured of a constant flow of pictures to that territory, and so, a constant income of revenue. (2320)

Now, the other reason, which is perhaps even more important, is the great assistance I get from those theatres in the exploitation and publicity of my pictures. You see, at times we have not been able to compete as well as we would like to in obvious star value names in our pictures with other companies; and so we have deliberately practiced as a distributor to the very best of our ability the use of exploitation and publicity to make up for the shortage, at times, of star names; which means that in my theatres scattered in large cities across the country I have an exhibitor who will fully cooperate with me and give great assistance in that exploitation.

(2321)

I can give you a specific example right now: we recently produced a picture called Spanish Main, at a very high cost. The negative cost is in excess of two million dollars. Now that presented a task to get back moneys that would at least break even and perhaps return some profit to the company. So we planned on an elaborate and complicated magazine, comic sheet and national publicity campaign, and we timed that to reach a peak in early October, and then we picked October 12th, inasmuch as that would include a holiday, Columbus Day, as the time for releasing that picture in our theatres. We did that ourselves, the distributors, and asked those theatres to cooperate with us, which they did. So that Spanish Main blazed across the country in many of the great cities of the country on October 12th, and it did a very fine business indeed. It did such an excellent business that the entire trade, the other affiliated circuits, the independent circuits, the small independents, became aware that Spanish Main was an extremely successful box office picture. Now that will make my task immeasurably easier in getting high terms for the picture and in selling it quickly and widely and getting the best playing time from the theatres to whom I am selling.

Q. Any other example? A. I beg pardon?

Q. Any other example? A. Yes, and I hope it will come out as well or perhaps better. We have an important picture coming up called The Bells of St. Mary's, with two important stars in the picture. Now that picture has been licensed to the Radio City Music Hall here in New York, and it will open in the middle of December. It is their Christmas picture. Now we have set it in all of our first-run theatres across the country to open on Christmas Day. Now that means that the picture—and we have timed our magazine advertising and our national advertising to coincide exactly with that releasing time; and that means that that picture will be launched with great emphasis across the country in the key cities of the country; and if it be successful in those theatres, certainly the entire trade will immediately and quickly know of it.

(2322)

At times we have reversed that procedure. At times we have had a picture which has not had any great publicity, or perhaps even great attractiveness in the eyes of the exhibitors, but which we have thought had excellent entertainment value, excellent audience value in the picture. The picture I mentioned before in the first block of 1943-44 program, Lady Takes a Chance, is a picture of that type. It was very highly entertaining but it had no prestige to it. So we did the reverse with that picture. We released that picture very slowly, and we staggered it in our theatres across the country so that it would play off slowly, and we would write our contracts at a slow rate until such time as through word of mouth and through similar means the trade, and, in turn, the public, would know of the value of the picture; and it worked very well. It was a very successful picture.

Q. What about Hitler's Children? A. Well, this may be lengthy, but that is another use made of our theatres——

Q. That was about the same? Then I will not go into that. It would be similar? A. Yes; but it is a specialized way of distributing pictures, and I must emphasize that it is necessary in my opinion to have theatres to use to achieve those results.

Q. Mr. Mochrie, are there instances where your pictures are not given their first-run showings in RKO theatres in cities where RKO theatres are located? A. Yes, there are.

Q. And why is that? A. Well, that happens when our theatres are unable to provide the length of playing time that we think the picture is entitled to. You see, there are only 52 weeks in a year for a theatre, and the theatre may have commitments to other companies which are releasing pictures at the same time, and we may have a series of pictures, and the theatre may play a picture two or three or four weeks, and, hence, unless we were willing to wait for the release of a picture in that city for a considerable number of months, we would have no way of playing it in our own theatre. When that happens I sell the picture elsewhere. I have done that on several occasions, numerous occasions, in Chicago, where our Palace theatre has been unable to provide us with sufficient playing time, and I sell numerous pictures to the independent Woods theatre.

I have done it on occasion in Washington where our theatre, a long-run theatre, has been unable to provide time, and I have sold pictures on occasions to Warner Bros. for their Earle theatre.

I have done it in Boston. It is done from time to time when we have not sufficient playing time.

Q. Will you tell the Court how RKO goes about selling its first-run customer in cities where there are no RKO theatres? A. Yes. I try to sell the theatre which in my opinion will yield my maximum legitimate revenue on a permanent basis over an extended period of time.

Q. Now that is where there are no RKO theatres. How do you negotiate the licensing of RKO pictures in RKO theatres? A. Well, when I have a normal A picture, a cut and dried A picture, it is very simple. Over the period of years we have developed license terms for the showing of the picture, so that those normal A pictures automatically take those terms. When I have a picture that has abnormal value, either appreciably greater than normal or the contrary, appreciably less, then I have considerable negotiating.
(2324a)
I figure and I trade to get the terms I think the picture is entitled to, and the playing time it is entitled to. Sometimes that is a difficult process.

Q. Does the method which you have described in choosing customers—does that apply to the 92 cities in the United States having a population of over one hundred thousand? A. Except where my own theatres are, yes, sir.

(2325)

Q. Where your own theatres are, will you explain that, please? A. As I have explained, where we have first-run theatres, my object is to place our pictures in our theatres, and I do so.

Q. Does the same thing apply to other cities other than the 92 cities that you have mentioned throughout the country? A. It does.

Q. What is the basis of negotiation for both the 92 cities and the other cities throughout the country, would you just explain that, where you do not have theatres? A. I say, I endeavor to place my product, all my pictures, with the theatre which in my opinion will earn me maximum legitimate revenue. I am not always successful, but I endeavor to do that.

Q. What factors do you consider in determining the theatre that will bring you the maximum revenue? A. Well, sir, there are numerous factors, the size of the theatre, the location of the theatre, the general appointments and quality of the theatre, the available playing time in the theatre, and the exhibitor, the operator of the theatre himself, that is, his showmanship ability, to properly sell my picture to the public, and his repufation for reliability, a man on whom I can depend to carry out agreements.

Q. Does the suitability of a picture for exhibition, in a particular theatre ever enter into your determination in choosing your first-run customer? A. Would you mind repeating that?

Q. I asked if the suitability of the theatre ever entered into your determination in choosing your first-run customer? A. Oh, yes.

Q. For any particular picture, of course? A. Oh, yes, surely. If I have a low cost Western picture, I would not endeavor to place it in a large de luxe theatre that is accustomed to showing important A pictures. Wouldn't be good for him and wouldn't be good for me either.

Q. Can you give the Court any instances where these factors have been a reason for your choice of a first-run customer? A. Yes, and I think a good instance is Atlanta, Georgia. In Atlanta, Georgia, our first-run outlet is Lucas & Jenkins, that is the Paramount affiliated circuit, but we license the Goldwyn pictures to an independent theatre, the Rialto, a very small theatre. That theatre has somewheres around seven or eight hundred seats, whereas the Lucas & Jenkins theatres are very much larger. Now, that small Rialto Theatre will exhibit a Goldwyn picture for four or five or six weeks in its first-run showing, and I have found that that theatre throws off a rental for those Goldwyn pictures in excess of anything that those Goldwyn pictures prior to then obtained from the Lucas & Jenkins theatres. They pay a good rental for that picture.

Q. Do you attempt to sell RKO first-run pictures to the Rialto? A. No, I do not.

Q. Why? A. Because the Rialto Theatre could not only not take care of the 25 or 30 pictures of mine, it couldn't take care of even a small fraction of those pictures, perhaps not even one or two. You see, in a season, I sell the Rialto two or three Goldwyn pictures, which means that those pictures use up 10 to 18 or 20 weeks of the Rialto playing time, and the Rialto has commitments for other pictures. It plays all of the Columbia product, which means that after the Goldwyn playing time is deducted from the 52 weeks, there is left 35 or 40 weeks, and the Rialto uses that up with Columbia product. There is no playing time available for my pictures, whereas Lucas & Jenkins can well absorb my 25 pictures and do absorb them.

Q. And has the size of the Rialto anything to do with the amount of playing time it can provide? A. Yes, surely. It has seven or eight hundred seats only, and if a picture of excellent value, that is, a picture that the public wants to see, plays in such a small theatre in a large city of the size of Atlanta, it will take a pretty long period of time before that theatre can take care of all the people who want to see it. That is responsible for the fact that a Goldwyn picture will run five or six weeks in that theatre.

Q. Would the size of the Rialto have any effect on your distribution of pictures to subsequent-runs? A. Well, it slows it up, takes five or six weeks for a good picture to play off there, which means I am delayed by that period of time in making that picture available to the subsequent-runs.

Q. How does the fact that a theatre is or is not affiliated with one of the integrated companies constitute a factor in your choice of customers? A. Will you please repeat that question?

(Read.) A. Has nothing to do with it.

Q. Based on your experience how do affiliated theatres in general compare from the standpoint of size, location and quality of operation with other theatres? A. In general, I would say that affiliated first-run theatres compare very favorably with all theatres in operating methods, in appointments, in size. Most first-run affiliated theatres are very excellent outlets; they are very excellently operated theatres.

Q. Do you always sell your pictures first-run in the largest theatre in a particular town? A. Usually, not always. Sometimes the largest theatre is not necessarily the best place to get maximum revenue and sometimes I am unable to sell the largest theatre.

Q. Can you give us an example, please? A. Yes. In Buffalo we play our pictures first-run in the Twentieth Century Theatre. That is an independent operation. We have played those pictures in that theatre for the last five or six years. It is a good size theatre but by no means the largest. There are several Paramount affiliated theatres, first-run Buffalo, and we used to have them as our first-run account, and we found that for our pictures we were not getting the revenue we thought we were entitled to, and we left them and we placed our product with this independent Twentieth Century Theatre which, although it is not as large, provides us with all the playing time we require and moves our pictures in the manner we think they should be moved and gives us very excellent revenue.

Judge Bright: What do you mean by Twentieth Century, independent theatre?

The Witness: It is independently operated and owned.

Judge Bright: It is not affiliated with Twentieth Century-Fox?

(2330)

The Witness: No, sir. That is the name of the theatre, Twentieth Century. I think the corporate name is Twentieth Century Corporation of Buffalo, and the operator is a man by the name of Yellen, Max Yellen. Has nothing to do with Twentieth Century-Fox.

Q. Would Salt Lake City be another example of the same type? A. Yes. That would be even more pronounced. There again we sold the theatres affiliated with Paramount first-run up to five years or so ago, and there again we found that we were not getting the revenue which we thought we were entitled to and took our pictures away from them and we placed them in a theatre called the Uptown Theatre, operated by Joe Lawrence. That theatre has, I think, 1200 seats in it—something like 1200 seats—and I think the Paramount affiliate has two or three theatres of around 1800 seats, but Joe Lawrence has provided us with sufficient playing time and a quality of play-off that gives us more revenue in my opinion than we could possibly get from the Paramount theatres.

Q. Is Lawrence an independent? A. Oh, yes.

Q. Is it or is it not your general policy to try to keep the same outlets from year to year? A. Yes, I do.

Q. Why? A. Well, for one thing, I have endeavored to have our distribution company have a reputation for reliability, and it doesn't jump around, it doesn't put an individual picture on the auction block. I know this, that if I have a good customer in a city, first-run, and he knows that he will receive my pictures block after block, and I know that he will play my pictures block after block, I have an excellent outlet. Sometimes I come with pictures that are not as good as I hoped they would be, or as my company, my producer hoped they would be, but I know that, having behaved myself with the customer, he will behave himself with me and he will play those pictures as they come out one after the other. I endeavor to keep him as a first-run account always, provided, Mr. Leisure, that he maintains in my opinion maximum revenue for those pictures.

Q. Is there any difference in applying that policy between towns where the first-run theatres are both affiliated and independent and towns where all the first-run theatres are independent? A. No, sir, there is not.

Q. Would you say from your experience that exhibitors have evidenced to you any interest in retaining a stable supply of product themselves? A. Oh, yes, yes, they have. They have just the same interest I have. They want to be assured of a stable supply and I want to be assured of a stable outlet.

Q. Where you have an established outlet for your product, is it usual for an opposition theatre to seek to buy your product? A. Not if I have a good outlet, not usually.

Q. Will you explain that to the Court, please? A. Well, it is a close business, people know what goes on in this business, and if competing theatres see RKO product playing regularly in a first-run theatre in a satisfactory manner, they know as well as I know that I am not going to leave that satisfactory first-run account. I won't leave them unless I can be very certain that a new account can pay me materially more revenue, not for one picture but on a permanent basis, and legitimate revenue.

Judge Bright: What do you mean by "legitimate revenue"?

The Witness: I mean, legitimate revenue, terms and rentals that will be profitable to him as well as to me. If I sell a man on fictitiously high terms, by any chance, and such terms are not profitable to him, that man is of no use to me as a customer.

Judge Bright: Don't the other theatres make any effort to get your product from the particular theatre that has been exhibiting it?

The Witness: Not if it is a good customer, not usually.

Judge Bright: I mean, don't the competitors make any effort to get your product—— (2333)

The Witness: I say——

Judge Bright: ——from your customer then established?

The Witness: I say, not usually. When people make an effort to get my product is when I am running into trouble with my own customer. When my customer is not playing my pictures, or when my customer is paying me less rental than should be paid, that becomes known, It becomes known if I, in a certain city, have trouble and am dissatisfied with my present customer—that becomes known—and then most assuredly other people, almost in all instances, are very quickly on my doorstep telling me what terms and what moneys they can pay RKO.

Judge Bright: Then how do you handle that situation?

The Witness: I leave the customer, if I can be sure that this new fellow, who comes in, in my opinion, is a reputable man and has an excellent theatre whereby he, on a legitimate basis—I am sorry I used the word; perhaps it isn't right—but where he can show my pictures and give me high revenue and at the same time make money for himself. If he doesn't make money for himself, then I have trouble; he refuses to play the pictures and he refuses to pay me the terms I think I am entitled to, and when I have trouble, I look elsewhere for another customer or I find other people seeking me out to play my pictures, and that occurs very frequently. There is scarcely a month goes by that there is not some discussion in some place or another because of those reasons.

Judge Bright: I am wondering how the competitors of your customer find out if you are having trouble with your customer.

The Witness: I don't know, sir, but I can only hazard the guess that it is because it is a gossipy business and people usually know what goes on. It is their job to know what goes on. I know what goes and I presume other people know what goes on.

This whole distribution is a highly, in my opinion, is a highly competitive, fast-moving task, with lots of money at stake, and everyone has his eyes open and his ears to the ground, to know what is going on in all situations at all times.

Judge Bright: When you are having trouble with your customer, do you start to shop around for a new outlet?

The Witness: If he is a good customer and has been a good customer, and if I think that trouble is due to carelessness or something of that nature, I almost invariably go and talk with him, and I warn him. I tell him, "For heaven's sake, you are only headed for trouble if you keep on practicing the things you practice," and I don't want to leave him, if it can be avoided, but if, after a talk with him that way, for one reason or another, either because other distributors are putting more pressure on him for playing time, or through his greed, that he won't pay me the rentals I think I am entitled to, if for any of those reasons, after I wrestle with him, I cannot get any satisfaction, then I will most assuredly go seek someone else. I don't care who he is, big or little, affiliated or independent, if he tosses me around, I will find another outlet for my product.

Q. And you have given already as examples of that sort of thing Salt Lake City and Buffalo, where there was difficulty? A. Just for the reasons I have described, that we left those accounts in Salt Lake City and Buffalo and sought out another account.

Q. But following up Judge Bright's question, where you have a regular outlet and you have a satisfied customer and you are doing business with him regularly, is it usual to have anyone else bid for your pictures in that kind of situation? A. No, sir, it is not.

Q. And you gave as examples Buffalo and Salt Lake City. Would Oklahoma be another example? A. Yes, that is a very curious example. We played our product first-run in Oklahoma City and in several other cities with Joe Cooper, a Paramount affiliate, and we were definitely dissatisfied and unhappy with the revenue and with the terms that Joe Cooper, in our opinion, furnished our product, and we went to his opposition, Louis Dent, an independent. That occurred about five years ago. We placed our product first-run Oklahoma City with Dent and have been playing those pictures ever since with Dent, but recently a peculiar thing has arisen. The business in Oklahoma City has boomed and pictures that formerly played three or four years ago for one week in Oklahoma City now play two weeks, so that I now find myself unable to get all the playing time from Dent's theatre. There again there are only 52 weeks in the year and he has other commitments, and I cannot get all the playing time I am entitled to, and I recently took the first two blocks of this current season's product and I went back to Cooper and I sold them to Cooper, but I will continue to sell my other blocks to Dent because Dent cannot absorb, in my opinion, all of my pictures but can absorb a large portion of them. I like Dent and I prefer Dent as a customer, but if he cannot use them all, I will then sell what is left to Cooper.

Q. Mr. Mochrie, is there any agreement between RKO and any other defendant in this case whereby RKO agrees that it will continue to service its present customers and will not entertain bids from others or seek other outlets? A. No, sir, there is not.

(2337)

Q. I believe you have testified that during the 1943-44 season RKO distributed pictures produced by independent producers? A. Yes, sir, it did.

Q. Who were the most important producers whose product was distributed by RKO during the 1943-44 season? A. Samuel Goldwyn and Walt Disney.

Q. Did each of these producers have the right to designate the theatres in which those pictures should be shown? A. No—Samuel Goldwyn did—Disney did not.

Q. Did each of those producers have the right to refuse to approve any license contract negotiated by you? A. Yes, they both did.

Q. During that season approximately how many contracts involving the product of these producers were made by you? A. I would say somewheres from 10 to 13 thousand contracts a picture.

Q. Can you tell us in how many instances they have instructed you to sell an account different from the account to which RKO was then regularly selling its own pictures? A. In the case of Goldwyn, under one per cent—somewheres between half of one per cent and one per cent. In the case of Disney, very much less, a very small fraction of one per cent.

Q. Speaking for RKO, is an extended run something different from the first-run? A. In my opinion, it is not. I think that——

Q. Will you explain that, please? A. ——the term "extended run" is misused, and I do not think there is such a thing as an extended run. I play my pictures in a given city first-run. Now, I play that picture and the exhibitor shows that picture for as long a period of time as the showing is profitable to him. If it be a very successful picture, that the public wants to see in large numbers, it may run four weeks or five weeks or six weeks. If it be a less successful picture, it will run one week and perhaps not even run one week, perhaps run a half a week. Some licenses I make with a theatre I make for one week, but the theatre grosses so much in that one week that I require of him—request of him, rather, and he usually agrees, to play it two weeks, and if it grosses very fine business the next week, he will play it three weeks, but in my opinion I have only a first-run. The first-run may be of a duration for as little as two or three days or it may be of duration for as much as five or six weeks, and the thing that determines that is entirely the box office quality of the picture. The man runs the picture as long as he can run it successfully and at a profit and I want him to run it as long as he can because the longer he runs it, the more rental I get.

Q. Mr. Mochrie, does the fact that the theatre is affiliated or independent have anything to do with the length of time that RKO will run a picture? A. No, it does not. I fight with them all to run them as long as I can get them to run them.

Q. What factors does RKO take into consideration in determining the length of clearance between theatres? A. It takes into consideration an amount of clearance between theatres in a city which in its opinion, and subject to a clearance condition that has built itself up in that city over a period of time, which in its opinion will yield it the largest revenue, taking all the theatres into account as a whole.

Q. Does the fact that a theatre is operated or controlled by an integrated company constitute any factor at all in deciding the clearance to be granted to it? A. No, sir.

Q. When you negotiate a license as between existing theatres, is there frequent occasion to give consideration to the existing clearance between them? A. Yes, sir, of course.

Q. Do you consider it anew each time that you make such license agreements? A. No, I do not. You see, the factors which determined originally, at some past time, the clearance as between two theatres, that is, the factors of size and location, and transit facilities between the theatres, the extent to which one theatre competes with another, the prices they charge, rentals they pay, all those factors originally, at some time past, determines the clearance between those two theatres and usually those factors remain stable from year to year.

Q. Then they do not come up even when you negotiate? A. No, sir, they do not. It is only when something is seriously deranged in those factors that the matter of clearance comes up again.

Judge Bright: Do you have any instances in your practice of clearances different in any particular city from those granted by your co-defendants in this case?

The Witness: Yes, we have. It isn't general or frequent but there are instances, yes.

Judge Bright: Can you think of one?

The Witness: I cannot out of my memory but, given time to look it up, I am sure I can find several.

(2341)

Q. Would Boston refresh your recollection any? A. Boston?

Q. Yes. A. No.

Q. In establishing or changing a clearance between one theatre and another, do you discuss with other distributors the clearance that they are granting? A. No, I do not.

By Judge Bright:

Q. Do you know what they are granting? A. I usually know, but I do not discuss that with other distributors. I am not interested in them.

Q. Do you discuss it with the customer? A. Very much so. The first thing he tells me is, "I want to buy your pictures on such-and-such clearance, because that is the clearance I get from this fellow, that company and the other company." If in my opinion I want different clearance from that, I have a considerable "rassle" with that man, if he gets the bulk of his product on one set of clearance, in persuading him to change. If I am determined enough that there should be a difference in clearance, I usually have to pay a penalty in getting lesser rentals than I could get for the normal clearance, or perhaps not selling him at all.

Q. Have you any specific instances of that? A. I think I could find them. I can't quote them out of my mind, sir. I know in my experience things of that nature have come up. (2342)

By Judge Goddard:

Q. Where you extend the first-run, doesn't the subsequent run holder object? A. When I extend?

Q. The first-run, yes. A. No. The subsequent run does not know how long a picture will run first-run. These days it never knows. A theatre may play one picture that is unsuccessful for a week, and Going My Way is the next picture, and that may run six weeks; and my good picture may follow Going My Way and it may run three weeks. The theatre runs that picture as long as it is profitable to him, and I wish him to run it as long as it is profitable to him, because the longer he runs it the more revenue I get. Now the subsequent run theatre is fully aware of that. He knows that that is practiced at all times; that is the common practice of the theatres.

There are very few theatres today left in this country that do not vary the length of the first-run. I mean in cities of any size. There are extremely few theatres that do not vary the length of the first-run; and I would have difficulty, I think, in recalling any that play a picture, one picture after another for the same length of time. Your big Music Hall here in New York is evidence of that. It may play a good picture for ten weeks and a poor picture for two weeks. The Paramount theatre does the same. Our own Palace the atre. Sometimes I have had to take a picture out of the Palace theatre with only one week's showing, and I have lost money on it, but it has been an unsuccessful picture, no one has gone in the theatre, and it is taken off.

Q. Doesn't a subsequent run theatre have to know when it is going to get the picture? A. It knows it will get it so many days after the termination of the first-run, and that termination may occur seven days after it commences its engagement, or it may occur seven weeks after it commences its engagement. That is what I meant before, sir, when I said I do not think there is such a thing as an extended run. There is a first-run of varying duration of engagement.

Q. So the second-run man does not know when he will get the picture; is that right? A. He knows very well when he will get the picture—when it stops playing first-run.

Q. But he does not know the date? A. Surely, sir. As soon as the picture ceases its first-run——

Q. He knows there will be an interval of seven or fourteen days, whatever it is, but he does not know the date he will get the picture? A. At what time doesn't he know it?

Judge Bright: When he buys it.

The Witness: Oh, no.

Q. Is that right? A. Sometimes yes, and sometimes no.
(2344)
It depends, sir, on whether the license for the picture for the subsequent run is made prior to the first-run engagement or subsequent to the first-run engagement.

Q. What is the fact? Don't you usually make your subsequent run contracts before you make your first-run, or about that time? A. I would say, sir, there is no general pattern. Keep in mind that I do not have any contracts until I trade-screen pictures, and immediately after trade-screening I start releasing the picture; and I have to go out and in a very short period of time sell ten or eleven or thirteen or fourteen thousand contracts.

Q. I had the impression that when a distributor had a picture ready, he made the contracts with the first-run, the second run and subsequent runs all about the same time; isn't that so? A. No, sir; because my salesmen have so many accounts to cover, that sometimes they will see a man before the first-run picture plays and license the picture to him; and sometimes they won't see him until the first-run is playing, and license the picture.

Q. Generally, what is the practice? A. I would say, sir, there is no pattern. Under consent decree selling, sir, you are selling from hand to mouth. You are selling eleven or twelve or fourteen thousand theatres in a very short period of time after the picture has started its play in this country. It is not like the old selling where you sold in September for a whole season's product and those pictures came out during the ensuing twelve months.

I have just started selling Spanish Main across the country, and I have to sell fourteen thousand contracts on that picture, and it has already started playing across the country, so you can appreciate that I sell in a very hurried manner; and whether that subsequent run is sold before the playing, during the playing or after the playing, I can assure you there is no pattern in the thing.

By Mr. Leisure:

Q. Mr. Mochrie, if I caught Judge Goddard's question, he would like to know whether in the majority of cases you make your contract with the subsequent run while the first-run is being shown? A. Mr. Leisure, I can't answer that. Sometimes before, sometimes during, and sometimes immediately following.

By Judge Bright:

Q. Who is the one that determines whether or not there shall be what you say is not an extended run or a continuation of the original engagement? A. I negotiate that with the exhibitor. When I say "I", I mean my representative or myself negotiates that with the exhibitor while the first-run picture is playing. In some instances it is provided in the contract by what is called a holdover figure. That is, the license agreement with the first-run will say that if the picture normally opens on a Thursday, if the gross receipts for the first Thursday, Friday and Saturday reach such and such a figure, that picture shall play for a second week and weeks thereafter provided the gross receipts for the first three days of each week reach such and such a level. That is a mark as to how many people are coming in to see the picture, how successful the picture is. And then I watch those grosses myself very carefully, or my men watch those grosses, because at all times I wish that theatre to show the picture for as long a time as possible; and if that picture—I recollect in Detroit where the same Spanish Main I mentioned opened last Friday. It did a very large business, and that particular license agreement had a holdover figure, if it grosses $18,000 on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the picture shall play for a second week; and if it does $18,000 the second Friday, Saturday and Sunday, it shall play for a third week. Sometimes you don't have those agreements in the license contract, but, nevertheless, I know from experience what a very large gross is, and so does the exhibitor, and I phone him or contact him, however possible, and ask him to show that picture an additional week, because it is doing such a fine business, why should he take the picture off. It would be silly. He would be wasting the picture; he would be wasting good entertainment. If there are a large number of customers who wish to continue paying 75 cents, or whatever it is he charges in his theatre, to see the picture, why take the picture off? I think he would be very silly, very foolish.

(2346)

Q. Who says whether he will or not? A. You negotiate with him. Sometimes the contract specifies it, as I have said——

Judge Hand: We are not talking about whether it would be an advantage. Judge Goddard is bothered by this: if they have no definite date, no day in a month for which that picture is ready for a subsequent run, how can any of these theatres that have arrangements for subsequent run, and are not first-run theatres, count on playing any picture? How can they tell when it will be released?

The Witness: I will endeavor to answer that—— Judge Hand: Is it because they have so many options, so to speak, that if they can't play A today, they may fill it in with B, C, D, E or F?

The Witness: Usually. Take New York, for instance, where there are eight or ten or twelve—I don't know exactly how many—first-runs. There are always pictures terminating the first-run in New York and becoming available to the subsequent runs, or any other city. I just mentioned Detroit. Now in Detroit I think there are five first-run theatres, and this week
maybe two of those theatres will cease playing a picture, and next week one theatre, and the following week two more; but there are always theatres in the cities ceasing to play a picture first-run, and that becomes then available thirty days later, or whatever the clearance is, to the subsequent run.

Judge Hand: So they cannot tell with any certainty about any given picture any length of time ahead?

The Witness: No, sir, not on a given picture, but they can tell with certainty that some picture will become available.

By Mr. Leisure:

Q. Following up Judge Goddard's question, by and large, the better the first-run or the extended runs, the more subsequent run playing time that you have, isn't that true? A. Would you repeat that, please?

Q. In other words, the better the first-run, the better the subsequent run? A. The better engagement the first-run, the more successful will be the subsequent run?

Q. Yes. A. That is indeed true. It is my experience that the longer a picture shows first-run, the more that picture grosses when it reaches the subsequent run theatres.

Q. And following up Judge Bright's question a moment ago, as a distributor are you generally familiar with the clearance granted by other distributors as between given (2349) theatres? A. As a distributor, am I generally familiar with the clearance that that theatre grants other distributors, or has arranged with other distributors? Yes, of course I am.

Q. And did you make clear just why you are? A. I think Judge Bright asked me that.

Judge Bright: Yes, he told me.

Q. Then on that same subject, does RKO have any policy of adopting the same clearance as those granted by other distributors? A. It may adopt the same policy or it may not adopt the same policy. We choose to do what is beneficial to ourselves.

Q. You have no agreements or understandings that you will adopt the same clearance? A. Oh, no, of course not.

Q. Could you explain to the Court why it is that in some situations the clearance granted by RKO to a prior run theatre is the same as the clearance granted by one or more other distributors serving the same theatre? A. Well, it occurs for the same reason we have just discussed. The clearance has been an outgrowth in time between those two theatres, and the exhibitor buys other products on such and such a clearance basis, and offers me such and such a clearance basis.

Q. Now, Mr. Mochrie, I wish to direct your attention to the subject of percentage contracts: RKO Radio Pictures (2350) licenses pictures under so-called percentage licenses, and also under flat rentals, does it not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does RKO in using percentage licenses distinguish between so-called affiliated theatres and independent theatres? A. No, sir.

Q. Do these percentage licenses give RKO a share in the profits of a theatre so licensed? A. No, sir.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I submit that the licenses themselves are the best evidence. In this sort of inquiry here he is undertaking to give the contents of some unspecified contract.

Judge Hand: It is allowed. Go on.

A. (Continuing) I said, Mr. Leisure, no. There may be one or two exceptions from that, but the answer is no.

Q. What are those exceptions? A. The only instances that I can recollect where we license a theatre based upon operating cost to the theatre is two Broadway theatres first-run, Harry Brandt's Globe theatre and the Capital theatre. I am not certain—I don't recollect certainly that the license was consummated with the Capital theatre, but I was prepared to negotiate with them on a basis that first moneys paid all theatre expenses and advertising expenses, and then the moneys that came in thereafter would be divided between the exhibitor and myself. I did consummate a deal like that with Harry Brandt for his Globe theatre. But with those two exceptions I can't recall where we have any profit licenses or licenses based on exhibitors' contracts.

Q. Is Harry Brandt an independent or an affiliated theatre operator? A. He is an independent. The Capital is a Loew theatre.

Q. And you are only speaking there: in describing that, of one deal and not of the regular course of business? A. No, I am describing one deal or possibly two pictures with Brandt, I don't recollect.

Q. Now, referring to the instances you just mentioned, Mr. Mochrie, did you in making these contracts, differentiate between theatres operated or controlled by integrated companies or other theatres? A No,——

Judge Bright: Why did you make that particular contract with him then?

The Witness: With Brandt?

Judge Bright: Yes.

(2352)

The Witness: I thought that that method would be the best method to give me the most revenue for that particular picture. The other forms of contract that we described, or that we discussed, rather, in my estimate would not have given me as much revenue. It was a matter of trading and negotiation, and I finally arrived on that in my belief that that way for the picture I was selling him I would get the most rental. He is a very hard trader, and I was trading with him as hard as I could.

By Mr. Leisure:

Q. Does the quality of the picture have anything to do with whether it is licensed percentage or flat? A. Yes, it has a great deal to do with it.

Q. Will you explain that? A. You see, as a general policy I endeavor to sell as many of my pictures on a percentage basis to as many exhibitors as I can. Now, many exhibitors desire to buy the pictures on a flat rental basis, because in their opinion they would pay less in terms for the picture if bought flat than they would pay if bought percentage. So that if I have a successful, desirable picture, I have more chances of securing from this exhibitor a percentage contract than if I have a less successful picture, he opposing the idea of paying percentage at all.

Q. Now, some percentage deals provide that RKO will (2353) get a certain percentage up to a certain amount and thereafter a different percentage, do they not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you explain that a little more fully, please, sir? A. Yes. If I negotiate, for example, with an exhibitor on the basis of 35 per cent terms, and if I come to him with a picture which in my opinion is much better than the normal A picture, I will say to him, "I believe this picture will gross materially in excess of what your theatre is normally accustomed to gross, and for the amount in excess of what it is normally accustomed to gross your theatre has made very little contribution, and my picture has made the major contribution; that is, it is the quality of my picture that is responsible for that unusually high gross." And so I say to him, "There is a figure at which I should no longer continue to receive 35 per cent but should receive 50 per cent or 65 per cent or perhaps even 70 per cent."

Q. And is this so-called splitting figure in any respect based on the theatre's overhead or operating cost? A. No; it is a negotiated figure.

Mr. Leisure: I would like to offer, if the Court please, at this time in its present form, RKO's license agreement. May I have it marked, please, for identification?

(2354)

(Marked Defendant RKO's Exhibit RKO-10 identification.)

Mr. Leisure: I offer it in evidence.

Mr. Wright: No objection.

(Defendant RKO's Exhibit RKO-10 for identification received in evidence.)

Judge Bright: Does that differ in any respect from the sample copies which are in the Government's appendix?

Mr. Leisure: It is the latest form that we have, your Honor.

Judge Bright: You did not quite answer the question.

Mr. Leisure: Whether it varies from the one that is there, I am not really familiar.

Q. I notice that your present form of license provides, Mr. Mochrie: "If the operating expenses of a theatre is an element in computing the amounts payable to the distributor, the distributor shall have the right to examine such books and records relating to such expenses."

That is in paragraph 2 on the back page.

In how many of your licenses are the operating expenses of the theatre an element of computing the amount payable to RKO? A. I can't think of any with the possible exception of one or two theatres where our pictures are shown in conjunction with vaudeville and where the terms of the license agreement involve the cost of that vaudeville. In that case I want to be certain of the actual cost of the vaudeville. Other than that I can't think of any instances.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I do not think a question like that calls for what he can think of. There is available primary evidence as to what contracts had such terms and what did not; and if this is supposed to be competent proof at all, I would think that that would be the only way it could be made, by the production of at least an analysis of those contracts.

Judge Hand: Have you got such contracts in the case that differ from this?

Mr. Wright: Well, if the Court please, we offered certain contracts between RKO and the defendants which called for percentages and also provide, I believe, certain operating expense deductions. I am not prepared to say just which I think have these figures and which do not; but, in any event, the number of contracts which have those provisions is a matter that is susceptible to mathematical determination by someone in this witness's organization. If they want to examine the contracts and give the result of the examination, that is one thing. But to have the witness just sit here and say what he thinks generally about the thing, I do not see how this is competent.

Judge Hand: What about this, Mr. Leisure?

Mr. Leisure: If your Honor please, there are some 100,000 contracts, and I have not asked him about the specific contracts. I have asked him about anything unusual, and it seems to me the witness can testify to that. Now, if there is any question whatever about it we will make the contracts all available to Mr. Wright.

Judge Hand: I wonder if any of you know whether it adds anything to what is already in the case, because I would rather have you know it than to find it out myself. In other words, I am not interested in varieties of exhibits as an original proposition. You have probably gathered that.

Mr. Leisure: We have offered this as the present form of contract that is being used, your Honor, and I only wanted to call attention to this one provision in it. I will be glad to withdraw it——

Judge Bright: Well, as we are interested in knowing what difference there is, if any.

Mr. Leisure: I know of no difference, your Honor.

Judge Bright: Do you know, Mr. Witness, of any difference in this contract with the one before, this license agreement?

The Witness: No sir, but I would like to add, if I could, to my previous answer; if I qualified my answer I qualified it because, as Mr. Leisure said, we write 100,000 contracts a year, and I cannot swear that every one of those 100,000 contracts is in such and such a manner. But to the very best of my belief, and certainly my policy and my knowledge as general sales manager, we have not any contracts based on operating expenses.

Mr. Davis: May we have the original question that started all this?

(Question referred to read as follows:

"Q. I notice that your present form of license provides, Mr. Mochrie: 'If the operating expenses of a theatre is an element in computing the amounts payable to the distributor, the distributor shall have the right to examine such books and records relating to such expenses.'

"That is in paragraph 2 on the back page.

"In how many of your licenses are the operating expenses of the theatre an element of computing the amount payable to RKO?")

Mr. Wright: I submit, if your Honor please, that question can only be properly answered by someone who has examined the contracts they have made and made a tabulation to show how many there are.

Judge Hand: I think you are right.

Mr. Leisure: If your Honor pleases, I am not asking about any particular contracts; I am asking about a practice that he is familiar with, and he would know if there were any unusual circumstances in which this practice varied; and I do not think it is necessary to burden this Court. Perhaps we have overburdened it with the one contract. To bring 100,000 contracts into this courtroom——

(2358)

Judge Hand: Well, go on. Do you really want to put this thing in or not?

Mr. Leisure: I would like to have it in, if the Court please.

Judge Hand: Well, I have no clear way of knowing why, but I do not know that it does any harm.

Mr. Leisure: I only attempted to show that we used in very limited cases, this audit right, and having it here in this place, it may be of convenience to the Court.

By Mr. Leisure:

Q. So much for percentage licenses, Mr. Mochrie. When do you use a flat rental for RKO pictures? A. When I can't sell percentage.

Q. And from the standpoint of your company, is a flat rental deal more or less desirable than a percentage deal? A. It is less desirable.

Q. Why? A. First of all—let me express it this way: whether the man pays me a flat rental or whether he pays me a percentage, he, in effect, is paying me some percentage (2359) of the gross receipts of the engagement. If he pays me $50, $50 will represent some percentage of the gross receipts of the engagement. The reason why he does not wish to pay a percentage, such as 35 or 30 or 40 per cent, is that he feels that in paying me a flat rental he can pay me a lesser percentage than 35 or 30 or 40 per cent——

Mr. Wright: If the Court please——

Mr. Leisure: Just a moment.

Mr. Wright: The witness has just undertaken to state the reason why an exhibitor will not do something. He is not competent to say what reason is in the exhibitor's mind when he refuses to do anything or agrees to do anything.

Mr. Leisure: I think the witness is only stating a negotiation in which he participates.

Judge Hand: Go ahead. We will allow it. But this is getting very long. I wish you would close it up.

Mr. Leisure: We will go right along, your Honor.

The Witness: I had not finished the answer.

Mr. Leisure: Sir?

The Witness: I had not finished the answer.

A. (Continued) Now, that is the first reason I do not like flat rental contracts; and the second reason I do not like flat rental contracts is that in many instances I may lose, but in no instances can I gain. If the picture involved grosses less money than anticipated, many exhibitors will come to me and ask for a reduction in the flat rental. But if the picture grosses much more than was anticipated, no exhibitor will come to me and offer me an increase in the flat rental. So there is nothing to gain and I have everything to lose.

(2360)

Q. I assume all your pictures which you license are copyrighted? A. Yes, sir.

Q. The contract form used by RKO states:

> "If no admission price is written into the contract, the exhibitor shall charge not less than 10 cents in the afternoons and 15 cents in the evenings."

—Why is that provision printed in your license agreement? A. Because in our opinion to sell our pictures to the public for lesser admission prices than those admission prices would debase motion picture entertainment and would ultimately harm the exhibitor and harm us.

Q. Do most theatres charge an admission price in excess of 10 cents in the afternoons and 15 cents in the evenings? A. Yes, they do.

Q. In certain instances minimum prices are inserted in your contracts in a space provided for that purpose, are they not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. For what purpose is such a minimum price inserted? A. To maintain our revenue.

Q. Now, in determining whether you will insert a minimum admission price in your contract, do you take into consideration whether or not the theatre is an affiliated theatre? A. No, sir, I do not.
(2361)

Q. And in licensing your pictures for exhibition in theatres affiliated with any defendant, do you agree in the contract, or agree orally, upon the admission price to be charged by subsequent-run theatres? A. No, sir, I do not——

Mr. Wright: The contract speaks for itself, if the Court please.

Judge Hand: Overruled. I think everybody has testified to this.

(2362)

Q. Now, there is a charge of reciprocity dealing between integrated companies in this case, Mr. Mochrie. The other day when Mr. Rathvon was on the stand we offered a chart in evidence purporting to show the lack of reciprocity, Exhibit 9. Judge Goddard pointed out that there did not appear to be much connection between the blue standard representing RKO and the red standard representing the other companies. Do you recall that? A. I have some remembrance of it.

Q. Now, that chart covered only one season. Let me ask you the general question: Have you ever licensed RKO pictures to theatres affiliated with an integrated company on the condition or understanding that that company license its pictures to any RKO theatres? A. Oh, no.

Q. Or on the condition or understanding that that company extend particular terms to any RKO theatre? A. No, sir.

Q. Does the fact that an integrated company licenses its pictures to any of the RKO theatres in any way affect your readiness to license your pictures to theatres affiliated with such an integrated company? A. No, sir.

Q. Or have any bearing on the terms which you will extend to theatres affiliated with such integrated company? A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Mochrie, do you keep yourself advised of the (2363)
terms upon which Warner Bros., for example, is licensing its pictures to the various RKO theatres? A. I do not.

Q. Have you ever informed yourself as to the terms that RKO theatres have been paying to Warner Bros., for example, for its pictures? A. I have not.

Q. Could you obtain that information from the RKO theatre department if you wished it? A. I don't know. If I pressed hard enough I suppose that I could, but I am not interested in it. I have got my pictures to sell, and they have got their troubles, and what they pay for Warners', I don't care.

Q. But you say you never have obtained that? A. No, sir, I have not.

Q. And would the same apply to the terms that RKO theatres are paying to the various other integrated companies? A. Apply to the terms they pay for anything or everything. That is their problem, not mine.

Q. Has any representative of the RKO theatre department at any time asked you to license RKO pictures or to extend particular terms on RKO pictures to theatres operated or controlled by another integrated defendant? A. No, sir.

Q. The other day here in court Mr. Wright asked a witness for instances where the distributor had sold its first-run to independent theatres, and that theatre took clearance over affiliated houses that played the film on subsequent runs. Does RKO sell any independent first-run theatres that take such clearance over second-run affiliated theatres? A. Many.
(2364)

Q. Can you give us any example? A. Yes, I can. I can give the example of Buffalo, New York, where we play first-run in the independent Twentieth Century Theatre, and our pictures play subsequent-run in the Shea theatres. I am not sure whether those are Loew theatres or Paramount theatres. Loew's do the buying.

I can give Oklahoma City as an instance that I mentioned before, where we sell our product first-run to Louis Dent, an independent, and the Cooper subsequent-run theatres, a Paramount affiliate, show our pictures.

I can give you Long Beach, California, as an example where we show our pictures first-run to the independent Milton Arthur, and the Fox subsequent-run theatres show the same pictures after that first-run.

Q. That would be, I think, enough examples, Mr. Mochrie. A. It occurs in many, many instances.

Q. Yes. In the course of the same examination Mr. Wright inquired whether there were any independent first-run accounts where the independent exhibitor operated two or more theatres and on occasion moved a film over from one to the other on a continued first-run. Does RKO license any independent first-run accounts that have theatres in which they move over the better pictures for extended first-runs? A. It does.

Q. Can you give us any example on that? A. Yes. In Portland, Maine, Ralph Snyder, an independent, plays our pictures, and the better pictures he plays first-run at the Strand Theatre with a move-over to the Empire. Mullins & Pinanski, a Paramount affiliate, play the same pictures subsequent-run in Portland.

In Long Beach, California, that I just mentioned, Milton Arthur on a good picture will play it day and date in two theatres, and move it over to a third theatre first-run, and then Fox subsequent-run theatres play the picture.

Q. That will be enough examples, Mr. Mochrie. Are you familiar with the features distributed by RKO during the 1941-42 season? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the play-off of the picture Suspicion typical of the results of your highest grossing pictures of that season? A. I would say yes.

Mr. Wright: What season is this?

Mr. Leisure: 1941-42 season.

Q. Was the play-off of Mexican Spitfire's Baby typical of the results of your lower grossing pictures of that season? A. Yes, sir.

(2366)

Q. And would the play-off records of these pictures be typical of the play-off of pictures of equivalent box office quality today? A. I think so, yes.

Q. Now, one more question, Mr. Mochrie, and I shall be through: You have been associated with distributors which have theatres affiliated with them and with distributors that have no theatres, have you not? A. I have.

Q. Based on your own experience, will you tell the Court what in your opinion would be the effect on RKO as a distributor if the company were to cease to operate theatres of its own? A. Yes. I think that if we ceased to operate theatres of our own, distribution would undoubtedly and surely and materially suffer. I have worked for distributors who had no theatres, and I have worked for distributors who had theatres affiliated with them, and I am very certain that the fact that RKO has first-run theatres scattered in these large cities across the country is of definite and material value to me as a distributor and enables me to secure larger revenue than I would otherwise.

Mr. Leisure: Judge Bright, over the noon hour I should like the privilege of checking this contract, and if I find it is similar to the one in evidence, I should like the opportunity to withdraw it, if I may.

Judge Bright: Surely.

Mr. Leisure: Are there any other questions?

Mr. Seymour: I have a couple.

(2367)

Q. Mr. Mochrie, does RKO license pictures to some of the theatre operating companies in which Paramount is interested? A. Yes.

Q. Where it does so license its pictures, do you know where the negotiations for the license are conducted? A. I do.

Q. Where are they conducted? A. They are conducted in the city in which that particular circuit has its offices.

Q. That is, they are conducted in the city where the head office of the theatre operating company is? A. That is correct.

Q. And for example, for United Artists, Detroit, that is Detroit? A. Conducted in Detroit; for Willoughby, it is conducted in Atlanta; for O'Donnell, it is conducted in Dallas, and so on.

Q. Is it conducted by the manager or the operator of that particular company on behalf of that company? A. The manager and/or his chief buyer—his buyer, his booker.

Q. Do you know where the payments for license fees by those companies are made? A. I do.

Q. Are they made by the theatre operating company? A. They are.

Q. That is, each theatre operating company pays for the pictures, the RKO pictures it licenses, is that correct? A. It does.

Q. Are those payments made by the operating companies from their offices? A. They are made from their offices to our particular exchange that serves that particular company.

Q. Do officers or employees of Paramount participate in any way in negotiations between RKO and those theatre operating companies? A. No, sir.

Q. For licensing of RKO pictures? A. No, sir.

By Mr. Proskauer:

Q. You describe your distributing organization, that you operated at an expense, you said, of approximately seven million dollars a year? A. Yes.

Q. Do the other chief defendants here all maintain similar kinds of distributing organizations? A. Yes, they all have exchanges and managers and so on.

Q. And they have salesmen and checkers and all the same kind of machinery that you described? A. Yes.

Q. Why do you have to maintain a large organization like that to sell pictures? A. Because I sell eleven thousand accounts and I have to have a wide-flung organization to sell eleven thousand accounts.

Q. Are the other defendants also trying to sell those eleven thousand accounts? A. Very much.

Q. And you are in absolute, keen, continuous competition all the time to sell those pictures? A. Yes.

(2369)

Q. And it is for that reason that you spend seven million dollars a year to maintain an organization to sell pictures competitively? A. Yes. Can't be done cheaply.

By Mr. Raftery:

Q. You know Abe Montague, don't you, Mr. Mochrie? A. I do.

Q. You have known him a good many years. A. I do.

Q. Do you consider him an able distributor of pictures? A. I think he is a very fine man and a very able distributor.

Q. Who do you think is the best man to decide the policy of Columbia as to the manner and method of selling? A. Of the actual selling?

Q. Yes. A. I would certainly say Abe.

Q. And the same applies to Bill Scully of Universal? A. I would say so.

Q. So your opinions as to the value of trade showing and that type of selling are expressed for RKO and RKO only, isn't that correct? A. That is correct.

Mr. Leisure: Any other questions? (No response.) Your witness, Mr. Wright.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, there are a number of documents I will have to examine before I complete my cross-examination. If we could have a recess now, I think the whole cross-examination would be shortened.

(2369-A)

Judge Hand: All right. We will adjourn now until ten minutes before two.

(Recess until 1:50 p.m.)

(2370)

AFTERNOON SESSION

Judge Hand: The clerk says there was an exhibit marked 9 for Columbia and it should be 9-A. Is that your understanding?

Mr. Frohlich: Yes.

Judge Hand: Mark it 9-A.

Mr. Leisure: Judge Bright, on this contract, I have checked it over the noon hour and I find that this contract in July of 1945 was streamlined and revised, and the reason that we wanted to offer it at this time was that we thought the questions were important and, instead of having the questions refer to some prior contract, we felt they should refer to the contract which we actually use. However, I find that the changes in the streamlining did not affect the materiality of the contract for the purposes of this case, and since the record is rather large, I would like to withdraw it, with the Court's permission. The reasons we put it in are the reasons I have explained.

Judge Goddard: That is 10, isn't it?

Judge Bright: Yes.

Mr. Leisure: Your witness, Mr. Wright.

ROBERT MOCHRIE, resumed the stand.

Cross Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. Mr. Mochrie, the negotiations with the independent exhibitors are generally carried on, are they not, by the salesmen and the branch managers? A. Depends on who it is. Some I carry on, some the division, the district manager, branch manager and the salesmen.
(2371)

Q. I said generally. A. The small exhibitors, yes.

Q. In those negotiations at any time the salesman or the branch manager always has authority to refuse to take an application, isn't that right? A. Generally, yes.

Q. That is true all the way up the line until a proposed deal gets to you, isn't that right? It may be rejected at any stage but it may only be approved in New York, isn't that right? A. Yes, but if I may, let me explain the answer: Inasmuch as you said up the line. The contract applications go from the branch direct to the home office. They don't go through the district manager.

Q. I see. In this negotiating that goes on between your salesmen or branch managers and the ordinary, independent exhibitor, there is no set price for each picture or set terms that are demanded or received, isn't that right? A. There is not a set price but there is a policy.

Q. Well, the policy I take it is to see that as many of the pictures in the block are sold as is possible, isn't that right, at the best terms that you can get? A. Not quite.

(2372)

Q. Well— A. The policy is, of course, to sell as many in the block as possible but the different pictures in the block have a policy, which I give to the salesmen, or to my people, as to the general classification of that picture.

Q. Let us take the specific situation where, let us say, the exhibitor might indicate to the salesman that he would like to buy two of the pictures and not the other three. Under those circumstances there might very well be a different price on the two that he wanted than if he bought the entire block, isn't that correct? A. I don't think so, no.

Q. Well, do you know? A. Yes, I do.

Q. What is the fact? A. The fact is this, that I have a policy for each picture of the block each time I release a block and the salesman in negotiating with the exhibitor endeavors to sell the exhibitor the five pictures and describes the rental terms he wishes for each picture. If he is unsuccessful in selling the five and, as you mentioned, ends up in selling three, those prices have been described to the exhibitor, and I believe—I don't sit in on all the salesmen's negotiations, but I say to the best of my ability, I believe—those prices are the same whether—per picture—whether he sells the three or the five.

(2373)

Q. Is there anything in your instructions to the salesman which prevents him from pricing the pictures differently depending on the number which are purchased in his negotiations? Is he bound in all circumstances to say, "Now, here is a 35 per cent picture. If you want this alone you can have it for 35 per cent regardless of whether you take any more"? A. I think generally he would sell it that way.

Q. Well, that was not my question as to what you thought he would do. I am asking you what your instructions are. A. I have no instructions one way or the other. I describe a picture as a 35 per cent picture, and if he obtains 35 per cent terms for it we will approve the contract.

Q. As far as any instructions he gets from you, or any binding directions as to what the policy should be, he is perfectly free, is he not, to use such bargaining devices as he can to get that entire block sold, isn't that right? A. Certainly he is free to bargain as best he can; certainly he is free.

Q. In any event, the terms that you come up with on any particular deal that you make, I suppose is dependent ultimately on the bargaining strength of the parties involved, whoever they may be? A. Or the bargaining skill.

(2874)

Q. Yes. Now, I think you gave some direct testimony about not making agreements where you split profits. I will show you this Government's Exhibit 255, an agreement between your company and United Detroit Theatres for first-run exhibition of a picture in the Michigan; and I will ask you to read to the Court there the terms that you see at the top as to how the first-run rental is to be computed. A. It says: "Bride By Mistake, Michigan Theatre 30 per cent of gross receipts to 20,867 and 50 per cent of gross receipts thereafter."

Q. Then there is a further note, isn't there, about reversion? A. I beg pardon?

Q. Isn't there another line there about reversion to 25? A. Yes, sir. "If gross is less than 20,867 terms revert to 25 per cent."

Q. Now, that figure 20,867 is what you refererd to in your direct examination as a splitting figure, isn't it? A. It is indeed.

Q. Which you said is a matter of negotiation? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, just how is that splitting figure negotiated? A. I will tell you, because when I first occupied my job I negotiated several pictures with Earl Hudson who operates the Michigan Theatre, and so I know. I asked him for 35 per cent terms and was unable to obtain them, and he would not give me more than 30 per cent, but he said he would give me a split, and he said he would give me a split of 23 or 24 thousand dollars, and I asked for a lower split. I said with my knowledge of the grosses that this theatre has, that is too high a split entirely. However, we bickered around, and he said, "I will give you 20,867." I still wanted a lower one and could not obtain it, and I took the 20,867.

Q. As a matter of fact, that figure 20,867 is a figure at which you and he knew that the theatre there would be unable to earn a certain profit, isn't that correct? A. No, sir.

Q. You say it is not a fact that when you negotiate a split figure you attempt to determine the figure with some relation to what profit the theatre will earn when that gross has been reached? A. My attempt, Mr. Wright, is to get as low a split figure as possible. The theatre's attempt is to get as high a split figure as possible. The theatre man on many occasions says, "I cannot give you such and such a split figure because I do not have much profit. My overhead is too high. I cannot afford to give it to you."

But he says that to me. I do not know anything about the man's overhead; and if you will excuse me for saying so, in most instances I place very little reliance in his statement as to that. He is trading with me to get it high and I am trading to get it low.

Q. Well, in the course of your experience you have made it a point, have you not, to have a pretty accurate idea of how much a theatre has to gross on any business it does in order to make a profit? A. I have no source of information. I do not know how much it costs him to operate his theatre. I guess. I guess in the same sense that I would guess how much this courthouse costs.

Q. You make no effort to determine what the gross figure is which enables him to make a profit when you negotiate a split figure, is that right?

The Witness: Will you please repeat that?

Mr. Wright: Will you read it.

Q. (Read.) A. Of course not. I do not have to worry about that. He will take care of his own profit.

Q. I will show you this Exhibit 258, relating, I believe, to the exhibition of your pictures in some Fox theatres, and ask you to read to the Court the provision in the lefthand column there as to how the rental terms are to be computed.

Mr. Seymour: May we see that, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: When he gets through with it.

A. You mean "20 per cent to 40 per cent plus 50 per cent in excess of 40 per cent sliding scale"?

(2377)

Q. Yes. Now, just how do you go about determining the actual rental under that formula? A. I am not certain but I think the 20 per cent to 40 per cent refers to a sliding scale. That is, if the picture grosses so much it pays 20 per cent. If it grosses more it pays 21 per cent, 22 per cent, and so on up to 40 per cent. And then I think that at the 40 per cent figure, if it grosses in excess of that, we shall receive 50 per cent of the moneys in excess of that figure.

Q. In other words, you have there a whole series of split figures, isn't that correct? A. You have what is commonly termed a sliding scale.

Q. And that sliding scale, I say, is in effect the use of a series of split figures or controlled figures? A. It is a series of figures after each of which the distributor shall receive a higher percentage rate.

Q. Now, is it also your testimony that in negotiating split figures and sliding scale deals of that kind, you make no attempt to determine what the profit of the exhibitor would be at the various sliding scale points? A. I would like to be able to say a plain no to you, Mr. Wright. If you will permit me I will tell you about it. I am somewhat familiar with this because the Fox affiliate or the Fox section here presented us with this type of deal two or three years ago. They stated that they would purchase my pictures on this formula, and although we were reluctant—specifically I was reluctant—to accept it immediately, I studied the formula that they presented me for each of these situations against the gross receipts that my picture had done in the past to determine whether in my opinion this was an advantageous formula. When I found that it was, and after I endeavored as a trader to obtain lower figures but was unsuccessful, I then said I would go ahead on that deal.

Judge Bright: Let me see that, will you, please.

The Witness: Yes, sir (handing).

Q. Then in each case you, of course, use whatever past experience your company has as to the expenses and profit possibilities of the theatre in negotiating the deals, isn't that right? A. I have no past experience as to expenses. The only past experience I have is with the gross box office receipts of the theatre.

Q. Now, is it your testimony that RKO has never in the past negotiated license deals with theatres of another defendant in this case which were made expressly dependent upon the determination of house expenses? A. I stated, or I intended to state, and so state, that RKO does not negotiate deals in general based upon house expenses of the exhibitor.

Mr. Wright: Now, if you will just listen to the (2379) question and see if you can answer it.

Q. (Read.)

The Witness: I do not recollect that that was my testimony——

Mr. Leisure: I submit the answer is responsive.

The Witness: —it may have been. I do not recollect that that was my testimony.

Q. Well, in any event, where you had negotiated such deals, or if it appears that you had negotiated deals in the past where the house expense has been revealed to you, then you have a pretty definite idea in negotiating any subsequent deal as to at what point the theatre will earn a profit, isn't that right, the gross figure? A. If the exhibitor revealed to me his house expenses I would have his word for it. I cannot recollect any instance where I have audited or caused to be audited his expenses to determine what they actually were.

Q. Well, you don't know, do you, as you sit there the extent to which RKO has in the past made the deals with any of these other defendants which involved a disclosure of house expenses as well as gross receipts? A. I know for the period of my incumbency in the job I now have, yes. I know that they have not.

Q. That is since what date? A. That is since the summer of 1942.

Q. You don't know about the prior deals? A. No, sir.

(2380)

Q. Calling your attention to your testimony about these independent producers you distribute for, which were the ones who have the right of license contract approval? A. In the season of 1943-44, Disney and Goldwyn. Since then we have acquired for distribution the pictures of International, so in the following season all three, Disney, Goldwyn and International.

Q. Perhaps I misunderstood you. I thought you said the picture "Lady Takes a Chance" was an International picture. A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Did you— A. If I did say it, I beg your pardon, I had no intention of saying it.

Q. That was one of your own? A. No, sir, that was an independently-produced picture.

Q. It was an independently-produced picture, but one in which the producer did not have any right of approval or rejection of contracts? A. That is correct.

Q. What were the Goldwyn pictures that you said were played in the Rialto, the independent first-run in Atlanta there, instead of in the Lucas & Jenkins houses, where the rest of the RKO product played? A. Wonder Man, the most recent Goldwyn release; Princess and the Pirate; North Star; Up In Arms; Pride of the Yankees, I believe, and, I think, Ball of Fire, but I am not quite certain—that was released three or four years ago and I do not quite—

(2381)

Q. What was the first one that went in there? That is what I am trying to get at. A. I would say either Ball of Fire or Pride of the Yankees.

Q. That was during what season? A. Pride of the Yankees, I believe, was in the season 1942-43, and I am not sure as to whether Ball of Fire was in that season or the preceding season.

Q. If I understand you correctly as to the relation between Goldwyn and yourself, the decision to play those pictures in the Rialto and not in the houses of the Paramount affiliate was Goldwyn's and not yours, isn't that correct? A. The initiation of playing the pictures in that Rialto Theatre was my own, following Goldwyn's refusal or statement that the revenue he obtained from Lucas & Jenkins was unsatisfactory, and he wished me to find another customer than Lucas & Jenkins. When he stated that he was entirely dissatisfied with Lucas & Jenkins as a customer and wished me to find another customer, I then came up with the Rialto.

Q. The Rialto then played the pictures and paid him for those first-runs much greater rentals than he had ever gotten out of the first-runs in the Paramount affiliated houses, isn't that right? A. It paid him greater rentals. I don't recollect how much greater, but I am certain they were greater.

Q. I understood you said, as to the RKO, the rest of the (2382)

RKO product, you had no negotiations with the operator of the Rialto for first-run on any of those pictures, correct? A. I believe I have had none, but I am not certain whether my district manager has had any or not.

Q. And I think you said on your direct examination that you knew that he did not have enough playing time to give you any more money on any other RKO pictures than you were already getting, isn't that right? A. No. I said that he did not have enough playing time to make room for my pictures.

Q. Do you mean by that make room for all your pictures? A. I testified as to that. To repeat what I——

Q. As a matter of fact, the first-runs of the Paramount affiliate there do not give all your pictures first-run in one of their downtown houses, do they? A. No.

Q. And didn't during that season? A. No, and probably won't next season or any other season, because the first-run Atlanta is single feature, and I have some inexpensive B pictures that I do not believe that that type of theatre can afford to play first-run, and I don't much expect they will play first-run.

Q. Do you want to be understood as saying that you knew without any negotiations with the Rialto that the Rialto could not give you as much first-run playing time as the Paramount affiliates? A. I will go even further. I will say that they cannot give anything compared to the playing time I get from Lucas & Jenkins.

Q. And that is without having discussed with the Rialto people what playing time might be available to you and on what terms? A. Yes, sir, but I would like permission to go further with that answer. I distributed, as I testified this morning, United Artists pictures as Southern district manager and had my headquarters in Atlanta and was—and am very familiar indeed with the Rialto Theatre, and on numerous occasions, as United Artists district manager in Atlanta I tried to place pictures in the Rialto Theatre, screened them for the exhibitor, who is blind, but has a very keen sense of hearing and judges a picture by sound, and have been unsuccessful in selling him the pictures. I am very certain that the Rialto Theatre would not play a minor picture of mine any more than the Music Hall in New York would play a minor picture.

Q. I was not talking about minor pictures. I am talking about your top pictures. A. I have answered——

Q. Suitable for first-run exhibition. A. I have answered the top pictures by saying the Rialto does not have sufficient playing time to accommodate those top pictures.

Q. You determine that by observing the fact that the only first-run product that the Rialto had, in addition to the Goldwyn pictures, is product of Columbia, is that right? (2384)

A. Yes, indeed; and it is perfectly obvious to any picture man or film man that if a Goldwyn picture can run five weeks in the Rialto Theatre and the Rialto Theatre has all of the Columbia product under contract, that that Rialto Theatre has no open time for other pictures.

Q. How many pictures of RKO's, as compared to Columbia for that 1943-44 season, would you say were suitable for first-run exhibition, really top pictures? A. Suitable where?

Q. Well, that represent the first-run exhibition in Atlanta, let us say. A. To answer accurately, I would have to have a list of the pictures of both companies in front of me, but, offhand, for the season 1943-44, and eliminating the Goldwyn pictures, I would state roughly, or feel roughly, that it would be a standoff, that our product had about as much quality pictures in it as Columbia did.

Q. About how many of yours did you get exhibited first-run in Atlanta at the Paramount affiliates there? A. I would have to look up the figure. I can't recollect.

Q. Can you give us any rough idea, five, ten? A. I would have to look it up, but I am sure that it is a reasonable number.

Q. You cannot tell us what it is, whether five, ten, fifteen or twenty? A. No, I cannot. It is one of hundreds of accounts, and I can't remember what happened to my pictures (2385) in the season 1943-44 in all the first-run accounts.

Q. Do you remember whether you sold that first Goldwyn picture that went into the Rialto for subsequent-run to Lucas & Jenkins? A. No, I do not.

Q. You say you don't know whether you did or not? A. I beg your pardon. I know that the course of the Goldwyn pictures in that instance was this: The picture, the first picture, that I sold the Rialto Theatre, first-run Atlanta, I was unable to sell Lucas & Jenkins in any situation, so that would include their subsequent-runs, and it may be the second picture, but I do know that somewheres along the line I sell—now sell Lucas & Jenkins the Goldwyn pictures for their situations with the exception of the Rialto Theatre Atlanta first-run and with the exception of an indendent to whom I sell the Goldwyn pictures in Savannah and in Macon.

Q. That has only been true within the last year, has it not? A. I can't say, Mr. Wright. It wasn't true at the start. It is true now. Somewhere in between it became true.

Q. On this matter of how many times one of your first-run accounts plays a picture before it becomes available to subsequent-runs, I suppose that is almost always determined, is it not, by contract terms? A. Did you say how many times?

Q. Yes, as to the number of times that your prior run exhibitor may show the picture before it becomes available to a subsequent-run competitor, I suppose that is ordinarily a matter which is determined by whatever terms are written into your contract with the first-run exhibitor, isn't that right? A. I believe he shows it only for what I call one showing. He shows it for one first-run showing. He does not bring it back again.

Q. You have heard of situations, have you not, where your first-run account has the privilege of bringing back a picture he plays first-run and then repeating it before it is made available to a subsequent-run? A. I don't want to give incorrect testimony but I do not think I have heard of that, no.

Q. You have never heard of a situation, for example, where your first-run account has played a picture first-run for three days at a 35-cent admission and then brought it back later for a week's run at another theatre at a 15-cent admission? Ever hear of that situation? A. I have not, no. I recall that we have sold some pictures to an independent opposition in the Saenger towns in Mississippi and Louisiana where we wrote contracts with the independent theatre wherein he agreed to play the picture one—the first engagement for so many days, and then he agreed to repeat the picture within a two or three months period, again for so many days. Other than that, I cannot recall selling a picture to a first-run account wherein he had the privilege such as you just described.

Q. In any event, where you do give him the privilege, if the contract does give him the privilege of bringing the picture back and it contains no minimum admission price restrictions, there is, of course, nothing to prevent him from bringing it back and playing it at a longer time at a low admission price, is there?

Mr. Leisure: Just a moment.

A. I say, I don't recall any such contract.

Q. You are quite sure you never had such a situation brought to your attention? A. I would not swear to such a thing. As I said this morning, my company handled too many hundreds of thousands of contracts over a period of years for me to be certain of every one of those contracts, but, to the best of my belief, I cannot recall such a type of contract. I would not write it.

Q. Let me call your attention specifically to a situation in which you were involved, Macon, Georgia. Do you recall that? A. I recall that the Goldwyn pictures were sold in Macon, Georgia.

Q. You recall that Lucas & Jenkins operates the first-run theatres there in Macon? A. Yes, sir, I do.

(2388)

Q. And you recall there was a theatre there named the Bibb Theatre? A. That I am not certain of, but I recall there is an independent exhibitor there.

Q. And you recall that that exhibitor complained to you that he could not find out from you when your pictures were going to be available to him after Lucas & Jenkins got through with them, isn't that right? A. I don't recall that.

Q. Don't you know, as a matter of fact, that he complained specifically to you about the fact that Lucas & Jenkins had taken one of your top pictures and played it first-run for three days and then later brought it back and played it for a week at 15 cents, the same price that he was charging for subsequent-run product? A. No, sir, I do not, but I do have a recollection of an interval in first-run with that account. The account's name is Mrs. Weiss. And I recall selling her a Goldwyn picture first-run Macon, Georgia, and her refusal to play that picture for a reasonable number of subsequent days, stating that she had in the middle of the week either bank night or a stage attraction or something of that nature, and that she did not wish to play the Goldwyn picture with this already profitable change, and I finally agreed with her, that she could play first-run Macon, Georgia, the Goldwyn picture for so many days, then stop playing it and then continue playing it after that interval. That is about all the recollection I have there.

(2389)

Mr. Wright: Mark these with the next plaintiff's numbers.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 388 for identification and 389 for identification.)

Q. I show you this Exhibit 389 for identification and ask you if you recognize that as a letter signed by you, dated August 6, 1940?

Mr. Leisure: Have you a copy of that, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: No, we have not.

A. I do. I don't recollect it. I acknowledge it.

Q. Will you look at this copy marked Exhibit 388 for identification and see if you recognize that as the letter that you replied to by 389? A. I don't recollect the letter; I mean, I am not able to say whether this letter or another letter was received by me. I do acknowledge this letter as having been sent by me.

(2390)

Q. Well, read it and see if it refreshes your recollection as to what was occurring down there at Macon at that time? A. (Reading.) No, sir, I do not.

Mr. Wright: That 388 is a copy and obviously not admissable if the absence of a failure to produce the original on the part of RKO, and not having served them with a notice, I shall not offer it at this time.

Mr. Leisure: You have not offered it yet, have you, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: No. I say I am not offering it because it is plainly a copy. I am asking you to produce the original.

Mr. Leisure: We make no point about the original. May I just ask the witness a question, Judge Hand?

Judge Hand: Yes.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Leisure:

Q. Mr. Mochrie, did you receive this letter? A. I do not recollect having received it.

Mr. Leisure: Could we make a search and get the original if there is one, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Surely.

The Witness: Mr. Leisure, I receive hundreds of letters a week, year in and year out, and I cannot remember receiving it, but the letter sent is obviously my letter.

Mr. Leisure: You see, your Honors, this is not a signed letter. It is a typewritten letter, and I would (2391) just like to make a search for the original.

Mr. Wright: I think we have nothing further with the witness at this time.

Judge Bright: Mr. Mochrie, in this Exhibit 258 to which you have already referred, you give the terms 20 per cent to 40 per cent plus 50 per cent in excess of 40 per cent. Then there are the words "Sliding scale S, B. Min is S. B. or D. B." What does that mean?

The Witness: I noticed that. I do not recollect, your Honor.

Mr. Wright: It is a single bill or double bill.

The Witness: Maybe someone would help me.

Judge Bright: He says single bill or double bill.

Mr. Wright: Is that what it is Mr. Mochrie?

The Witness: That is what it probably is. I am sure that would mean sliding scale, single bill, minimum is—oh—sliding scale, single bill, minimum is single bill or double bill. I think that last line means that we shall not receive less than twenty per cent, whether our picture was played alone or in conjunction with another picture. That is, minimum is single bill or double bill. I have tried to make that as clear as I can.

Mr. Seymour: Have you any further questions? I have a couple.

Mr. Leisure: I have no questions.

(2392)

Recross Examination by Mr. Seymour:

Q. In connection with the questions advanced this morning, Mr. Mochrie, about the exhibition of first-run I should like you to deal with that a little further: Is a first-run extended on all pictures? A. I have tried to make clear that I do not really know what you mean by extending a first-run. Poorer pictures run a short length of time first-run, and better pictures run a longer period of time first-run, because better pictures gross more in the theatres, and hence the theatre, whatever theatre it be, will run it longer because it grosses more money.

Q. So that there are a number of pictures which run a fixed number of days in accordance with the theatre's policy, and then in the run of that picture I suppose the subsequent run exhibitors know when that stops? A. Yes, indeed.

Q. And then there are some very successful pictures that play a more extended first-run, is that right; that is, a longer first-run? A. Will you permit me to say a little on this whole thing?

Q. Yes, indeed. A. Many contracts first-run, whoever the first-run may be, provide for a hold-over figure which I described this morning. That is, if the business for the first several days of, let us say, the week's engagement exceeds a certain amount, the theatre agrees that it shall play for a second week; or if it does that for a second week, the third week. There are not many cities in the United States that run pictures three, four, five or six weeks. There is a limited number of large cities which can do that. But it is customary in those large cities to have such agreements dependent upon the business the picture does.

Now then, the distributor likes that not only for the revenue which he receives through those additional weeks, but because by reason of the playing of additional weeks the picture is very thoroughly advertised in that area, which the subsequent runs benefit by, which they do not pay for but which they benefit by; so that those subsequent runs know that if an excellent picture of mine runs in this large city four or five weeks, they know that that picture will do excellent business for them because of the large extent of the advertising such a picture has received during that period of time.

Q. Now, generally speaking, the subsequent runs in those cities play pictures for a shorter time than the first-runs, isn't that so? A. Oh, in all cities, of course.

Q. But aren't there some pictures of high quality and high box office success which are played longer by second and subsequent runs than their normal pictures? A. Oh, yes; you do not have to go any further than New York. A very fine picture of mine will play RKO subsequent run (2394) theatres for a week, a less fine picture will play five days, and a poor picture will play two days.

Q. How about the runs after the second? A. The same thing applies.

Q. So if the picture is a success, first-run or later run, it will play longer than the average picture? A. The same thing applies more or less to all theatres in the United States, whether they be subsequent run or first run or what not. The bigger the gross by reason of the importance of the picture, the longer the theatre will show that picture.

Q. Now, how does the second run operate, the exhibitor? A. I beg your pardon?

Q. How does the second-run exhibitor ascertain when the picture will be available to his theatre, and when does he ascertain it with reference to the termination of the first-run? A. I will tell you: in any city, numerous pictures from numerous theatres come off of first-run; they complete their first-run. Now in the interval between their completion of the first-run and the start of the subsequent runs, which is not singular but plural, many subsequent runs, in that interval, which is called the clearance interval there is a pool of pictures from which that subsequent run exhibitor can specify which pictures he shall play and when he shall play them.

Q. By a pool, you mean that each exchange of each distributor has some pictures—— A. No, no. I used the pool as —it is a group of pictures.

Q. Mr. Wright uses it invidiously. A. I did not use it in any legal way. I use it as a group of pictures into which he can almost dip his hand and pick out that which will suit him best to run. Now, the size of that group or pool of pictures varies in various cities. For example, here in New York, in our own RKO circuit, sometimes I have to wait for a play date because our RKO theatres have numerous pictures available to them to play, and they choose to play someone else's before mine, and I wait; or they choose to play mine, and the other pictures wait. It is so in all cities.

Q. Does the subsequent run exhibitor receive from the exchange any notice of the availability of these pictures to it? A. Oh, yes. My exchange, of course, sends out availability notices. I do not know—I mean I don't know other exchanges' business, but it is trade practice. I am sure they do the same.

Q. So far as you know, the exchanges of other distributors do the same thing? A. Of course they would.

Q. So the exhibitor has a number of notices of availability on a number of different pictures from different distributors from which to choose? A. That is what I meant when I said he has a pool of pictures from which to choose.

Q. Is a subsequent-run exhibitor, be he second run or later, ever left high and dry—that is, without a picture—as the result of the fact that a prior run plays a picture somewhat longer than is its normal practice? A. Oh, no, because while one prior run is playing a picture longer by reason of its great success, another prior run or several prior runs are throwing off less successful pictures which are becoming available to subsequent run. I never heard of a subsequent run dark house. I never heard of a subsequent run that does not have pictures from which to select.

Q. Normally, when does a subsequent run begin to advertise, by newspaper advertising and display advertising at the theatre, and trailer advertising in the theatre, the fact that a picture is coming to that theatre? A. After the termination of the first-run. You see there is that period of time which is clearance. The fact is, probably, that is one reason for clearance. There is that period of time in which the subsequent run, following the termination of the first-run, advertises the picture as coming to his theatre, he having selected that picture, the particular one, from the group of those available.

Q. And during that period he is able to take whatever steps he wants in order to assure public interest in connection with that picture? A. Yes. And I think that that advertising is one reason he likes to follow a picture that runs a long time. He receives all of that free advertising of the picture itself. It is not advertised as coming to his theatre, but the picture itself is advertised to the people of that community.
(2397)

Q. Just one or two other questions that I neglected to ask before. When RKO licenses pictures to the Butterfield company, with whom does it deal? A. Ed Beatty.

Q. Does RKO ever deal with Publix for pictures with the Publix theatres? A. No. Ed Beatty or his assistant licenses all pictures.

Q. In Detroit? A. I beg pardon?

Q. In Detroit? A. Yes, he has offices in Detroit.

Mr. Seymour: That it all.

By Judge Goddard:

Q. How is that group determined? Is it one of a block of five, or less than five? How does he know what group he is going to get his pictures from? A. I will tell you, sir. It is the pictures which come off of the various competing first-run theatres that have finished their engagements. I would illustrate here in New York. This week in New York City a picture may finish first-run from the Paramount, the Roxy, the Capitol, the Globe, the Rialto, or what not. I do not say they have finished, but I say that whole group of pictures finishes the competing first runs. And then the second run chooses which picture, if it has not already got it under contract, it shall contract for a run. But he has that group of pictures to choose from, not a group from one distributor, but a group from many distributors, and from many first-run theatres. I have tried to make it clear to your Honor. Perhaps my language is not as clear as it should be.

Q. It is not one of the five, not one of the group of five, or what? You say he may select any distributor's pictures. But how do you know he has a contract with another distributor? A. Oh, I don't know he has.

Q. How does he get the pictures if he has no contract? A. Places it under contract.

Q. Makes a new contract at that time? A. Makes a contract for the first time for the picture. Let me illustrate, if I may, sir. Let me illustrate the City of Detroit: the picture may finish this week playing the Michigan theatre first-run. That picture may be my picture, an RKO picture. A picture may finish the same week playing the Fox theatre first-run. That may be a Fox picture. A picture may finish playing the United Artists theatre this week first-run. That may be a Metro picture. A picture may finish playing first-run at the State Lake theatre this week. That may be a Paramount picture. And a picture may finish playing the Downtown theatre first-run, and that may be a Republic picture. Now there are five pictures, sir, that have finished first-run. Now the subsequent run can choose to put under contract whatever of those five pictures he chooses to. He may choose mine and not choose the Metro or the Fox, or he may choose the Fox, because he thinks it is better than mine, and not choose mine. Sometimes I do not obtain from him a second run or a third run because my quality can't compete with the other fellow's, and the same thing happens to the other fellow.

Q. I still do not see by what right he can say "I will take this picture from Paramount" when he is your customer, unless you have an agreement with Paramount, or something of that sort. A. Oh, he is a free agent. He buys whatever picture he chooses to buy, the same as you would buy whatever suit of clothes you choose to buy.

Q. How is he assured he is going to get the picture? A. It is there for him. If he does not use it, who is going to use it?
(2400)

Mr. Seymour: Let me see if I can ask another question that will approach that matter from a little different angle and perhaps bring out what Judge Goddard has asked.

By Mr. Seymour:

Q. The ordinary second or subsequent-run theatre in New York uses approximately how many pictures a year? A. The ordinary second-run theatre in New York?

Q. Second and subsequent-run. A. Well, the ordinary second-run theatre in New York would probably use two pictures a week, being double feature.

Q. That is 104 a year? A. 104 pictures a year.

Q. Those are features? A. Those are feature pictures.

Q. Now, I suppose the number the subsequent-run uses varies. Can you state any average that an average subsequent-run theatre in New York would use? Would it be twice that number? A. Yes, it could be.

Q. There are many subsequent-run theatres in New York which change their programs twice a week? A. Yes.

Q. And sometimes they change them three times a week? A. Yes.

Q. And many that have double features? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if they change their programs twice a week they would require 208 pictures a year? A. They would require four times 52, which is 208.

(2401)

Q. And if they change their programs three times a week they would require over 300? A. 6 times 52, which is 312.

Q. Now, how many pictures does any one distributor,—how many feature pictures does any one distributor make available in the course of a year? A. Well, I make available, as I testified this morning,—last year I made available 22 of my own and eight independents. I made available a total of 30 in a year.

Q. I think there is testimony here that Paramount in the last season made available something like 29 and other distributors make available somewhat similar numbers. A. Yes, they run about that.

Q. And some more? A. From 20 to perhaps 40.

Q. So in order to supply the needs of a second-run exhibitor or a subsequent-run exhibitor in New York, it is necessary for that exhibitor to contract with a number of distributors, is it not? A. Oh yes, of course.

Q. And he could not possibly obtain his supply of product from even any one, two, three or four distributors? A. That applies to the many, or, in fact, most of the subsequent-run theatres of America. They consume, most of those theatres, from a minimum—and there are not so many which use only 104—up to 312, and it might be a higher number. There might be some late runs which change every other day and bring back a lot of reissue pictures mixed in with new pictures.

Q. So that most of the subsequent-run exhibitors contract for the product of a number of distributors? A. Yes.

Q. And are free to make any choice they wish among the pictures made available to them by the procedure you have already mentioned? A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that a subsequent-run exhibitor—with particular reference to Judge Goddard's questions—might at the same time have under contract in order to supply his theatre for a particular week pictures of six different distributors; isn't that so? A. That is correct.

Q. And he might have bought a block of five or licensed a block of five from one distributor and perhaps from another in order to supply his theatre for a particular month? A. Oh, yes.

By Mr. Raftery:

Q. And he may have bought all the product of Universal and Columbia to fill the entire time if there should be a lapse? A. That is correct.

Q. That is one of the reasons Universal and Columbia are able to sell their entire program in advance to take care of the needs of these exhibitors, isn't that right? A. Yes, sir, it is.
(2403)

Mr. Seymour: I just want to ask you one more question.

By Mr. Seymour:

Q. Mr. Mochrie, the exhibitor has a so-called booking book on which he indicates when he would like to play these pictures, and communicates with the exchange and arranges to play them that way, subject to the arrangements with the exchanges, is that right? A. Yes, he does.

Q. With the various exchanges? A. Yes, he does.

Recross Examination by Mr. Proskauer:

Q. I would like to ask you just a question or two more about these longer first-runs: Does the subsequent-run exhibitor prefer the picture which has a longer first-run over the one that has a shorter first-run? A. I stated that before.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, he is not competent to answer that question.

Judge Hand: I think he has been over it.

Q. When I say "does he prefer," I mean is it your experience in the trade that that is more eagerly sought after by the subsequent-run? A. He has found from experience that it will gross more business for him, and certainly he wants it.

Q. Now, he suffers for that the impossible inconvenience (2404) of not knowing the exact date on which he is going to get that picture? A. I don't think he suffers at all. I think he is very glad to have a picture like that available to him.

Q. I used the wrong word——

Judge Hand: Yes.

Q. —but I am glad I used it because you have corrected me quite forcibly. A. I beg your pardon, sir; I did not mean to.

Q. I thank you. You do not owe me any apology. Now, as a matter of fact, he gets a notice of availability which is a regular form that goes out, doesn't it, as to when this picture is going to be available on this second-run? A. He does from me, yes.

Q. You know enough about the way other people do business to know that that is quite the general practice in the trade? A. Every company I have worked for has practiced it.

Q. So well in advance of the time this picture is going to become available to him he gets a notice that the picture is going to be available? A. Yes, he does.

Q. And then he gauges his trailers or his advertising on that notice of availability? A. That is correct.

Q. And meanwhile he has a general program for his theatre, as you have described? A. He does all that during (2405) the clearance interval between the first-run and himself.

Mr. Proskauer: That is all.

Mr. Leisure: That is all, Mr. Mochrie.

Mr. Leisure: If your Honors please, that completes the witnesses that we are going to call from the industry. Mr. Wright has been good enough to stipulate with me the testimony of the head of our production department, so that we have not had to bring him here from California, and that will save considerable time, and at the appropriate time I would like the privilege of offering that affidavit.

We have a short accounting witness on some statistics, which I am going to ask my associate Mr. Whittlesey to examine on, but that will be very short.

JAMES D. MILLER, called as a witness on behalf of the RKO defendants, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Whittlesey:

Q. Mr. Miller, where do you live? A. Bronxville, New York.

Q. What is your occupation? A. I am a certified public accountant.

Q. Are you the senior partner of James D. Miller & Com- (2406) pany, certified public accountants? A. I am.

Q. Is your firm regularly employed by any company which is a defendant in this case? A. No.

Q. Was your firm retained by Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation to examine certain books and records in connection with the present case? A. Yes.

Q. Have you been in charge of that work? A. I have.

Q. In this connection did you make an examination of certain records to determine in what theatres each of the defendants in this case had some direct or indirect interest? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Will you tell us just what those records were?

Mr. Davis: May I hear the last question?

(Question read.)

Q. (Continuing.) Will you just tell us what those records were? A. They were lists of theatres compiled by each of the five producer-exhibitor defendants.

Mr. Proskauer: We cannot hear you, Mr. Miller. Will you please raise your voice.

A. (Continuing.) They were lists prepared by each of the five producer-exhibitor defendants that were submitted to the Government. We got copies of them and worked from those copies.

Mr. Wright: If he is referring to exhibits in evidence, can't you tie them up so we will know what he is talking about?

(2407)

Mr. Whittlesey: I do not know the exhibit numbers of all those lists, but the witness has just testified he used copies of the lists which each of these defendants turned over to the Government. If you will let me go a little further, I think we can develop this to your satisfaction.

Mr. Wright: All right.

Q. Using those copies of those lists which the various companies turned over to the Government, showing their theatre interests, did you prepare a composite list from all those five? Must have been five lists, isn't that so? A. Yes.

Q. And have you that composite list with you here? A. I have.

Q. May I have it? A. (Witness hands to Mr. Whittlesey.)

Mr. Whittlesey: I would like to have this marked.

(Marked Defendant RKO's Exhibit RKO-11 for identification.)

Judge Hand: Has Mr. Wright seen this thing, and does he dispute its correctness?

Mr. Whittlesey: No, Mr. Wright hasn't seen it, your Honor. I am going to offer it after it has been described a little more fully. I am trying to have it brought out now just exactly what we have here.

(2408)

Q. Mr. Miller, will you tell us what this list shows in some detail? A. Yes. It lists alphabetically by states and by cities all the theatres in which any of these five producer-exhibitor-defendants have any interest.

Q. As shown by the copies of lists which I gave you, is that correct? A. It lists every theatre that is shown on those lists, and it shows also the seating capacity of those theatres, and it shows which one of these defendants has an interest in that theatre.

Q. Does it show, after the name of the theatre, anything as to the extent of the defendant's interest? First let me ask you this: Does it show, after the name of the theatre, anything to indicate which defendant or defendants have an interest in the theatre? A. Yes, it shows which defendant and the degree of interest.

Q. Will you tell me just what it shows as to the degree of interest? A. The degree of interest is the degree of interest which was set forth on these lists of theatres which we have received. There were only two of those lists that showed that degree of interest. That was RKO and Paramount.

Q. In other words, there are some cases where the degree of interest was not shown at all? A. That is right.

Q. You have the degree of interest on your list there, have you not? A. Yes, we have.

(2409)

Q. I would just like to come to that in a moment, but before doing so, perhaps you can answer this question: Are you familiar with a somewhat similar type of list which the Government prepared and set forth in Appendix A to its trial brief? A. Yes, I am.

Q. Can you tell us briefly how the list which you have here compares with the list which the Government set forth of theatre interests in its trial brief? A. Generally, it is in conformity. We show 20 theatres more in total than the Government list. As a matter of fact, our total is 32 greater. There are some clerical errors in the Government list that accounts for a difference of 12.

Q. In other words, the Government did not add up their theatres quite exactly on that list? A. That is correct, and, in addition to that, we have 20 more theatres.

Mr. Wright: What is the Government list referred to?

Mr. Whittlesey: Set forth in their trial brief, the affiliated theatres appendix.

Judge Bright: It this the list to which you are referring (indicating)?

The Witness: Yes, it is.

Judge Bright: On page 7 of the trial brief—pages 7 and 8.

The Witness: Of Appendix A.

(2410)

Judge Bright: No, not of Appendix A. This is the trial brief.

Judge Hand: Why don't you submit this brief to them and have the thing checked up? We don't love exhibits here a bit.

Mr. Whittlesey: I could avoid doing that. I will either submit it to him or put it in evidence. I am going to think, in just a moment, about submitting it. I want to get out here just what we had.

Judge Hand: You just put another thing in evidence, and I suppose we are the ones who should worry.

Judge Bright: That is not the list mentioned.

The Witness: The list starts on page 11 of the Appendix A of the trial brief.

Q. Mr. Miller, I believe you said that in some cases in setting forth the interests of the defendants in these particular theatres you did not have any information from the defendant in question but I gather you have set forth an interest of some sort after each one of them, is that correct? A. We have.

Q. When you did not have the information from the defendants, what did you do, so as to set forth an interest? A. We followed the Government Appendix A in the trial brief.

Q. When you followed the interest stated by the Government in its Appendix A of its trial brief, did you do anything on your list to indicate you were following the interest stated by the Government? A. Yes, there the interest is marked in blue.
(2411)

Q. In so doing, would I be right in understanding that you were endeavoring to get this list worked up as nearly as possible in conformity with the list which the Government has used in its trial brief in this case? A. That is right.

Q. And I believe you have told us the extent to which it does conform, that there is a difference of about 20 theatres? A. We have, in the aggregate, 20 theatres more than the Government.

Q. When there has been any question as to the extent of interest to be stated, you have taken the basis set forth by the Government in its own trial brief, is that right? A. We have.

Judge Hand: What about this, Mr. Wright? Have you seen it?

Mr. Wright: I was just looking at it now.

Judge Hand: You have got it now?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Hand: I do not see what in the world is the use of correcting things in this cumbersome way. There is no use taking testimony in court unless there is a real dispute.

(2412)

Mr. Whittlesey: Perhaps I can clear that up, your Honor. We set out here to analyze the information which the Government asked from us in the form of interrogatories and requests to admit facts. To do that we had to necessarily segregate the exhibitions between affiliated and unaffiliated theatres. That required, in turn, a study of the information given by each one of these five defendants to the Government with respect to their theatre interests. I might say this, that about the middle of September I suggested to the Government attorneys that we might speed up this process all the way round if they were to furnish to me their list. I shan't say they refused. I spoke to the attorneys here in New York. They said that their information at that time, and their lists and their accountants were in Washington. At that time we were closely approaching trial, so I had to go ahead with my own accountants here and do the best we could, using the same source of information as the Government had to build up the same thing. All I am endeavoring to bring out here is, what we are working from is as near as we could possibly get without seeing the Government's own list, by working from the same basis of classification of interest.

I am perfectly willing not to offer this and let Mr. Wright have it. I certainly intend him to have it, so he can check back what we have done here.

Mr. Wright: This is exactly of course what we ought to have in the record, but without any dispute, that is, there should be one list like this that is accepted as correct by everyone.

Judge Hand: Yes. What about that list?

Mr. Wright: I cannot check it as I sit here, of course, but the only thing I noticed about it, offhand, is, I do not see how the pool situations are treated. Maybe the witness will make that clear. Offhand it does not appear to me where those pooled theatres are listed on this list.

Mr. Whittlesey: The witness will tell you, I believe, that he set forth opposite the name of the theatre the extent of interest that any company had in the theatre.

Mr. Wright: Of course, your Honors, there is no point in wasting time in court over it. It is obviously the sort of thing that we are both interested in having in the record in accurate terms, and I am sure we can do that.

Judge Hand: This, unless I am mixed up, which is quite likely, would furnish a list, if you agreed to it, that would be agreeable to all the five defendants.

Mr. Whittlesey: I don't know, your Honor.

(2414)

Judge Hand: Is that right?

Mr. Whittlesey: Of course, this represents our best efforts to work out the degree of interest that each defendant has in the theatre, but we cannot bind Paramount.

Judge Hand: Do you mean the other defendants have agreed with you?

Mr. Whittlesey: No.

Mr. Seymour: I have never seen it.

Judge Hand: Oh, you have never seen it?

Mr. Davis: I haven't seen it.

Judge Hand: I have nothing to suggest, only I do not like an independent performance unless it is absolutely necessary.

Mr. Whittlesey: Suppose we do this——

(2415)

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor, I have never seen it, but I understand that they are just going to use this as a basis for some further testimony of this witness, and I am perfectly willing to have this marked subject to correction, as far as we are concerned. We will go over it. And I suggest if Mr. Wright do that, we can go ahead.

Mr. Wright: That is agreeable to us.

Mr. Proskauer: Then mark it subject to correction.

Mr. Whittlesey: I will offer it subject to correction.

Judge Bright: Does that give the names of the theatres?

Mr. Whittlesey: Yes; perhaps I should show it to your Honor. It is indexed.

I offer this list, subject to correction.

Judge Bright: It has a little more information in it than there is in the Government brief.

Mr. Whittlesey: We think it is a more accurate job, but perhaps Mr. Wright won't agree.

Judge Bright: It gives the name of the theatre?

Mr. Whittlesey: Yes.

(Marked Defendant RKO's Exhibit RKO-11.)

Mr. Davis: May I see that, if nobody else is using it?

Q. Mr. Miller, did you make an examination of certain (2416) answers by RKO in response to the Government's request to admit facts in thise case and specifically those answers dealing with the first-run distribution of RKO's 1943-44 product in these 92 cities of over 100,000 population? A. I did.

Q. Can you tell me how many first-run exhibitions of RKO's 1943-44 product there were altogether in these cities of over 100,000 population, as shown by those answers to the Government's request to admit facts? A. There were 3,614 first-run exhibitions. I would like to make clear that that is not exactly the number that was shown in the data submitted to the Government, but we have since provided the Government with all the corrections.

Q. I think you furnished me with the corrections, and I will have to give them to the Government shortly. Were those corrections substantial or to any great extent? A. No, they were not.

Q. Of that total of first-run exhibitions in the theatres in these 92 cities, were there theatres in which RKO or another defendant—how many were in theatres in which RKO or another defendant had an interest of 50 per cent or more? A. 2,317.

Q. And for the purposes of your analysis here, did you classify those exhibitions as in affiliated theatres? A. I did. I would like to qualify that answer just a bit. That will include exhibitions in theatres in which there might be a less than a 50 per cent interest, such as, well, for instance, Paramount has a lot of theatres in which they have a 50 per cent of a 50 per cent interest.

Q. But you classified even those, for the purposes of this job, as being in affiliated theatres? A. I did for this purpose, yes.

Q. How many of the total of 3,614 exhibitions were in theatres in which no defendant had any interest, or in which a defendant or defendants had a less than 50 per cent interest? A. That would be 1,297.

Q. For the purposes of this analysis you classified those as in unaffiliated theatres? A. Yes.

Q. Tell me one further figure: Of this total of 2,317 first-run exhibitions, which you say were in theatres which you classified as affiliated, how many of those were in theatres operated by RKO itself? A. 822. I am talking now about exhibitions, not theatres.

Q. That is what I understood. Eliminating these 822 first-run exhibitions in theatres operated by RKO, what percentage of first-run exhibitions of RKO's product in 1943-44 was in theatres which you have classified as affiliated with other defendants and what percentage was in theatres which you have classified, as you have explained here, in theatres which were not affiliated? A. It was almost an equal division, 53½ per cent of the exhibitions were in what we term affiliated theatres and 46½ per cent in unaffiliated theatres.

Q. When you say "affiliated theatres," you mean theatres which were affiliated in accordance with your classification with other defendants than RKO, is that correct? A. That is correct.

Q. You said you eliminated these 822 exhibitions which were in RKO's own theatres. Why did you do that? A. Because we assumed in making these tabulations, and I think that was testified to by Mr. Mochrie today, that RKO gives first-run preference to its own theatres over all others, whether independent or affiliated.

Q. So for the purpose of determining the extent to which RKO favored or did not favor other affiliated theatres over independent theatres you entirely eliminated the exhibitions in RKO's own theatres? A. Correct. That is the only way we could get a true picture.

Q. I believe you also said a moment ago, in making up these figures you classified as exhibitions in unaffiliated theatres certain theatres in which a defendant or defendants had less than a 50 per cent interest, is that correct? A. That is correct.

Q. Of that total of 1297 exhibitions in unaffiliated theatres, how many were in these theatres in which defendants had less than a 50 per cent interest? A. There were 181 such exhibitions.

Q. Only 181 out of a total of 1,297? A. Well, out of a total of 3,614.

Q. Out of a total of 1,297 classified as independent? A. Yes.

Q. Did you make one more computation in which you took these 181 exhibitions in theatres in which defendants had less than 50 per cent interest and include those in the exhibitions in theatres in which defendants had a 50 per cent or greater interest? A. Yes, we made such a computation.

Mr. Davis: Why not say in that question, in which some one of the defendants had a 50 per cent interest?

Mr. Whittlesey: That would be correct.

Mr. Davis: We object to being grouped in whole.

Mr. Proskauer: We are just as choosey.

Q. What was the purpose of this computation you are speaking of now, Mr. Miller? A. The Government claims in this case that any theatre in which a defendant has any interest should be regarded as affiliated, so we made this calculation to go along with the Government on its definition——

Q. Theory.—— A. (Continued) —of affiliation.

Q. (Continuing) —of affiliation, I see. And going along on this Government basis of determining affiliation, how did your figures work out? A. 60 per cent of the first-run exhibitions were in affiliated theatres, and 40 per cent in unaffiliated.

Mr. Whittlesey: I would like to have this marked.

(Marked Defendant RKO's Exhibit RKO-12 for identification.)

Q. Mr. Miller, I show you this chart and ask you whether that correctly reflects the figures which you have just testified to? A. It does.

Q. I wish you would explain that chart a little more in detail to the Court, if you can. A. This chart deals with the distribution of RKO's entire product for the 1943-44 season, which included 38 features, 32 of which were of its own production, and six——

Mr. Davis: A little louder, please.

A. (Continuing) 38 productions, 32 of which were of RKO's own production, and six were produced by others. The chart is limited, however, to first-run exhibition. It is further limited to such first-run exhibition in the 92 cities, which according to the 1940 census, had a population of over 100,000.

Q. Mr. Miller, those were the 92 cities with respect to which the Government addressed requests to admit facts to RKO, is that correct? A. That is correct. There were 3,614 such exhibitions. The purpose of this chart is to show to what extent RKO's product was exhibited in affiliated theatres as contrasted with unaffiliated theatres. This deals with the allegation that RKO——

Q. I don't think we need that. Will you tell us what the blue section of the chart indicates. I wish you would take these various columns and describe them in a little more detail for us right now. A. The blue shows the number of exhibitions—that is, the blue block on the left shows the number of exhibitions—in theatres in which RKO had an interest of 50 per cent or more and in theatres controlled by RKO in which RKO and another defendant had an aggregate interest of 50 per cent or more; the middle column, the one in yellow, shows the exhibitions in theatres in which one or more of the defendants, other than RKO, have an interest of 50 per cent or more; the last column on the right shows all other exhibitions; and at the top are shown the number of theatres—number of exhibitions in theatres in which one or more of the defendants had an interest of less than 50 per cent; and the bottom part, the exhibitions in theatres in which no defendant had any interest whatever.

Mr. Whittlesey: That is all for that chart.

Mr. Wright: Before it is offered I would like to ask the witness some questions about it.

Preliminary Cross Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. How do you get this total figure of 3,614, your (2422) affiliated exhibitions? A. We took the data that was submitted to the Government which showed the distribution of it——

Q. Have you a copy of the data that you worked from there? A. Yes, I have.

Q. That is the admission of facts showing the first-run distribution of 1943-44 product? A. Yes.

Q. Go ahead. A. This data that was submitted to the Government has a sheet for each city having a population in excess of 100,000, and on that sheet is shown the distribution of RKO's 1943-44 product, that is, 38 features. This shows what theatres that product was played in in that season.

Q. You have the same thing I have. Calling your attention specifically to Akron, Ohio, there—that is the first sheet which you have? A. Yes.

Q. I notice that that shows 18 pictures first-run at the Colonial Theatre, Warner-Shea, and then 18 to Harry Katz at the Palace, and then you have two licensed to R. Postman for first-run exhibition in the Norka Theatre. Under your total exhibitions, then, for Akron, you took all of those, that is, total of 38, is that right? A. That is correct.

Q. And you made no effort to determine whether or not those exhibitions in the Norka, for example, were in a first-run theatre, is that right?

(2423)

Mr. Whittlesey: I believe, Mr. Wright, you requested us to give you the first showing of each picture in these particular towns. As you know, that is all the request to admit facts called for, and that is what the answers gave.

Mr. Wright: I will examine the witness and we will go on further.

A. This states that those two pictures were licensed in the Norka Theatre for first-run exhibition.

Q. And as far as you know, that simply meant that the exhibition in the Norka was the first in the town for those two pictures; Norka may have been a third or subsequent-run house as far as you were concerned, is that right? A. I have no information on that theatre except—no, I don't think I even have the seating capacity.

Q. You gave the same treatment to all of this data in computing your total number of exhibitions, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. You call them a first-run exhibition on your chart, even though they may have actually been exhibitions which are covered in a subsequent-run theatre with subsequent clearance to exhibit simply for the first time in the town in that house? A. I was concerned with first-run exhibitions. I was not concerned with the type of theatre it played in.

Q. Your chart, then, does not reflect at all the extent, or does not reflect accurately the extent to which RKO's product was divided among the independent and affiliated first-run theatres in the town in question, isn't that right? A. It accurately reflects first-run exhibition.

Mr. Wright: Just read the question to him.

Q. Just answer my question.

Mr. Whittlesey: I think he has answered it.

(Question read.)

A. I cannot say yes or no to that because it does not tend to classify these first-run exhibitions as to types of theatres other than whether they were in affiliated theatres or unaffiliated theatres.

Q. Your chart on its face then does not even purport to show the division of the RKO product among the affiliated and independent first-run theatres in the town in question, isn't that right? A. It does not deal with theatres as to whether they are first-run theatres or subsequent-run theatres.

Q. That is, the slough product that might have gotten an exhibition anywhere, all those exhibitions of such product as may have been rejected by an affiliated theatre for first-run and then shown in some later independent house for its first exhibition, all of those are treated on your chart as first-run exhibitions, is that right? A. All I know is that we are dealing here with first-run exhibition.

(2425)

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I think enough has been shown to demonstrate that the chart is clearly misleading in including as first-run exhibitions these exhibitions where a picture was not good enough to get a first-run in a first-run house, but, of course, found its way down into some house and actually got exhibited in the town for the first time anywhere. I submit that kind of chart shows nothing as to first-run distribution.

Mr. Whittlesey: May I ask the witness another question?

Direct Examination resumed by Mr. Whittlesey:

Q. Mr. Miller, I gather that what you have done here is to take the first-run exhibition in point of time of each one of these pictures in each of these cities, where the Government asked us to give information as to the theatres in which the pictures were first played? A. That is correct.

Q. And then having gotten that, and the name of the theatre in which the picture first played in the town, you have worked from there on the basis of these theatre lists which we have shown the Government here and divided that as between independent and affiliated theatres, is that correct? A. That is correct.

Q. So this is a division on first exhibitions of all product (2426) as shown in our answers to Government's interrogatories in these 92 cities as between these various classes of theatres? A. Yes.

Mr. Wright: I might add, if the Court please, that our request was misstated inadvertently by Mr. Whittlesey. We did not ask for this data as to the first exhibtions of all product. We asked for a statement of the regular first-run accounts who had their product during that season. Instead of confining their answers to the regular first-run accounts, who played the regular first-run of their product, they added these other theatres which played any picture, or some of their pictures, for the first time in the town, which pictures haven't actually gotten an exhibtion in any first-run theatre anywhere anytime.

Mr. Whittlessey: In other words, you don't dispute, Mr. Wright, that those show first showing of those pictures in each of those towns, correct?

Mr. Wright: Why, no.

Mr. Whittlesey: It does show that, doesn't it?

Mr. Wright: Yes. I simply submit that has no meaning.

Mr. Whittlesey: I don't think that goes to the accuracy of the chart.

Judge Bright: The chart may be wrong then in calling it a first-run chart.

(2427)

Mr. Whittlesey: Your Honor——

Judge Bright: Call it a first exhibition chart.

Mr. Whittlesey: (Continuing.) —we can call it first exhibition chart. It certainly has been brought out here. Of course, we have no clear definition in this case as to just what is first-run or what is a first-run theatre beyond the time at which a given theatre is playing a picture in relation to the other theatres in that town. That at least is something that is perfectly clear and beyond argument. If the picture played first in New York at such and such theatre, that was certainly its first-run. The theatre in which it may have played may not have been what Mr. Wright would call, or somebody else would not agree or would agree was what was commonly called a first-run theatre, but if we get into dispute as to whether this house, that house or another house is to be called a first-run theatre, I think the length of this case would be vastly stretched out. We have to go by something definite in point of time, at least.

Mr. Wright: We were given by one of the defendants a list of what theatres purported to be the first-run theatres in these towns and, as I understood, the definition which was subscribed to by that defendant—Mr. Davis's clients, I believe, is the house that plays a regular run of somebody's pictures on first-run clearance; that is, where it has clearance over the other theatres in the town and actually controlled these subsequent exhibitions of the film in the town. Obviously, a theatre which merely exhibits a film for the first time in the town without any first-run clearance, which happens to be some 15 or 25-cent subsequent-run house, simply has the film first run because nobody else wants it, no first-run house wants to play it. That throwing of exhibitions of that kind into what it purports to show, first-run distribution of features, is inexcusably misleading.

Mr. Whittlesey: You see, your Honor, we are getting into this dispute as to what is a first-run theatre. I suggest, to meet the suggestion made by Judge Bright that, to eliminate that dispute here and get ourselves clean down to the question of time, that we leave out the word "run" here and call it "first exhibitions." That certainly would be in line with the witness's testimony, and I think that would eliminate the objection you have, Mr. Wright, would it not?

Judge Hand: Well, he would then say it had nothing to do with the case.

Mr. Wright: Precisely.

Mr. Whittlesey: He has not made that argument.

Judge Hand: And that he never made any such contention, and so on.

Mr. Wright: We have never contended that pictures which are not good enough for an affiliated——

Judge Hand: You make no claim such as this is introduced to meet?

Mr. Wright: Precisely.

Judge Hand: I do not believe he does.

Colloquy

Mr. Whittlesey: I think it does. We are trying to show, at least to the extent that he charges here that by conspiracy we are depriving independent exhibitors of access to our pictures—now, we are meeting that, first, by showing the extent to which we are giving our pictures for first showings to affiliated theatres on the one hand and independent theatres on the other. Now, Mr. Wright is coming back, without naming any theatre, without putting in any evidence—of course, he could put in evidence to contradict this chart if he wanted—and saying, "I believe in here there are some theatres that I would not call first-run theatres." It seems to me that is the thing for him to do, to put in evidence, if he wishes to attack this chart, but on the face of it, it is exactly what it states.

Judge Hand: But he has, by cross-examination of your witness, shown a lot of theatres here that do not come up, I should say, to any definition that has been given or any charge that has been made.

(2430)

Mr. Whittlesey: I think he has, with all due respect, I think he has indicated that in his opinion certain theatres are not first-run theatres, but he has offered no proof of that.

Judge Hand: I did not know but that anybody had a different opinion.

Mr. Whittlesey: We are simply showing the theatres in which these pictures first appeared in the town with respect to which Mr. Wright's inquiry has been directed. It is a clear fact.

Mr. Seymour: We are missing Mr. Whittlesey's words over here.

Mr. Whittlesey: Your Honor, I will go on to another chart. I think all that line of Mr. Wright's objection can be met.

By Mr. Whittlesey:

Q. Mr. Miller, did you make a study of RKO's answers to the Government's interrogatories covering first-run exhibitions of RKO's first block of pictures of the 1943-44 season in all cities having a population of 25,000 or more? A. I did.

Q. Was this analysis along the same lines as that which you have just described in connection with the first-run distribution of RKO's product as shown in its answers to the requests to admit facts? A. Yes, except that in this instance we made a separate analysis for each one of the first-run distributions of the five pictures in the block.
(2431)

Q. For the purposes of this analysis did you exclude exhibitions in theatres operated by RKO? A. Yes.

Q. Was that for the same reasons as you have given with respect to this analysis of the 92 cities? A. Yes.

Q. Again, did you prepare this analysis in two ways, first, in which you included in your classification of unaffiliated theatres those in which one or more of the defendants had less than a controlling interest, and, second, in which you took exhibitions in theatres in which one or more defendants had more than a controlling interest; or, take it the other way, in which you took those situations where the defendants had less than a controlling interest and included it with the theatres in which defendants had more than a 50 per cent interest, or one or more defendants? A. Yes.

Q. Will you tell us what your analysis shows as to the whole block of these five pictures on both of these two bases. A. On the first basis, that is, the one in which we treat the theatres in which one or more of the defendants had less than—had an interest aggregating less than 50 per cent as unaffiliated, on that basis about 52½ per cent of the exhibitions were in affiliated theatres and 47½ per cent in unaffiliated theatres. On the second basis, that is, employing the Government basis of affiliation, that is, treating any theatre in which any defendant had any interest whatever as being affiliated, we find that 62 per cent of the exhibitions were in affiliated theatres and 38 per cent in unaffiliated theatres.

Q. I believe you stated that you took this analysis and broke it up on a picture by picture basis for each picture in the block, is that correct? A. That is correct, yes.

(Marked Defendant RKO's Exhibits RKO-13 and RKO-14 for identification.)

Q. Mr. Miller, I ask you whether these two tables marked Exhibits 13 and 14 for identification show on a picture by picture basis the distribution of the pictures in this block and the distribution of the whole block overall in accordance with the figures which you just testified to? A. They do.

Q. Will you describe those charts a little bit more in detail.

Judge Hand: Are the things you describe in this table I as first-run—does that mean the first showing in each theatre whether it was a first-run theatre or not?

Mr. Whittlesey: In answer to that, your Honor, I think we can state this, that the Government in addressing these interrogatories to us, in the case of the interrogatories stated that, for first-run, we were to show the first exhibition. In other words, there is no question that that was the definition of first-run for the purposes of the answers to the interrogatories, which are quite different from the request to admit facts.

Mr. Wright: This interrogatory that he is dealing with here, interrogatory 6, asked each defendant to list the pictures in the first block for the 1943 season, with the name of the first-run exhibitor who played them and the names of the theatres that played them and a statement of the clearance that the theatre carried. Now, as I recall the answers, in some cases, the block was split because the first-run theatre would only play the better pictures in the block, and then the same thing happened as to the poorer theatres as happened to some of those listed in the admissions of fact, they would go into what is known as a slough house, and it will appear in the answer, of course, that in those cases they did not have first-run clearance, although they did get their initial exhibition in some other theatre, and you have the same——

Mr. Seymour: You are losing part of your audience, Mr. Wright.

Mr. Wright: (Continuing) —you have the same problem here that you have in connection with the admission of facts. If you want to get a picture of the actual first-run theatres which played these pictures, you have to examine the answer as to the clearahce in which they played in the particular theatres which played the particular picture.

Mr. Leisure: If your Honors please, it seems to me Mr. Wright is being unnecessarily technical here. I think it must be clear to the Court that in any given situation in any city in the United States that the first time our picture plays, that is the first-run. I do not see why we should quibble about the use of a term of that kind. We have dealt on that basis with our interrogatories. It has been perfectly clear up to now. I don't see why we should quibble about it.

Mr. Whittlesey: I might add, your Honor, that all the Government requested us to do was furnish it the first showing of each one of these pictures in each one of these towns all over the country, which is exactly what we have done.

I offer these two tables in evidence as Exhibits 13 and 14.

Judge Bright: How are they marked?

Mr. Whittlesey: 13 and 14.

Judge Bright: Table II is RKO 14?

Mr. Whittlesey: That is correct.

Judge Hand: I think we will admit both of these things. I am not at all sure whether you are engaged in shadow boxing or what at the present time. I don't understand myself the definition of first-run, you are not agreed on it, or the complaint of the Government of your conduct.

(2435)

Mr. Whittlesey: Perhaps, your Honor, if the Government had given us——

Judge Hand: That is pretty bad after these days of trial. That is a fact; and it is an irritating fact, too.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, we do not claim that in any event where an unaffiliated theatre does not want to exhibit one of these people's pictures or any other pictures first-run, that the picture is not made available to somebody for exhibition in the town. There is no suggestion in anything we have said in the complaint to that effect. I say now there is no dispute about that whatsoever. The thing, however, that determines whether or [illegible] can operate as a first-run theatre in a town depends, of course, on access to the choice product of some distributor and not simply the privilege of exhibiting such pictures as a first-run exhibitor rejects. That is the reason why the distinction that I have been urging here is important as between mere initial exhibition of a theatre somewhere in the town and exhibition in an established first-run theatre.

Judge Hand: Proceed with this witness. I understood that you were going to be through; that it was a short witness, and that the evidence of Mr. Leisure would last a day. It has now lasted two days.

Mr. Whittlesey: Your Honor, before I do may I call your attention to one further point on this definition of first-run? Let us take the amended and supplemental complaint itself. First-run is defined as follows:

"The first exhibition of a motion picture in a given zone after national release."

Mr. Wright: Will you read the definition of first-run theatre that is in there?

By Mr. Whittlesey:

Q. Mr. Miller, I show you a chart and ask you if that also reflects the figures which you just testified with respect to the distribution of that first block in the 415 cities? A. It does.

Q. In other words, that states in summary form the summaries in these two tables, Exhibits 13 and 14 in evidence? A. It does.

Mr. Whittlesey: I would like to have that marked for identification.

Judge Bright: These Exhibits 12, 13 and 14 are in evidence now?

Mr. Whittlesey: That is what I understood.

The Clerk: Except 12, sir.

Judge Bright: Judge Hand has admitted 12, too.

(Defendant RKO's Exhibit 12 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Whittlesey: This will be marked 15.

(2437)

(Marked Defendant RKO's Exhibit 15 for identification.)

Mr. Whittlesey: I offer RKO's Exhibit 15 for identification in evidence.)

Judge Hand: All right.

(Defendant RKO's Exhibit 15 for identification received in evidence.)

Q. Now, Mr. Miller, did you make any study to show the comparative film rentals received by RKO on its first block of pictures in the 1943-44 season from theatres which you classified as affiliated on the one hand and theatres which you classified as independent on the other? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did you make this study on the basis of first-run film rentals in the 92 cities of over 100,000 population? A. Yes.

Q. Where did you obtain the data for the film rentals on these pictures? A. From the home office records and exchange records.

Q. And are those records presently available here in New York? A. They are.

Q. Now again, in making this study, did you eliminate rentals from theatres operated by RKO itself? A. Yes.

Q. What was the purpose of making that elimination? A. We eliminated those in order to obtain a more accurate measure of the comparative desirability from a film rental standpoint of first-run exhibition in affiliated theatres other than RKO's own theatres with first-run exhibition in unaffiliated theatres.

Q. And when you are speaking of first-run, you are speaking of first exhibition as shown on the company's records, is that correct? A. Yes.

Q. Now, what did your analysis show with respect to these comparative rentals in these cities? A. It showed that the first-run exhibitions in the 92 cities of over 100,000 population on this first block of pictures in the 1943-44 season yielded an average of $1,558.87 per exhibition. And the independent exhibitions yielded an average of $1,221.41 per exhibition.

Q. Now, on these figures, were you characterizing as affiliated theatres only those in which the defendants other than RKO had an interest of 50 per cent or more? A. Yes.

Q. Now, taking the Government's basis in which you include as affiliated those in which the defendants, one or more, had an interest of any sort, how did your figures work out? A. That computation shows a slightly lower yield per exhibition. That is $1,528.03 for affiliated theatres and $1,195.37 for the unaffiliated theatres.

Q. Now in working up these figures, did you find it necessary to eliminate certain exhibitions? A. Yes, we did.

Q. What were those? A. Those were the exhibitions in which the rental was part of the lump sum, or was determined on a national gross basis.

Q. Why did you have to eliminate those in making these studies of comparative film rentals? A. Because there is no way to allocate a specific amount of rental to a specific exhibition in those two instances.

Q. Now did you find this type of contract to which you have just referred was made by RKO with affiliated theatres as well as unaffiliated theatres, or with both kinds? A. Well, that would be true of the lump sum contracts, but there was only one national gross deal and that was with an unaffiliated theatre, the Tivoli in New Orleans, La.

Q. That is, in this—— A. In this particular group.

Q. Of the first block in the 92 cities of 100,000 population or more, correct? A. That is correct.

Q. So I gather your study here was limited to those cases only where you could attribute a specific film rental to a specific theatre, right? A. That is right.

Q. And you worked your average film rentals from those figures? A. That is right.

Q. Now did you relate these rental figures to the average seating capacities of the respective affiliated and unaffiliated theatres concerned? A. Yes, we did.

(2440)

Q. And what did you find as to the comparative seating capacities in connection with these average rentals? A. We found that the average seating capacity of affiliated theatres—this is exclusive of the RKO theatres—from which the average rentals that I have just testified to were received—the average seating capacity was 1,979 seats, and the average seating capacity of the unaffiliated theatres was 1,605 seats. Now, we made another computation to show what it would be following the Government's basis of affiliation. That is, treating any theatre in which the defendants had any interest whatever, as affiliated, and we found that on that basis the average seating capacity of the affiliated theatres was slightly less. That is, 1,926 seats; and the average seating capacity of the unaffiliated theatres was about the same; that is, 1,607 seats.

Q. Now, how did the relative number of days played work out as between affiliated and unaffiliated theatres on this distribution in the 92 cities on the first block? A. The number of days played was just the same in the affiliated theatres and in the unaffiliated theatres.

Q. In other words, this difference of rental would not be attributable to longer playing time in one type of theatre or the other, is that correct? A. Correct.

Q. Now, did you make a similar analysis, Mr. Miller, with respect to all cities with a population of 25,000 or over? A. Yes, we did.

(2441)

Q. And that was just for the first block, is that correct? A. Yes.

Q. And did you set up that information in tabular form with respect to each one of the pictures in that block? A. For each one of the pictures and for the total.

Q. I see. Now I show you two tables, one entitled Table 1 and the other Table 2. Are these the tables of which you spoke? A. They are.

Q. And one is set up on the basis of affiliation where the only affiliated theatres included are those in which the defendants had a 50 per cent interest or more—is that correct? A. That is correct.

Q. And the other in which all degrees of interest were included as affiliated, right? A. That is correct.

(Marked Defendant RKO's Exhibits 16 and 17 for identification.)

Mr. Whittlesey: I offer RKO's Exhibits 16 and 17 for identification in evidence.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I have not even yet seen a copy of these last figures that he was testifying to in the 92 cities. I would like to ask him some questions about some of this material, but as to that 92 cities data, they have not even yet supplied me with any copy of the tabulation.

Mr. Whittlesey: No tabulation has been prepared on that. I asked the witness what he has found. Of course he has his own tabulations here and can furnish them to you. But I am not offering those as an exhibit. I am offering the over-all on all of the 415 cities as an exhibit.

Mr. Wright: There is no way we can examine him if we can't at least see what he is testifying from.

Mr. Whittlesey: His records are available and you can examine from those, Mr. Wright.

Judge Bright: What do you contend these Exhibits 16 and 17 show that are material to the issues here?

Mr. Whittlesey: Just this, your Honor: we are here charged with favoring affiliated theatres over independent theatres as the result of a conspiracy. The testimony of our witnesses in this case has been that to the extent that we do show our pictures just alone in affiliated theatres, it is not due to any conspiracy between us and any other defendant, but, rather, due to the fact that we find it better business in terms of dollars and cents; and I believe that Mr. Mochrie testified that by and large he gets better returns from affiliated theatres than from unaffiliated theatres. We are here simply taking the actual record as given to the Government on their request in the form of interrogatories to show in terms of dollars and cents that it works out that way. As a matter of fact all business experience, at least the experience of this company, shows we are getting on a theatre by theatre basis better rentals from affiliated theatres than independent theatres; and that to that extent, tends to offset the charge or to meet the charge that we are favoring affiliated theatres over unaffiliated theatres by virtue of the conspiracy to do so between us and the other defendants.

Mr. Wright: Mr. Whittlesey has again not stated to your Honor correctly what the witness has done here. As to these rental figures that are in these tables that have just been handed me, tables one and two, which I believe are marked RKO's Exhibits 16 and 17, he is dealing with rental figures that were not supplied to the Government at all. The only rental figure that was supplied in the interrogatory answer was the rental received on the one selected picture of Lady Takes a Chance. As to these other figures, they are based on data which has never before been seen by or offered to us.

Mr. Whittlesey: Your Honor, all I can say to that is, of course we can't very well be, in proving our case here, limited simply to those figures which we furnished the Government at its request. The witness has stated the source of the figures which we have been putting in here, which is our own home office and exchange records which are available here for checking at any time. We naturally——

Judge Hand: Well, we will allow them.

(Defendant RKO's Exhibits 16 and 17 for identification received in evidence.)

Q. Now, the Government in its trial brief here charges that RKO employs percentage contracts in licensing theatres affiliated with other defendants as a form of profit-sharing between it and other defendants. Are you familiar with those charges, Mr. Miller? A. I am.

Q. Have you made any analysis to determine to what extent RKO uses percentage contracts in dealing with affiliated theatres? A. Yes, I did.

Q. And again, was this analysis based on RKO's answers to the Government's interrogatories covering the first run exhibition of its first block of '43-44 product in cities of 25,000 population and over? A. Yes.

Q. Now, where did you get the information with respect to the type of contract used in these first-run exhibitions? A. From the exchange and home office records.

Q. And, again, those are available here in New York? A. They are.

(2445)

Q. Now what did your analysis show with respect to the use of percentage contracts on this first block of pictures as between affiliated and unaffiliated theatres? And I think for simplicity, if you will limit yourself to what we call the controlled basis of affiliation—that is, where we are classified as affiliated, or you classified as affiliated theatres in which there is an interest of 50 per cent or more—— A. On that basis, the whole block of five pictures, about 43 per cent of the first-run exhibition played in affiliated houses on a percentage basis, and about 39 per cent played in unaffiliated theatres on a percentage basis.

Q. Now, did you make a further study to break that down to the case of where the percentage contract was what was testified to here this afternoon by Mr. Mochrie as a percentage to a split? A. Yes, we did.

Q. And, again, did you distribute the use of that type of contract as between affiliated and unaffiliated theatres in these cities? A. Yes, we did.

Q. And what did your figures show there? A. Well, in each instance the number of exhibitions played on that basis was slightly under 6 per cent in both the affiliated theatres and the unaffiliated theatres.

Q. In other words, there is very little difference between either? A. Very little difference.

(2446)

Mr. Davis: What per cent did he name?

The Witness: Slightly under six per cent.

Q. That is, of course, the average for the whole block? A. Yes.

Mr. Wright: Is he testifying to figures that are on these things that they are offering in evidence?

Mr. Whittlesey: He is, Mr. Wright. I have not offered them. I would like to ask him a few more questions.

By Mr. Whittlesey:

Q. Now, did you work out these figures again on the Government's basis of affiliation, that basis upon which in any theatre in which any defendant has any interest is classified as affiliated? A. I did.

Q. And did you work these figures out on the basis of each one of the pictures in the block as well as the whole block? A. Yes.

Q. The figures as to which you have just testified were the average for the whole block, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. When you say you broke it down for the various pictures on these two bases, is that set forth on these sheets marked Table 1 and Table 2? A. Yes.

Mr. Whittlesey: I would like to have these marked for identification.

(2447)

Q. Now I wish, Mr. Miller, you would take this Table 1 and briefly tell us how these figures operate and what is shown, if you will take one of the pictures first. A. Table 1 is on the basis, on our basis of affiliation. That is including as affiliated theatres only those in which one or more defendants other than RKO had an interest of 50 per cent or more. I will select the picture that had the widest distribution in the block. That is Lady Takes a Chance. There are two columns for that picture. The first one shows the exhibitions in the affiliated theatres, and the second column shows the exhibitions in the unaffiliated theatres.

Q. That is the total exhibitions, regardless of what the type of contract was used in each class of theatre, right? A. That is on the first-run.

Q. Right. A. The first line shows that there were 236 exhibitions in affiliated theatres and 195 in unaffiliated theatres of Lady Takes a Chance.

Q. All right. A. Now then, below that, we show how many of these exhibitions were on a flat basis. They were relatively small for this picture. They were slightly less than 13 per cent for affiliated theatres and slightly over 16 per cent for unaffiliated theatres.

Q. Now your next line deals with the number of these (2448) pictures in terms of percentage which were licensed on a percentage basis of any kind, right? A. Yes.

Q. And what does that show? A. That shows that over 87 per cent of the exhibitions were on a percentage basis——

Q. To affiliated theatres? A. In affiliated theatres, and about 83½ per cent of the exhibitions in unaffiliated theatres.

Q. Now let us take the percentages to a split type of contract——

Judge Bright: Can't we read this? Why waste the time of the Court?

Mr. Whittlesey: I am perfectly willing to offer them.

Judge Hand: This was to be a short witness. It is now two hours and a half.

Mr. Whittlesey: I can say this, your Honor, I am practically through with him except for one more set of charts.

I should like to offer those exhibits in evidence.

(Defendant RKO's Exhibits 18 and 19 for identification received in evidence.)

Q. Now, Mr. Miller, the Government has also stated in its trial brief here that the defendants have imposed high minimum admission price restrictions on unaffiliated subsequent run theatres so as to siphon off the admission price dollar into affiliated first-run theatres. Are you familiar with that charge? A. Yes.
(2449)

Q. And have you made any analysis of RKO's answers to the Government's interrogatories in the light of that charge? A. Yes, I have.

Q. What sort of an analysis did you make? A. We selected the picture, Lady Takes a Chance, and we analyzed the contracts to ascertain just what minimum admission price requirements appeared on those contracts, and in doing so we took those exhibitions in which the subsequent run was in an unaffiliated theatre following a first-run exhibition in an affiliated theatre. And in doing this we limited it to those cities of 50,000 population and over; there happened to be 62 such cities——

Q. That was because the Government's interrogatories, so far as any run after first was concerned, started only with those cities of 50,000 or more, isn't that right? A. That is right.

Q. So you took each situation on these answers for this picture in which the subsequent run was an independent theatre and the prior run had been an affiliated theatre, correct? A. That is right.

Q. And what did your analysis show as to the minimum admission prices, if you can tell us briefly on that? A. Well, there were 470 such exhibitions, and more than half of those had a minimum admission price of 15 cents or less. There were only 8 that were over 40 cents.

Q. Now, to save time, Mr. Miller, I might ask you, did you prepare a table breaking down the use of these minimum admission prices, and also set forth those figures in graphic form? A. I did.

Q. Is this the table? A. Yes.

Q. And is that graph the graph to which you refer? A. That is correct.

Mr. Whittlesey: I would like to have those marked for identification as RKO's Exhibits 20 and 21.

(Marked Defendant RKO's Exhibits 20 and 21 for identification.)

Mr. Whittlesey: I offer those in evidence.

Q. Now, Mr. Miller, did you prepare one final computation in which you took first-run in an independent theatre and subsequent runs also in an independent theatre and make a study to determine the use of minimum admission prices in that situation where both theatres were independent? A. Yes, we did.

Q. And did you set up your findings there also in the form of a table and a graph? A. I did.

Q. I ask you whether this table and this graph set forth your findings? A. Yes, they do.

Mr. Whittlesey: Will you mark these?

(2451)

(Marked Defendant RKO's Exhibits 22 and 23 for identification.)

Mr. Davis: May we have the question read?

(Question referred to read.)

Mr. Davis: Now may I inquire what is meant by the use of minimum admission prices in that question?

Mr. Whittlesey: I think I can clear that up for you, Mr. Davis?

Judge Hand: Speak up.

Mr. Whittlesey: Excuse me, your Honor.

Q. The price to which you refer here as a minimum admission price appeared in the exhibition contracts in question, did it not? A. Yes, it did.

Q. Was it the price filled in in the blank space on the contract? A. Yes.

Mr. Whittlesey: Does that answer your question?

Mr. Davis: I do not quite understand yet. You are asking on the basis of the minimum admission price, you are asking him to make some comparison between an independent first-run and an independent subsequent run. But what the comparison is you are making, I do not understand.

The Witness: It is a comparison of exhibitions in the affiliated theatres as compared with unaffiliated theatres. That is what the contracts show with respect to those different types of exhibition.

(2452)

Mr. Davis: Is it the number of contracts? Is it revenue derived?

The Witness: It is the number, the number of exhibitions.

Mr. Whittlesey: I offer RKO's Exhibit 20, 21, 22 and 23 in evidence.

(Defendant RKO's Exhibits 20, 21, 22 and 23 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Whittlesey: That is all.

Mr. Wright: It the Court please, there are a great many questions that I have about these exhibits, but I think they can best be answered outside of court, if it is understood that we can recall him if we can't straighten out these things.

Judge Hand: We will make the ruling that they are admitted subject to correction.

Mr. Wright: There is just one thing.

Cross Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. I think you gave some figures there for which there was no tabulation. Could we have a copy of whatever you testified from as to the 92 cities? You gave some percentages and I believe there was no tabulation offered in evidence which contained them. Can you give us a copy of the sheet that you were testifying from? A. That was from my working papers, but I can give you a copy or a digest of that.
(2453)

Mr. Wright: All right.

Mr. Rafferty: It is also understood that they are admitted subject to any other objection any other distributor may have?

Judge Hand: They are admitted subject to correction.

Mr. Rafferty: We are going to object generally there in addition.

Judge Hand: All right, you may do so.

Mr. Leisure: That is all, Mr. Miller.

(Witness excused.)

Mr. Leisure: We have an affidavit. With the Court's permission I will simply have it incorporated into the record in order to save time. That is all.

(2454)

(The stipulation referred to is as follows:)

"STIPULATION

"The undersigned hereby stipulate that Charles W. Koerner, if called to the witness stand, would testify as set forth in the attached affidavit, identified as Appendix A and the several exhibits attached thereto, identified as Koerner Exhibits 1 to 4, inclusive. Date: New York, N. Y., October 26, 1945.

(Sgd) Robert L. Wright,
Robert L. Wright,
Attorney for Plaintiff.

(Sgd) George S. Leisure,
George S. Leisure.

(Sgd) Donovan, Leisure, Newton & Lumbard,
Attorneys for Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, RKO-Radio Pictures, Inc., Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, RKO-Proctor Corporation and RKO-Midwest Corporation.

"AFFIDAVIT OF CHARLES W. KOERNER

STATE OF NEW YORK,
COUNTY OF NEW YORK } ss.:

"CHARLES W. KOERNER, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

"My name is Charles W. Koerner. I reside in Los Angeles, California, and am presently the vice-president in charge of production of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., with headquarters in Los Angeles. Except for two years service during the first World War I have been in the motion picture business since 1915. From about 1919 to 1926 I was employed in the distribution of motion pictures, first for Universal and later for First National Pictures. Then I was employed in theatre operations from 1926 to 1931 by George Mann Theatres in San Francisco and from 1931 to 1942 by RKO. Since 1942 I have had my present position with RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.

"As vice-president in charge of production of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., I determine our policies with respect to production and am in charge of the entire production activities of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. The great majority of our productions are made at the main studio in Hollywood, which has 14 stages. In the Hollywood studio are located our executive offices, as well as the various departments necessary to conduct our production activities. These departments include departments for stories, scenarios, casting, research, architectural designing, dress designing, wardrobe, make-up, photography, sound, music, recording, dubbing and publicity, as well as the usual executive, accounting, budget, supply, transportation and legal departments. There are also a number of others which I have not enumerated.

"RKO's other studio, the RKO-Pathe studio located at (2456)

Culver City, has less stage space but more area than the Hollywood studio and in which there are standing permanent sets which are used for outdoor scenes. In addition, we have in the San Fernando Valley a ranch of approximately 160 acres. There we also have standing sets such as western street scenes, small villages, etc.

"Competition in the field of production begins with the acquisition of story material. Let us take, for example, the competition between producing companies for story material which can be utilized in the making of successful motion pictures. In order to explore and discover the kind of stories which lend themselves to successful pictures, RKO maintains both in its home office in New York and in the studio story departments whose function it is to obtain and review all story and dramatic material and to make recommendations concerning their acquisition to us. Such story departments are also maintained by our competitors in the continuous and aggressive search for suitable story material. It has been the experience of all motion picture producing companies that the type of story that carries the greatest appeal with the public is one based either upon a best selling book or upon a successful play. As the result of the keen competitive bidding for this kind of story the price ultimately paid by the successful bidder is very substantial. We have (2457) recently completed a deal for the motion picture rights to So Well Remembered. James Hilton's recent novel, at a cost of approximately $300,000. I recall no best seller or successful play suitable for motion pictures which has not had the interest of two or more production companies.

"There is also competition for the services of stars and feature players. RKO maintains a constant search for new talent. We have a staff for this purpose with offices in New York and Hollywood. It is their duty to attend shows, be in contact with all agents and visit little theatres, summer stock companies, night clubs and other places where talent may be uncovered. We have expended over a period of the last five years several million dollars in getting such potential stars or feature players under contract and attempting to develop them into established motion picture personalities. During this period in spite of this large expenditure, we have succeeded in developing only two or three important players.

"There is also competition for every other type of creative personality in Hollywood, including directors, writers, cameramen, composers, musical directors, sound technicians, set designers, decorators, and dress designers.
(2458)

"We have three types of contract which we make with stars, feature players, directors, producers and other production personnel. The first type is the single picture contract under which the personality agrees to make one picture for RKO. The second general type is the multiple picture contract which may take either of two forms: A contract for two pictures to be produced within one year, or a contract for one or more pictures per year for two or more years. Usually these multiple picture contracts do not fully cover the personality's time and he or she is, therefore, free to make additional pictures for other producing companies when he or she is not working for RKO. Finally, we have term contracts which call for the personality's exclusive services for a fixed period. The multiple picture contract calling for one picture a year is the type most frequently used by RKO when contracting important personalities. The single feature contract is most frequently used by RKO in contracting with other players and with other producing personnel. We do not have any term contract with any player or producer of first importance. The only term contract we have with directors of such importance are two in number. We have only one term contract with a writer of first importance. The total roster of the players under term contract to RKO numbers 35 males and 15 females players.

"To supplement the production personnel which is under term contract to RKO, we have found it necessary to secure additional personalities through multiple pictures or single picture contracts with personalities in the free lance market, through the borrowing of personalities under contract to other producing companies, and through the making of arrangements with other producing companies to share contracts for the services of personalities.

"A free lance player, writer, director, or other personality is a person who is not under a term contract to a producing company, but contracts from time to time with producing companies to participate in the making of a particular picture or pictures. RKO for many years has drawn heavily upon the free lance market in order to meet its production requirements. There are a substantial number of important personalities who are on the free lance market and in fact this market has shown a steady growth. The reason for this growth is that important artists are in demand at all times and do not need the security of a term contract. The personality is in a much better position to obtain a greater compensation for his or her services. It is not unusual for an important personality to receive $150,000 to appear in a single picture. We have paid this amount to Miss Rosalind Russell and there are many other who can (2460) and do command extremely high compensation for an appearance in a single picture. An additional advantage to the artist in being a so-called free lance is the freedom involved. The personality can choose the kind and number of pictures which he or she desires to make. The artist can also demand and await the availability of certain directors, motion picture and still cameramen and other production personnel which the personality considers will contribute to the success of the personality's performance and that of the picture. With the competition of producing companies for the services of personalities, established personalities may go into the free lance market with the assurance that there will be continuous bidding for their services on very favorable terms.

"There are no precise statistics of the number of players, writers, and directors available in the free lance market, but there are statistics on the number of established personalities in the motion picture field and the number who are under exclusive contract to RKO, Fox, Loew's, Columbia, Paramount, Warner's and Universal. Therefore, the difference will represent the number of players, writers and directors who are either free lance or are under contract to producing companies not defendants in this action.

"Virtually all established adult screen players over 18 (2461) years of age are 'A' members of the Screen Actors' Guild. There were 2,109 in number as of September 21, 1945. Of this total, 1,844 were not under term contract as of October 1, 1945 to either RKO, Fox, Loew's, Columbia, Paramount, Warner or Universal. Of this 2,109, 1054 players were entitled to star or feature billing; and of the 1054 stars and feature players only 261 were under term contract to any of the above producing companies.

"Similar figures are available with respect to writers. Virtually all established screen writers are 'Active Members' of the Screen Writers' Guild. As of September 22, 1945 of the 952 Active Members of the Screen Writers' Guild, only 174 were under term contract to the seven companies which I have designated above.

"Similar figures are also available on directors. Virtually all established directors are 'Senior Director Members' of the Screen Directors' Guild. As of October 1, 1945 of the 222 feature motion picture Senior Director Members of the Screen Directors' Guild only 75 were under term contracts with the above designated companies.

"To supplement the personalities we have under contract we also, from time to time, contract for the loan of certain stars, feature players and other important production personnel. Such borrowings are also necessary where the proposed picture requires a particular personality or special talent which we do not have under contract or are unable to obtain in the free lance market, whereas some other studio might have a personality under contract who would be especially appropriate. Attached hereto as Koerner Exhibit 1 is a list of the borrowings by RKO since 1940. The fact that a producer from whom we borrow is a so-called major producer, or a so-called independent producer, does not constitute a factor in determining whether or not or from whom we shall borrow. Reference to this exhibit will show the fact that 62 loans have been made to RKO by major producers and 29 loans by independent producing companies from 1940 to 1945, but the loans which we have negotiated from independent producing companies have brought to us a substantial number of more important players for our top flight pictures. As for example: During the last year we borrowed from Selznick, whose company's name is Vonguard, Dorothy McGuire, the female star, and John Cromwell, director, in making the picture entitled 'The Enchanted Cottage', one of our most important productions. We are nearing completion of a picture entitled 'From This Day Forward' with Joan Fontaine as the female star, whom we borrowed from Selznick. We have just completed another important picture 'The Spiral Staircase' and to make this picture we borrowed from Selznick Ethel Barrymore and Dorothy McGuire, the female stars, Robert Siodmak, the director, Dore Schary, the producer, and Ronda Fleming, a featured player. We have started to shoot another of our top flight pictures entitled 'Notorious'. For this picture we borrowed from Selznick Ingrid Bergman the female star, and Alfred Hitchcock, the director. We have commenced another picture entitled 'They Dream Of Home', for which we borrowed again Dorothy McGuire and Dore Schary to produce. For another picture entitled 'All Kneeling' we borrowed from Selznick Alan Marshall for the male lead and Joan Fontaine for the female lead.

"Other producing companies from time to time have the same need for borrowing personalities as does RKO. Accordingly, we have had occasion to contract with other producers for the loan out of personalities under contract to RKO. When we receive a request for a contract for the loan out of a personality under contract to us, a very important factor in determining our action on the request, is whether the story or part is suitable for the personality and whether the personality wishes to be loaned. His value to us can be maintained and enhanced only if he is used in a proper part, in a suitable story, in a good production. Other factors considered include the ability of the borrower to pay a proper price for the loan out and his reputation for making good pictures. In determining whether we will make a loan out each deal stands upon its own merits and we do not consider as factors whether the producer requesting the loan out has made or may make loans to RKO, nor whether the producer's pictures are regularly exhibited in RKO theatres nor whether the borrowing producer is a major producing company or an independent producing company. The compensation to be received for loaning out a personality is not fixed by any formula, but by individual negotiation. The valuation is governed in the main by RKO's opinion as to the box office value of the person RKO is lending. This varies depending on the particular personality, but in any event RKO tries to obtain as favorable terms as possible when it loans out a personality and usually loans at a profit. RKO's determination of the price to be charged for a loan out is not affected by the fact that the producer is a major or an independent producing company. Attached hereto is Koerner's Exhibit 2, which is a schedule of the loan outs made by RKO to others of personalities from 1940 to 1945. This exhibit shows that during this period RKO has made 30 loan outs to major producing companies and 38 loan outs to independent producing companies.

"Also to supplement our available talent, we have made arrangements to share the services of certain players with (2465) other producing companies, which arrangements are generally called talent sharing arrangements. A talent sharing arrangement comes about when one producing company which has the contract for the services of the particular personality feels that it cannot advantageously utilize the full services of this personality and is willing to permit another producing company desiring to utilize the services of that personality to participate in the contract. Attached hereto as Koerner Exhibit 3 is a schedule of the talent sharing arrangements in which RKO has participated during the past five years. In entering into such arrangements it is immaterial whether the other participant is a major producing company or an independent producing company, and, as the schedule shows, 12 of the 21 arrangements which RKO has made have been with independent producing companies. Furthermore, as the schedule shows, in 7 of these 12 arrangements the independent producing company had the contract originally for the services of the personality.

"In addition to making such personalities as we have under contract available to other producers on loan outs, we also make available to them studio space and sets which are not being used by us. In fact, production facilities and equipment of the RKO Pathe Studio at Culver City are almost constantly under lease to outside producers. Pres- (2466) ently these facilities are being used by Sol Lesser, Edward Small and David Selznick, independent producers. When we have such space available we are prepared to lease it at a fixed rental to anyone who is able to pay that particular price, and in determining whether or not to make such a lease it is immaterial whether the lessee is a major producing company or an independent producing company. Attached hereto as Koerner Exhibit 4 is a schedule of the leases of stage space and sets at the RKO main studio and ranch during the period January 1, 1939 to September 23, 1943. The record for the years given is typical and the pattern indicated thereby has continued. As the exhibit shows clearly the majority of these leases were to producing companies other than major producing companies.

"In addition to leasing studio space we frequently make contractual arrangements under which we lend out camera, sound and electrical equipment belong to RKO. In making these arrangements it is immaterial to us whether the other party to the contract is a major producing company or an independent producing company. During the period from January, 1938 to December 18, 1943 we made a total of 314 such rental agreements, of which 150 were to major producing companies and 164 to independent producing companies. The record for these years is also typical and the (2467) pattern has continued.

"Due to disturbed conditions at our studios we have been unable to prepare a schedule of the leasing by RKO of production facilities and equipment of the RKO Pathe Studio during the last five years, and for the same reason have been unable to furnish recent detailed information concerning the leasing by RKO of stage space and sets at the RKO main studio, and of camera, sound and electrical equipment.

"The charges that RKO has participated in a combination or conspiracy to exclude independent producers from access to production personnel and equipment and that RKO has combined or conspired to monopolize the production of motion pictures are untrue. As a matter of fact, a number of men formerly connected with RKO have become and are now independent producers, including Jules Levy, David Selznick, Leo McCarey, Leo Spitz, Sam Briskin, Eddie Alperson, Eddie Small and Sol Lessor. The independent producers in Hollywood have access to all the available stars, feature players and other production personnel in the free lance market and many of them have important personalities under contract to them. Furthermore, many important personalities have contracted with one producing company for their services with respect to one picture a year and are available to other producing companies, including independent producers, for the portion of their time not committed under contract. For example, RKO now has contracts with a number of important players for a single picture a year for a varying number of years, including, among others, such players as Ginger Rogers, Cary Grant, John Garfield, Myrna Loy, Paul Lucas, John Wayne, and Randolph Scott. On the average it requires from 10 to 12 weeks to complete the average important picture, thus leaving these personalities with approximately 40 weeks of each year when their services are available to producers other than RKO.

"To the best of my knowledge there is available to independent producing companies adequate studio facilities and equipment for the making of their pictures. I know of no instance where an independent producer or producing company have the ability and the other prerequisites to the production of marketable pictures has failed to secure needed players and other production personnel and studio space and equipment necessary to make its or his picture or has failed to obtain national distribution. RKO has consistently cooperated with capable independent producers in loaning to them personnel and leasing to them space and equipment and in distributing their pictures.

"The integrated organization under which RKO produces, distributes and exhibits its pictures has many important advantages to the production activities of the company which make it the form of organization best adapted to the successful operation of our company. It is highly essential that the studio have the advantage of theatre affiliations so that the proper presentation of its pictures is assured. This security of playing time allows the producing company to take certain risks in making new types of pictures with known personalities in unusual or new types of parts. Similarly, assured of the cooperation of the RKO theatres, we are encouraged to make pictures introducing talented but relatively unknown players, and thus to attempt to broaden the source of public entertainment and to increase the number of available artists. For example, our picture 'Days of Glory' was made with a completely new cast and brought to the screen for the first time Gregory Peck. This picture led to his appearance in 'Keys of the Kingdom' and 'Valley of Decision' and established a new star enjoying great public popularity.

"Another important advantage to the producer from integration of production and exhibition is the greater financial strength of the whole as a result of the stabilizing effect of theatre earnings. Production is the speculative phase of the motion picture industry, for it involves the investment of millions of dollars on features representing our judgment as to the box office attractiveness of a story and cast. The fluctuations of our production income are therefore quite substantial. The steady income from our theatres cushions these fluctuations, and tends to make the consolidated earnings of the company more stable.

"Through the RKO affiliated theatres we are assured of not only the prompt exhibition of our pictures but their exploitation in such a manner as to establish their popularity with the public and to assure their success generally. The availability of exhibition in RKO theatres gives us a direct indication as to public tastes and as to the trends in the types of pictures that are receiving public acceptance and allows us to adjust our production plans in respect to such trends. Our theatres naturally play a wide variety of pictures, thus giving us a broad basis for judgment as to public trends.

"Each of the accompanying schedules has been prepared from the original books and records of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. and the information incorporated in such schedules is correct.

(Sgd) CHARLES W. KOERNER."

(2471)

Judge Bright: Is that the end of the RKO case?

Mr. Leisure: We have a stipulation that we are discussing with Mr. Wright, and I think that will end our case.

Mr. Raftery: We still have to extend the 73 to 92. I have got practically all of it finished. I will have the whole of Universal finished in the morning, and I would like the privilege in the morning of putting in the 73 to 92. We have agreed on practically everything.

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor, we have—I hate to say it—but a few statistics. My charts, though, are going to be animated cartoons. I do not know whether your Honors want to start with them tonight or not. They won't take very long. And then tomorrow Mr. Seymour and I want to offer some evidence with respect to the arbitration awards and system. In addition to that I have a stipulation in Mr. Wright's hands which he has not had an opportunity to clear, but I am sure he will clear it, and I will have a brief statement to read.

Judge Hand: Has Mr. Caskey anything more?

Mr. Pride: We have some stipulations, your Honor, with respect to testimony of some of the National Theatres executives whom we have not called because we believe we can work it out with Mr. Wright. We have discussed it with him and we expect to have no further oral testimony along that line.

Judge Hand: I see.

Mr. Pride: I think we will have a few more exhibits.

Judge Hand: Very well. We shall adjourn until tomorrow morning at 10:30.

(Adjourned to November 9, 1945, at 10:30 a.m.)

(2472)

New York, November 9, 1945,
10.30 o'clock a.m.

Trial resumed.

Mr. Leisure: If your Honors please, yesterday, when the witness Mochrie was on the witness stand, Judge Bright asked the witness if he knew of any specific instances in which the RKO clearance varied as to first-run theatres from that of any other defendant and the witness replied he knew there were such instances, but without his records he could not specify them. I intended to have him supply us with a list of such theatres, but I find that that will not be necessary. It is already in the record, Judge Bright, in the 14 cases, appeal court cases, submitted by the Government. At least five of those cases that are in the record show that RKO's clearance varies from one or the other of the other defendants, so it will not be necessary to call anyone on that.

Those are the 14 clearance cases, and if your Honors wish to make a note of it, they are appeal court decisions 12, 24, 52, 104 and 109.

I indicated yesterday that we had some stipulations to take up with Mr. Wright, and there are two of those. I have tables here which I would like to offer in evidence showing, as to the Cincinnati theatres, the size and the data, and they are the same as Mr. Davis offered with respect to New York and the same as we offered with respect to New York. I would like to offer those, and I have taken them up with Mr. Wright, and I believe there will be no objection.

Mr. Wright: We have no objection.

(Marked Defendant RKO's Exhibit 24.)

Mr. Leisure: Also I offer a table showing the theatres operated by RKO, and it gives the state, the location, the theatre, the seating capacity and the acquisition cost and so forth. I have taken that up with Mr. Wright, and I believe there will be no objection to that.

Mr. Wright: Of course, as to this exhibit, it merely duplicates what is already in the record twice as to the theatres they operate. The only thing that this adds to what is previously in there is these acquisition costs, and I believe those are completely immaterial and irrelevant to any issue in the case. I just want to note that objection.

Mr. Leisure: The acquisition costs supplement Mr. Rathvon's testimony. That is why we are offering that.

(Marked Defendant RKO's Exhibit 25.)

Mr. Leisure: That finishes the case for RKO, if the (2474)

Court, please.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honors, I offer in evidence this diagram showing the dates of first-run exhibition of Warner's Princess O'Rourke in the 92 cities. That is in line with the other similar things. I do not like to regard Princess O'Rourke as a guinea pig, but this was our guinea pig picture.

I would like to, as I put these in, just briefly call attention to the significance here. This situation arose when there was a suggestion of holding back the pictures from independent distribution. This shows that our first showing was at an independent theatre in Buffalo, 20th Century Theatre in Buffalo. That is the red line. Again, red indicates an independent theatre.

Then, the next day we opened up at our theatre in Philadelphia. Some substantial time later, oh, a couple of weeks later, we opened it at the Strand in New York City, and, meanwhile, it was shown at the Metropolitan Theatre in Boston, at this independent theatre in Dayton, Ohio, at an independent theatre in Indianapolis, and your Honors can see from the coloring the way the independent showings were spaced in with these dark lines which are Warner theatres, and the green lines are affiliated theatres of other companies.

Judge Hand: What was the Boston theatre?

Mr. Proskauer: The Boston theatre is—— (2475)

Judge Hand: I mean, who owns it.

Mr. Proskauer: It shows on here, your Honor. I cannot answer it from memory. It was the Metropolitan Theatre in Boston, and that is an independent theatre and it opened there on the 28th of October, which was about two weeks after the first showing of the picture.

Mr. Seymour: The Metropolitan is an M & P. theatre, Judge Proskauer.

Mr. Proskauer: What does M. & P. mean?

Mr. Seymour: Mullin and Pinanski, which is a Paramount affiliate, if it is the Metropolitan you are talking about.

(2476)

Mr. Proskauer: I made a misstatement about Boston. It was not in that theatre at all. That did not show at the Mullin & Pinanski theatre in Boston until the 15th of December. The line that I should have described there was the State Theatre in Tampa.

Judge Hand: Yes, I think you called it Boston when you started.

Mr. Proskauer: No, that was Buffalo, your Honor.

Judge Bright: The initial showing you said was in Buffalo?

Mr. Proskauer: Yes.

Judge Hand: Oh, yes, the initial showing, but I thought you mentioned Boston.

Mr. Proskauer: No. My eye just did not take the line across. That is Boston (indicating) and it is shown as an affiliated theatre. This line here was an independent theatre, the State Theatre in Tampa.

Judge Hand: What was it?

Mr. Proskauer: The Buffalo theatre was the Twentieth Century, and it has been testified there was no connection with Twentieth Century-Fox.

Judge Hand: Yes, an independent.

(Marked Warner Bros. Exhibit W-2.)

Mr. Proskauer: Now, I offer in evidence a schedule which I am going to use as a basis for other schedules, so I am not going to burden you with very much attention to this schedule as such until I collate it with other schedules. This schedule is the total film rentals paid by Warner Bros. theatres for the years 1931 to 1945 inclusive, and I have said to Mr. Wright that they will all be taken subject to his check. They are taken directly from our books.

(Marked Warner Bros. Exhibit W-3.)

Mr. Proskauer: What I am endeavoring to do, your Honors, is not to burden you with a consideration of a lot of charts until I can show you what I believe to be their real significance.

Your Honors will notice on this chart, however, the variation from year to year in the percentage of our film rentals that we paid to other companies. For instance, take Paramount. In 1931 we paid them 5.6 per cent of our revenue. In 1932 we paid them 14 per cent. When you get down to 1940 it got back to 11 per cent.

Take Loew's: We paid them 14 per cent in 1931, and it got up to 24 per cent in 1940, and it got back to 16 per cent in 1945.

While these percentages do not show huge variance, that means an enormous variance in money.

Judge Hand: That is, all others are independents?

Mr. Proskauer: All others are what we call the independents.

Judge Hand: Now, these are total film rentals for what kind of theatres? All theatres?

Mr. Proskauer: All Warner theatres. These are the film rentals we paid on all runs to the other companies.

Judge Bright: Just on features?

Mr. Proskauer: Oh, no, shorts and everything.

Now, the next chart supplements that by showing the total film rentals received by Warner Bros. for licensing their pictures in the United States and Canada.

(Marked Warner Bros. Exhibit W-4.)

Mr. Proskauer: Just preliminary and not by way of any accentuation, you will notice huge variances there. For example, Loew's paid [redacted] a percentage in 1931 of about three times what it paid us in 1945.

Mr. Davis: That is Loew's percentage of your total take?

Mr. Proskauer: That is right. There are similar variances all through.

Loew's got down to one-half of one per cent, and in another year they were up to 4.8 per cent; and there are those variances which I cannot expect the Court to keep in mind but which I will advert to; but I am really offering this, as I said, as a basis for some supplemental charts that use both of these as a base.

The next chart I offer is the total film rentals received by Warner Bros. and its subsidiaries from all sources, both domestic and foreign.

(Marked Warner Bros. Exhibit W-5.)

Mr. Proskauer: When I come to brief I am going to ask your Honors to note in that chart the large percentage of our revenue that came from foreign sources, namely, 31.3 per cent for 1944; that we got from the affiliated Big Four, so-called, 19.4 per cent of our rentals. I am going to build up a picture of how deep our financial interest is in doing business with a great mass of independent theatres throughout the country.

Mr. Wright: Just one comment about this exhibit: I take it there is no dispute, is there, that when you go into the foreign field, of course, a substantial portion of your foreign revenue also comes from theatres in which these defendants are also interested——

Mr. Proskauer: I have never heard that and I have not the slightest information on it.

Mr. Wright: Well, you are aware of the fact that the other defendants have theatre interests all over the world?

Mr. Proskauer: Well, I will not make a concession on that, but I will do this with you: We will in the interval go over those figures and agree on them with you, and we will be glad to add as a supplemental schedule any portion of our foreign income that comes from affiliated theatres.

Mr. Wright: We had attempted by the pleadings to confine the case to what occurs in the domestic market here. Now, we do not have any interest in going outside; but if the defendants are going to be permitted to go outside the domestic field and offer foreign figures, then we are almost getting into another lawsuit. There ought to be some limit here.

Mr. Proskauer: Well, we are not so much concerned about getting into another lawsuit one way or the other, your Honors. I am offering this because, as I said in my opening, I am going to argue that this huge industry is in large measure dependent on its foreign business for existence, and that if anything is done here which destroys the quality of these pictures along the lines that have been developed, it is going to be a death blow to this industry. I do not want to argue my case fully now. If you have a criticism that this ought to show what of our foreign sales go to theatres that have some source or connection with affiliates, I tell you I am very glad to take that information and add it to this schedule.

(2481)

Mr. Wright: If that is counsel's defense, I submit it is a defense which really has nothing to do with the case that is before the Court.

Mr. Proskauer: Does your Honor want me to argue that now?

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Judge Bright: Judge Proskauer, I do not find that figure you just referred to which you were going to emphasize in your brief.

Judge Goddard: 31.3 per cent, isn't that it?

Mr. Proskauer: Yes, 31.3 per cent, foreign other than Canada, 31.3 per cent.

I offer in evidence a schedule showing comparatively for the years 1930 to the season of 1944 inclusive the film rentals paid to Loew's by Warner's and the film rentals received by Warner's from Loew's and its affiliates. To that I should like to call attention: If you begin with the year 1931-32 you will see that we paid the Loew's in that year just short of 41 per cent less than we did the previous year. We got from Loew's 43.9 per cent, or just short of 44 per cent more than we did the previous year.

If you go to 1933-34, you see the amount we paid Loew's went up by 45½ per cent. The amount we received from Loew's went up only 14 per cent.

(2482)

If you go to the next year you will see that we increased what we paid Loew's by 3 per cent. They decreased what they paid us by 31 per cent.

The following year we paid them an increase of 22.7 per cent. They paid us a decrease of 62 per cent.

The following year we paid them 25 per cent more than they paid us the previous year. We got from them 18 per cent less.

The succeeding year had no significance. The figures were about the same.

When you come to 1938-39, however, we increased 13 per cent and they increased 22 per cent in what they paid us.

When you come to the following year, we paid them 25 per cent more and they paid us 35 per cent less.

When you come to the following year, we paid them 15 per cent less; they paid us 8 per cent more.

When you come to the following year, we paid them 6 per cent less; they paid us 7 per cent more.

The next year just about balanced.

But the following year we increased with them, what we paid them, 4 per cent; they decreased with us 10 per cent.

And there was a slight variance in the subsequent year.

(2483)

I am going to offer a similar schedule for each company. I am not going to burden you with an analysis now of each one of these, but I am offering it as a basis of proof of what I said in my opening that there is absolutely no pattern between what we buy from and what we sell to any other company.

(Marked Defendant Warner's Exhibit W-6.)

Mr. Proskauer: I am not going to burden you with comment on the other schedules, your Honor. I am simply saying we shall contend that they follow the same lack of pattern.

(Marked Defendant Warner's Exhibit W-7.)

Mr. Wright: Which companies are which numbers?

Judge Bright: Paramount is No. 7, and W-6 is Loew's.

(Marked Defendant Warner's Exhibits W-8 and W-9.)

Mr. Proskauer: The next schedule I offer is a computation of the average cost of each feature picture made by Warner Bros. for the years 1931 to 1945, and in parallel column for each year there is the average theatre admission price at Warner Bros. theatres.

Judge Hand: That is, every kind of a theatre?

Mr. Proskauer: All our Warner theatres.

(Marked Defendant Warner's Exhibit W-10.)

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I submit that there is absolutely no relation or could not be whatsoever between the figures that are on the chart here. I do not see how this could possibly be accepted as proof of anything. If this is regarded as the proof that counsel was promising to the effect that costs had not been passed on to the public, there is only one way I know that could be made and that is by a showing as to profit margin. That material, material of this kind, cannot possibly establish the fact that such increases in costs that occurred were not absorbed by the consumer.

(2484)

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor, this chart shows that in 1931 our average feature film cost us $337,000 and our average theatre admission price was 35 cents. Skipping the intervening years, it shows that in 1945 our average feature cost was $1,371,000, or a little over four times, as I rapidly calculate it, what it was in 1931, and our average theatre price was 1.9 per cent higher than it was back in 1931.

Mr. Wright: Could we have a statement at this time as to how that average theatre admission price was computed?

Mr. Proskauer: It is stated on the schedule. The average admission price is determined by dividing the box office receipts by the attendance, the data given excluding admission taxes.

(2485)

Mr. Wright: That, I take it then, does not represent the average price at any particular theatre at all, is that right?

Mr. Proskauer: It represents the average admission price of all our theatres. If you want them theatre by theatre, we will be glad to supply it. I do not see how the Court would be much interested in that.

Mr. Wright: I suppose we can see the work sheets that were used?

Mr. Proskauer: Certainly. You have seen everything else we have. I don't see why you should not see those worksheets.

(Marked Defendant Warner's Exhibit W-11.)

Mr. Proskauer: For Mr. Seymour's benefit, I think I ought to state that when we use the words "Paramount Pays" we mean the whole Paramount group and not the Paramount Company itself.

Mr. Seymour: I thought I had established quite early in this case that wherever anybody said that, they could mean only that.

Mr. Proskauer: I was afraid of reprisals. I next offer in evidence a schedule of the percentage of Warner film costs paid to Warner's as film rental by the Warner Bros. theatres and theatres affiliated with the four major companies.

(2486)

The significance of that is that figuring in all that we charge our own theatres, and we charge them on the basis you have heard in the testimony, and all we get from the four major defendants, the average for eight years is that that constitutes 55 per cent of our film cost. I am not talking about overhead now, I am just talking about actual negative cost of the production of the picture, and that that is an indication of how much we rely on the independent trade, so-called, to sustain ourselves.

I next offer in evidence a comparison on the cost of a positive print of Princess O'Rourke, and the average film rental per booking. The source of that information is entirely answers to interrogatories with the one exception that we have used the figure $130 as the approximate cost of making a positive print.

(Marked Defendant Warner's Exhibit W-12.)

Mr. Proskauer: This analysis will show that of the approximately 14,000 bookings of that picture, 12,926 of them brought in an average film rental of $78.45, being just a little more than half the cost of the positive print, again showing the enormous dependence we have on the large independent business.

The next schedule simply states our profit of our company before federal income taxes, before foreign income film royalties received for American made pictures, discounts, bond discount, and losses on sales of capital assets, and what it shows is that excluding those other items until the year 1943, when we got into this enormous expansion of attendance at theatres due to the war, we were running in the red. If you excluded particularly our foreign income——

Mr. Wright: Just a minute. I submit, if the Court please, that to receive a series of figures like this, without the form of the statements themselves, which show how these profits were computed, is completely misleading and cannot be competent proof of these facts, even if the facts are material.

Mr. Proskauer: Obviously it is not competent if objection is made to it. I will call an accountant and show he took these figures from our books.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, there are certainly published statements or statements which counsel has available that will show exactly what the division of profit was here and how these were computed, but to simply put in an overall statement——

Mr. Proskauer: I say these figures were taken from our published statements and modified on the basis of them as herein indicated except that our published statements do not sometimes show separately stated these specific exclusions which appear on our books. You can send your accountants up to check this or you can refuse to take it and I will call an accountant and prove it.

Mr. Wright: We object to this very definitely in this form. This heading contains a whole series of conclusions as to which there is no possible check——

Mr. Proskauer: Tell me one——

Mr. Wright: —on the basis of the data that is presented here.

Mr. Proskauer: Tell me one conclusion that it contains. Let us analyze that, your Honor. Profit before Federal income taxes. That is no conclusion. We have taken our Federal income taxes——

Judge Hand: What he is really objecting to is, you have not laid any foundation for it.

Mr. Proskauer: I have not laid any technical foundation for any of these things. It is just a question of whether he wants to change the manner in which we are doing this work and making me call an accountant to prove to you this was taken from our books. I have such a man in court.

Judge Hand: Do you want him to do that, Mr. Wright, if he attempts this sort of evidence?

Mr. Wright: If he wishes to put in this sort of evidence, I say that he has got to make a proper showing of what this accountant did. He talks about this as "U. S. A. Production and Distribution Divisions."

(2489)

I do not know how those divisions are set up on what basis they decide they had a loss in America and a profit abroad. I hesitate to see the Court spend time on it, because I do not see how it can possibly affect the outcome of the case one way or the other.

Judge Bright: What is the significance of this proof? What is the purpose of it?

Mr. Proskauer: The significance of the proof is exactly the same as the significance of some of my other charts, and it is to show that, lacking the foreign film rental, that our production and distribution divisions operated at a loss, an actual loss.

Judge Goddard: In the United States?

Mr. Proskauer: In the United States, yes, sir.

Judge Bright: What significance would that have to prove that you did or did not violate the Sherman Act?

Mr. Proskauer: The suggestion that was made in our opening. It really goes in part, your Honor, to the remedy which the Government is seeking of divorcement, and it is a part of our contention that if you divorce these theatres for the reasons which have been set forth here, we are going to be put in a position where we in this country, are going to lose a large part of this foreign revenue, and that the consequence of that would be as shown on this schedule that we would be back, in normal years, in the red, excluding that foreign income.

Judge Bright: Assuming all that, would that be any excuse for violating the Sherman Act?

Mr. Proskauer: Not the slightest. It bears, however, on the question as to whether there is a monopolization, and it also bears very directly on the chief issue the Government tenders us in this case which is remedy. I am going to have more to say about that, your Honors, when we put in some of this arbitration testimony in a few minutes. We have got a consent decree here, and the working of that is important. We could not move to dismiss this bill, I take it, because there already is a decree. What the Government is really doing is seeking a modification of that decree, that being a final decree, so that this question of remedy is of the essence in this trial itself.

Judge Bright: I have just been wondering whether or not that particular question might more properly come upon the termination of the decree, assuming you are bound to have violated the Sherman Act.

Mr. Proskauer: Let me say, in the almost unbelievable contingency, you should make such a finding, it still would do no harm, surely, to have this in the record, and on the basis of which we could argue before your Honors when you come to that point. I do not regard this as vital. It has been admitted with respect to other companies, Mr. Van Bergh reminds me.
(2491)

Mr. Wright: If the Court pleases, if this is intended to show, as it appears to do on its face, that the Warner Bros. theatres' profits during this period, when you have these red figures, were used to subsidize their film production and distribution——

Mr. Proskauer: There is no such intent as that.
(2492)

Mr. Wright: (Continuing) As far as I am concerned, that fact simply lends strength and adds point to the necessity of the relief we are seeking in order that there can be a free competitive market for the distribution of films in this country; but if it is intended to show that there is some necessity to have a closed market in this country, in order to have a profitable exploitation of the foreign market, I submit that, in the first place, these figures cannot possibly demonstrate anything of the kind, and if they did, that the decision as to whether or not that closed market should be permitted here for that purpose is one which would have to be made by the legislative branch of the Government and not the courts; that this is the kind of data that might be offered to a Congressional committee that was considering legislation to give these people a total or partial exemption from the Sherman Act in this country on the theory that that was desirable to protect the market abroad, but it just is completely outside any of the issues that are posed before your Honors by the pleadings in this case.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honors, I am not accustomed to having my adversaries frame my contentions for me silently, and I refuse to be put in the position of arguing any such absurdity as has been put in my mouth.

This has, in addition to what I have said, a direct bearing on the issue of monopolization. You do not ordinarily have monopolies which operate at a loss. My friend in his argument just tacitly assumed these things about closed markets and all this shibboleth of the trust buster, which has been answered in testimony here. What kind of a monopoly is it in a domestic market where I can show that in this alleged monopolistic market from 1937 to 1942 inclusive we were actually in the red with respect to our domestic production?
(2493)

Judge Hand: I am not at all sure that this is appropriate evidence at this time, but we are going to sustain this objection unless you lay a foundation.

Mr. Proskauer: I will call a witness.

Judge Hand: That is all right; it will go in then. It will go in with whatever consequences may result. We do not pay any attention to arguments to exclude it any more than we have in the past, but I think this objection is perfect.

Mr. Proskauer: So do I. I have not argued against it.

Why don't you take it subject to correction and modification, the way you have other schedules?

Mr. Wright: I will say this again, in order not to spend the time of the Court in having a witness develop from the stand what he did in getting at these figures, if we can have a comprehensive statement from him submitted to us in letter form or otherwise, and can be permitted to ask such appropriate questions as we desire to outside of the court and get the answers to them, then I have no objection.

Mr. Proskauer: All right. Mark it upon my assurance that you shall have such a letter before the sun sets tomorrow.

(Marked Defendant Warner's Exhibit W-13.)

Mr. Proskauer: My last exhibit that I offer, your Honors, I am offering, I must say frankly, following precedent. Everybody else has offered it and I do not think it is very important. It is just a statement of our theatre properties as at May 26, 1945, as they are carried on our books.

(Marked Defendant Warner's Exhibit W-14.)

Mr. Proskauer: Mr. Wright, may I read in Bernhard's statement, with your permission?

Mr. Wright: Certainly.

Mr. Proskauer: Mr. Wright has stipulated that Joseph Bernhard, if called as a witness, would testify in accordance with the statement which I hold in my hand, with the same force and effect as though he had been sworn as a witness and taken the stand and subjected himself to cross-examination.

(2495)

Judge Hand: What is the name?

Mr. Proskauer: Joseph Bernhard. I will read only a portion of this, your Honors, and then, if Mr. Wright is agreeable, let the rest just be transcribed into the record.

"I have been head of the Theatre Department of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. from December 18, 1931 until November 7, 1945. I have resigned that position as of November 7, 1945 having acquired a 50% interest in United States Pictures, Inc., engaged in the business of producing feature motion pictures. This corporation now has a contract with Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. for the distribution of pictures to be produced by it.

"I have and have had complete familiarity with the fundamental policies of the Theatre Department of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. and its subsidiaries during my tenure of office.

"I deny that said companies or any of them have at any time during my connection with them attempted to monopolize or monopolized any part of the motion picture business or that they or any of them have contracted, conspired or combined with any person or persons or company or companies so to do. I deny each and every charge in the amended and supplemental complaint herein.

"When I became head of the Theatre Department

(2496)

Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. and its subsidiaries had an interest in about 585 theatres located in 22 States and the District of Columbia. A substantial number of these theatres were situated in and around Pennsylvania and New Jersey. As a resident of Philadelphia for many years prior thereto I was generally familiar with the theatres in and about Philadelphia and knew that prior to the acquisition of the stock of Stanley Company of America by Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. the best downtown theatres suitable for motion pictures had been in the common ownership of Stanley Company of America for many years. In fact my best recollection is that Stanley Company of America had the best theatres most suitable for the exhibition of motion pictures as far back as the introduction of feature motion pictures in the industry and that Stanley Company of America had prospered under the able leadership of Jules Mastbaum, who died shortly before Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. acquired the stock of Stanley Company of America.

"I deny that Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. acquired an interest in any theatre during my tenure of office with the purpose of having theatres where they would not be in competition with the theatres of any other person or company, or that there was any agreement or understanding, express or implied, to any such effect. All our theatres were acquired in the open market and in most cases in open and keen competition. Some of such theatres were acquired in competition with competing companies producing motion pictures.

"Since I have been head of the Theatre Department I have had no policy for the expansion of theatre holdings. When I severed my connection with Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., it had an interest in 547 theatres located in 18 states and the District of Columbia, a net reduction of 38. Any theatres acquired in the interim were to protect our business and meet the varying economic conditions, shift of populations or needs caused by obsolescence which had arisen with the changes over the years.

"I have read the testimony of Harry M. Warner, president of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. in this trial and state that any references therein to the theatre situation in so far as they occurred during my connection with the company are true.

"I have always operated the Theatre Department separate and apart from the Distribution Department of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. and have never allowed the operations of the Distribution Department to influence my judgment in the licensing of pictures for the Theatre Department. I have requested counsel in this case to collate from the Theatre Department and the Distribution Department instances which tend to show what I have just stated as a fact, which are attached hereto as Exhibit 'A'."

That exhibit I will ask to have offered as part of this statement and marked.

(Marked Defendant Warner's Exhibit W-15.)

Mr. Proskauer: I will refer to that in a moment, your Honors. (Continuing reading):

"I believe the information therein contained to be true but since I do not know all of this information of my personal knowledge I requested counsel for Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. to make available to plaintiff's counsel the records of our company with respect thereto so that any inadvertent inaccuracy, if any, may be corrected.

"In my opinion the quality of motion pictures produced would be jeopardized by divorcement of theatres from production with hardship not only to the producers of motion pictures, of whom I am now one, but also to the public and to whomsoever may own or operate motion pictures in this country at the conclusion of this trial."

The rest of the statement consists of formal denials of the character that Mr. Skouras gave, and if it is agreeable to Mr. Wright and your Honors, I will just ask that that be spread upon the record.

(Balance of statement referred to is as follows:)

A. No, sir.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any two or more of them to license pictures for exhibition in the theatres in which one of the defendants had an interest, on condition or in consideration of another licensing its pictures with respect to the pictures distributed by the other? A. No.

"Q. A. No.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them not to compete with one another in the licensing of motion pictures to be exhibited in cities or towns where two or more of them had interests in theatres? A. No.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to enter into joint agreements with respect to a theatre whereby the film buying control or proceeds from the operation thereof is divided between two or more exhibitor defendants for the purpose of restraining competition unreasonably or monopolizing exhibition or distribution with respect to such theatre? A. No.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to refrain from building, buying or offering to lease theatres in areas where they might compete with existing affiliated theatres? A. No.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to acquire a monopoly or to monopolize the business of exhibiting motion pictures in the United States or any city or town thereof? A. No."
(2505)

I should like to call your attention to some of the situations shown in this exhibit. In 1930 and 1931 the distribution department did not license RKO New York Metropolitan theatres. The theatre department on the other hand licensed RKO pictures generally. The distribution department licensed Paramount affiliates. The theatre department did not license Paramount.

In 1932 the distribution department licensed Loew New York Metropolitan theatres. The theatre department did not license Loew's pictures until late in the season, when it licensed all or part of Loew's pictures in approximately 150 of the 250 theatres in which it played Loew's pictures in the previous year.

I do not want to read that whole thing, but it is with a reference to particular companies entirely corroborative of the chart I read to your Honors which showed the lack of pattern and the variances in amount; and I shall argue that this schedule bolsters up and puts flesh on that schedule of figures that I gave.

I think that is all.

Mr. Raftery: I want to supply the difference between the 73 and 92 that were missing. It will only take a minute. I have got a witness here, but if we can dispense with the witness and allow me to testify as Judge Proskauer did, we can perhaps do it a little faster.

(2506)

Judge Bright: Judge Proskauer, is that the close of the Warner case?

Mr. Proskauer: You are referring to the specific Warner testimony?

Judge Bright: Yes.

Mr. Proskauer: I think it is. I am going to ask Mr. Wright to make some kind of general stipulation with me about witnesses not called.

Would you stipulate no inference is to be drawn from——

Mr. Wright: We certainly would not.

Mr Proskauer: You want me to call all my theatre managers from all over the country?

Mr. Wright: Any testimony you want to put in the record should be in the record. We won't do it.

Mr. Proskauer: All right. You have stipulated with other people that if subordinates were called they would give the same testimony as the superior gave.

Mr. Wright: We have made no such stipulation with anyone, and we do not proposed to make any.

Mr. Proskauer: I shall have to answer your Honor's question by saying I want to reserve judgment as to whether I have got to call all my exchange managers and theatre managers from all over the United States.

Mr. Raftery: This is in reference to United Artists:

(2507)

In Exhibit 145, Government's Exhibit, Mr. Wright asked us about 92 cities but only supplied 73 that he wanted answers. We answered only 73. Since the date of our examination he gave us 19 cities, and there is the rest of 145.

In connection with United Artists Exhibit 1, the same situation applied, and we have now answered as to the other 19, which show that United Artists played Stage Door Canteen in seven independent situations in the 19 cities and 12 affiliated. And I merely want to add this as the last page of Exhibit UA-1.

Mr. Wright: That is agreeable.

Mr. Raftery: So it will be page 5 of that exhibit.

As regards the 92 cities, I have secured from Mr. Wright the Stage Door Contract which I believe Judge Bright was examining Mr. Lazarus about, which showed sliding scale percentage starting at 20 per cent, and going to 50 per cent on the first-run exhibitions in the Fox theatres; and I have picked out the situations where we had the sliding scale contracts both with independents and affiliated, and I have added one column in those towns. I had the witness here who made the computations, but Mr. Wright, I believe, will agree on them with me.

If your Honors will look at UA-1, in Los Angeles, California, we played an affiliated theatre, and according to the contract we got 20 to 50, and all it shows on UA-1 is the film rental without showing the actual percentage.

Now, in the Pathe Circle we received $3,691.29 for the first week's film rental, which represented 41 per cent of the gross receipts.

In the Ritz we received 39 per cent for one week.

In Loew's State, 42 per cent.; Grauman's Chinese, 36 per cent; the United Artists, which was the move-over, 48 per cent; in the Wilshire, a move-over, 27 per cent; in the Four Star, we played six weeks more on a move-over, and by weeks we got 35 per cent the first, 33 the second, 33 the third, 28 the fourth, 29 the fifth, and 23 the sixth.

The next situation is the Music Hall in Seattle, also an affiliated house, and also on this Stage Door Canteen contract. The first week at the Music Hall, 47 per cent; at the Paramount day and date, the first week, 38 per cent; it played a second week and we got 34 per cent.

At the Music Box we played four weeks on a move-over: the first week, 45; second week, 45; the third week, 40; 36 the fourth.

In Denver, Colorado, which are also National theatres under the same contract: The Esquire, 49 per cent; the Denver, 46 per cent; we then moved to the Aladdin and we got 45 per cent for a week; the second week of the move-over at the Aladdin, 25 per cent. The Rialto, 35 per cent; and then the Broadway for three more weeks, 39 per cent the first, 41 per cent the second, 41 per cent the third.

Now, Portland, Oregon, is an independent. We got 50 per cent the first week; 50 per cent the second week; 45 per cent the third week; and then we moved over to [illegible] independent's move-over house and got 35 per cent.

At Oakland, California, which is affiliated, at the Paramount we played two weeks; the first week 47 per cent; the second week 33 per cent.

At the Franklin we played three weeks on a move-over and got 33 per cent the first, 32 per cent the second, 27 per cent the third.

Now, San Francisco, California, is an independent. We played ten weeks. The first week, 50 per cent; 50 per cent the second; 45 per cent the third; the fourth week we got part 40 per cent and part 50 per cent. That is due to an overlapping of days. The next week we got 40 per cent; the sixth week 40 per cent; the seventh week 35 per cent; the eighth week 35 per cent; the ninth week 35 per cent, and the tenth week 25 per cent.

And in San Diego, which is affiliated, the first week 48 per cent in one house, the Fox; in the State, which played day and date, we got 45 per cent. We then moved over to the Orpheum, and we got 45 per cent the first week and 44 per cent the second week.

(2510)

At Long Beach, also affiliated, the first week 46 per cent, and then moved over to the Long Beach where we got 45 per cent the first week and 45 per cent the second week.

In Spokane, also a Fox affiliate, the first week 48 per cent; then moved over and got 36 per cent at the move-over house.

At Sacramento, also affiliated, we got 43 per cent in one house, the Senator, playing day and date with the Alhambra. They paid us 45 per cent.

Tacoma, an independent, the first week we got 50 per cent; then we moved to the Blue Mouse and we got 37½ per cent over $3,000. That is a split figure.

Then we played one extra day and got 25 per cent of the gross over $2200.

Mr. Wright: It says "under." Should that be "over."

Mr. Raftery: Oh, I am sorry. It is 25 per cent under, because it is only $83.

I won't bother offering those things I have read into the record.

Now, as regards Universal, I will be even more brief. Exhibit U-2 is the heaviest exhibit that either of these defendants have gotten into the record, and it is a list of all the franchises, and I am going to try to sum the whole exhibit up in one short sentence. We counted the franchises, and they total 770, not 500 as Mr. Scully testified. There are 770. There are 43 with affiliated and 727 with independent exhibitors.

Now to get back to the 19 cities——

Mr. Wright: Excuse me. Is that last in evidence? That is, isn't it?

Mr. Raftery: Yes. I just added them up.

Mr. Wright: Yes, I see.

Mr. Raftery: You can correct me on anything I say. But I took the holiday off and added it, and I think it is right.

Now, with regard to Universal Exhibit 1 where we answered 73, of the 19 additional which I want added as page 3 of U-1, we were only able to sell 18 of the 19. Do you remember the witness Scully said that Plam Beach Yamins would not buy his product up in Fall River. So we got 18 cities. Five we sold affiliated and 13 independent in the 92.

Mr. Wright: That will be the third page of U-1?

Mr. Raftery: Yes, the third page of U-1.

Now, as regards our exhibits, we are going to put them together and furnish the Court with a bound set of exhibits, and we won't discriminate. We will see that the affiliated get it as well as the independents.

(2512)

Mr. Davis: If the Court please, I want to read into the record a stipulation on behalf of Loew's Incorporated.

It is stipulated, that Nicholas M. Schenck, if called as a witness on behalf of Loew's Incorporated, would testify as follows, this stipulation being received with the same force and effect as if he had appeared on the stand and subjected himself to cross-examination:

"I am President of Loew's Incorporated and I have been President of Loew's since September 19, 1927. I was Vice-President of Loew's from the time it was organized in 1919 until I was elected President in 1927. As President I am the executive head of Loew's and have the general supervision of its business, including the production, the distribution and the exhibition of motion pictures in the United States. I own no interest either through stock or otherwise in any motion picture, producing, distributing or exhibiting organization other than Loew's, and I own no interest in any other form of theatrical enterprise.

"My first connection with the entertainment industry was in 1907, when I started with Mr. Marcus Loew in the business which ultimately became Loew's Incorporated. When I joined Mr. Loew he had a small organization which operated one or two vaudeville theatres and a few remodeled penny arcades where single reel motion pictures were exhibited. I started without any specific kind of work, practically as an apprentice, learning the business. I continued to be associated with Mr. Loew in the operation of the Marcus Loew Booking Agency, which was organized in 1910, and of Loew's Theatrical Enterprises which was organized in 1911 to carry on Mr. Loew's various vaudeville and motion picture enterprises.

"Our business expanded slowly and in 1919, we had about 50 theatres, mostly in New York City and most of which at that time used vaudeville and feature motion pictures. We still had a rather small organization when we formed Loew's Incorporated in 1919. Mr. Loew was the first president of Loew's Incorporated and he held that position until his death in 1927.

"Ever since Loew's became a producer and distributor of motion pictures, its feature motion pictures have been advertised and known as 'Metro Pictures'. For a long time the three divisions of the business, producing, distributing and exhibiting were carried on by separate corporations; Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation made the pictures, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation distributed the pictures, and Loew's Incorporated of which the other two companies were subsidiaries, operated motion picture theatres. While in 1936-1937, the corporate structure was simplified and the producing and distributing corporations merged into Loew's Incorporated, the three functions of producing, distributing and exhibiting were continued as completely separate units.

"As of August 31, 1944, the theatres in the United States in which Loew's had an interest either through ownership or leasehold had a book value, apportionable to Loew's interest, of nearly $69,000,000 and an assessed valuation so apportionable of about $57,000,000.

"There is not now and to the best of my knowledge, information and belief there has not been any contract, agreement, understanding or concert of action between Loew's Incorporated and any one or more of the defendants with respect to any of the following matters:

"(1) The restraining of competition among or between the defendants, or any of them, in either the production, or the distribution, or the exhibition of motion pictures.

"(2) The terms upon which or the time when feature films were or were to be licensed by any distributor defendant to any exhibitor in the United States.

"(3) The discriminating in favor of so-called 'affiliated' or so-called 'circuit' theatres and against so-called 'independent' theatres with respect to any of the license terms granted because of the fact of being a part of a circuit or because of the so-called 'affiliation'.

"(4) The exclusion of so-called 'independently' produced films from so-called 'affiliated' theatres.

"(5) The exclusion of so-called 'independent' exhibitors from operating first run theatres in competition with so-called 'affiliated' theatres.

"(6) The exclusion of so-called 'independent' exhibitors from operating subsequent run theatres on the same run as and in competition with so-called 'affiliated' theatres.

"(7) The use of first and other early-run so-called 'affiliated' theatres to control the film supply, run, clearance or admission prices of operators of competing 'unaffiliated' theatres.

"(8) The division of available films among theatres owned or controlled by two or more producers-exhibitor defendants.

"(9) The refraining from building, buying or offering to lease theatres in areas where they might compete with existing so-called 'affiliated' theatres.

"(10) The division of territory of the entire United States, or any part thereof, between the producer-exhibitor defendants for theatre operating purposes.

"(11) The loaning and exchanging of production personnel and equipment among the defendant producers on uniform and non-competitive terms and excluding so-called 'independent' producers from access to such personnel and equipment on equal terms.

"(12) The preventing or hindering of the distribution of motion pictures produced by so-called 'independent' producers.

"(13) The form of license agreement used or to be used after 1930, in licensing the exhibition of films or any provision included or to be included therein.

"(14) The film rental, whether flat or percentage, charged or to be charged by Loew's Incorporated to any theatre or theatres.

"(15) The run granted or to be granted for any theatre, whether a so-called 'affiliated' theatre or a so-called 'independent' theatre.

"(16) The clearance granted or to be granted for any theatre, whether a so-called 'affiliated' theatre or a so-called 'independent' theatre, or the manner or form in which the clearances in any city or area shall be set up or stated.

(2517)

"(17) The minimum admission prices inserted or to be inserted in licenses for any theatre, whether a so-called 'affiliated' theatre or not."

(Mr. Davis: And I may say to the Court by way of parenthesis that those different acts which are charged are to be found in the bill of complaint and in the trial brief. The effort in this catalogue is to meet the specific charges of combination which were made against this defendant in those regards.)

"In saying this I do not, of course, refer to individual contracts licensing the exhibition of films which Loew's, as a distributor or exhibitor, has regularly made in the course of its business with another of the defendants herein, the legal effect of which is limited to the contracting parties. I do deny any combination of the defendants to do the acts which I have mentioned at any time after the ending of the National Recovery Act."

(Mr. Davis: During which period I again say by way of parenthesis, as we all know, there was a considerable concert of action.)

"It is also stipulated that Mr. Schenck would testify as follows:

"Loew's has not prevented any defendant or any so-called 'independent' producer from competing with Loew's in the production of films.

(2518)

"Loew's has not prevented any defendant or any so-called 'independent' distributor from competing with Loew's in the distribution of films.

"Loew's has not prevented any defendant or any so-called 'unaffiliated' exhibitor from competing with Loew's in the operation of theatres.

"Loews' has never discriminated in favor of so-called 'affiliated' or so-called 'circuit' theatres and against 'independent' theatres with respect to any of the license terms granted because of the fact of being a part of a circuit or because of the so-called 'affiliation.'

"Loew's never has conditioned its granting a license for the exhibition of films distributed by Loew's in theatres operated or controlled by another producer-exhibitor defendant upon such other defendant granting Loew's a license for the exhibition of films distributed by such other defendant in theatres operated or controlled by Loew's.

"No other producer-exhibitor defendant ever has conditioned its granting Loew's a license for the exhibition of films distributed by such other defendant in theatres operated or controlled by Loew's upon Loew's granting a license for the exhibition of films distributed by Loew's in theatres operated or controlled by such other defendant.

"Loew's never has had and does not now have any agreement or understanding with any distributor with respect to the minimum admission prices which such distributor should insert in its licenses for any theatre or theatres not operated or controlled by Loew's.

"Loew's never has had and it does not now have any agreement or understanding with any distributor with respect to the run which such distributor should grant for any theatre or theatres not operated or controlled by Loew's or the order or sequence of runs between such theatres."

(Mr. Davis: Follow me now, Mr. Wright, will you, because this is not in my memorandum.)

"It is further stipulated and agreed that if there were put to the witness Schenck the questions which were put to the witness Zukor as shown by pages 612, 617 of the printed record, and folios 864 to 870 of the stenographic record, he would answer each and all of those questions in the negative."

(2520)

I shall also read the following stipulation:

"IT IS STIPULATED that if Rudolph Berger, J. E. Flynn, E. K. O'Shea, J. J. Maloney and G. A. Hickey were called as witnesses on behalf of the defendant, Loew's, Inc., each would testify as follows, this stipulation being received with the same force and effect as if they had appeared upon the witness stand and submitted themselves to cross-examination"——

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, just a minute. I do not see anything in these written stipulations here about the same force and effect as if. As I read the stipulation——

Mr. Davis: To tell you the truth, it was not in my draft, Mr. Wright, but I heard each one of my more cautious and expert colleagues insert that, and I did not want to be submitted to an invidious comparison.

Mr. Wright I think that is a matter that you can argue, of course, but I think the stipulations ought to be confined to the wording that was submitted to us when we agreed to accept them.

Mr. Davis: I am not sure that the phrase is necessary to give this stipulation effect, but its having been used without objection in all the other stipulations read, I submit I am entitled to it. That is the effect, that is the purpose of the stipulation, of course, to supply the presence of the witness.

Mr. Wright: There is no question about that. But nobody should be under any illusions that we will not argue from each of these stipulations that what is unsaid in those may be far more important than anything that is said.

Mr. Davis: Of course, I am not asking you to admit the truth of the witnesses' statements. All you are proposing to admit is that if the witness appeared in court he would testify to this effect.

Mr. Wright: This is what he would say, that is right.

Mr. Davis: And this stipulation, manifestly, has the same effect as if the witness had appeared and been sworn and been submitted to cross-examination. Now, that is a legal conclusion, but I really do not see any reason why it should not be made of record.

Judge Hand: I think that is all right. It has gone in for the others anyway, and it is its effect, I should say.

Mr. Davis: I shall now continuing reading this stipulation——

Judge Bright: Who were the four gentlemen?

Mr. Davis: I am about to state. Each witness testifies:

(2522)

"At the present time I am one of the five Division Sales Managers of Loew's Inc. I have been employed

"2. In the respective exchange areas over which I have supervision, there is not now, and to the best of my knowledge, information and belief there has not been any contract, agreement, understanding or concert of action between Loew's, Inc. and any one or more of the defendants with respect to any of the following matters:

"The restraining of competition among or between the defendants, or any of them, in either the distribution or the exhibition of motion pictures.

"The terms upon which or the time when feature films were or were to be licensed by any distributor defendant to any exhibitor.

"The discriminating in favor of so-called 'affiliated' or so-called 'circuit' theatres and against so-called 'independent' theatres with respect to any of the license terms granted because of the fact of being a part of a circuit or because of the so-called 'affiliation'.

"The exclusion of so-called 'independent' exhibitors from operating first run theatres in competition with so-called 'affiliated theatres.

(2524)

"The exclusion of so-called 'independent' exhibitors from operating subsequent run theatres on the same run as and in competition with so-called 'affiliated' theatres.

"The use of first and other early run so-called 'affiliated' theatres to control the film supply, run, clearance or admission prices of operators of competing 'unaffiliated' theatres.

"The division of available films among theatres owned or controlled by two or more producer-exhibitor defendants.

"The preventing or hindering of the distribution of motion pictures produced by so-called 'independent' producers.

"The form of license agreement used or to be used after 1930, in licensing the exhibition of films or any provision included or to be included therein.

"The film rental, whether flat or percentage, charged or to be charged by Loew's Incorporated to any theatre or theatres.

"The run granted or to be granted for any theatre, whether a so-called 'affiliated' theatre or a so-called 'independent' theatre.

(2525)

"The clearance granted or to be granted for any theatre, whether a so-called 'affiliated' theatre or a so-called 'independent' theatre, or the manner or form in which the clearances in any city or area shall be set up or stated.

"The minimum admission prices inserted or to be inserted in licenses for any theatre, whether a so-called 'affiliated' theatre or not.

"In saying this I do not, of course, refer to individual contracts licensing the exhibition of films which Loew's, as a distributor or exhibitor has regularly made in the course of its business with another of the defendants herein, the legal effect of which is limited to the contracting parties. I do deny any combination of the defendants to do the acts which I have mentioned at any time after the ending of the National Recovery Act.

"3. It is also stipulated that each of said witnesses would testify that in the respective exchange areas over which he has supervision:

"A. Loew's has not prevented any defendant or any so-called 'independent' distributor from competing with Loew's in the distribution of films.

"B. Loew's has never discriminated in favor of so-called 'affiliated' or so-called 'circuit' theatres and (2526)
against 'independent' theatres with respect to any of the license terms granted because of the fact of being a part of a circuit or because of the so-called affiliation.

"C. Loew's never has conditioned its granting a license for the exhibition of films distributed by Loew's in theatres operated or controlled by another producer-exhibitor defendant upon such other defendant granting Loew's a license for the exhibition of films distributed by such other defendant in theatres operated or controlled by Loew's.

"D. Loew's has no agreement or understanding with any prior run exhibitor, either a so-called affiliate or independent, fixing the minimum admission price which Loew's must insert in its license agreement with a subsequent-run exhibitor."

Mr. Davis: I also offer this stipulation:

"It is stipulated that Joseph R. Vogel and Charles C. Moskowitz, if called as witnesses on behalf of Loew's, Inc. would testify that they have been in the employ of Loew's, Inc. and its predecessors since October 10, 1909 and January 20, 1913, respectively; that both of them are presently vice-presidents of Loew's, Inc.; and that the said witnesses have between them the entire supervision and control of the 131 theatres presently operated by Loew's, Inc. throughout the United States.

"It is further stipulated that each of said witnesses would testify as follows, with the same force and effect as if they had appeared on the witness stand and subjected themselves to cross-examination:

"1. There is not now, and to the best of my knowledge, information and belief, there has not been any contract, agreement, understanding or concert of action between Loew's, Inc. and any one or more of the defendants with respect to any of the following matters:

"The restraining of competition among or between the defendants, or any of them, in either the distribution or the exhibition of motion pictures.

"The exclusion of so-called 'independently' produced films from so-called 'affiliated' theatres.

"The exclusion of so-called 'independent' exhibitors from operating first run theatres in competition with so-called 'affiliated' theatres.

"The exclusion of so-called 'independent' exhibitors from operating subsequent run theatres on the same run as and in competition with so-called 'affiliated' theatres.

(2528)

"The use of first and other early run so-called 'affiliated' theatres to control the film supply, run, clearance or admission prices of operators of competing 'unaffiliated' theatres.

"The division of available films among theatres owned or controlled by two or more producer-exhibitor defendants.

"The division of territory of the entire United States, or any part thereof, between the producer-exhibitor defendants for theatre operating purposes.

"The preventing or hindering of the distribution of motion pictures produced by so-called 'independent' producers.

"The run granted or to be granted for any theatre, whether a so-called 'affiliated' theatre or a so-called 'independent' theatre.

"The clearance granted or to be granted for any theatre, whether a so-called 'affiliated' theatre or a so-called 'independent' theatre, or the manner or form in which the clearances in any city or area shall be set up or stated.

"The minimum admission prices inserted or to be inserted in licenses for any theatre, whether a so-called 'affiliated' theatre or not.

(2529)

"In saying this I do not, of course, refer to individual contracts licensing the exhibition of films which Loew's, as a distributor or exhibitor, has regularly made in the course of its business with another of the defendants herein, the legal effect of which is limited to the contracting parties. I do deny any combination of the defendants to do the acts which I have mentioned at any time after the ending of the National Recovery Act.

"2. Loew's has not prevented any defendant or any so-called 'unaffiliated' exhibitor from competing with Loew's in the operation of theatres.

"3. No other producer-exhibitor defendant ever has conditioned its granting Loew's a license for the exhibition of films distributed by such other defendant in theatres operated or controlled by Loew's upon Loew's granting a license for the exhibition of films distributed by Loew's in theatres operated or controlled by such other defendant.

"4. Loew's has no agreement or understanding with any distributor, either a so-called 'affiliated' or 'independent', fixing the minimum admission price which a subsequent run exhibitor of said distributors feature pictures must charge."

(2530)

Mr. Davis: I have under consideration, if the Court please, two or three more exhibits on the part of Loew's. I am not sure I shall offer them, but I am not prepared yet to announce that that is all of the Loew case.

Mr. Leisure: The affidavit just read by Mr. Davis brings up a question which I believe was clear in the record, and I still think it is. When Mr. Seymour read the long list of questions to Mr. Zukor, I understood Mr. Wright at that time agreed that all of the defendants would if asked that long list of questions on general conspiracy, would deny them. And I want the record to show that we have that same privilege with respect to Mr. Rathvon, Mr. Mochrie and Mr. Koerner.

I do not think there is any question about that, is there, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Not at all.

Mr. Leisure: The record so showed.

(2531)

Mr. Proskauer: Could we have a very short recess, your Honors? I want to clean up something with Mr. Wright. I think we can do it in two or three minutes, if I can talk to him. It may be necessary for me to write out something.

Judge Hand: Yes.

(Short recess.)

Mr. Seymour: May it please the Court, I am going to offer on behalf of my clients certain of the decisions of the appeal board set up under the consent decree, which haven't been offered by the other side. I am offering them for the limited purpose of showing the operations of the appeal board under the decree and some of the considerations in disposing of disputes which the decree provides, with the consent of both sides shall be submitted to the arbitration. The decisions that I am going to offer, and I am going to distribute copies to all members of the Court, are, and I will have them marked as one exhibit, 3, 9, 21, 29, 34, 40a, 51, 55, 57, 59, 61a, 62, 76, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 97, 105, and 113.

Those decisions have been selected because they illustrate certain important matters which the appeals board has considered and which we have discussed in the course of this trial with respect to clearance, and I would like to mention those just briefly, as a matter of convenience, at this point in the record.

These are some of the things that the Court will see from these decisions: First, that most of the disputes about clearance are between independent exhibitors, one independent exhibitor wants to get a clearance of another independent exhibitor reduced.

Most of the litigants are independent exhibitors. Occasionally an affiliated theatre is involved, but, generally speaking, the contest is between independents. The Appeals Board decisions show the consideration given to the great variety of elements that enter into the original fixing of clearance between the distributor and the exhibitor; they show that great weight is given to the problem of the distributor in getting maximum revenue from a theatre and in granting clearance in the light of his maximum revenue, a matter which has been covered in the testimony; they show the importance to the exhibitor, when he has a high quality house, of getting adequate clearance to protect his exhibition of the pictures; they show how clearance is related to geographical areas. Where there is a metropolis surrounded by suburban areas, they show how it is even proper to have rather extensive clearance. These are generally in favor of independent exhibitors. Where there are subsequent-run theatres in large cities, they show that the geographical areas are often considered not to be so large as where the cities are of different character.

Several of these decisions show a matter which was adverted to by Judge Bright yesterday when a witness was on the stand, that is, that distributors sometimes grant different clearances; they show that where there is a difference in clearance, often the arbitrators look to the clearance granted by the majority of the distributors as perhaps the proper clearance, and the upshot of the decisions ordinarily is to bring those clearances into line, as they are in many places, without resort to arbitration.

Many of these opinions show the importance necessarily given under the decree to the admission price charged by the theatre over which it has clearance, a factor squarely recognized as a proper consideration by the consent decree, to which the Government was a party.

Many of them show, or several of them show that where the distributor has a satisfactory customer, it is not arbitrary not to leave the customer, a matter which has been covered here in the testimony.

There has been testimony here about move-overs. Several of these decisions recognize the practice of move-overs, even among independents as well as others.

One of the opinions indicates that generally in the distribution of pictures there is no national release date; that pictures are released differently in different parts of the country.

One of the decisions shows that the thing the arbitrators were considering was quite a different thing than the problem of violation of the anti-trust laws, which we mentioned somewhat earlier, but I think the great importance of these opinions, aside from these particular things I have mentioned, is that when you see the various elements which the decree recognizes and which the arbitrators and the Appeals Board have considered, that it is a matter of business judgment in each case, depending on the local situation, problems affecting local theatres and local competitive conditions; the kind of business question which the decree recognized has to be settled by somebody reviewing business judgment, and you see in these opinions that frequently the arbitrator has reached a different conclusion on business judgment than the distinguished lawyers who were members of the Appeals Board appointed by the Court.

With that preview of what your Honors will find, I think you will find these very revealing on many of the matters we discussed in the case, and I now offer them as one exhibit. They can be conveniently referred to by a number under the exhibit number heading.

(2535)

(Marked Defendant Paramount's Exhibit P-13.)

J. NOBLE BRADEN, called as a witness on behalf of defendant Warner Bros., being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Proskauer:

Q. Mr. Braden, what is your position with the American Arbitration Association? A. Tribunal vice-president and executive director of the motion picture arbitration system.

Q. And you have been in active supervisory charge of the project of arbitration as set up under the consent decree in this case? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is since its inception? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there a special administrative committee of the Association that has supervisory charge with you of this? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that committee is made up of Mr. Wesley A. Sturges, Mr. Herman Irion, James F. Hughes, Frances Kellor, S. Whitney Landon, Samuel D. Leidesdorf, John P. McGovern, Lee J. Eastman, and Paul Felix Warburg? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you tell us briefly how you set this machinery up and how you divided it? A. We were consulted first by the Attorney General's office and the attorneys for the distributor defendants in June, 1940, when the conferences were on settling the previous motion picture case, and we first conferred, and in conference with the Attorney General's representatives and the attorneys for the distributors, formulated the rules which are part of the decree itself, and Judge Goddard signed the decree on November 22nd. We then proceeded in accordance with the direction of the Court to establish 31 arbitration tribunals for the arbitration of disputes between the exhibitors and the distributors, and I personally visited each one of the 30 cities outside of New York to establish those tribunals. In doing that we had a number of things to consider. Bringing in a new arbitration system into any city may arouse trouble, particularly with some of the bar associations, who are not too friendly to arbitration. The first thing we did was to call together a luncheon conference of about 10 leading citizens in each community.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I haven't any objection to having a statement here as to what has been done generally under the arbitration system but I really think it is unnecessary to go into the details of these luncheon meetings and who was seen here and there.

Mr. Proskauer: Oh, yes, we will make it very brief. I am in accord with Mr. Wright, that we don't want to go too far afield in it, but we believe it is essential to show the working of this arbitration system, and we believe that it may very well appear at some stage in the consideration of this case that great consideration must be given to any improvements that may be found vital or necessary in this arbitration system, and that the Court may in some form feel desirous and feel compelled to pass on that.

Q. If you please, make it as brief as you can. Do not go into too much detail. A. No. We consulted these leading citizens, ten at least in the community, in order to establish a proper panel of arbitrators. In each city we got nominees from the bar association, bankers and others, and we had their nominees fill out a questionnaire, and we had that checked by credit agencies and other sources. From that, a little over a thousand men were selected as the arbitrators in that system, the great majority of whom were members of the bar and had been nominated by the bar associations in all the 31 cities.

We selected an office and got a local representative, who was brought to New York and given a course of training of a week, under the supervision of Professor Sturges of Yale, and others, to enable him to properly administer his duties as clerk of the tribunal under the decree.

Q. To make it as brief as possible, you set up tribunals of this character in 31 cities? A. Yes.

Q. With the best arbitrators that you could find under this process that you have described to us? A. Yes.

Q. Did you have forms and such things prepared and make them available to all exhibitors generally through the country? A. Yes, we had prepared a complete set of printed forms, demand for arbitration, submission and so forth, so they were available to exhibitors to file cases. Then, in addition, I had the privilege of speaking at a number of exhibitor conventions and telling them how to proceed to file cases under the decree.

(2538)

Judge Goddard: This was all after the decree?

The Witness: Yes, sir, from November 20th on. The offices were open on February 1st and two months before that we did all that, and subsequently I spoke to exhibitor conventions, after the decree went into effect.

Q. Your panel of arbitrators consists of 1,065 business and professional men, and 60 per cent of them you have described in an affidavit are leading members of the bar in the different communities? A. Yes.

Q. Have you have prepared—tell us about the Appeal Board. How did that function? A. The Appeal Board was appointed by Judge Goddard, and they had offices adjacent to ours in Rockefeller Center, and in cases in which an exhibitor or a distributor was not satisfied with the original arbitrators' award, an appeal was filed, and on the record and the briefs, the Appeal Board decided the issues.

Q. Can you tell us something about the cost of this arbitration process to complainants and to the defendants in this case, generally? A. Well, the decree provided for a $10 filing fee for the filing of the case, and then it permitted the arbitrator to receive $50 a day, and we had heard a great deal about small exhibitors, and we had also had a system of having volunteer arbitrators under our regular system of arbitration, so we persuaded the Government and the attorneys for the distributors to allow us to make the fee of the arbitrator $10 a day, so that there would be the minimum of expense to an exhibitor who sought to file a case. I did make an analysis sometime ago of the actual cost of a case, taking about 40 cases at random, and we found that an exhibitor's cost was about $48, if my memory serves me, for processing a case through arbitration.

Q. In order to avoid putting in a lot of schedules here, you have prepared schedules, and I am going to ask you whether this is substantially correct: There was a total of about 416 cases filed, as I understand it? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Seymour: On appeal or filed?

Mr. Proskauer: All together.

The Witness: All together.

Judge Goddard: With the arbitrators?
Mr. Proskauer: Yes, with the arbitrators.

(2540)

Judge Goddard: Throughout the United States?
Mr. Proskauer: Yes.

Q. Of those, 301 related to clearance? A. Yes.

Q. 43 related to a question on some run? A. Yes.

Q. 21 related to a designated run? A. Yes.

Q. 19 related to clearance and some run; 20 related to clearance and a designated run; 4 to clearance, some run and designated run; three were some run and designated run; one was a charge of withholding prints; three were a charge of clearance and withholding prints; and one was a charge that they were forcing shorts, that is, forcing the exhibitor to buy shorts in some run and designated run; making a total of 116? A. 416.

Q. 416. Of those, 112 were disposed of by adjustment or settlement, and of those 112, 76 were clearance, 18 were some run, 7 were designated run, 6 were clearance and designated run? A. Three—excuse me, you are right.

Q. (Continued) Three were clearance and some run; and one each were withholding prints, and clearance and withholding prints; that left 283 cases, didn't? There seems to be a discrepancy of one there. A. There is one reopened case.

Q. We won't bother about that slight discrepancy. There were 283 awards made, as I understand it? A. Yes, sir.

(2541)

Q. And those were divided up: Relief was granted to the exhibitor in 142 clearance cases and denied to the exhibitor in 66 clearance cases? A. Yes.

Q. Relief was granted to the exhibitor in 9 some run cases and denied in 16 some run cases? A. Yes.

Q. Relief was granted to the exhibit in 6 designated run cases and denied in 7 designated run cases? A. Right.

Q. Clearance and designated run, relief was granted in 7 cases and denied in 8 cases; some run and clearance, relief was granted in 9 cases and denied in 4 cases; in one case relief was granted on a claim of clearance, some run and designated run and denied in two such cases; clearance and withholding prints, relief was granted in two cases and denied in two cases; and forcing shorts, some run and designated run, relief was denied, and there was relief granted to a some run and designated run case. When you come to the Appeal Board, there were 122 appeals filed? A. Yes.

Q. And they were divided, 91 as to clearance, 9 as to some run, five as to designated run, 8 as to clearance and some run, 4 as to clearance and designated run, 3 as to clearance and some run, and designated run, and 2 were as to some run and designated run. Now, the appellate tribunal handed down 114 decisions, and of those 114 decisions, 3 were disposed of by consent in some form or other, and of the other 111, 65 granted some or all relief claimed to the exhibitor, and 46 denied relief to the exhibitor? A. That is right.

Judge Goddard: This covers the entire period since November, 1940, your figures?

The Witness: Yes, sir. It is really from February 1, 1941, when the operation started.

Q. I want to direct your attention for a moment only to those——

Judge Goddard: I would like you to bring out the effort that was made by this arbitration to avoid all possible delays. Can you tell us about that, so that prompt decisions might be had?

The Witness: Under the system there are certain rules under which each separate proceeding must be taken. There is a submission, filing of a demand, and then time for intervenors to intervene, that is theatres that might have an interest. And then out goes a list of arbitrators, within seven days, and the arbitrators are duly assigned and then our clerk keeps after the parties to fix the date of hearing.

Judge Goddard: Those decisions were quite prompt?

The Witness: Yes; they had to be made within 30 days after the close of the proceeding.

Q. The thing has worked with great dispatch, has it (2543) not? A. In many instances. There are times when there have been delays due to the engagements of counsel in various parts of the country, and that, but on the whole, it has been pretty prompt.

Q. It is a fact, is it not, that many of these disputes were between competing independent theatres? A. There had to be, of course, a distributor defendant to bring the suit on. There were independent competing theatres intervening as parties to the arbitration, and signing submissions to be bound by the decision.

Q. So what it came down to was that competing defendants were claiming that—the competing independents were claiming—that the distributor defendant ought to favor their claims rather than the other man's claims? A. Yes.

Q. And that is the form that many of these arbitrations took? A. Yes. The principal battle in the arbitration was generally between two theatres rather than between any theatre and distributor.

Q. I want to confine our attention for a moment to those arbitrations that were confined to clearance. You had this tabulation prepared? A. Yes.

Q. It appeared to you, did it not, that there were 183 arbitrations that could be put in tabular form? A. Yes, sir.

(2544)

Q. And then there were 54 remaining? A. In tabular form, but we did not have complete data.

Q. So that you made a subsequent schedule listing exactly what had happened in those 54? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the first 14 pages of this printed document are a tabular resume—have I got the number right? A. First 14 pages is correct.

Q. Oh, yes, the first 14 pages are a tabular resume of the result of these clearance arbitrations under Section 8 of the consent decree as to those 183 arbitrations? A. Yes.

Q. And the remaining pages list what happened where you could not put it in tabular form as to the remaining 54 cases, with the exception of four that you omitted altogether? A. Yes.

Q. And you omitted those four because—— A. Of insufficient data in the New York files.

Q. You did not have sufficient data in your New York files to do it.

Mr. Proskauer: I would like to mark that schedule in evidence.

Mr. Wright, have you a copy?

Mr. Wright: What number are you giving it?

Mr. Proskauer: This is everybody's. I think it ought to be marked the Government's exhibit because this decree resulted from Government activity and it is the most creditable thing the Attorney General's Officer ever did.

Mr. Wright: We have no objection to the exhibit or having our number on it, but we don't want to be understood as having forced it on the Court at our instance.

Mr. Proskauer: Oh, no, we will mark it as a general defendants'. It ought to be marked Judge Goddard's Exhibit, really.

Mr. Wright: Mark it the next Government's exhibit number.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 390.)

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor, seriously, those of us who have worked in this industry, we just cannot say enough as to what was accomplished by this thing Judge Goddard set up here, and, to strike it down, is a terrible thing.

I would like to read into the record, without offering it as an exhibit, the following analysis of these 183 tabulated cases.

In three cases, the clearances were eliminated, which were described as following some other city.

In five cases clearances were made to depend upon admission price charged by the subsequent-run.

Your Honors will find in the tabulation that we have set forth those five cases in which the arbitral tribunals look to the question of subsequent admission price, as they were authorized by the decree to do, as an essential and important element in fixing clearance.

In 10 cases we do not try to summarize because it is so complicated.

In the others, in 86 cases, no reduction of clearance was made. That was 30 per cent of the total.

The Witness: No; complete reduction of clearance was made.

Mr. Proskauer: The award reduced clearance by no days.

The Witness: The clearance was eliminated in 86 cases.

(2547)

Mr. Proskauer: No, you have that wrong. You are mistaken. That is the number of cases in which no reduction was made.

The Witness: All right.

Mr. Proskauer: Get that straight. In 86 cases, or 30 per cent of the total, no reduction in clearance was made.

In 77 cases clearance was reduced by from one to seven days. That is 28 per cent of the cases.

In 44 cases, clearance was reduced by 8 to 16 days. That is 16 per cent of the cases.

In 61 cases, clearance was reduced by 17 to 30 days, that is 22 per cent.

In 9 cases, clearance was reduced by 31 to 45 days. That is three per cent of the cases.

In four instances, clearance was reduced by more than 46 days, and that is one per cent of the cases.

Of the 86 cases I referred to, where there was no reduction of clearance, there were 30 situations where the clearance that the arbitrators refused to interfere with, was seven days; 25 where the clearance was 8 to 14 days; 15 where it was 15 to 30 days; 5 where it was 42 to 49 days; 6 where it was 56 to 60 days; one where it was 75 days; one where it was 120 days after first run; one where it was 130 days after first run; one where it was 150 days after national release date.

That about covers everything.

With Mr. Wright's permission, I will mark in evidence this affidavit of Mr. Braden's—at least I will ask to have marked in evidence this affidavit of Mr. Braden's, which contains a number of the statements he has already made and a slight amount of additional tabular information.

(Marked Defendant Warner's Exhibit W-16.)

Mr. Proskauer: As an example of what I said about the subsequent run price, I would like to call attention to just one or two or these: we have here No. 93 F 43, man complains against a 49-day clearance, and the arbitrators reduced the clearance to 42 days, if complainant charges 25 cents admission, and that was affirmed by the appeal board.

Here is another one where a man—this is Lewis & Company, 91 F 43—complained of a 49-day clearance and the appeal board ruling is interesting: "In the event that complainant theatre charges an adult evening admission of 35 cents, the maximum clearance shall be 35 days after first-run Los Angeles," closing, "subject, however, to the Apollo's right to a prior run and to the provision that the Apollo may be given a clearance of seven days over complainant's picture, and then follows a number of other considerations. That will indicate, I think, to your Honors what a complicated matter this clearance thing can be locally and how that element of admission price is with everybody, independent and affiliate alike, an element as recognized by the consent decree.

That is all, Mr. Braden.

Mr. Seymour: I have a few documentary matters I want to deal with now.

Mr. Wright, when Martin J. Mullin was on the stand, called by Paramount, you asked him some questions in connection with two arbitrations in Massachusetts, one affecting the Middleboro theatre at Middleboro, Massachusetts, and the other affecting the Playhouse at Ayer, Massachusetts, and you indicated in your questions that because of the provisions of Section 17 of the Decree, Paramount was not only excused from following the awards in those cases but had not in fact followed them, and perhaps neither you nor I had an opportunity to check up on the facts. Would you be prepared to stipulate now, subject to correction, to save encumbering the record with contracts, that in connection with both arbitrations, Paramount did in fact follow the terms of the awards after the awards came down, even though not obligated to do so by reason of Section 17?

Mr. Wright: That is not the fact as reported to us by the complaining exhibitors.

(2550)

Mr. Seymour: Then I will offer the contracts. I offer first, with respect to Middleboro, a contract dated November 19, 1941, and another one dated May 28, 1942, which I believe are both before the date the arbitrators' award became final.

Mr. Wright: We have no objection.

(Marked Defendant Paramount's Exhibit P-14.)

Mr. Seymour: I am sorry I haven't got copies because I did not think I would have to offer these, but I will supply them to the Court.

I now offer a contract dated January 5, 1943, which I understand was after the arbitrators' award became final, showing the change in the clearance.

Mr. Wright: You are offering one contract?

Mr. Seymour: Yes.

Mr. Wright: You have the other contracts, have you not?

Mr. Seymour: I can supply such other contracts as there were from that time on. I state, subject to correction, that that contract, in respect to the clearance, conforms to the award and that subsequent contracts are in the same form. If you want to have me produce for your inspection subsequent contracts, I will do so, but it does not make that contract inadmissable.

Mr. Wright: There is a serious question because we sent out questionnaires to the complainants who had had awards, asking for this specific data, and this exhibitor reported on the questionnaire, as of this summer, that the Paramount clearance was the same that it had been before.

(2551)

Mr. Seymour: I am offering a contract showing compliance with the award. I do not care what an exhibitor said in answer to a questionnaire and it does not affect that contract.

Mr. Wright: We have no objection to this contract going in but I am merely pointing out that, as far as we are concerned, it will be necessary to examine the sequence of contracts as to what was done since the award through this summer in order to determine the accuracy of inaccuracy of the representation made to us by the exhibitor.

Judge Hand: All right, it is admitted.

(Marked Defendant Paramount's Exhibit P-15.)

Mr. Seymour: I now offer two contracts, one dated November 27, 1944—both dated November 27, 1944, before the appeals board decision, affecting the Playhouse in Ayer, Massachusetts.

(Marked Defendant Paramount's Exhibit P-16.)

Mr. Seymour: I now offer a contract dated May 10, 1945, after the appeals board decision with respect to the Playhouse in Ayer.

(2552)

Mr. Wright: We have no objection but we likewise will want the other contracts made subsequent to the award.

Mr. Seymour: They will be made available.

(Marked Defendant Paramount's Exhibit P-17.)

Mr. Seymour: I want to offer a schedule prepared at Judge Hand's request in the course of the proceedings the other day, showing the play-off of one of the Paramount pictures, this picture being Let's Face It, and showing the staggered national play-off, indicating the theatres in which it played first-run, which are independents, and showing on its face, as the play-off went over the country, the independents and the other theatres had about the same general relation to it.

(Marked Defendant Paramount's Exhibit P-18.)

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I should like to call your attention to the statement of clearance in the contracts that were put in evidence here as to Mr. Hodgson's situation at Middleboro: the contracts represented to be those prior to the award state this as to his clearance: first 14 days after first-run Boston; first after Brockton and Taunton.

After the award the contract P-16, which is supposed to state his clearance, he plays first after Brockton and Park, Taunton but not later than 14 days after first-run at Brockton or 28 days after first-run Boston, whichever is earlier. In other words, in the prior contract all he played was either—that is, after Brockton and Taunton, and 14 days after Boston; in the later contract he follows Brockton and Taunton by either 14 days or Boston by 28 days.

Mr. Seymour: My point was not the details of the clearance. My point was that Paramount with respect to these contracts complied with the terms of the award despite the fact that it was not required to do so because of the provisions of Section 17.

Now I offer a schedule showing the number of prints of Paramount feature pictures allocated to the various Paramount exchanges throughout the United States during the 1944 season, and a portion of the 1945 season, down to the time when this schedule was prepared, which was early this year; and this shows the number of prints allocated to each exchange, the number of customers served by each exchange, indicating the great difference between the number of prints available to each exchange and the number of accounts and customers which each exchange had to service with those few available prints.

(Marked Defendant Paramount's Exhibit P-19.)

Mr. Seymour: Now I offer a schedule showing the total number of accounts to which Paramount features were licensed during the seasons 1938-39 through 1943-44, showing the variations in number of accounts from year to year.

(Marked Defendant Paramount's Exhibit P-20.)

Mr. Seymour: Perhaps I ought to state that an account does not necessarily mean only one theatre, but it is the account of an exhibitor in a particular locality. If he has several theatres it will still be one account.

Now I offer a schedule showing the total number of shipments of Paramount pictures by all its exchanges for each week from January 1938 to October 20, 1945, showing the variation in number of shipments week by week, and particularly the great increase of shipments during the period of sales drives which are indicated on the exhibit by the circling of the date of the week of the drive.

(Marked Defendant Paramount's Exhibit P-21.)

Mr. Seymour: Now I offer a schedule showing total United States billings on Paramount feature pictures for the seasons 1941-42, 1942-43, as of June 30, 1945, and 1943-44 as of July 14, 1945. The 1941-42 season is believed to be complete. The others would necessarily be incomplete because billings still continue for several years after a season.

(2555)

The lines on the schedule—perhaps I ought to offer it now and then I will explain the lines.

(Marked Defendant Paramount's Exhibit P-22.)

Mr. Seymour: The lines on the schedule indicate the blocks in which the pictures were licensed and show the variation in number of licenses or billings within each block. The last page, however, has a group of five pictures at the end of the page which were not dealt with as a block, the line being merely to segregate those from the former block. Those are all pictures which were licensed individually. For Whom the Bell Tolls, the last one, was one of those pictures mentioned here as having been licensed at an advanced admission price, and this represents the number of billings at the advanced price, it not having been released for general exhibition during the season involved here.

Now, billing, as I think has been previously indicated during the trial, means an engagement. Occasionally, but very rarely, there are several engagements of the same picture in the same theatre, but this roughly indicates the total number of engagements in different theatres.

Now I offer a schedule showing for the calendar years 1940 to 1944, the feature film rental received by Paramount from theatres affiliated with Warner, Fox, Loew and RKO, compared with the feature film revenue received by Paramount from all other exhibitors. For the purpose of computing the percentage, Paramount pictures exhibited in the theatres in which Paramount has an interest have, of course been excluded from the percentage, although that amount is shown on the schedule. Obviously the comparison is between what is received from the so-called affiliated exhibitors and what is received from independent exhibitors. Paramount's dealings with its own theatres stand on quite a different footing, and this shows the percentage between the so-called affiliated theatres and the independent exhibitors.

(Marked Defendant Paramount's Exhibit P-23.)

Mr. Seymour: Your Honors will see on the basis of this computation as to 1944, Paramount received only 31-odd per cent of its film rentals on feature films from the distributor defendants who have an interest in theatres or from their theatres, and received 68 and a fraction per cent from other exhibitors.

Now, if your Honors want to recess, I have just got a few more which I will put in after lunch.

Judge Hand: Very well. We will adjourn until two-fifteen.

(Recess until 2:15 p.m.)

(2557)

AFTERNOON SESSION

Mr. Seymour: May I proceed?

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Seymour: I have here four affidavits of the division sales managers of Paramount, Mr. George A. Smith, Mr. William H. Erbb, Mr. James J. Donohue, and Mr. Hugh Owen; and counsel for the Government has stipulated that if called they would testify in accordance with these affidavits with the same force and effect as if they were actually called; and I am going to turn those over to the stenographer and ask that they be copied into the record.

(The affidavit of George A. Smith is as follows:)

"George A. Smith, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

"If I were called as a witness to testify in this action and were asked the following questions, I would make the following answers, with the same force and effect as if actually called as a witness:

"Q. Where do you reside? A. 108 East 38th Street, New York City, N. Y.

"Q. In what capacities have you been employed by Paramount? A. My first experience in the film business was in 1914 as assistant to the General Manager of the Pathe Exchange in New York City.

(2558)

I held this position until 1918 when I went into the Army. In 1919 I became General Sales Manager of Triangle Pictures, which position I held until 1920. In 1920 I became General Sales Manager of United Picture Theatres until 1921 when that company went out of business. In 1922 I was employed by Paramount. In 1924 I became Branch Manager of the Milwaukee Exchange which position I held until 1927 when I became Branch Manager of the Cincinnati Exchange. In 1934 I became Branch Manager of the San Francisco Exchange and in January, 1938 I became Assistant District Manager having supervision over the Pacific Coast Area. In 1938 I became District Manager having supervision over the same area, which position I held until March, 1941 when I became Western Division Sales Manager for Paramount with headquarters in New York.

"Q. What are your duties and what employees do you supervise? A. I am in charge of the film exchanges of Paramount located in the western part of the United States. The District Managers and the Branch Managers of these exchanges are under my supervision and are immediately responsible to me for the conduct of these exchanges and for the licensing and distribution of Paramount pictures in their respective territories.

"Q. Do you have anything to do with license agreements? A. All license agreements which are solicited by the salesmen and Branch Managers or District Managers of the Exchanges under my supervision are submitted to me for rejection or approval. I make periodic visits to those Exchanges to see that Paramount pictures receive proper distribution and that the license agreements are properly liquidated. The men under my supervision report to me any problems that arise in the course of negotiating licenses and I assist in their solution. I, myself, negotiate with many exhibitors for the licensing of Paramount pictures and I also frequently assist Branch Managers and District Managers with their negotiations.

"Q. What is the function of the Paramount distribution department? A. Its function is to negotiate licenses for and to distribute the pictures which Paramount releases.

"Q. Do you or those under your supervision have anything to do with the supervision of the theatres in which Paramount is interested? A. No.

"Q. Do you or anyone under your supervision have anything to do with the licensing of pictures of other distributors to theatres in which Paramount is interested? A. No. Neither I nor anyone under my supervision has anything to do with the question of what pictures, other than those released by Paramount, are to be licensed for exhibition in any of the theatres in which Paramount is interested.

"Q. In licensing Paramount pictures for exhibition in theatres in which any other defendant is interested, are you or your associates concerned as to whether or not that defendant as a distributor licenses or refuses to license its pictures for exhibition in any theatre in which Paramount is interested, or with the terms upon which they are licensed? A. No.

"Q. Is the distribution department concerned in any way with the matters mentioned in the last question? A. No. They are entirely beyond the function of the distribution department.

"Q. Are the various theatre companies associated with National Theatres Corporation among the accounts with which you negotiate license agreements for Paramount pictures? A. Yes.

"Q. In conducting these negotiations do you deal with the heads of the various exhibition companies associated with National Theatres Corporation at their respective headquarters? A. Yes.

"Q. With whom are the negotiations conducted? A. Elmer Rhoden in Kansas City, Ed Zabel in Los Angeles, Milt Hossfeldt in Denver and Salt Lake City, Frank Newman in Seattle, Al J. Finke in Portland, and Richard Spier in San Francisco.

(2561)

"Q. Are the negotiations with each one of those gentlemen separately conducted and wholly independent of each other? A. Yes.

"Q. Is the licensing of pictures in the field with any of these companies dependent in any way upon the success or failure of negotiations with any of the other companies? A. No.

"Q. In negotiating with the representative of the various theatre companies associated with National Theatres Corporation do you have any knowledge or information as to whether or not Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation is negotiating to license or has licensed Fox films for exhibition in any of the theatres in which Paramount is interested? A. No.

"Q. Is there any relation whatever between your negotiations for the licensing of Paramount pictures to and the licensing of Fox pictures for exhibition in any of the theatres in which Paramount is interested? A. No.

"Q. Do you ever refuse to license Paramount pictures to the various theatre companies associated with National Theatres Corporation unless and until any of the theatres in which Paramount is interested has offered or concludes licenses for the pictures of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp.? A. No.

(2579)

Mr. Seymour: In addition, although it is not embraced in these affidavits, I understand that Government counsel will stipulate that if asked the questions which were agreed to for Loew this morning on the stipulation read by Mr. Davis, that is, the questions negativing agreement, conspiracy or concert of action as to Paramount, that they would answer in the negative as the division managers of Loew answered the same questions in the negative on that stipulation; and also that they would answer in the negative the questions negativing conspiracy which were asked of Mr. Zukor.

I understand that is stipulated?

Mr. Wright: So stipulated.

Mr. Seymour: Now, I have an additional affidavit by Mr. James J. Donoghue which was submitted on the motion for temporary injunction in this case before Judge Goddard; and I should like to have that also transcribed because it is stipulated between ourselves and the Government that in addition to the testimony in the former affidavit referred to, Mr. Donohue would also testify in accordance with this affidavit with the same force and effect as if called. There is referred to in the affidavit an exhibit which I have offered separately as Defendant's Exhibit P-19, and, accordingly, that is no longer attached to the affidavit, since it is otherwise in the record; and I shall ask the stenographer to copy this affidavit into the record.

Mr. Wright: It seems to me that this last affidavit is already a part of the noticeable record of the Court in this proceeding. I do not think it needs to be physically recopied.

Mr. Seymour: I think it would be more convenient and accessible to have it in the stenographic transcript.

(The affidavit of JAMES J. DONOHUE is as follows:)

"JAMES J. DONOHUE, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

"If called as a witness for the defendants upon the Government's application I would testify as follows:

"I reside in New York City.

"I am at present employed by Paramount Pictures Inc. (hereinafter for convenience referred to as Paramount) in the capacity of Central Division Sales Manager, which division embraces the following exchanges of this company: Cleveland, Detroit, Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Dallas, Oklahoma City, Memphis.

"I have been employed in the Distribution Department of Paramount or its predecessor companies for over twenty years. I began my career in the motion picture business with Paramount in 1925 as assistant shipping clerk at its San Francisco Exchange, a position which I occupied for six months. I was then promoted to the position of assistant booker in that exchange and held that position for one year.

"I was then promoted to be the booking manager at that exchange and held that position for two years. I then became a salesman and worked out of that exchange for two years, at the end of which time I was transferred to the Portland, Oregon Exchange as salesman and worked there for about two years.

"In 1932 I was promoted to the position of Branch Manager of its Salt Lake City Exchange, a position which I occupied from 1932 to 1934. I was then promoted to the Minneapolis exchange as Branch Manager thereof and occupied that position from 1934 to 1937. In 1937 I was promoted to the branch managership of the Chicago Exchange and occupied that position until 1942. I was then promoted to be District Manager of the Dallas territory and had charge in that capacity of three exchanges, namely, Dallas, Oklahoma City and Memphis. In June 1944 I was promoted to the position of Central Division Manager, a position which I now hold. My superior in the Distribution Department of Paramount is Charles M. Reagan, its Vice-President and General Sales Manager.

"In my capacity as Central Division Sales Manager I have supervision of the exchanges named above and of the personnel thereof. Each of the ten branch managers of those exchanges and three District Managers are under my direct supervision and are immediately responsible to me for the conduct of those exchanges and the distribution of Paramount pictures in their respective territories.

"All license agreements that are solicited by the salesmen and branch managers of the various exchanges under my supervision are submitted to me for rejection or approval. I make periodic visits to these exchanges to see that our pictures receive proper distribution and that the license agreements made are properly liquidated. The men under my supervision report to me any problems that arise and I assist them in their solution. I negotiate with many exhibitors and assist Branch Managers and District Managers in their negotiations for the licensing of our pictures to exhibitors, particularly the more important and also the more difficult accounts.

"I have read the application of the United States for an order enjoining the defendants from granting 'unreasonable clearance' in licensing feature films distributed by them, and I have read the memorandum in support of its application for temporary relief with respect to 'unreasonable clearance.'

"'Clearance' is the period of time (fixed by agreement between a distributor and an exhibitor) which must elapse before a picture may be exhibited in a theatre after the conclusion of a prior exhibition in another theatre.

"'Run' is the period during which a picture is actually exhibited or during which an exhibitor has the right under his license agreement to exhibit it.

"The subjects of run and clearance are very important and complex. A proper understanding thereof requires a knowledge of the motion picture industry and an explanation of the history, nature, character, necessity and the manner in which runs and clearance operate.

"From the very inception of feature motion pictures, pictures have been licensed for successive runs with clearance between the successive runs, and in so licensing pictures, run and clearance are always among the elements considered in arriving at the license fee or the film rental, as it is sometimes called, agreed to be paid by the exhibitor to the distributor for the privilege of exhibiting the picture.

"I would testify that:

"Ever since I have been engaged in the business of distributing motion pictures, clearance has been a very important consideration in the licensing of motion pictures, from the standpoint of both the distributor and the exhibitor.

(2584)

"A feature motion picture is one of approximately 5,000 feet or more in length and tells a complete and continuous story which is depicted by projecting the imagines on the film upon the screen.

"Feature motion pictures are produced principally in California. Those produced and distributed by Paramount cost from $200,000 to $3,000,000 or more. These features are photographed upon what is known as a negative or a negative film. The production cost is frequently referred to as the negative cost.

"The negative film is developed in a film laboratory and as many copies of the negative are made or struck off as the producer believes it can economically make and serve to its customers or licensees properly. These copies are known as positives or positive prints.

"The average cost of a single positive print of a picture that is produced in 'black and white' varies from approximately $150. to $300. or even more, depending upon the length of the feature picture. The cost of a print in technicolor will average from $600. to as much as $850. or more, again depending upon the length of the print of the particular feature picture.

"The cost of these prints, whether in black and white or technicolor, represents the expense of the raw stock or film and the cost of developing or striking off the single print, exclusive of the cost of producing the negative.

"In normal times and in the absence of government restrictions the number of positive prints made by Paramount of a feature motion picture generally varies from approximately 190 to 325, depending upon the popular appeal of the particular picture.

"Under the latest regulations of the War Production Board the distributors, including Paramount, will be limited to a maximum of 285 positive prints on any single picture and may not produce more than that maximum number, regardless of how popular a particular feature motion picture might be.

"There are between 16,000 and 17,000 motion picture theatres in the United States. Paramount serves as many as 10,000 to 13,000 of these theatres. The number that it serves varies according to the popularity of a particular picture.

"These 190 to 325 positive prints which Paramount makes of a given picture are allotted among its 31 film exchanges located in the principal cities of the United States. The number allocated to each of these film exchanges is predetermined according to the size and importance of the area serviced by the film exchange and the number of accounts it will serve. Thus, for example, the film exchange at New York City will receive from 13 to 30 prints of a picture, the number depending upon the particular public appeal and the popularity of the picture. These will be used to serve the theatres in the New York exchange territory. The Boston film exchange receives between 8 and 14 prints; the Chicago exchange from 9 to 13, and so on. Each exchange will receive its allotment or quota of positive prints for the service of its customers.

"If called to testify, I would produce, for the purpose of illustration, a chart such as the one attached hereto marked Schedule A, which would show the total number of regularly assigned prints, the approximate number of accounts served by each exchange in the United States in respect of each of the pictures released by Paramount during the season 1943-44 and the pictures released so far during the 1944-45 season. This chart shows in addition the number of extra prints which are used to take care of 'peak loads.' These prints are kept in a central depot and are used to supply the various exchanges with some of these extra prints for temporary use in order to take care of those periods in a particular exchange when the bookings are particularly heavy and close together. These periods are referred to as the 'peak load' periods. After these prints have served their temporary purpose they are returned to the central depot for temporary use in other film exchanges. Occasionally, in addition to these emergency prints, the film exchanges borrow prints from one another to help out in emergencies, when none are available at the central depot.

"I would testify that ordinarily a positive print is used to serve from 35 to 50 theatres. After a theatre completes the exhibition of a picture the positive print thereof is returned to the exchange from whence it came. Before shipping the print to another exhibitor the print is thoroughly inspected by trained inspectors and necessary repairs are made so that when it is projected at the next theatre it serves the same purpose as a new print. This process is repeated after each subsequent use of the print in each succeeding theatre where the picture is shown.

"I would show as the reasons why no company produces as many prints as there are theatres desiring to show a picture so as to permit all theatres to show a picture at the same time—first, that the cost of making 10,000 to 13,000 prints would be between $1,500,000. and $3,900,000. for black and white prints, and from $3,000,000. to

$9,000,000. for technicolor prints. No motion picture, however successful, could absorb so staggering a cost of prints besides the cost of the production itself. Hence, the number of prints must be limited if a motion-picture producer is to stay in business; second, about 75% of the motion picture theatres in the United States which Paramount serves, pay for the license to exhibit a motion picture which cost several millions dollars to produce without considering the cost of the positive prints, a sum less than the cost of a print and in many cases as little as $10. and $15. for a two day exhibition. Obviously, no producer could, under these circumstances, supply a new print costing $150. to $300. in the case of black and white prints or $600. to $850. for a technicolor print, to each exhibitor. It is therefore necessary to use a print over and over again to get back the cost of the positive print alone; third, even if it were possible to have available a sufficient number of prints to enable a substantially larger number of theatres to play a picture simultaneously, good business judgment would dictate against such a policy and pictures would still be licensed upon the basis of successive runs with clearance periods between them.

"The full earning power of a picture could not be realized by one simultaneous exhibition of the picture in the 10,000 to 13,000 theatres located in various parts of the United States. If that were to occur, the motion picture public desiring to see a particular picture would all have to see it within the space of time that the picture was shown. The life of the picture would thus be very short and the public would have to view it within that short space of time or forever miss the opportunity to see it. Thus the earning possibilities of a motion picture would be limited since its potentialities would have to be tapped quickly and in a short space of time.

"All people cannot or do not wish to see a picture at the same time. Some would like to stay home and listen to the radio; others would like to attend a concert or play bridge or attend to some household or business duty. It is for that reason that it is more advantageous to the producer, the distributor and the exhibitor not to show a given picture simultaneously in all theatres, for the patronage would be divided and the best results would not be obtained financially under such a condition.

"Moreover, all theatres are not of the same size, character, appointments and location, and are therefore not all equally capable of attracting patronage and earning revenue. The larger and more luxurious theatres, under conditions of simultaneous exhibition, would attract the greatest amount of business with little or no business left for the smaller, less luxurious theatres competing with one another for the patronage of the public, for the same picture at the same time. Theatres located in the rural and remote sections of the country would know little about these pictures for they would not have had the benefit of the advertising and exploitation afforded to the picture by the exhibitors who exhibited them previously, and the picture would be gone and forgotten very shortly after its exhibition life started. No continued interest would be aroused by the continuity of advertising and exploitation which are afforded motion pictures by long, continuous and successive exhibitions.

"Another condition which might result if a large number of theatres were to exhibit a picture simultaneously, and thus create to a greater or lesser degree, a division of the patronage would be a tendency to make for smaller theatres and a shorter exhibition period. The tendency would also be toward less expensive and less attractive theatres.

"The cost of producing would have to be greatly curtailed and the outstanding pictures of today which cost such huge sums to produce could not be made.

"For all of the foregoing reasons, experience has shown and sound economics demand a system of distributing motion pictures under which pictures would be shown successively in the theatres of a community rather than simultaneously. Thus the concept of run and successive runs had their beginning in the industry. The first time a picture is shown in a community it is 'first run.' Thereafter it is 'second run', 'third run', 'fourth run', and so on with each successive run.

"I would show the reasons why a distributor must and does give consideration to the choice of the theatres in which each run will be licensed. With the number of prints necessarily limited, the distributor must employ the ones it has wisely and in such a way as will make for the greatest return in revenue therefrom. To accomplish this, it must choose the exhibitor who has the largest, the best located and the best appointed theatres for showing the picture, so that the picture can be shown to the best advantage, can earn large sums at the box office and thereby pay the greatest revenue to the distributor. The picture, when shown for the first time, has the greatest amount of novelty and has the greatest amount of potential patronage.

"The public or a portion of the public is willing to see the picture while it is new and it is willing to pay a higher admission price for this privilege.

(2592)

Accordingly, the admission prices for the theatres showing the picture on the first run are generally the highest and they generally decrease with each succeeding run.

"All of the members of the motion picture public are not willing to pay the same prices for their entertainment. Some prefer to see a picture while it is new, at a higher admission price, at the finest theatre. Others prefer not to see it in the large downtown theatres but prefer to see it in the later runs, closer to their homes, at lower admission prices.

"All theatres have not the same business potentialities. All are not able to pay the same license fee to the distributor. About 75% of the theatres in the United States individually pay license fees that are very much less than the cost of the positive print, not to mention the production cost. Some pay as little as $10 to $15 for the license to show a picture for two days and these theatres charge a very low admission price.

"The ultimate objective of the distributor is to distribute the pictures in such a manner as to be able to earn the greatest aggregate license fees from a community, and to achieve this result it must allocate its runs in each competitive area in such a manner as will be conducive to obtaining for the distributor the best results.

"Since the first run generally is the most valuable run and an earlier run more valuable than a later run, it is important to have each run take place in the theatre or theatres which are capable of returning the greatest possible revenue from that run. Among the factors to be considered, as the proof would indicate, are seating capacity, physical attractiveness, location, the available source of patronage, the policy of operation, the admission price charged, the showmanship and advertising put into a picture and the reliability of the exhibitor.

"The theatres showing a picture on the first and early runs spend considerable amounts of money to advertise it in newspapers, magazines, window cards, bill-boards in strategic locations and by other means to bring the picture to the attention of the public and to attract for it the widest patronage. This is not only of great value to the exhibitor who carries on such an advertising campaign but is of great benefit to the distributor because its revenue at that theatre will be increased by such advertising. Just as important as is this revenue, is the enhancement of the value of the picture for subsequent runs if it has a run at an important theatre and is properly and extensively advertised. The exhibitors who exhibit it on subsequent runs benefit from this advertising and the advertising by word of mouth from those who have seen the picture in the earlier run. Subsequent run exhibitors capitalize on this advertising and spend little money in advertising the picture themselves.

"I would testify along the foregoing lines to explain the concept of run and its significance in the motion picture industry. Run is the particular period of time during which the exhibitor has been licensed to exhibit pictures and his playing position in the sequence of runs. The net result of sequence of runs from the first to the last run is that some theatres will exhibit pictures ahead of others. In the absence of further factors this would mean that immediately upon the conclusion of the exhibition of a picture on the first run, the second run would be entitled to commence the exhibition of that picture.

"For example, if theatre A, the first run theatre, exhibits a picture on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, theatre B, the second run theatre, would have the right under its license to commence exhibition of that same picture on Monday. Under such circumstances, the value of the first run to theatre A, as opposed to the second run for theatre B would not be appreciably greater. A substantial part of theatre A's potential audience would wait, knowing that the same picture would be seen the very next day at theatre B.

"To protect the exclusiveness for the limited period of the run licensed, there arose from the very inception of feature motion pictures the practice known as 'clearance' in the industry. By means of clearance the distributor agrees that it will not permit another theatre to exhibit the same picture until a specified time has elapsed after the conclusion of the prior theatre's run. It is one of the terms and conditions of the license agreement between the distributor and the exhibitor and results from negotiation between them.

"Clearance is of benefit to the distributor and the exhibitor. If the exhibitor is going to be able to pay the license fees which a distributor expects and should get from him for the earlier run, he must be able to earn it through the patronage which he can attract. His patronage will be less if a competing theatre shows the picture simultaneously, immediately after or soon after the completion of the prior run. This is true whether the picture is shown subsequently at the same or a lower admission price. But as is more frequently the case, the subsequent runs usually charge progressively lower admission prices down to as little as ten or fifteen cents. The exhibitor negotiating for a prior run, therefore, requests from the distributor not only priority of run but a reasonable period of clearance, that is, a period during which the picture will not again be shown in a competitive theatre. It is to the interest of the distributor to grant this clearance in order to enable the exhibitor to pay the license fees demanded.

"Frequently the license fees are predicated upon a percentage of the gross receipts. Sometimes they are a fixed flat sum of so many dollars. In the case of percentage, the distributor has a direct interest in the receipts of the box office, for his license fees are directly measured thereby. But even in the case of the flat sum, it represents a sum which approximates the earning potentialities of the theatre. If the theatre does not take in a sufficient sum at the box office the exhibitor will not be able to afford to pay the fixed sums which he has agreed to pay. Therefore the distributor is willing to grant clearance which in its judgment will enable its licensees to pay the agreed license fees.

"The appropriate clearance period is not capable of exact measurement. The exhibitor requesting it usually wants a longer period of time than the distributor is willing to give. The distributor is mindful of the revenue which it will earn from first runs but it is desirous also of earning the greatest amount of revenue from all runs so as to operate its business on a profitable basis. The loss from first runs resulting from too little clearance may not be recouped by the over-all revenue from the subsequent runs.

"Conversely, the added revenue gained from first runs, where a longer period of clearance is granted, may not compensate the distributor for the resulting loss from subsequent runs. Adjustment of clearance to derive the most revenue from both prior and subsequent runs involves the exercise of experienced business judgment. As in all such matters, there is of course room for honest error in judgment.

"Clearance which is too short can affect overall revenue as well as can clearance which is too long, and it will not do to over-simplify the problem by assuming that by denying the proper amount of clearance to the prior run the distributor will automatically recoup any resulting loss of revenue by a corresponding increase in revenue from subsequent runs. The revenue from subsequent runs in its totality may not be sufficient to compensate for the loss of the revenue of the prior run occasioned by or resulting from too short a period of clearance. The problem confronting the distributor is not a simple one.

(2598)

"In arriving at a judgment as to the appropriate clearance, there are taken into consideration the various factors which are enumerated in Section VIII of the Consent Decree, such as size, location, competition, film rentals, policy of operation and others relating to the theatres involved. No one factor is controlling.

"Through the consideration of these factors the proper clearance is arrived at which will protect the value of the run licensed without unduly diminishing the value of the picture through the succeeding runs. It is to the interest of the distributor that the value of the picture to the succeeding runs be not unduly diminished because it requires the revenue not only of the prior but of the subsequent runs as well, to make the distributor's business a profitable one.

"Through the practice of runs and clearance in the industry the distributor is able to earn the greatest revenue and to enable it to pay the huge cost of producing worthwhile motion pictures. The exhibitor is able to operate his theatre profitably and to pay the license fees according to the run for which he has contracted.

"The foregoing testimony would show the mechanics of the business and some of the statistics as to production cost of a picture, the cost of prints, the number thereof produced and the number of theatres served. It would show what all of this means to the public and the industry. It means this: A picture which cost $4,000,000 to produce can be seen on the earliest run at the large de luxe theatres at an admission price of from fifty cents to one dollar and on later runs in the same city at progressively lower prices down to as little as ten or fifteen cents. It means that the public in the most remote hamlet of the United States can see this great picture for as little as ten, fifteen, twenty or twenty-five cents. Without this system of run and clearance such magnificent theatres as the Music Hall, Paramount and other theatres like them would not be possible.

"It means that each exhibitor can license this picture at the price within his reach so that he may exhibit it to his patrons at an admission price within their reach. This picture which cost so much to produce, the exhibitor may obtain for exhibition to his public for a fee of as little as $10 or $15. It would be impossible for the producer to produce such pictures were it not for the large sums paid by the prior runs for the privilege of showing the same picture, nor would it be possible to license them to the later runs for such trivial sums. It would not be possible for some people to see this picture at ten or fifteen cents if the patrons of the prior runs did not pay a much larger sum for the privilege of seeing the same picture earlier.

"All of these benefits to the public, to the exhibitor and to the distributor are made possible by exhibiting pictures on the basis of run and clearance. By this means the public is benefited because it is able to see the best and most worthwhile pictures costing millions to produce. They are able to see them at any theatre which they choose, whenever they choose, and at an admission price which is within the means of every economic level of the community.

"The Consent Decree provides that controversies arising upon the complaint of an exhibitor that the clearance applicable to his theatre is unreasonable shall be subject to arbitration. The arbitrator takes into consideration the factors which are there enumerated and to which I have referred above.

"Since it is impossible to measure clearance with precision and since men in the industry who deal with the subject and are most familiar with it may have granted clearance which is too long in point of time or too extensive as to area, the arbitration machinery was devised so that an impartial arbitrator could review the business judgment of those who negotiated and granted such clearance.

"The arbitrator hears all of the facts and considers all of the factors involved in the particular case before him, and determines therefrom whether or not the clearance granted is too long as to time or too extensive as to area. His function is to review the business judgment of the men in the industry. From his determination an appeal can be taken to the Appeal Board. No machinery, in my judgment, could be set up which is fairer than that.

"The Government, however, in its application for temporary relief and in its memorandum submitted in support thereof claims that the Consent Decree fails to deal effectively with clearance problems or to give adequate relief, and refers to certain aspects in which Section VIII does not afford adequate relief. If called to testify I would deal with these matters as follows:

"AS TO THE GOVERNMENT'S REQUEST FOR A MODIFICATION OF SECTION VIII SO AS TO PROHIBIT CLEARANCE BETWEEN THEATRES NOT IN 'SUBSTANTIAL' COMPETITION.

"Clearance is a by-product of competition. Competition makes clearance necessary. They are therefore closely related.

"When a salesman or a Branch Manager negotiates a license agreement he does so with a general knowledge of the competitive situation that exists between theatres requesting clearance and the theatres over which clearance is requested. While they have a general knowledge of the extent of that competition, it is difficult for them to measure the extent thereof by any fixed standards. Competition may undoubtedly exist, and yet it is difficult to agree upon it as being intense or substantial or slight or negligible or in any other precise manner. The competition that exists varies to some degree. One theatre may be said to be more competitive to another than is a third theatre. One theatre may draw more patronage from the neighborhood of one theatre than from the neighborhood of another. Frequently the competition between two theatres in the same competitive area is one way, that is, Theatre A will draw some patronage from a wide area including the area in which Theatre B is located, and yet Theatre B will not draw patronage from the area in which Theatre A is located.

"Yet there can be no doubt that Theatre A and Theatre B are in direct competition. In such a case it is difficult to say to what precise degree they are competitive. How many people would one theatre have to draw from the neighborhood in which another theatre is located to make for substantial competition? How many patrons would theatres have to draw from one another to make the competition slight or negligible? This is of course difficult to say. Frequently it rests on judgment and opinion.

"Exhibitor A seeking the clearance honestly believes the competition is substantial. Exhibitor B believes it is either slight or negligible. There is honest room for difference between them. They are both actuated by self-interest and their conclusions may be somewhat influenced, consciously or unconsciously by their self-interest.

"The salesman's or Branch Manager's interest is somewhat different. He wants to give Exhibitor A the clearance that he believes it rightfully deserves and requires to enable it to pay the desired license fees. He is opposed to granting clearance which is too long because that would affect the revenue of the distributor from Exhibitor B and other subsequent run exhibitors.

"In the light of these considerations and the factors involved in determining the appropriate clearance to be granted, such as size, location of theatres, competition, admission prices, film rentals paid, policy of operation, and others, clearance is reached by agreement which fixes the period of clearance and the area. Such agreement represents the considered judgment of the parties dealing with the subject. It is based largely on opinion and in this realm, honest men my differ.

"When any exhibitor feels aggrieved by the clearance granted, the opportunity is afford to him of arbitrating the question before an impartial arbitrator and having his determination reviewed by an Appeal Board. In an arbitration proceeding the Arbitrator in the first instance and the Appeal Board on review, weigh all of the factors including the most important one, namely, competition and the elements which must be taken into consideration to determine the extent thereof. Upon a consideration of all of the facts, a determination is made as to whether the clearance which was granted was either too long in point of time or too extensive in area.

"In my judgment, that is the ideal way in which the matter should be dealt with. It is not proper to remove clearance entirely where competition is found to exist, although it may not be 'substantial.' Where the competition is not substantial, the clearance should be less than what it would have been were the competition substantial, but where there is some competition there ought to be some clearance.

"The provisions of the Consent Decree are eminently fair and there is no basis for the modification sought by the Government, to eliminate clearance between theatres which are not in substantial competition.

"AS TO THE GOVERNMENT'S REQUEST THAT THERE SHOULD BE A PROHIBITION AGAINST THE GRANTING OF CLEARANCE BETWEEN TWO THEATRES CHARGING 'SUBSTANTIALLY' THE SAME ADMISSION PRICE.

"From the Government's viewpoint the admission price seems to be the only factor which it claims should be taken into consideration in determining clearance, but this is wholly arbitrary and unrealistic.

"Section VIII of the Consent Decree enumerates the factors to be taken into consideration in determining clearance. They are the proper factors. Price is only one of them. If that were to be the only factor, it would be very detrimental to the exhibitor, to the distributor and to the public, besides which, it would be patently unfair.

"Let us take as one example, a 2000 seat theatre in a certain community. It is well located, modern, with fine appointments. It is a large theatre and to fill its 2000 seats, pay its overhead, pay the large license fees that it does for its pictures, and make a profit, it must draw a large patronage. It is located in a section of the city which has inhabitants of different economic levels. To fill its theatre it must draw from all of the different income levels. The exhibitor decides to charge 35 cents admission. He can operate successfully because, at that price, he can attract a large number of people and pay, let us say, $1,000. for the showing of a picture on a run ahead of his competitor.

"His competitor has a theatre of 500 seats. It is a nicely built theatre. It does not have the large overhead of the other theatre. It does not do as much advertising, and it does not need as much patronage. It caters to the inhabitants of the neighborhood in the higher income level, and the exhibitor who operates it also wishes to charge 35 cents. He pays, and only can afford to pay, $100. for the license to exhibit the same picture for which the competitor pays $1,000. The showing of the picture simultaneously will divert some of the patronage from the larger theatre to the smaller theatre.

"Is it fair to the exhibitor who pays $1,000. for a picture, to have a theatre nearby paying $100. show it at the same time? Some of the value of the picture for which the exhibitor of the larger theatre has paid so much is taken away by the smaller theatre showing it at the same time and at the same price. The exhibitor paying the larger sum would not be able to continue to pay this sum if the smaller theatre plays the same picture at the same time. Therefore the distributor's revenue from the larger theatre would be jeopardized through the division of the patronage by the playing of the same picture at the same time by the larger and the smaller theatre.

"From the standpoint of the public, it would be benefited by a successive showing in these two theatres. Some people would not find it convenient to see the picture while it was showing simultaneously at both theatres. They might have the opportunity to see it at the first theatre, but if not, they might be able to see it later on at the smaller theatre. This is of advantage to the public.

"Moreover, the exhibitor of the smaller theatre is not obliged to charge the 35 cents which is the same admission price that the larger theatre is charging. He might charge 25 cents for a later showing but he chooses not to do so for he believes that he can draw the same amount of patronage at the higher admission price and make more money.

"Let us consider further what the effect would generally be if the Government's suggestion were put into effect, namely, that all theatres charging substantially the same admission price should all enjoy the same run, that is, play at the same time, or that they should have the opportunity to play the picture at the same time, that is, that they have equal availability for booking the picture with other theatres charging the same admission price.

"For example, Theatre A charges 35 cents and plays seven days ahead of Theatre B, the latter charging 25 cents. Under the Government's proposal, Theatre B should be able to play day and date with Theatre A, or at least have an equal availability to play the picture if it charged the same admission price as Theatre A. The effect of this would be that Theatre B could, by raising its admission price to 35 cents, play the same pictures at the same time as Theatre A. The public, which had previously had the choice of seeing a picture at Theatre A at 35 cents or at Theatre B seven days later at 25 cents if they preferred, would now have to pay 35 cents to see it at either theatre playing it at the same time, or not at all.

"It is difficult to understand how the Government which is seeking to protect the public interest, can seriously urge that the same price should entitle all exhibitors in a community to the same playing position. If this suggestion of the Government were to be adapted the tendency would be to increase admission prices. Moreover, as the number of theatres playing simultaneously increased, more positive prints would be required and the increased cost of distribution through the increase in the positive prints would be staggering.

"The Government suggests also that theatres charging the same admission price should have open booking with each other or equal avalability for exhibiting the same picture, so that the pictures released by a particular distributor may alternately be made available first to one theatre and then to the other. In this way they would not have to be shown simultaneously at both theatres.

"This suggestion would be very disadvantageous to the exhibitors involved, to the distributors and to the public. This would work out as follows:

"Theatre A would play Picture One ahead of Theatre B and Theatre B would show it after Theatre A. Theatre B showing it later perhaps could not afford to charge the same admission price and would therefore probably charge less than Theatre A. On Picture Two, Theatre B would play ahead of Theatre A, and the price would be higher for that picture than for Picture One. Theatre A in this instance would play this picture after Theatre B. Theatre A's prices, under these circumstances, would have to be lower than the prices of Theatre B. There would therefore be an up and down change of prices with each succeeding picture. This would not be a sound business policy for either exhibitor A or B.

"In the illustration given, Theatre A would not want to follow Theatre B and Theatre B would not want to follow Theatre A, as is ofttimes the case in competitive situations. They each wish to play 'clear' pictures, i.e., pictures which have not been shown in the directly competitive theatres. If the same admission prices entitled each of them to equal availability, they would prefer to buy pictures clear of each other instead of following the other theatre. The result of this would be that in place of two runs which the distributor might have theretofore licensed, the new practice would result in a single run of a picture between these two competitive theatres, with the resulting loss in revenue to the distributor and the loss of a second opportunity for the public to see the picture.

"From what I have already heretofore stated, it is clear that this arrangement would be detrimental to the public interest because of its tendency to increase admission prices and reduce the facilities for seeing a picture at more than one theatre in a neighborhood on successive runs.

(2611)

"AS TO THE GOVERNMENT'S CONTENTION THAT CLEARANCE SHOULD BE ADJUSTED ACCORDING TO PRICE DIFFERENTIALS IF THERE IS TO BE ANY PUBLIC JUSTIFICATION FOR CLEARANCE.

"The Government's contention, again, in this respect, is unrealistic and demonstrates a lack of appreciation of the problems involved in clearance.

"As has been pointed out above, price is not and should not be the sole criterion for determining whether there should be any clearance, and if so, the approximate period. Price is only one of the factors which should be taken into consideration. The provisions of Section VIII of the Consent Decree set out the proper factors and give the arbitrator and Appeal Board the right to determine the importance and the weight to which each of these factors is entitled. This is the fairest way that this problem can be dealt with, and clearance cannot and should not be determined by the sole factor of admission prices or admission price differentials.

"Moreover, no two localities are the same, and the factors determining the proper clearance have different weight and different significance in each situation. Admission prices affect different theatres differently. One theatre is directly affected by what another theatre in the same locality charges, while another is not.

(2612)

"AS TO THE GOVERNMENT'S CONTENTION THAT RELIEF SHOULD BE GRANTED, EXPRESSLY DIRECTED AGAINST UNREASONABLE CLEARANCE ARISING FROM THE AFFILIATION OF THEATRES WITH A DISTRIBUTOR.

"The Government assumes that there is some system of 'cross-licensing' of pictures for exhibition at the theatres of each of the defendants. There is no basis for this assumption.

"The function of the Distribution Department of Paramount is to distribute the pictures which it releases. That is also my function. Our department has no concern with the matter of what pictures other than Paramount pictures will be shown at the theatres in which Paramount has a financial interest. In licensing Paramount pictures for exhibition in theatres in which other defendants are interest, I am not concerned whether or not that defendant as a distributor licenses its pictures to the theatres in which our company is interested or the terms on which they are licensed for exhibition therein. That is a matter entirely beyond the functions of the Distribution Department.

"I could therefore state unequivocally that there is no 'cross-licensing' of Paramount pictures with anyone. In dealing with the subject of clearance, affiliation plays no part.

"I consider the question of whether the clearance is reasonable or not, wholly independent of whether the theatre is or is not affiliated with any distributor. This is also true of the deals which I negotiate myself, as well as those which have been negotiated by other members of the Distribution Department and are submitted to me for rejection or approval.

"The Consent Decree has adequately safeguarded the matter of granting of unreasonable clearance to affiliated theatres. The arbitrators as well as the Appeal Board have ample power to reduce clearance when in their judgment such clearance as has been granted to affiliated theatres is too long in time or too extensive in area.

"In an arbitration proceeding under Section VIII its provisions enjoin the arbitrator to disregard the fact that a theatre involved is affiliated with a distributor or with a circuit of theatres. In other words, an arbitrator must, in determining the reasonableness of clearance, wholly disregard the fact of affiliation and he must determine the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the clearance granted as between the two theatres, based upon the inherent merits of the situation concerning those particular theatres without regard to the fact of whether or not they are affiliated with a distributor.

(2614)

"AS TO THE CLAIM THAT THERE SHOULD BE SOME PROVISION TO PREVENT UNREASONABLE CLEARANCE, RESULTING FROM CIRCUIT BUYING POWER OF INDEPENDENT CIRCUIT.

"I need only state here what I have said under the preceding subject in dealing with affiliated theatres. The arbitrators, as well as the Appeal Board, have ample power under the Consent Decree, to deal and have dealt effectively with this matter and have reduced clearance wherever their judgment was at variance with the judgment of the men in the industry who negotiated such clearance.

"AS TO THE CRITICISM OF THE GOVERNMENT THAT A COMPLAINING EXHIBITOR IS SOMETIMES NOT AWARE OF CERTAIN CLEARANCES TO WHICH HIS THEATRE IS SUBJECT.

"The Government seizes upon the observation made by the Appeal Board in one case before it, that an exhibitor sometimes does not know of some of the clearances granted by the distributors against his theatre, since they are not contained in his contract but only in the contracts of the other exhibitors who are granted clearance over his theatre. The Appeal Board's comment was that this situation seemed unfair to them.

"Unfortunately, all of the facts as to the manner in which clearances are dealt with in contracts were not fully explained by pertinent testimony on the subject. If they had been, I am confident, there would have been no basis for criticism.

"The cases are rare indeed when an exhibitor does not know the clearances to which his theatre is subject. If he does not know, he soon learns this when he books his pictures at the various exchanges, and he learns from the various bookers the pertinent information. He also learns from observation, the manner in which and the time when his competitors book their pictures in relation to the dates which he gives for the exhibition of his pictures at his theatre. If he did not know in the first instance the clearances to which his theatre is subject, he has the opportunity the very next time he negotiates for pictures to deal with such clearances as he has observed exist and have been granted against his theatre. Often it would be very impracticable and difficult to insert the names of all theatres which are granted clearance over complainant's theatre, or to state the playing position of the complainant's theatre as being after specifically named theatres which have been granted clearance. Sometimes it is left out through oversight.

"The whole subject is magnified out of all proportion to the reality of the situation. . .

"AS TO THE GOVERNMENT'S CRITICISM THAT CLEARANCE CANNOT BE THE SUBJECT OF ARBITRATION UNLESS A CONTRACT IS IN EXISTENCE.

"The Government suggests that Section VIII is defective in that an exhibitor cannot arbitrate the question of the reasonableness of clearance to which his theatre is made subject, unless he is currently licensing pictures from the distributor granting the clearance over his theatre. As I have already pointed out, Section VIII sets out the factors which are to be considered in determining whether the clearance which has been granted is reasonable or unreasonable. This presupposes that a contract has been entered into. In the absence of a contract, the question of the reasonableness or unreasonableness of clearance cannot be determined because of the absence of the contract terms, such as run, license fees, exhibition period and other terms. It is difficult to conceive how an arbitrator can deal with this subject unless he knows the terms which are important factors bearing on the reasonableness of clearance.

"An arbitration, in the absence of a contract might be wholly a waste of time because an exhibitor who obtained an award which fixed the maximum clearance that might be granted against his theatre might in spite of the award not enter into a contract with the particular distributor against whom he has brought an arbitration proceeding.

"As a practical matter, if the exhibitor is desirous of having maximum clearance determined by arbitration, he can proceed against any distributor with whom he has contracted. If an award is made, establishing what the maximum clearance should be, althought it would not be binding upon the distributor who held no contract with the complaining exhibitor, nevertheless that distributor would have to deal with the complainant upon the basis of the maximum clearance fixed in the award. To do otherwise and to impose a longer clearance would subject such distributor to a competitive disadvantage in dealing with the complaining exhibitor and other exhibitors who might be affected. If an arbitration award fixed fourteen days as the maximum clearance, and most distributors were dealing on that basis, any distributor who tried to deal on the basis of a greater clearance would be at a disadvantage because the exhibitors would refuse to deal except on the basis of the maximum 14-day clearance fixed in the award. If the distributor did not do so, and entered into a license imposing greater clearance, it is quite probable that it would be obliged to conform to the prior award by any arbitrator appealed to, since the finding as to what was reasonable in the case of other distributors would undoubtedly be adhered to unless special circumstances justifying the longer clearance were shown. The criticism is therefore without merit.

(Sgd.) JAMES J. DONOHUE."

Mr. Seymour: In addition I have a group of affidavits, some 19 or 20 in number from various other operating heads of the theatre operating companies in which Paramount has an interest. Rather than encumber the stenographic transcript with all of those affidavits, I would like to offer them in evidence as a group, with the same force and effect as if they were in the stenographic transcript.

Government counsel has kindly agreed to stipulate that if called each of those gentlemen would testify in accordance with his affidavit with the same force and effect as if called. So I would like to have these affidavits marked as a group as an exhibit and have only one of them copied into the record so that the general tenor of these affidavits—they are substantially similar—will be in the stenographic transcript.

(2618a)

Judge Bright: What is the tenor of it?

Mr. Seymour: Perhaps I might read one.

Judge Bright: I do not care about that. A brief statement will do.

Mr. Seymour: Well, they are brief. Let me read one and that will be the one in the record, and the rest will go in as exhibits, if I may.

(2619)

Mr. Seymour: This is an affidavit of Harry David.

"HARRY DAVID being duly sworn, deposes and says: If I were called as a witness to testify in this action and were asked the following questions I would make the following answers, with the same force and effect as if actually called as a witness.

"Q. Where do you reside? A. Cincinnati, Ohio.

"Q. How long have you been engaged in the motion picture exhibition business? A. Forty (40) years.

"Q. What is your present position? A. I am the general manager of Northio Theatres Corporation, which is interested in the operation of approximately sixteen (16) theatres in the States of Ohio and Kentucky.

"Q. What is the extent of Paramount's interest in the company to which you refer? A. Paramount owns 100 per cent of the stock.

"Q. Is a part of your compensation based upon the profits from the operation of the theatres which you have mentioned? A. Yes.

"Q. Where are the negotiations for licenses for films of distributors other than Paramount conducted on behalf of the theatres which you operate? A. Generally at the office of our company at Cincinnati, Ohio.

"Q. Do you conduct or supervise the conduct of those negotiations for your company? A. Yes.

"Q. At the time you negotiate with representatives of Loew, Fox, Warner or RKO, do you have any knowledge or information as to negotiations or film deals for the exhibition of Paramount pictures in theatres in which any of those distributors have an interest? A. No.

"Q. At the time you negotiate with representatives of distributors which do not have any interest in theatres do you have any knowledge or information as to arrangements which they have made with theatres in which defendants are interested? A. No.

"Q. Is there any relationship whatever between the terms of film deals negotiated for the theatres which you operate and any negotiations or arrangements for the licensing or exhibition of Paramount films in theatres of any other defendant? A. No.

"Q. Is there any relationship whatever between film deals of your company and film deals of any other company in which Paramount is interested? A. No.

"Q. Does any representative of Paramount participate or interfere in any way in your negotiations with distributors for the licensing of films to be used in theatres operated by your company or dictate or advise you as to the terms of any film license contracts that you make or are to make with any other distributor? A. No.

(2621)

"Q. Do you license the pictures of Loew, Fox, Warner and RKO for exhibition in all your theatres? A. Generally speaking yes, but there are expections.

"Q. Do you license the pictures of Columbia, Universal and United Artists for exhibition in all your theatres? A. Yes, generally speaking, with exceptions."

I might say those answers vary from operating company to operating company.

(Continuing reading):

"Q. Are there theatres which you operate in which you would like to license the pictures of the foregoing distributors where you are unable to do so? A. Yes.

"Q. In the cases referred to in the last question do the distributors mentioned license some or all of their pictures to theatres which are in competition with the theatres which you operate? A. Yes.

"Q. Do you license films distributed by Republic, Monogram and P.R.C. in some or all of your theatres? A. Yes, except for Republic."

And that answer varies with various companies.

(Continuing reading):

"Q. Where you operate a theatre on a first-run policy, is it the best or comparable with the best theatre in that locality? A. Yes.

"Q. Does your company follow a policy of keeping all theatres which you operate up to date in accordance with the needs of the community? A. Yes.

"Q. Who determines the admission price to be inserted in film license contracts with distributors which contain a provision for minimum admission price, except in those instances where the pictures are special attractions like 'Gone With The Wind', which play at an advanced admission price? A. I do.

(Sgd) HARRY DAVID."

That is the general form of all those affidavits. There are some variations in the answers, but I have indicated where those variations appeared.

Of course, the extent of Paramount's interest varies in these different companies, as we have already brought out.

I would like to have this group of affidavits now marked as an exhibit, leaving that as a sample of the exhibit in the transcript.

(Marked Defendant Paramount's Exhibit P-24.)

Mr. Seymour: I am sorry to say I haven't an accurate count. There are around 19 or 20. There are one or two, or perhaps more, affidavits of the same kind which have not yet arrived in New York, and I would like to add those to this group as a part of this exhibit when they arrive, if Government counsel is agreeable.

(2623)

I have another group of affidavits, which I am not going to bother to read, which I would like to offer as one exhibit on the basis that, if called, the affiants would testify in accordance with their affidavits with the same force and effect as if actually called, a stipulation to which Mr. Wright kindly has agreed. These are affidavits dealing with the physical conditions of the theatres in which Paramount is interested in various cities, having populations of between 25 and 100 thousand, of the United States, and which also describe the physical characteristics of the best independently operated theatre in those localities. There are 97 of these affidavits, and I would like the same privilege. There may be a couple more coming in, and I would like to add those to that exhibit when they come.

(2624)

Mr. Seymour: I have one more affidavit on a different subject, and Mr. Wright has stipulated that if called, this gentleman, Mr. Sam Dembow, Jr., would testify in accordance with this affidavit with the same force and effect as if actually called to the stand, and I think I would like to read this into the record, if I may:

"Q. Where do you reside? A. No. 1 Prior Manor Road, Larchmont, New York.

"Q. What is your present occupation? A. Presently I am the President of Golden Pictures, Inc.

"Q. Is that a motion picture producing company? A. Yes.

"Q. Have any of the defendants in this action a stock interest in that company? A. No.

"Q. How long have you been president of Golden Pictures, Inc.? A. I think it is about six or eight months.

"Q. Prior to that time were you employed by Paramount Pictures, Inc.? A. Yes, I left Paramount in November, 1944.

"Q. How long have you been in the motion picture business? A. Since 1913.

"Q. Will you kindly tell us of your start in the business? A. In 1913 I began to work for William Fox as a salesman. He was at that time distributing foreign subjects. Later he went into the production end of the business and subsequently the company was changed to Fox Films. I occupied an executive position with that Company and opened up probably 75 per cent of the exchanges which they had throughout the United States. When I left Fox in 1921 or 1922, I was Assistant General Sales Manager. I resigned to become the Pacific Coast District Manager for Goldwyn Pictures. I stayed with that company for a very short time."

Mr. Wright: I think it should appear that that is Goldwyn Pictures there, and on the other occasion that he is now employed by the Golden Pictures. I don't know whether that was clear to the Court. Those are different companies.

Mr. Seymour: I tried to make the inflection different but probably did not. They are different.

(Continuing reading) "Rothchild, who operated the theatres in San Francisco, was my first run customer and had taken a fancy to me, and I went over to him as General Manager of his theatres.

"Q. When did you first become associated with Paramount? A. I joined the theatre department of Paramount in 1925.

"Q. How long did you remain with the Paramount theatre department? A. From 1925 to 1935.

"Q. During that period what office did you hold? A. I was Executive Vice-President of Publix

(2626)

Theatres Corporation until 1932, when that corporation ceased to do business and I continued in the employ of Paramount Publix Corporation during the the period of its reorganization in the bankruptcy proceeding.

"Q. When you left Paramount in 1935, where did you go? A. I resigned from Paramount to become General Manager of National Screen Service, Inc.

"Q. How long were you with that company? A. About two and one-half to three years.

"Q. When you left National Screen Service, Inc., where did you go? A. I became Vice-President of Fanchon & Marco, Inc., in which company I had a financial interest. I resigned from Fanchon & Marco and sold my interest therein in 1939 and returned to Paramount in January, 1940.

"Q. When you returned to Paramount in 1940, what position did you occupy? A. I was one of the executives in the theatre department, of which Leonard H. Goldenson was the head.

"Q. Did you occupy that position until you left Paramount in November, 1944? A. Yes.

"Q. During the depression period, did the theatre operating companies in which Paramount had an interest occasionally make operating agreements, sometimes called 'Pooling Agreements', affecting one or several theatres in which Paramount had an interest and one or several theatres in which exhibitor had an interest? A. Occasionally such agreements were made.

"Q. Were such agreements occasionally made affecting a theatre or theatres in which Paramount had an interest and theatres in which an independent exhibitor had an interest? A. Yes.

"Q. Were such agreements occasionally made affecting a theatre or theatres in which Paramount was interested and one or several theatres in which another defendant in this case was interested? A. Yes.

"Q. What was the reason for making such agreements? A. In the depression period theatres were having great difficulty making both ends meet and in handling the product available to them in such a way as to make the operation profitable. Theatre A would have available motion picture product of varying suitability. Some product was suitable for the patronage of theatre A. Other product was not suitable.

"Theatre B in the same city or town had the same problem. It was having difficulty making ends meet and the same difficulty with respect to the available product. If theatre A and theatre B were operated under joint management there would be more flexibility in the booking of the pictures which were theretofore available to theatres A and B. Some pictures would be more attractive to the patrons of theatre A while other pictures would be more attractive and suitable to the patrons of theatre B. Under joint management, the pictures most suitable for exhibition in theatre A would be booked in theatre A, whereas the pictures most suitable for theatre B would be booked there. The patrons of theatre A would like musicals and society dramas, whereas the patrons of theatre B might be better served and pleased with mystery pictures, action pictures and the like.

"In addition to this, economies could be effected in the joint operation in advertising, personnel and the elimination of efforts which were duplicated, and more efficient management could be accomplished.

"Operating agreements were therefore entered into in a few localities to stop the huge losses brought about by the depression and make for more economical and profitable operation of both theatres.

"Q. Were admission prices advanced following the making of such operating agreements? A. To the best of my knowledge, no. The purpose of making those agreements was not to raise admission prices.

"Q. Were the total number of pictures played, reduced, following the making of such agreements? A. To the best of my knowledge, no.

"Q. How many of such operating agreements affecting theatres in which a defendant has an interest are now in effect? A. I believe there are eight.

"Q. Which are they? A. There are such operating agreements"—I interpolate here, affecting the theatres in which Paramount has an interest, for clarity—"with regard to certain theatres in Rochester, N. Y., Minneapolis, St. Paul, San Francisco, Hammond, Indiana, Philadelphia and Brooklyn. In Yonkers, N. Y., a 50 per cent Paramount affiliate subleases its theatre to RKO Proctor Corporation at a rental based upon the net operating revenue of that theatre and a theatre which RKO Proctor Corporation owns in Yonkers. RKO Proctor Corporation operates both theatres.

"Q. Did the reasons which you have given for making operating agreements generally apply to these agreements? A. Yes.

"Q. Were the operating agreements to which you have referred which were made during the depression, entered into in pursuance of a general policy of making such agreements? A. No. They were made on the basis of peculiar local conditions affecting the theatre business and the impact of the depression upon it in a few particular localities.

"Q. How did Paramount acquire an interest in Canal Realty & Improvement Co. which has a ground lease on the Loew's State Theatre in New Orleans and what is the nature of that interest?"

Mr. Seymour: I think rather than burdening the Court with this, I will have this copied into the record. This deals with a few theatre investments and other things of that kind which are mentioned in the Government's brief, and this affidavit explains them. So, from here on, I will let the stenographer copy it rather than take the Court's time to read it, if I may.

(The balance of the affidavit reads as follows:)

"A. Many years ago Paramount acquired an interest in Saenger Amusement Co., which had theatre interests in New Orleans and other places. One of the Saenger assets was a one-third stock interest in Canal Realty & Improvement Co. Klaw and Erlanger had a one-third interest in that company and Loew's had the remaining third. Later Loew's acquired Klaw & Erlanger's stock. For many years Paramount-Richards Theatres, Inc., in which Paramount has a 50% stock interest, has held this one-third of the stock as an investment, which gives Paramount a 16⅔ per cent indirect stock interest. Loew's has had the management contract and has operated the theatre. Paramount has nothing to do with the operation of the theatre either directly or indirectly.

"Q. Does Loew license Paramount feature pictures for exhibition in Loew's State Theatre? A. To the best of my knowledge it does not.

(2631)

"Q. Have Paramount and Loew's stock interests in Buffalo Theatres, Inc., which operates certain theatres in the Buffalo area? A. Yes.

"Q. How were those interests acquired? A. Prior to 1934 Paramount and Mike Shea were the only stockholders in certain corporations which leased and operated certain theatres in Buffalo. Loew's was the landlord of one of those theatres—the Great Lakes. Those corporations were in default in rent when Paramount-Publix went into receivership. Paramount-Publix had guaranteed the rent of the Great Lakes, and as a consequence, Loew's had a substantial claim against Paramount. There being no money available to satisfy this claim and the claims of the other landlords for rent, Buffalo Theatres Inc. was formed to take over the operation of the theatres and the landlords, creditors and former stockholders of the lessee companies received stock in the new company.

"Q. Does Paramount operate these theatres? A. To the best of my knowledge Paramount has had nothing to do with the operation of the theatres since 1934.

"Q. What interest, if any, has Paramount in 423 South Broadway Corporation, which owns the Parkhill Theatre in Yonkers? A. Straham Theatre Corporation, in which Paramount has a 50 per cent stock interest owns 20 per cent of the stock of that corporation. RKO Proctor Corporation owns 30 per cent of the stock and Max Cohen 50 per cent.

"Q. Does Paramount operate this theatre? A. No. I am informed that the Parkhill is actually operated by a corporation in which Paramount has no interest.

"Q. What interest has Paramount in Standard Theatre Corporation which operates certain theatres in Oklahoma City? A. Paramount has a one-half interest in Criterion Theatre Corporation and the other half of the stock is owned by Joe Cooper. Criterion has a one-half interest in Standard Theatre Corporation, the other half being owned by Warner Bros.

"Q. Who actually operates the theatres? A. To the best of my knowledge, Joe Cooper has a contract with Standard whereunder he manages, buys and books. Paramount does not participate in any way in the actual operation of the theatres."

(Signed) SAM DEMBOW, JR."

Mr. Seymour: I would like to ask Mr. Wright to stipulate, subject to correction, that Paramount has an interest in theatres in 516 incorporated places in the United States out of a total of 16,752 incorporated places in the United States, according to the 1940 Census.

(2633)

Mr. Wright: Yes. I thought we were going to have this one master list, showing where everybody had theatres, and that that would take care of that. That was the list that RKO offered. I thought Mr. Phillips took it and checked it.

Mr. Seymour: We are in the process of checking it, but there is no dispute about those facts, is there?

Mr. Wright: Not as far as I know. There certainly cannot be any ultimately.

Mr. Seymour: All right. Now I offer, subject to correction, a list of 1,149 cities or towns in the United States with a population of over 5,000, according to the 1940 census, in which all the theatres are independently owned and operated.

Mr. Wright: No objection.

(Marked Defendant Paramount's Exhibit P-26.)

Judge Goddard: This is not 26. The affidavit was 26. Didn't you intend to mark that exhibit of Sam Dembow?

Mr. Seymour: I read that into the record, Judge Goddard, rather than having it marked as an exhibit.

(2634)

Mr. Seymour: In addition to the affidavits in the two groups which I have asked permission to supply, I have one affidavit on the way which deals with the Butterfield Theatres, and I am sure Mr. Wright will be willing to stipulate it when he sees it; and I should like leave to supply that as a stipulation with Mr. Wright when it is available.

May it be assumed that the silence of the Court permits me to supply that additional affidavit at a later date?

Judge Bright: We were discussing discrimination based on mere size against Elizabethtown, New York.

Mr. Seymour: I am sorry. Judge Hand knows so much more about it than we, that I am not prepared to put in any direct testimony on that at this time.

I think with those additional affidavits that I have mentioned, that we will not have anything further at this time.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honors, I think I have my stipulation with Mr. Wright now arranged in the way in which he is willing to take it:

It is stipulated that Roy Haines and Jules Lapidus, if called as witnesses on behalf of the defendant Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., each would testify as follows, with the same force and effect as if they were called and subjected themselves to cross-examination:

Mr. Roy Haines would testify that he has been with Warner Brothers or its predecessors since 1919; that from 1919 to 1927 he was branch manager at Cincinnati; from 1927 to 1931 he was branch manager at Pittsburgh; from 1931 to 1933 he was central district manager; from 1933 to 1936 he was metropolitan New York district manager; from 1936 to 1937 he was eastern district manager; from 1937 he was eastern sales manager, including Canada; and from 1943 to date he has been the western and southern sales manager.

As to Jules Lapidus, he entered the motion picture business in 1921 as a Universal salesman in Pittsburgh; from 1922 to 1925 he was not in the motion picture business; from 1925 to 1926 he was salesman for Metro Pictures in Pittsburgh; in 1926 and 1927 he operated a theatre personally; from 1927 to 1937 he worked for Loew's as Metro salesman in Pittsburgh; from 1937 to 1939 he was a branch manager with the Grand National Company; from 1939 to 1940 he was a Universal branch manager in Pittsburgh; from 1940 to 1942 he was Universal district manager; from September, 1942, he was a Warner metropolitan district manager in New York, and since February, 1943, he has been the Warner eastern sales manager.

"In my present position," Mr. Lapidus says,

(2636)

"I have supervision over eleven exchanges in the United States."

Mr. Haines says, "In my present position I have supervision over twenty-one exchanges in the United States."

Mr. Lapidus continues: "Thus, between Mr. Roy Haines and myself we have supervision over all Warner exchanges in the United States."

Each of them testifies as follows:

"In the respective exchange areas over which I have supervision, there is not now, and to the best of my knowledge, information and belief there has not been any contract, agreement, understanding or concert of action between Warner and any one or more of the defendants with respect to any of the following matters:

"The restraining of competition among or between the defendants, or any of them, in either the distribution or the exhibition of motion pictures.

"The terms upon which or the time when feature films were or were to be licensed by any distributor defendant to any exhibitor.

"The discriminating in favor of so-called 'affiliated' or so-called 'circuit' theatres and against so-called 'independent' theatres with respect to any of the license terms granted because of the fact of being a part of a circuit or because of the so-called 'affiliation.'

(2637)

"The exclusion of so-called 'independent' exhibitors from operating first-run theatres in competition with so-called 'affiliated' theatres.

"The exclusion of so-called 'independent' exhibitors from operating subsequent-run theatres on the same run as and in competition with so-called 'affiliated' theatres.

"The use of first and other early run so-called 'affiliated' theatres to control the film supply, run, clearance or admission prices of operators of competing 'unaffiliated' theatres.

"The division of available films among theatres owned or controlled by two or more producer-exhibitor defendants.

"The preventing or hindering of the distribution of motion pictures produced by so-called 'independent' producers.

"The form of license agreement used or to be used after 1930, in licensing the exhibition of films or any provision included or to be included therein.

"The film rental, whether flat or percentage, charged or to be charged by Warner to any theatre or theatres.

"The run granted or to be granted for any theatre, whether a so-called 'affiliated' theatre or a so-called 'independent' theatre.

"The clearance granted or to be granted for any theatre, whether a so-called 'affiliated' theatre or a so-called 'independent' theatre, or the manner or form in which the clearances in any city or area shall be set up or stated.

"The minimum admission prices inserted or to be inserted in licenses for any theatre, whether a so-called 'affiliated' theatre or not."

It is also stipulated that each of said witnesses would testify that in the respective exchange areas over which he has supervision:

A. Warner has not prevented any defendant or any so-called "independent" distributor from competing with Warner's in the distribution of films.

B. Warner has never discriminated in favor of so-called "affiliated" or so-called "circuit" theatres and against "independent" theatres with respect to any of the license terms granted because of the fact of being a part of a circuit or because of the so-called affiliation.

C. Warner never has conditioned its granting a license for the exhibition of film distributed by Warner in theatres operated or controlled by another producer-exhibitor defendant upon such other defendant granting Warner a license for the exhibition of films distributed by such other defendant in theatres operated or controlled by

Warner, or in any way taken into consideration in licensing films to exhibitors any action of other producers in licensing its films to Warner theatres or to anybody else.

D. Warner has no agreement or understanding with any prior run exhibitor, either a so-called affiliate or independent, fixing the minimum admission price which Warner must insert in its license agreement with a subsequent run exhibitor.

Mr. Pride: Are you all through?

Mr. Proskauer: All through.

Mr. Pride: We would like to offer on behalf of National Theatres Corporation testimony of five of the principal executive officers of its operating companies. I have four of these here. A fifth is in transit by air mail from California, and I shall ask leave to put that in later.

This is stipulated testimony of Mr. Harold J. Fitzgerald, Frank L. Newman, Sr., Elmer C. Rhoden and Frank H. Ricketson, Jr. I would like to have those transcribed into the record; but I might say that Mr. Wright and I have the understanding, since he has not had full opportunity to go over all the statements, that he will advise us as to any supplements, changes or issues which he thinks are raised by them which should be either changed or supplemented; and I therefore suggest that the reporter withhold transcribing them into the record until any questions concerning their contents are straightened out.

I should also like to offer as Fox Exhibit F-22 a list of franchises of Twentieth Century-Fox for the 1938-39 season which was the year in which it had its largest number of franchises. I have given Mr. Wright a copy.

(Marked Defendant Twentieth Century-Fox Exhibit F-22.)

Mr. Pride: We may have, your Honors, one or two other exhibits here which I would like to confer with Mr. Caskey about on his return, and I am certain we can straighten out their introduction then.

Judge Hand: All right.

Judge Bright: That completes your case?

Mr. Pride: Subject to that last reservation, sir, yes.

Judge Hand: Well, do I understand the defendants rest with the exception of supplying some of these supplemental things that you have indicated?

Mr. Seymour: Aside from those which I reserved, there is only one other problem, and it certainly does not prevent our resting. Because of the haste of the trial we, at least—and I suppose other counsel—have not had a chance to examine this record with care for possible corrections. In the event that there should be any interim at this time in the trial, we would like to examine it and attempt to agree with Government counsel on those corrections and make them physically in the printed copies of the records, which we now have available; and then we would like to furnish the Court with printed copies of the record with those changes physically made so that it will save your eyes in the reading of the stenographic transcript, and you won't have to look around for corrections. We shall also supply printed copies to the Government. If there should be a difference on any correction which we regard as substantial I should like to have the privilege of dealing with that. I hope we shall be able to stipulate all the corrections. Subject to that, as far as we are concerned, we rest.

Mr. Proskauer: I think we are all ready to rest, your Honors, with the understanding that if anything comes up hereafter which we think we omitted, it is not going to be of a fundamental character, and we may have the privilege of supplying to your Honors any little additions or inadvertences.

Mr. Davis: We rest with the proviso, as I stated this morning, that there are one or two exhibits I want to consider.

Judge Hand: Now, do you expect to print this record, all of you, get up a joint record?

(2642)

Mr. Seymour: There is a print of the record which has been made contemporaneously, and it is that that we shall correct.

Judge Hand: That is what you wanted to fix up?

Mr. Seymour: Yes, and furnish the Court with copies as soon as those corrections have been made.

Judge Hand: I see; and that covers all the testimony of everybody?

Mr. Seymour: Yes, from the very beginning. It does not cover the exhibits, but it covers all the testimony.

Judge Hand: And the exhibits you are going to submit just as they are submitted ?

Mr. Seymour: Yes, unless some more convenient method occurs to your Honors. There are so many exhibits that the printing of them at this stage would be very burdensome.

Judge Hand: Oh, yes. I did not suppose you would want to print them, but are you going to bind them up separately and put them together?

Mr. Seymour: I think we ought to do something of that kind.

Judge Hand: Yes, I think that will simplify access to it.

(2643)

Now, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, we have in process of preparation some rather elaborate motions to strike out a very large part of the testimony that has been received here in various forms. Now, as to much of it we do not desire to press it or be heard on it; it is largely for record purposes.

Colloquy

Judge Hand: Oh, yes.

Mr. Wright: But as to some of these matters we do have a problem, I think, which does require some ruling or some indication by the Court as to the significance that attaches to certain testimony which has been permitted to go in here in order that we can limit the scope of our rebuttal evidence.

Now, as to that we would like to be heard, and we would like to be heard before we engage in the presentation of rebuttal testimony.

I might say that in so far as we are concerned, in our view of the case as it now stands, there is not in this record competent defense testimony which creates any material issue of fact that this Court needs to determine. Now, we shall, of course, present our views in detail as to the various aspects of this testimony in the form of a written motion and will support it with a written memorandum. But I would like an opportunity at some point, or perhaps now, if the (2644)

Court is willing to devote some time to it, to have at least some interchange of ideas in the form of argument between ourselves and the Court as to the significance, or, rather, lack of significance and lack of competency, as we see it, of some of the material which has been received.

Judge Hand: Well, you might go ahead.

Mr. Wright: All right.

Let me first say that as we view the case now, of course, we think that we are right back at the point where we started, in that the fundamental, important question that has to be decided here is one of law, and that that question is the extent to which the copyright law justifies or excuses the practices in which the defendants have concededly engaged.

Now, let me give what I think is the simplest form of analogy to the situation that has been presented here in another field. Let us assume that you have two distributors of a commodity, two national distributors, and each of them controls a group of retail outlets; and each of those distributors makes agreements with his outlets, under which the outlets act as agents for the sale of his product to the ultimate consumer, and under which agreements he stipulates the price, or a minimum price, at which the product is to be sold.

Now, up to that point you have no Sherman Act violation, no title passing until the ultimate sale to the consumer.

Now let us assume further that just two of these national distributors, each distributing a competing product through its own outlets in this manner, makes agreements with the outlets of the other of the same kind and character in which distributor A agrees with the outlets of distributor B as to the ultimate price to be charged by those outlets—or the minimum price, if you prefer—for the product of distributor A, and distributor B makes agreements of a similar character with the outlets of distributor A in which he too fixes the ultimate price to the consumer of his product.

Now, on that state of facts there is simply no question but that each of those distributors is a party to a price-fixing combination which is illegal under the Sherman Act regardless of any claims of a stabilized against a chaotic market, or claims that it is the most profitable way to do business, because you clearly have the elimination of price competition between the competing products of A and B as a result of express agreements between them and their controlled outputs.

Now, even in the cases of patented commodities, if the Court please, similar arrangements to that have been found by the Supreme Court to be illegal, the latest example, I think, being the Masonite case cited in our brief, where agency forms of agreement were used to control the ultimate price of the patented hardboard that was involved in that suit.

So that the question that really arises in this case, where it is perfectly clear that under any view of this testimony each of these theatre-owning distributors has made such agreements with the theatre outlets of the other distributors which control or which determine the price at which they shall be made available to the public—whether price-fixing of that kind can be justified under the Copyright Law; that is, if it cannot be justified under the Copyright Act, it is perfectly clear, under the Supreme Court cases in which price-fixing was involved, that you can't possibly justify combinations of that character by any evidence as to alleged reasonableness of that method of operation.

Now, our prima facie case was directed at showing the extent and actual use of this power of concerted price control that these people admittedly possessed through their ownership of the five largest groups of theatre outlets in the country, and their practice of making agreements with each other in which they determined not only the price at which their film shall be exhibited but the terms on which the films shall be made available to competing exhibitors.

We in the interrogatory answers offered a detailed picture of distribution in certain selected urban markets as to the 1936-1937 season, showing exactly the way in which the arrangements the defendants make with each other were used to concentrate the major share of the film revenue coming out of the area in the theatres which were controlled by the defendants; and in our later interrogatories we expanded the data to give a picture as to the 1943-44 season in all of the cities of over 25,000 population. As to those towns we put in the evidence which show generally the first-run accounts during that season of each of these distributors and the clearance and admission price restrictions which were contained in the argeements with those accounts; and then we also, as to a single selected picture for each distributor, put in evidence the actual film rental and play dates of that picture and the clearance that that particular picture got on its first-run exhibitions in all of the cities over 25,000. We offered the data as to the first and second-run exhibition of the particular picture, again showing the film rentals, play dates and actual clearance and admission price provisions involved in all of the cities over 50,000; the first three runs in those over 200,000, and the first four runs in the cities over one million, in the five boroughs of New York City.

Again we offered that data to show the manner in which this market control that is jointly possessed and exercised by these theatre-owning distributors was used to concentrate the available film rental revenue in the early runs in a very large majority of those communities in theatres in which they owned these financial interests.

The general purpose of that data, of course, was simply to show that not only did they have this power to control this mraket, which, of course, is shown by these statistics as to the extent and the nature of their theatre ownership and their position as distributors in the industry, but that it had actually been used to give them a prior and a preferred position in the exhibition in the industry.

Now, we also offered in evidence, largely on the issue of intent, the various pooling agreements which they had made with each other whereby they had actually consolidated certain theatre operations where they actually ran theatres in nominal opposition to each other, and in those agreements, some of which are digested but all of which will be digested for your Honors before we get through with the case, there are provisions, such as those confining the acquisitions of new theatres by either party to certain territories and provisions as to how product is to be distributed or divided, all of which indicate in express terms what we think would generally be inferrable anyway, that is, an intent as between these defendants not to operate theatres in competition with each other insofar as the business of licensing films is concerned.

Of course it is perfectly true that all pictures are in competition with each other for the customer's dollar and all theatres which are operated are in competition with one another for the customer's dollar in the sense that they do offer competing attractions, whether they are all owned by one operating group or by several, but I think it is perfectly clear, both from our testimony and from what has been put in here by the defense, that there actually is no competition between the theatres of these defendants when it comes to making film licenses or in determining the price at which the film entertainment is going to be made available to the public. And that basic fact, it seems to me, is beyond dispute on the record that we have here now.

Judge Hand: I think it is very hard for any of us to see how there is any violation in respect to production and why the whole thing does not come down to the arrangements for distribution and exhibition. You have almost admitted that—perhaps you haven't quite. I have never understood you to attempt to distinguish.

Mr. Wright: I have just attempted to point out that, as we view the case, it presents a problem in market control and the control of that market is largely determined by these arrangements that are made between companies acting as distributors and companies acting as exhibitors.

Insofar as the production end of the business goes, I suppose it is perfectly clear that anybody who has talent and who can make a successful picture is in intense demand, and that all of the people who own theatres are anxious to have those people make pictures and get their pictures distributed. In other words, what Mr. Raftery says about "there isn't anything wrong with the industry that more good pictures would not cure" is probably largely true in the sense that, as this industry is organized, these defendants, of course, cannot possibly get hurt by a good picture. They want to do whatever they can to have as many good pictures made as possible because, in exploiting them through their theatres, they profit from good pictures, no matter who makes them.

The aspect of the market control, however, which has been proven, which does disturb some so-called independent producers, and of course there is no unanimity of opinion on this question, is the fact that any producer's picture of course may be made or broken by the exploitation that it gets in the outlets which these people control, and that that control of the market in the hands of their competitors, of course, is a fact which does subject them to a serious competitive disadvantage. That is, as plainly as I can state it, what we think is involved here, insofar as producing pictures, as distinguished from distributing them and exhibiting them, is concerned.

Insofar as your independent exhibiting elements are concerned, of course there the immediate objects of all of these restrictive provisions which find their way into the license agreements which these people make with each other—and there let me say this, that it is perfectly true that in the areas, the limited number of areas, where these people do not operate theatres, the independent first-run theatres may and do receive privileges similar to those which these defendants receive in the areas in which they have concentrated their theatre operations. That, however, is a matter which is pretty much implicit, as we see it, in the possession of each of these distributors of large circuits of theatres; that is, each of them has a vested interest in what we call circuit discrimination, that is discrimination in favor of circuit theatres, as such, and that finds expression, as we proved in the Shine and Crescent cases, in dealing with large so-called independent circuits in the same way that it does with your affiliated circuits.

However, the problem that is presented here is different from that presented there in that in those cases they were simply dealing with the application of circuit buying power as such to the business of these distributors, whereas here, what you are dealing with is circuit buying power plus the affiliation of the distributors with theatres, which serve as conduits for the expressed agreements regarding discrimination.

Judge Hand: I do not understand what you are arguing, really, about. In these areas where independents have all the large theatres, are you picturing them as sort of contributory infringers? What are they claimed to be?

Mr. Wright: I am pointing out that I am making no claims as to the independents who operate in areas where these defendants do not operate; that they are able to take care of themselves by virtue of the absence of the affiliated companies.

(2653)

Judge Hand: You are making no claim even against these defendants there?

Mr. Wright: Yes, that is right.

Judge Hand: Oh, I did not know you were not.

Mr. Wright: I merely wanted to point out that the discrimination as to independent exhibitors again is largely limited to the areas in which they are so unfortunate as to find themselves in opposition to the theatres which are affiliated with the defendants in this case.

Judge Hand: Supposing these five defendants are distributing their pictures in a place where the independents control all the theatres, what do you say about that? Are you making any claim against them in respect to that?

Mr. Wright: No.

Judge Hand: You are not?

Mr. Wright: No, we are not. We are merely——

Judge Hand: In other words, your claim there would be against the independents.

Mr. Wright: Well, if there were any claim——

Judge Hand: I do not understand where you are (2654)
getting in this thing, it is so extremely complex. What I understand was, you said even in those places the same kind of thing happened and there was the same taint on the part of somebody or other.

Mr. Wright: Well, insofar as the general control of the price structure by these defendants, that is, in any area, that is, even in an area that is wholly occupied by independents, they use a price fixing provision in the agreements to control and protect the revenue from those areas.

Now, to the extent that they do that concertedly they are, I think, in violation of the law there, but not because the price fixing or the other provisions are applied in such way as to discriminate between independent outlets and their own outlets because they have no outlets of their own in that area, but simply as a per se violation of the Act.

Judge Hand: I thought you might be claiming that they were the same as these three here that never came under the consent decree.

Mr. Wright: In those situations I think they are in that same position where they do not operate theatres.

Judge Hand: No better and no worse.

Mr. Wright: That would be about the size of it.

Judge Goddard: Do you claim there is a monopoly (2655)
in production? I don't think I understand your position.

Mr. Wright: I don't think we do.

Judge Goddard: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Wright: No, we do not. As to the areas in which they operate theatres, the discriminations there, of course, are limitless in variety. You have discriminations as to playing position, as to clearance terms, in the application of these minimum admission price restrictions and as to rental terms. Now it is in connection with that question of the nature and extent of discrimination in—as against independent exhibitors—in the areas where these people operate theatres that I would like to press such motions we have directed at some of this general testimony of sales managers who have gotten on the stand here and simply gotten away with saying "Well, we do not discriminate between affiliated and independent theatres."

I think it is a well established rule of evidence that anybody who wants to offer evidence as to facts, as distinguished from a general argument, is bound to produce and offer the best evidence at his command; that is, each of these sales managers, of course those companies have those license agreements in their files, they have elaborate data showing the terms on which they do business with independents and affiliated theatres. I do not say that anybody has to produce as primary evidence all or any part of the license agreements that he is talking about, or the original records which tabulate the material, but I do say that no proper foundation was laid here at any time to permit these sales managers to make the general statements that they did about the presence or absence of discrimination. You have seen how these people can tabulate and offer elaborate charts of any kind as to what they have done, and if they wanted to show, for example, that there was no discrimination in rental terms, as to their theatres and the independent theatres generally, or in any particular area, it seems to me they were bound to at least offer to the Court some kind of factual summary statement of what the practice was and what they had actually done rather than just having some sales manager get on the stand and say that the practice is non-discriminatory, that we sell indiscriminately.

The Court: I thought you had complete access to their books and records and had seen whatever you wanted to and produced whatever you wanted to, and they were meeting this or attempting to meet it by some of this general testimony about their practice. If you have things in there which show that was not their practice, all right.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, all that we attempted to do——

Judge Hand: I suppose that you claim very earnestly that you have things in there which show that that was not their practice.

Mr. Wright: All that we attempted to do in the prima facie case was simply to indicate what appeared to be prima facie discriminations. Insofar as testimony is directed to the explanation or rationalization of any particular discrimination, we have no quarrel with it, but I do not believe that evidence of that character can be made or that the burden of going forward can be shifted by a party who has the evidence at his command, ignoring factual evidence and simply getting on the stand and giving a general conclusion as to a general practice.

Of course it is perfectly true if we want to go in and examine twenty thousand agreements; I suppose we have the privilege of doing it, but I submit that it is extremely prejudicial to permit them to impose a burden of that character on us simply by having these men get on and say "We don't discriminate" without making any attempt to analyze or present a factual analysis of what they have got in their own files. I do not see that the mere fact of access through subpœna or otherwise is sufficient to excuse the reception of evidence from them in that form. Of course if all the evidence is received for is just general evidence of good intentions, then you do not have any problem of competency. Of course, it seems clearly irrelevant and immaterial, however. But if that kind of thing is to be accepted as competent evidence, and I do not think it can be without violating the established rules applicable to this court, we have a much different burden in determining what kind of rebuttal we ought to put in than, I think, we have as a matter of law.

I will say generally, on our rebuttal, as far as argumentative testimony is concerned, we do not propose to meet it with other argumentative testimony, we will argue the case ourselves, and insofar as any testimony that we do offer, we shall, I think, attempt to confine it to documentary form insofar as we can. But in determining the scope of that documentary testimony, that is, what and how many contracts to put in, we are faced, I think, with a problem that has been created here, and I think—in the first instance, I don't want to be misunderstood as thinking that there was any error in admitting it, to have it incorporated in the record, I think we all wanted to have in the record everything that these people wanted to offer, so that we would have a record on which there could be final disposition, but I think the point has been reached where we pretty much have to know what, if any, significance the Court is going to attach to that kind of conclusory evidence which was offered and received without any proper foundation, as far as I can see.

Judge Hand: I do not see myself that it is tremendously important.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor, we cannot quite hear you.

Judge Hand: I am not tremendously moved myself by a lot of testimony from people from a company that they always give everybody an equal chance, and there was no preference there, and all that sort of thing, if you have some stuff which points the other way, and it is clear enough that is your burden, whether by oral testimony of documentary testimony or otherwise, it is certainly your burden, and you are merely objecting to our giving any weight whatever, or paying any attention, even though your testimony should prove to be weak, to general statements by their officials as to their practice. I rather think we could not do that; that that would be an erroneous ruling on the admission of evidence. I do not think, if you have a good case otherwise, by the practice which you have shown that they had actually from these documents, that they are going to meet it by coming in with testimony that they always were fair, non-discriminatory, and, in general, lovely fellows. But even so, if there is anything there in the way of doubt on either side in this testimony, I should think witnesses could be called to say what the practice was. Maybe your documents contradict it or seriously damage it, but to say that what they were doing, that their custom in trading was non-discriminatory is incompetent for any purpose, I don't think it is. Do you?

Judge Bright: Is what?

Judge Hand: Is incompetent. I don't think that it is. No, we will have to let that stuff stand. I admit that there are many things here; for instance, dealing with these arbitration records, I have no doubt they would throw some light on the character of the litigation. What real evidential force they have, if any, I greatly doubt. And I know the only reason or the best reason I could give for letting in something which it is my almost invariable individual practice to let in, if there is any possible chance for its admissibility, in a suit without a jury, was based on the theory that it had some informative, if not evidential value—a little like an auditor's report; it was to aid the Court—that the parties were there and they were at liberty to overthrow it any one of them.

Mr. Wright: I think it is quite apparent, if the Court please, that we can call no witness who can testify to the general practice of any of these companies. We can procure certain license agreements which we will offer,——

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Wright: —and which we think show some of these discriminations. There are, as I said, in our prima facie case a number of discriminations which haven't specifically been called to the Court's attention.

Judge Bright: We do no know what they are.

Mr. Wright: I beg your pardon?

Judge Bright: We don't know what they are.

Mr. Wright: I think we showed, for example, in the examination of one witness, as to the rentals which were paid for runs in, I think, third or fourth run Philadelphia, that there was no uniformity whatsoever as between the Warner theatres and the independent as to the rentals they were charging for the same run.

On this problem of comparison, again, I would—I attempted to follow your Honor's questioning and we are prepared to make any kind of specific comparison that the Court is interested in. There are, of course, many things that can be done along that line, compare prior runs with later runs or pictures on the same run, but in my view, what you come up with, I think, is a fairly obvious conclusion in the instance, that necessarily, when you make one of these deals, you discriminate in some respects every time you make a film license, and that the general testimony to the effect that "We don't discriminate" just has no meaning in the face of the fact that each of these is a bargained agreement and your terms will necessarily vary with the bargaining strength of the parties to the agreement.

That is, really, the question that, as I see it, we are faced with on rebuttal, is how far to attempt to elaborate on what seems to be, to us, an obvious fact or a fact which is inevitable in any consideration of the way the business is done, and I would like to direct any further evidence on that point into the precise channels, if any, that the Court has in mind. If we could be told as to what, if any, kinds of rental discrimination the Court is interested in, I shall attempt to make a comparative showing.

Judge Hand: You are almost making the argument, apparently, that to bargain at all is discriminatory. I don't understand it.

Judge Bright: I have just been wondering whether the Sherman Act prevents you from dealing with a man who has $50 on a different basis than one who has $5.00.

Mr. Wright: Not at all. I think not only is some discrimination implicit in every deal that is made but that discrimination which simply gives regard to the results from competitive bargaining on a theatre by theatre basis, does not violate the Sherman Act at all, and we do not make any such contention, but it seems to us, again, the testimony of these witnesses is so unlimited and so general in character that——

Judge Goddard: Most of these contracts, according to the testimony, as I recall, were made theatre by by theatre and not in groups, isn't that the testimony?

Mr. Wright: I think your Honor will find in the interrogatory answers many instances where the statement is made that they cannot tell us what the rental paid by a particular theatre was because there was either a flat rental deal for a large number or some formula deal where the rental has not yet been computed.

That problem of how far to go in putting into the record additional contractual material is one which I think we need some help on from the court. As the record stands, I do not know what significance the Court attaches to these statements that have been made at all. I would go further and I would say that insofar as our tabulations are concerned, tabulating this interrogatory material, we, again, want to limit what we offer insofar as we can to tabulations which will satisfy the Court's curiosity rather than just give employment to ourselves.

Judge Bright: Don't you think the burden is on (2664)

you to center your fire rather than to scatter it?

Mr. Wright: I agree that the burden is on us to center our fire but I say that the manner in which the defendants have been permitted to scatter theirs has really given us a burden that, as matter of law, we should not have.

Judge Bright: When you are trying to shoot at a flock of pigeons, you don't use a choked barrel.

Mr. Wright: That is quite true.

Judge Hand: I should think you ought to show or to have shown, whichever may be the case, in what way there has been discrimination and to what extent, that is your burden absolutely, and somebody has a right, who is an officer, to come back and say, "Well, in our negotiations we treated Trojan and Tyrrhenian without discrimination. The independents and the others were treated in the same way." Very likely that isn't so; you say that your evidence shows plainly that it isn't so.

Mr. Wright: That is right.

Judge Hand: That does not say that they cannot talk about it. There are lot of transactions here, doubtless, that may be entirely colored by their interest and wishful thinking, but are outside of completely recorded transactions that represented consummated deals. And you have, you believe, I imagine, a mass of documents and transactions showing that that is not so.

I cannot tell you, without considering the thing further, what weight is to be attached to anything. How can I? How can any of us? This is not a simple case, it has complicated facts and varying agreements and all kinds of varying relations.

Mr. Wright: Of course I think, if the Court please, that it is simpler than it has been made to appear by the treatment which it has got from the defendants. That, of course——

Judge Hand: That may be so.

Mr. Wright: —is a problem we have in these cases. If the defendants can make the issues sufficiently complex, they generally prevail; if we can keep them simple, we prevail. What I am trying to do here is refrain, if I can, from further cluttering the record with elaborate documentary rebuttal testimony.

Judge Hand: I shouldn't think, if your evidence was good enough, that it was helped by mere weight of numbers. It is absolutely impossible for us to sit here and give any safe conducts as to what you should put in.

Mr. Wright: May I do this? We are preparing a motion to strike, which we shall want to file anyway, and I would like to submit with it a brief memorandum, if the Court would receive it, referring to authorities which I think can support the position that I took, but I would assume that in any event we would go ahead and prepare such rebuttal as we think we need, without waiting, that is, for the Court's ruling. We would, however, appreciate an opportunity to examine what has gone in here in considerable detail in order that we can cut what we will offer down to the very minimum that we think is essential to make a full case.

I do not know what your Honor's plans are as to when you want to sit. We could get this motion into your hands, I think, by the first of the week—motion and memoranda.

Judge Hand: I do not think we care anything about those motions. You ought to make them on account of your record, of course, but we are not going to spend time striking out this and striking out that. It is impossible. We would not add anything to the situation that would help any, before we got through.

Judge Goddard: Couldn't pass on it.

Judge Hand: No. I wouldn't spend much time on these motions, if I were in your place, except to make the kind of record which you think is proper in case you should not get what you wanted out of this court and should want to take an appeal.

Mr. Wright: Well, of course, I should like to say, for the most part, that is the——

Judge Hand: The defendants, of course, have made some motions already. Very likely they will make some more to the same desirable end.

Mr. Wright: What is the Court's pleasure as to when you would like to have us begin whatever rebuttal we have?

Judge Hand: When would you be ready to begin?

Mr. Wright: Your Honors, I take it, are not sitting Monday?

Judge Hand: No.

Mr. Wright: I would suppose we would be ready with something by the end of the week. I think there are some odds and ends to pick up too with some of these other things. Perhaps Wednesday or Thursday?

Judge Hand: Wednesday is all right. I don't want to really, push any of you here too much. You have collaborated splendidly in shortening this case. I don't want people sitting up all night and killing themselves, but, as I manifested at the beginning, I do not want this case to take the course of so many Sherman Antitrust Act cases take—just grevious, to everybody.

Mr. Wright: We don't want to do that either.

Judge Hand: No. you haven't. You have done awfully well.

(2668)

Mr. Wright: Can we proceed Wednesday with this understanding, that, of course, we have numerous matters to clear up as part of the defense case here, that we know we want to go ahead with now, and it may be that after we have those matters finished, we might ask for another short recess before actually closing, but I think we could use that time.

Judge Hand: Would you rather begin Thursday? Can you go right on then?

Mr. Wright: As I say, I cannot give the Court assurance now as to how long it will take us to make our final study of this record. I know that there are some things we can go ahead with next week. That is why I thought it might be desirable to use some of that time.

Judge Hand: We will adjourn until Wednesday at ten-thirty.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honors, before we adjourn, I have sat silent a long time here. I don't want to go into a long recess with any impression in the Court's mind that our chief reliance in our testimony was on those general denials.

Judge Hand: I never supposed so. I take these recitals and affidavits, that people would testify to——

Mr. Proskauer: They are for the protection of our record.

(2669)

Judge Hand: They never did me any good, really, and I have them particularly in admiralty all the time.

Mr. Proskauer: Of course.

Judge Hand: We all know that. I suppose they have to make some kind of record—all of you do—lest acquiescence should be weighed against you.

Mr. Proskauer: I want to make it clear that our contention is that we have negatived conspiracy and shown there is no issue of fact here by very direct and specific evidence.

Mr. David: I want to also suggest that this is the first time I have ever heard, in a quasi-criminal case, where the defendants took the stand and, with uplifted hand, said "I am not guilty," the prosecuting officer move to strike his testimony.

Judge Hand: Wednesday at ten-thirty.

(Adjourned until Wednesday, November 14, 1945, at 10:30 a. m.)

(2670)

New York, November 14, 1945;
10:30 o'clock a. m.

Trial resumed.

Mr. Caskey: If the Court please, at the session on Friday Mr. Pride offered the stipulations of the four division managers of National Theatres Corporation, and, as I understand it, they were received subject to any suggestion which counsel for plaintiff might have. If there are none they can now be incorporated in the record.

Mr. Wright: Of course, as far as suggestions are concerned, our suggestions will take the form of a motion to strike a large part of that material, simply as we have before; but there is not any agreement between us as to what the affidavit should contain.

Mr. Caskey: And I now ask to have the stipulation of Charles P. Skouras, who is the president of National Theatres Corporation, a defendant in this case, incorporated into the record.

(The five stipulations referred to are as follows:)

(2671)

(The affidavit of HAROLD J. FITZGERALD is as follows:)

"IT IS HEREBY STIPULATED by and between counsel for the plaintiff herein and counsel for the defendants, Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and National Theatres Corporation, that if called as a witness in this proceeding HAROLD J. FITZGERALD would testify as follows:

"I am a resident of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, having resided there all my life. I am engaged in the motion picture theatre business and have been engaged in that business continuously since 1915. I am now and since 1933 have been the president and operating head of Fox Wisconsin Theatres, Inc. (hereinafter referred to as 'Fox Wisconsin'), a Delaware corporation, having its principal office and place of business in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. All of the stock of Fox Wisconsin is owned by National Theatres Corporation, a defendant in this proceeding.

"Fox Wisconsin is interested directly, or through corporations the stock of which is owned by it, in the owning, leasing and operation of 66 motion picture theatres located in various cities and towns in the State of Wisconsin and in the upper peninsula of Michigan. All of such theatres are located in what is generally known as the Milwaukee Exchange territory, by which is meant that films are supplied to such theatres through the exchanges maintained by the respective distributors in Milwaukee.

"At the present time, 61 of these theatres are in active operation, 5 are not. For the most part, these 5 theatres are not being operated because various physical deficiencies make them unsuitable for use as theatres.

"I am familiar with the allegations contained in the plaintiff's complaint herein.

"I. GROWTH AND DEVELOPMENT OF MOTION PICTURE THEATRE BUSINESS IN MILWAUKEE EXCHANGE TERRITORY UP TO TIME OF ACQUISITION BY FOX FILM CORPORATION OF THE PREDECESSOR OF FOX WISCONSIN.

"The development of the motion picture theatre business in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, as well as in most of the other larger towns in which Fox Wisconsin now operates, is linked with the story of two residents of Milwaukee—John E. and Thomas Saxe, who were pioneers in the exhibition business in the entire territory. These men had become interested in the business as early as 1904. Their entry into the business was through the acquisition of a nickleodeon in payment of a debt. They opened other five cent store front theatres. They were the first to open an enlarged type of theatre charging ten cents. They had confidence in the future of the business. They ploughed back into new and improved theatres the profits of their original ventures.

"I first became associated with the Saxe organization in about 1920. At that time the Saxe brothers were operating approximately 20 theatres in the City of Milwaukee and a few in other outside communities. For the most part these theatres had either been constructed by them or for them and represented the most advanced theatre operations in existence in Wisconsin. The theatres, of course, did not begin to compare physically with today's better theatres. For the most part they were relatively small and otherwise inadequate but they were the 'quality' theatres of that period. Other theatres were in competition with them Some of such other theatres were being operated as units by several individuals.

"In the period between 1920 and 1927, there was great activity in the theatre field. The motion picture industry had developed by leaps and bounds. The quality of the product had immeasurably improved. The power to attract public patronage had greatly increased. These factors were reflected in elaborate plans on the part of existing theatre operators to enlarge and improve their theatres to satisfy public demand and to keep abreast of these developments. In the large metropolitan cities, such as Milwaukee, theatre construction was undertaken in a large way. This marked the beginning of the construction of the so-called 'de luxe' theatres, with large seating capacities, luxurious appointments and requiring very substantial investments.

"The Saxes were the leaders of this in Milwaukee. They entered upon the construction of such theatres as the Wisconsin (still the finest theatre in the State of Wisconsin). They likewise constructed the Uptown and the Garfield and arranged to have constructed for them the Oriental and Tower theatres. These 4 theatres were large de luxe neighborhood houses. Together with the Modjeska theatre they represented a group of superior theatres, each in a competitive neighborhood area of Milwaukee and each affording to the public theatre accomodations which were unequalled in neighborhood theatres in any city of comparable size in the country. Moreover, they also entered upon the construction of similar fine theatres in representative communities in the State.

"These theatres were built by the Saxe companies (or built by others for them on the basis of leases guaranteed by the Saxes) because of a definite realization that if they were to continue to have a profitable exhibition company it was necessary for them to keep abreast of the times. It was necessary for them to have fine theatre facilities to accommodate the public and to provide appropriate exhibition facilities for the productions that were then being distributed by the producing companies. If they did not supply these facilities, other progressive exhibitors would do so and relegate them to a position in which their business would be outmoded. The theatres in question were costly. It was necessary in a number of instances to finance them with bond issues which were generally distributed to local investors. The risks assumed were large. They were only assumed as necessary business measures required to keep pace with an expanding industry.

"This development in the theatre business was, of course, not confined to the Saxes. Other interests who had been engaged in theatre operation in Milwaukee and in other towns throughout the State likewise developed their properties. In all, from about 1920 to 1927 more than 43 theatres were built in the City of Milwaukee alone, most of them of substantial size. 16 of them had more than 1,000 seats and 7 of them had more than 1,500 seats. The great majority of them were built by individuals having no connection with the Saxes or any other circuit of theatres.

"Throughout this period the Saxe circuit developed entirely on its own, with no financial assistance from any producer or distributor of motion pictures. Up to 1927 the only distribution company having any interest in theatres in Wisconsin was Universal, which, as early as 1921, had acquired the Alhambra theatre in Milwaukee.* Universal had expanded its theatre holdings by acquiring several groups of theatres theretofore operated by certain individuals and it also built, or otherwise acquired, theatres in several other towns in the State, building a de luxe theatre in Kenosha, Racine and Sheboygan, respectively, the theatre in Racine and Kenosha being directly competitive with the Saxe operations in those communities.

"By 1928 there were 77 theatres in the City of Milwaukee, a number of which were being operated by the Saxes.

"In addition, the Saxes were also operating theatres in the Cities of Appleton, Beloit, Fond du Lac, Green Bay, Janesville, Kenosha, Marinette, Menasha, Neenah, Racine, Waukesha and Wausau. They had constructed the Capitol theatre, in Madison, with a seating capacity of 2,240. They had under construction a theatre in Kenosha and one in Oshkosh.

(2677)

"By reason of my connection with the Saxe company, I was familiar with the events and situations which led to the construction and acquisition of the Saxe theatres. I was general manager of the company from 1925. I can definitely state that the theatre construction which occurred in the period was occasioned solely by an endeavor on the part of the Saxe company to continue a profitable business, with the knowledge on its part that, unless it was successful in affording the public and the producers adequate facilities and adequate outlets, the economics of the situation would destroy the enterprise. There was no thought or intention of creating a situation which would exclude competition or prevent others from engaging in the theatre business. The basic consideration was the maintenance of an established business along progressive lines.

*This theatre had formerly been operated by the Saxes but Universal offered a greatly increased rental to the landlord and secured the property.

"Beginning in about 1924, there became apparent the greatest interest on the part of distributors of pictures to secure a position in the exhibition field in Milwaukee.

"In so far as the Saxe theatres were concerned, there were many propositions submitted for the purchase of this circuit. Solicitations were made by brokers and promoters, some purporting to act for major producers or other large interests and some concealing their principals. In the period between 1925 and the end of 1927 definite negotiations were had with the following:

"William Fox, who was negotiating for the direct acquisition of the circuit through an agent, A. C. Blumenthal;

"Hayden, Stone & Co., bankers, who had financed Wesco Corporation, which was a holding company interested in many theatres on the West Coast;

"Paramount Publix Corporation;

"Balaban & Katz Corporation; and

"Ruben & Finkelstein, who operated theatres in Minnesota.

"Negotiations with Hayden, Stone & Co. for the acquisition of the circuit by Wesco Corporation resulted in the development of a formula for a sale in the summer of 1927 and the agreement was closed December 1 of that year. The Saxe circuit was purchased by a company known as Midwesco, which was a wholly owned subsidiary of Wesco Corporation. The price paid was $900,000 in cash and 17,500 shares of the stock of Wesco Corporation, plus an option to the Saxe interests to purchase an additional 22,500 shares at $40 per share. In 1928 Fox Film Corporation acquired all of the stock of Wesco Corporation. At that time the stock held by the Saxes was exchanged, share for share, for the stock of Fox Film Corporation and a cash consideration of $100,000 was paid to the Saxe interests to cancel their option.

"As indicated by the foregoing, the Saxe theatres were, when they became affiliated with Fox Film Corporation in 1928, an established circuit of theatres, with the development of which the producing company had no connection. It was acquired by Fox Film Corporation in a highly competitive market.

"II. TRADE PRACTICES AND COMPETITIVE CONDITIONS UP TO TIME OF AFFILIATION.

"As stated above, I became general manager of the Saxe theatres in 1925. In this capacity I had supervision and control over all phases of the operation, including the licensing of pictures for the theatres. I was wholly familiar with the methods of licensing and the practices followed with respect thereto.

"In 1928 there was definite competition in the operation of first run theatres in Milwaukee. The Saxe circuit was operating two theatres, the Wisconsin and the Strand, as first run theatres. Universal was operating the Alhambra. The Riverside theatre, with a large seating capacity, had been built in 1926 and was being operated by the Keith-Albee-Orpheum circuit, principally as a vaudeville theatre, but increasingly more as a motion picture theatre. The Palace theatre was also being operated by the Keith-Albee-Orpheum circuit as a vaudeville and motion picture theatre. The Garden theatre was being operated by an independent.

"The Saxes had, as stated above, constructed a number of de luxe first run neighborhood houses which were playing as first run theatres in their respective competitive areas, although in other neighborhoods there were first runs operated by two independents, as well as a neighborhood first run operated by Universal.

"The situation with respect to the licensing of films, and the runs and clearances involved, were much the same at that time as they are today. Without exception, at that time, the first neighborhood run was licensed by the distributors to the theatres which were the finest, most commodious, and most capable of producing revenue for the distributor in the particular zone involved. Then, as now, no question of affiliation or circuit connections determined that choice.

"As to the first run downtown theatres, the same situation existed. The entire system of licensing runs, with appropriate clearances attaching to each, is nothing new or unique. It existed then, as it does now.

"In licensing film at the time—and this was one of my principal responsibilities—I naturally endeavored to license the best product available to the extent necessary to supply the demands of the theatres. While the number of first run downtown outlets was fewer at the time then at present, partly because of the playing of vaudeville in the Riverside and the Palace theatres and partly because the large Downtown Warner theatre had not been constructed, nevertheless the ability to secure film was predicated upon the physical characteristics of the theatre for which it was to be licensed, plus an ability to arrive at satisfactory terms with the distributor.

"Moreover, in so far as licensing provisions generally are concerned, the same procedures were in effect at that time as at the present. It was not uncommon for pictures to be licensed on a percentage-of-the-gross basis, although such contracts were not as generally used as at the present time. Then, as now, minimum admission price provisions were inserted in the film contract. Clearance was negotiated on the basis of the proper period of protection which the distributor and the exhibitor could agree upon for the particular competitive situation involved.

"III. DEVELOPMENTS FROM 1923-1933—THE PERIOD FROM THE ACQUISITION BY FOX FILM CORPORATION THROUGH THE BANKRUPTCY AND REORGANIZATION OF THE MIDWESCO CIRCUIT.

"In the period between 1928 and 1933, a number of significant changes took place in this competitive area. At the time when the Saxe interests sold out to Midwesco, they had developed plans for the erection and acquisition of a number of other theatres, which plans were consummated. By 1933, Fox Wisconsin was operating three first run theatres in Milwaukee, the Wisconsin, the Strand and the Palace (which by that time was operated almost entirely as a motion picture theatre). The Riverside theatre was being operated as a motion picture theatre by RKO. The Warner company had entered into the exhibition business in Milwaukee. It had erected the large 2,000-seat Warner theatre downtown, and had acquired a number of other theatres, both in Milwaukee and throughout the State. These Warner acquisitions represented purchases of certain theatres operated by Universal up to 1931, as well as acquisitions of other theatres from various independent operators. At the beginning of 1933 Midwesco had approximately 15 theatres in Milwaukee; Warner Bros. had approximately 10 theatres; RKO had one theatre; and there were 45 operating independent theatres.

"Outside of Milwaukee, Midwesco had also carried out preexisting plans of the Saxes with respect to the construction and acquisition of new theatres, to the point where, by the end of 1932, Midwesco had or was interested in the operation of 42 theatres in other communities.

"In other words, it had a total of 57 theatres in the Milwaukee Exchange territory, as compared with 61 operating theatres today.

"Comment should also be made as to the development of the Warner company operation in the period between 1931 and 1933. Beginning in 1931, at a time when Midwesco was affiliated with Fox Film Corporation, the Warner company entered into vigorous competition with it in Wisconsin. In addition to the first run and the first neighborhood runs in Milwaukee, which are referred to above, it acquired first run theatres in direct competition with Midwesco in other Wisconsin cities, including first run theatres in Appleton, Kenosha, Racine and Sheboygan.

"Throughout 1932 Midwesco lost hundreds of thousands of dollars in the operation of its theatres. In this year it felt the full effect of the depression. Its fixed charges, resulting from burdensome leases, particularly those on the large de luxe theatres which had been built in the late '20s, and other heavy items of overhead, made it impossible for it to continue operations on its then existing setup. This was in spite of the fact that every effort was made to reduce its leasehold obligations and the fact that large additional capital sums were invested in the company. Accordingly, in February, 1933, it filed a petition in bankruptcy. In the subsequent reorganization of the company, now Fox Wisconsin Theatres, Inc., many important developments took place, some of which will be referred to later in this statement.

"IV. DESCRIPTION OF PRESENT CORPORATE STRUCTURE AND GENERAL BUSINESS PRACTICES OF FOX WISCONSIN.

"I now turn to a description of the existing structure and method of operation of Fox Wisconsin.

"I have stated above that all of the stock of Fox Wisconsin is owned by National Theatres Corporation, which also owns the stock of a number of other companies engaged in the operation of theatres. Fox Wisconsin, however, operates as a separate autonomous business entity. All of the directors except one are residents of Milwaukee, the directors being Charles P. Skouras, George H. Uihlein (who is not an officer or employee of either Fox Wisconsin or National Theatres Corporation), L. S. Clemons, an attorney in Milwaukee, E. M. Donnelly, the treasurer of Fox Wisconsin, and myself. The management and operations of the theatres of Fox Wisconsin are directly under my supervision and control, as are the general policies of its operation. The executives of National Theatres Corporation, by reason of that company's financial interest in Fox Wisconsin, naturally pass judgment upon and exercise a certain amount of direction on all important financial transactions, such as new theatre construction, acquisitions, renovations or other large capital commitments.

"At the present time, Fox Wisconsin has 14 wholly owned subsidiary corporations and one 50% owned subsidiary. There are several reasons why it has this corporate structure. In the first place, with respect to the leases of certain theatres, it was considered desirable to insulate Fox Wisconsin against liability by having these leases held by separate corporations. This was done with the express understanding on the part of the lessors of the various theatres that the particular subsidiary to which the theatres were leased was alone responsible. In the second place, certain tax advantages could be realized under this corporate structure, all of which were expressly sanctioned by the Internal Revenue Code and have been approved by the Bureau of Internal Revenue. In the third place, in certain instances the lessor or owner of the theatre participated in the profits of the operation, either by way of additional rental or direct sharing in the profits. For this reason, it was desirable to have a separate corporate entity conduct the operation, and in certain instances this was done at the suggestion of associates who were interested only in their own theatres.

"One of the wholly owned subsidiaries of Fox Wisconsin is Fox Wisconsin Amusement Corporation. This is a service corporation for all of the theatres in which Fox Wisconsin and its subsidiaries are interested. Fox Wisconsin Amusement Corporation performs all of the activities incident to the actual operation of the theatres, including the licensing and booking of films, accounting, maintenance of the theatres, establishing of policies, planning and arranging for advertising, purchasing supplies, procuring and maintaining of insurance, and other similar functions. In the performance of these services it employs approximately 100 employees. It maintains offices in the Varsity Theatre Building in Milwaukee, where it has extensive office space comprising two floors of a modern building. It has a large projection room, where the motion pictures of all producers are screened, and various other facilities useful in the operation of theatres.

"Its organization is divided into various departments. One department is known as the Buying and Booking Department. It consists of 12 employees, including buyers, bookers, statisticians and experienced film clerks. The general function of this department is to negotiate licenses for the pictures to be exhibited in the theatres and to arrange for their booking (playing dates) after the films have been licensed. The personnel comprising this department is highly skilled and trained in this work. They must have special ability to judge the quality of such pictures. They must have a knowledge of the theatres operated by the company and the communities in which they are located. They must have an accurate evaluation of the tastes of the theatre-going public to which each theatre caters. In other words, to carry on their functions effectively they must know the box-office quality of each picture produced, gauging it in the light of the tastes of the public which patronizes each theatre. For example, a 'crime' picture, such as 'Dillinger', would have little appeal in the Downer theatre in Milwaukee, which is situated in a fine residential section. The same picture would have great drawing power in the Riviera theatre, which is located in an industrial neighborhood. A so-called 'quality' picture starring Greer Garson, for example, would have no particular drawing power at the Miller theatre in Milwaukee, where action pictures have been established as having the greatest box-office appeal.

"A. Business Practices Relating to the Licensing of Films.

"In so far as concluding contracts for the exhibition of motion pictures in its theatres is concerned, Fox Wisconsin enters into film contracts for theatres in which it is interested and only those theatres.

"In the case of the companies which are parties to the Consent Decree, negotiations for license agreements occur with respect to each block of pictures offered by each such company. As to other producers, the negotiations generally relate to the entire season's product.

"Prior to the entry of the Consent Decree, substantially all distributors licensed their entire season's product at one time. National Theatres Corporation then maintained a central office in New York, where negotiations were generally conducted with all the distributors for the licensing of pictures in all of the theatres in which National was interested. Licensing arrangements were then generally arranged at this central office. Even under this procedure, however, the licenses were made with respect to each individual theatre. In the latter part of 1941 there was a complete decentralization of the so-called Buying Department of National Theatres Corporation.

"In certain instances a distributor, who is a party to the decree, may negotiate license agreements with another subsidiary of National Theatres Corporation before it conducts any negotiations relating to Fox Wisconsin's theatres. For example, a distributor might negotiate with Fox West Coast in Los Angeles with respect to theatres operated in Southern California. In the course of those negotiations, a general formula might be agreed upon for a particular group of pictures for exhibition in the theatres of Fox West Coast. This formula might provide for a film rental based upon certain percentages applicable to each picture, which percentages would apply to those particular theatres which played the pictures on a percentage basis, rather than on a flat rental basis. Later the general formula previously agreed upon for the Fox West Coast theatres might be adopted for Fox Wisconsin's theatres or might be used as a general basis for negotiation. Such prior arrangements which the distributor had effected with any of the other subsidiaries of National Theatres Corporation would, however, represent no binding commitment as far as

Fox Wisconsin was concerned.

"Furthermore, as between Fox Wisconsin and the other operating subsidiaries of National Theatres Corporation, there is, of course, full exchange of information between the executives of the respective companies. This information relates to all matters which would be of mutual interest to the executives of these companies, including the terms upon which films have been licensed, the box-office value of particular pictures in particular territories, developments in theatre maintenance and all new phases of theatre operations generally.

"When the representatives of the distributors and the representatives of Fox Wisconsin have arrived at a satisfactory agreement, the proposed contract is then submitted to me for my approval. No license agreement for films can be concluded without specific delegation of authority from me or without my express approval. In the negotiation of these licenses, separate consideration is, in practically all instances, given to each particular theatre in which Fox Wisconsin is interested and a separate and specific deal made on the basis of each individual theatre.

"Moreover, in a certain number of situations, Fox Wisconsin has associated with it individuals who participate in the profits of the operations of certain theatres which are owned by them or in which they otherwise have an interest. These individuals have no other connection or affiliation with Fox Wisconsin, or any other company engaged in the motion picture business. As to these theatres, these associates have the right to approve any film license agreements which are negotiated for these theatres. The only film deals which they would approve would be those negotiated solely for the best interests of their theatres.

"Fox Wisconsin enters into film license agreements with all distributors of worthwhile pictures, including a number who are not defendants in this case, such as Republic, Monogram, PRC and others. The general practice and procedures outlined above apply with respect to all negotiations.

"As to the terms upon which the pictures are licensed, there is no standard formula for every theatre, nor is there any standard formula applicable to each theatre. As to certain of the theatres of Fox Wisconsin, all of the license agreements for those theatres provide for a certain fixed amount as film rental. However, these flat rental deals vary with respect to each company whose product is licensed, depending upon the quality of the product. For certain pictures one of such theatres might pay $100 flat rental, while for another picture it might pay $20. In a number of other theatres, the license agreements provide for film rental determined in one way or another by a percentage of the gross business done by the theatre. Here, again, however, there is no standard formula or arrangement which is applied to these so-called 'percentage deals.' They vary greatly in form and substance as to the particular distributors involved. With one distributor, the film rental might be predicated solely upon a specified percentage of the gross receipts. As to another distributor, the licence agreement might provide for what is called a 'sliding scale' arrangement, under which the percentage of the gross receipts to which the distributor is entitled would vary, depending upon the volume of business done by the theatre on the particular picture. Other formulae are also used. This all depends upon the particular negotiations with the particular distributor.

"All of these arrangements simply represent a measuring rod for the determination of the film rental which is to be paid. They are negotiated solely with an eye to arriving at a fair deal for both the distributor and the exhibitor. The various refinements which ofttimes are linked with a straight percentage deal are used only for the purpose of enabling the distributor to receive a higher percentage of the gross on pictures which are outstanding box-office attractions and to reduce his percentage upon productions which have less drawing power than anticipated at the time when the license agreement was made.

"At the time when negotiations are had for the licensing of the pictures and the terms upon which they are to be licensed are under consideration, the matter of clearance is also considered. This element of any licensing arrangement is of vital importance to the distributor. It also very directly affects the exhibitor. If Fox Wisconsin at the Wisconsin theatre in Milwaukee undertakes to pay a distributor film rental based upon a high percentage of the gross receipts and proposes to charge 85¢ admission, it is certainly interested in the clearance which it will have on that picture over the first neighborhood run thereof which such distributor might license to a competing subsequent run theatre. The clearance, obviously, has a definite effect upon the capacity of Fox Wisconsin to secure patronage at its top admission price.

"Generally speaking, the actual negotiations as to clearance do not take place with respect to each block of pictures which is licensed. This is because of the fact that, once a fair and reasonable clearance has been determined upon by the distributor and exhibitor, it tends to become fixed and, in the absence of any changed circumstances or conditions, will ordinarily be the same in a series of contracts. There are exceptions, of course, to this.

"My attention has been directed to the claim of the Government that the distributor and the affiliated theatres agree upon clearance and minimum admission prices for the purpose of fixing the actual price which a subsequent run exhibitor may charge and that such factors are agreed upon for the purpose of improperly subordinating the freedom of action of such subsequent run exhibitor. This I flatly deny. In instances where my company is operating a prior run theatre, I have no concern of any sort as to the maximum price which my subsequent run competitor charges. It is my desire that he charge a price which is as close to the price which I charge in the prior run as he considers feasible. Generally speaking, if my theatre operates first run and charges 60¢, the subsequent run exhibitor who plays 28 days after my first run theatre and charges 50¢ would be less competitive than a subsequent run which plays on the same availability but charges only 30¢.

"Consequently, not only have I never entered into any arrangements with any distributor which attempted to fix the maximum price of a subsequent run theatre but it would not be good business for me to do so.

"In connection with the licensing of films, there are certain other specific points which I emphasize.

"1. In licensing films for exhibition in Fox Wisconsin theatres, there is only one controlling consideration, namely, to secure adequate product on fair and appropriate terms.

"2. In negotiating for product with any one of the distributors which is also interested in theatres, Fox Wisconsin does not know and has not the slightest interest in whether or not Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation has or has not licensed its product to theatres in which such distributor is interested.

"No representative of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation has ever indicated to me, directly or indirectly, that, in licensing film from other distributors, any consideration whatsoever should be given by me to whether or not Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation has licensed pictures to the theatres operated by such distributor.

"This company is interested in licensing pictures solely because of their value as box-office attractions and then only when it can secure them on proper terms. For example, when it negotiates with Loew's for the exhibition of Loew's product in its theatres, it does not know whether Twentieth Century-Fox has entered into any license agreement with Loew's for the Loew's theatres, or any of them. It does not know whether it is even negotiating with Loew's. If Twentieth Century-Fox has made such film contracts, Fox Wisconsin does not know of it nor of the terms which are contained therein. Furthermore, if Twentieth Century-Fox was wholly unable to license its product to any Loew's theatre for any reason whatsoever, it would not have the slightest effect upon the desire of Fox Wisconsin to enter into license agreements with Loew's. The same applies to any other distributor. Moreover, no representative of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation has ever requested that he be furnished with the terms upon which I licensed pictures from all distributors, nor have I ever furnished such information to any representative of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation.

"My own personal interests all impel me to act for the sole welfare and benefit of Fox Wisconsin. I have no connection with Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation. I do have an employment contract with Fox Wisconsin. The terms of my contract provide for a certain fixed salary, with a participation in the profits of the company. I also am a stockholder in National Theatres Corporation. I am interested, therefore, from the financial standpoint, in promoting the best interests of my company. I am not concerned with the effect which the policies of my operation may have upon the distribution problems of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation.

"My attention is also directed to the claim of the Government that, where two affiliated exhibitors are in competition with each other, such competition is purely nominal and not real. In so far as the situations in which Fox Wisconsin has such affiliated opposition, I unqualifiedly deny this claim. My company is in direct competition with theatres operated by Warners in a number of situations. In every respect, the degree of competition between us is as great as it possibly could be in all phases of the business.

"There certainly can be no doubt as to our competition for the patron's dollar. We each adopt every policy possible, consistent with good business, to secure patronage from each other.

"It is said by the Government that, over a period of time, the licensing of pictures in the theatres of affiliated exhibitors follows a certain pattern and that, season after season, the same product is licensed to the same theatres. I first point out that this is no phenomenon. There is nothing striking or unusual about it. There are certain practical aspects in the licensing of motion picture films which cannot be ignored. An exhibitor, in order to secure product away from another exhibitor, must be able to do two things, namely, provide adequate playing time on terms which will return more revenue to that distributor than he has been receiving and, at the same time, furnish adequate facilities for the exhibition and exploitation of the distributor's product. A desire on the part of an exhibitor to corral all product available when he cannot properly exhibit all of the product will not enable him to secure all of it from a competing exhibitor who has had a satisfactory performance record with the distributors with whom he has previously dealt.

"I can best illustrate the point to which I refer by relating it to a specific situation, such as first run in Milwaukee. At the present time, there are six theatres operating on a regular first run and move-over policy in that City. Fox Wisconsin has the Wisconsin theatre, with a seating capacity of 2,778, and the Palace theatre, with a seating capacity of 2,438, both of which are operated as first run theatres. It also has the Strand, with a seating capacity of 1,200, which is operated as a move-over house. Warner Bros. operates the Warner theatre, with a seating capacity of approximately 2,000 seats, and the Riverside theatre, with a seating capacity of 2,300 seats, as first run theatres. It also has the Alhambra theatre, with a seating capacity of about 1,400 seats, which is operated as a move-over house. The Wisconsin, Palace, Warner and Riverside are fine, luxurious theatres. The Wisconsin and Warner theatres, in particular, may be properly described as show case theatres in that they are the finest in the entire area between Minneapolis and Chicago.

"For many years, the product of Twentieth Century-Fox has been licensed to Fox Wisconsin for first run exhibition in its theatres. Obviously, this is only natural in view of the interest which Fox has in the operation. There has, likewise, been licensed for exhibition in these theatres the product distributed by Loew's, Paramount and Columbia. There has been licensed to the Warner Bros. theatres the product of Warner Bros. itself, together with the product of RKO, Universal and United Artists.*

(2700)

I submit that not only is there nothing unusual about such a situation but that it would be strange indeed if it were otherwise. It must be remembered that a theatre needs product as well as that a producer needs a satisfactory outlet for its pictures. As indicated above, the respective theatres of Fox Wisconsin and Warner Bros. would each provide adequate outlets for the films released by any one of the distributors. In the case of Fox Wisconsin, with the four products above named, and the products of certain independent producers, which it exhibits from time to time, it is able to operate its theatres on a policy which gives to the pictures which it licenses fair and appropriate playing time. By reason of this it is able to satisfy the revenue demands of the producers of the pictures which it exhibits. Under present conditions, moreover, where attractions have longer runs than has heretofore been the case, it has had an adequate supply of pictures for its theatres despite the fact that the programs of the various distributors have been curtailed during the war years.

"Now, under such conditions, Fox Wisconsin could not secure licenses for all of the pictures which are presently being licensed to the Warner Bros. theatres. From the standpoint of Fox Wisconsin, this would represent economic suicide. It could not, under any circumstances, afford to pay to the distributors now

*I have only referred to the distributors who are defendants. The product of other producers, depending upon its suitability for first run exhibition in these theatres, is also licensed by either Fox Wisconsin or Warners.

licensing product to the Warner Bros. theatres more money than they are now receiving and, at the same time, continue to pay the distributors whose pictures it presently shows. From the standpoint of the distributors who are presently licensing pictures to the Warner theatres, they would know that, if they licensed their product to Fox Wisconsin, they would not receive adequate playing time because of the number of films which Fox Wisconsin would then have under contract. They would also know that, over a period of time (not matter what the initial guaranteed rental to them might be), they would secure no benefits.

"In other words, if, as at the present time, they are securing fair and reasonable revenue and proper exploitation of their pictures in the desirable outlets afforded by Warner Bros., they have no particular interest in jeopardizing their present playing position.

"It must be apparent that, in a competitive situation such as this, there comes what may be called as 'saturation point' beyond which no exhibitor can profitably or effectively go. It would be folly for Fox Wisconsin, being able to negotiate for adequate product for its theatres, arbitrarily to set out to induce a particular distributor, say, RKO, to discontinue satisfactory business relations with Warner Bros. and license its product to Fox Wisconsin. It would be folly for it to take on product which it did not require, for which it would have to pay an exorbitant amount and which would only serve to complicate its operating policies and involve it in problems with the distributors whose product it had been exhibiting. Likewise, from the standpoint of RKO, it would be bad business for it to discontinue business dealings with Warner Bros., if that company is affording it a desirable market for its pictures and assume the obvious risks incident to such a change of customers.

"Thus, so long as these various distributors are able to arrive at satisfactory terms for the licensing of their pictures to their present accounts, there is no good business reason for them to change. If, on the other hand, a distributor arrives at a stalemate with an exhibitor, or reaches the conclusion that its product is not being satisfactorily exploited and it is not receiving adequate revenue, there is another customer to which it can turn. There is another available outlet for its product with whom it can negotiate. In such a situation, it then might be able, by reason of terms which it would offer, to supplant a distributor who was then licensing that outlet.

"In the case of individual pictures, however, a different situation exists. A recent example of this has occurred in the case of the picture 'Wonder Man', produced by Samuel Goldwyn. Prior to the release of this picture, the previous Goldwyn pictures had been licensed for exhibition first run in Milwaukee to Warner Bros. RKO, which distributes the Goldwyn pictures, and which also licenses its own product in the Warner theatres, could not arrange a deal with Warner Bros. on satisfactory terms. I was solicited by RKO and a proposal submitted to me for the licensing of this picture in Fox Wisconsin's theatres. Negotiations were concluded on terms satisfactory to me, the picture was licensed for exhibition in Fox Wisconsin's theatres and it is now being exhibited there.

"V. THEATRE SITUATIONS IN COMMUNITIES IN WHICH FOX WISCONSIN OPERATES.

"I now turn to a description of the competitive situation in the various cities and towns in which Fox Wisconsin operates.

"A. MILWAUKEE

"Pop. 1940 Census	587,472
Pop. Present (Est).	600,000

"1. First run.

"An adequate description of the first run situation in Milwaukee has heretofore been set forth. Certain it is that the theatres which do exhibit first run product are the finest theatres in the downtown section of Milwaukee. No exhibitor has claimed, to my knowledge, that he has available facilities to establish additional first run competition. The existing competition between Fox Wisconsin's theatres and Warner Bros. theatres is a very real one. The theatres which today operate on a first run policy would do so, and would be licensed by the distributors on that run, regardless of who owned them and whether or not that owner was affiliated with any distributor or not.
(2704)

"With respect to the operation of these theatres, I am impelled to state that it is my definite opinion that Fox Wisconsin, because of its trained personnel, its experience in the exhibition business, its energetic and progressive showmanship, operates these theatres, as well as all of its theatres, in a manner which best serves the interests of the public as well as the interests of the distributors. It is my opinion that its operation is most efficient and is designed for the best exploitation of motion pictures.

"Furthermore, these first run theatres provide an adequate outlet for the pictures of all producers, independent and affiliated. There is no motion picture released, regardless of who produced it, which does not (2705) secure a first run in Milwaukee's downtown theatres, if it is of a quality and calibre which merits such an exhibition.

2. First neighborhood runs.

First neighborhood runs in Milwaukee are licensed to a number of theatres, each of which is more or less in the center of a separate competitive area. These may properly be called first runs in their respective zones. They generally take clearance over subsequent runs in such zones. They are as follows:

	Seating Capacity
Oriental—
Approximately	2300—	Operated by	Warner Bros.
Garfield—
"	1800—	"	" Fox Wisconsin.
Uptown—
"	1800—	"	" Fox Wisconsin.
Tower—
"	1600—	"	" Warner Bros.
Avalon—
"	1200—	"	" an independent.
Modjeska—
"	2500—	"	" Fox Wisconsin.
Paradise—
"	1210—	"	" Fox Wisconsin.*

*Two small communities adjacent to Milwaukee, namely, Cudahy and South Milwaukee, also have theatres which could play off the same availability as the first neighborhood runs referred to above. These are the Majestic theatre (seating capacity 750) in Cudahy and the Garden theatre (seating capacity 405) and the Grand theatre (seating capacity 400) in South Milwaukee. These theatres are operated by independents. The policy of these theatres, however, has been to operate on a later availability than the other first run neighborhood theatres.

"Substantially all of the product of the distributors is licensed in these theatres. Regardless of ownership, they are the theatres in which any distributor would prefer to have its product exhibited on this run. As indicative of this, the Oriental and Tower theatres have, over the period of the last ten years, been operated under several managements. During a substantial portion of the period the operation was in the hands of an independent. Yet there was no change in the run licensed to the theatres by the various distributors. During this period of independent operation there were, in the respective zones in which the Oriental and the Tower played first run, other subsequent run theatres operated by both Fox Wisconsin and Warner Bros. The fact of affiliated competition had nothing to do with the licensing of the product to the theatres.

"3. Subsequent runs.

"There are 68 theatres operating on such runs. 40 of them are being operated by independents. 6 are operated by Warner Bros. 22 of them are operated by Fox Wisconsin. All compete with each other as well as with all other theatres in Milwaukee.

"B. RACINE

"Pop. 1940 Census	67,195
"Pop. Present (Est.)	73,195

(2707)

"In this City Fox Wisconsin operates one theatre, the Uptown (seating capacity 1392), which plays third run on all product which it licenses, except one, which it plays second run.

"Warner Bros. operate three theatres on a first and second run policy. They are the Venetian (seating capacity 1963), the Rialto (seating capacity 1279) and the Badger (seating capacity 1001). These first run theatres of Warner Bros. are fine, well located, downtown theatres. Although Fox Wisconsin naturally would desire to improve the run which it has at the Uptown theatre, the location and other factors do not make it as desirable a theatre from the distributors' standpoint as either the Venetian or the Rialto. Consequently, Fox Wisconsin has been unable to license product on any more favorable run. I am convinced that the same situation would prevail if the first run theatres were operated by interests wholly unaffiliated with any distributor.

"In addition to the affiliated theatres in Racine, there are five other theatres operated by independents and having a seating capacity of between 750 and 1,000.

"C. MADISON

"Pop. 1940 Census	67,447
Pop. Present (Est.)	72,000

(2708)

"Fox Wisconsin is interested in the operation of four theatres in this City. Two of them the Orpheum (seating capacity 2244) as a first run theatre and capacity 1236) operate as first run theatres, playing pictures for one week. The product of Twentieth Century-Fox, Loew's, Columbia, United Artists, Universal, together with approximately one-half of the product distributed by Paramount and RKO, is exhibited on this run. Warner Bros. operate the Capitol (seating capacity 2246) and the Parkway (seating exhibit generally the product of Warner Bros., Monogram, Republic and approximately one-half of the product of Paramount and RKO.

"Fox Wisconsin also operates the Madison Theatre (seating capacity 908) on a move-over and second run policy and the Strand (seating capacity 1352) as a second run house. Warner Bros. operate the Majestic (seating capacity 537) as a second and third run house, with the product which plays in the Capitol theatre first run. There is also the Eastwood theatre operated by an independent which exhibits the product of all of the distributors on a third and fourth run.

"The Fox Wisconsin Orpheum theatre and the Warner Bros. Capitol theatre are two of the finest theatres in the State of Wisconsin. They are modern, commodious theatres and afford to the theatre-going public of Madison as fine service as is supplied by any theatres anywhere in the United States. The fact of affiliation has nothing to do with the licensing of product to these theatres. They most certainly would be the most sought after outlets for the production of the distributors, regardless of ownership.

D. KENOSHA

"Pop. 1940 Census	48,765
Pop. Present (Est.)	53,765

"Fox Wisconsin has one theatre in this City, the Orpheum (seating capacity 1405). This theatre operates on a second run policy, licensing the product from all distributors. The first run theatres take 60 days clearance over this theatre.

"Pictures are licensed for first run exhibition in Kenosha to two theatres operated by Standard Theatres Inc. (which I understand is associated with Warner Bros. in this operation), the Kenosha (seating capacity 2,000) and the Gateway (seating capacity 1,442). Both of these theatres are modern, up to date houses, well located and well suited to a proper exploitation of the product of the distributors. Here, again, while Fox Wisconsin very naturally would desire to improve its playing position, the distributors have taken the position that in their opinion they can obtain better results by licensing the product to the two Warner Bros. theatres.

"In this connection I should point out that Fox Wisconsin, in the period between 1933 and 1941, had no theatre in Kenosha. The Orpheum Theatre, which it now has, was operated by Warner Bros. up to 1941, at which time the owners became dissatisfied with their arrangements and negotiated with me to acquire the theatre. Fox Wisconsin did so, directly entering into competition with Warner Bros.

"In addition to the theatres above referred to, there are four other theatres in Kenosha which operate on a subsequent run policy, three of them being operated by independents and one by Warner Bros.

"The foregoing represent all of the cities in Wisconsin which are in the Milwaukee Exchange territory having a population of 50,000 and more. In only 2 of these 4 cities does Fox Wisconsin have first run theatres and in those there are competing first runs.

"Fox Wisconsin also operates theatres in 4 cities in this same exchange territory which have populations of between 20,000 and 50,000. These are Fond du Lac, Oshkosh, Janesville and Wausau. In these 4 cities Fox Wisconsin operates or is interested in all of the first run theatres. There is independent subsequent run competition in two of such cities.

(2711)

"In this same exchange territory there are 7 other cities with a population in excess of 20,000, in which Fox Wisconsin has no interest in theatre operations. These are Green Bay, Beloit, Appleton, Sheboygan, Manitowoc, Wauwatosa and Waukesha. In 5 of these 7 cities all of the theatres are operated by independents.

"Fox Wisconsin also operates theatres in 10 communities in the Milwaukee Exchange territory which have a population of less than 20,000. These are Beaver Dam, Marinette, Menasha, Port Washington and Stevens Point, in Wisconsin, and Hancock, Houghton, Iron Mountain, Laurium and Menominee, in Michigan. These communities vary in size from 3,500 to 15,000. In 3 of these communities there is only one theatre. They are Laurium, Menominee and Houghton, in Michigan. There never has been more than one and the size of the community is such that it could not support more than one. In 5 of them, namely, Hancock and Iron Mountain, Michigan, and Port Washington, Beaver Dam and Stevens Point, Wisconsin, there have never been more than 2 theatres and in 2 of these 5 communities which have 2 theatres only one is in operation, the other being antiquated and wholly unfit for use as a theatre. In the remaining town there is competition between Fox Wisconsin and two independent operators who compete with respect to all runs, as to the product of the defendants in this case the Fox Wisconsin theatre generally licensing only Fox, Paramount, and one-half of Metro.

"Thus, while Fox Wisconsin has theatre interests in only 10 communities having a population of between 3,500 and 20,000, there are in the Milwaukee Exchange territory more than 50 other communities in this population range.

"Fox Wisconsin has not conspired or combined with, and has no agreement or understanding with, any other defendant in this case to restrain interstate trade or commerce or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize interstate trade or commerce in the distributor or exhibition of motion pictures. It has no agreement, express or implied, with any other defendant, relating in any way to the distribution or exhibition of motion pictures other than the express license agreements which it has made for the licensing of pictures in its theatres.

"I also deny that Fox Wisconsin, either individually or in conjunction or combination with any other person, has engaged in any practice which is unfair or discriminatory with respect to any exhibitor with which it competes.

"(Sgd) Harold J. Fitzgerald."

"IT IS HEREBY STIPULATED by and between counsel for the plaintiff herein and counsel for the defendants, Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and National Theatres Corporation, that if called as a witness in this action, FRANK L. NEWMAN, SR. would testify as follows:

"I reside in Seattle, Washington, where I have lived continuously since 1932. I am now, and have been since 1907, actively engaged in the theatre exhibition business. I have operated theatres in St. Louis, Joplin, Kansas City, St. Joseph and Moberly, Missouri; Milwaukee, Wisconsin; Ft. Smith and Little Rock, Arkansas, and Los Angeles, California. Since 1932, I have been operating theatres in the States of Washington and Oregon.

(2714)

"In 1933 I became and am now President of Evergreen State Amusement Corporation, hereinafter called 'Evergreen', a Delaware corporation, organized on February 6, 1933, having its principal office in Seattle, Washington. I have been a director since 1936 and President since 1941 of Fox Pacific Theatres, Inc., hereinafter called 'Pacific', a Washington corporation, organized on April 2, 1929, having its principal office in Seattle, Washington.

"53.58% of the capital stock of Evergreen is owned by the defendant, National Theatres Corporation; 40% is owned by a corporation in which Mr. Al Rosenberg, Mr. Al Finke and I have an interest; 2.4% is owned outright by Mr. Rosenberg, Mr. Finke and myself and the balance is held by the general public.

"The capital stock of Pacific is owned 60% by National Theatres Corporation and 40% by De Luxe Theatres, Inc., a corporation in which Mr. Al Rosenberg and Mr. Al Finke have an interest. I have no interest in De Luxe Theatres, Inc.

"Both Mr. Rosenberg and Mr. Finke have been associated in an official capacity with Evergreen and Pacific since their respective incorporations.

"Evergreen operates, directly or indirectly, through its subsidiaries, 28 theatres in ten cities and towns in (2715)

Washington and 11 in two cities in Oregon. Of this total of 39 theatres, Evergreen and its subsidiaries lease 33, own two in fee and have an interest in the four others through operating agreements with other exhibitors. One of its theatres is closed and has been closed for several years because of its bad physical condition. In addition to theatre properties, Evergreen leases office space in Seattle, has some warehouse facilities in Seattle and owns the fee of unimproved real property in Spokane and Vancouver, Washington.

"Evergreen owns stock in 19 subsidiaries. Fourteen are wholly owned and, in the remaining five, Evergreen owns 50% or more of the capital stock. All but three have an interest in theatre properties. Two of these three are inactive. The other is known as a service company and has no interest in any theatre property. Evergreen's exhibition business was organized so that its several theatre interests would be held by several separate corporate entities for the purpose of distributing the risk of liability, the risk of sectional business failure and for the purpose of availing itself of the tax advantages possible in a business structure with several distinct taxable organizations.

"Pacific leases and operates two theatres in Seattle and owns 50% of the stock of a corporation which leases and operates three theatres in Everett, Washington, and which leases a former theatre property in Everett which has long since been commercialized.

"Of the 44 theatres in Washington and Oregon in which the defendant, National Theatres Corporation, derives an interest through Evergreen and Pacific, National Theatres Corporation has a net financial interest of less than 50% in 28 and a net financial interest of more than 50% in 16.

"I am generally familiar with the allegations made by the plaintiff in its petition and with the evidence on which it relies and am aware of their bearing upon Evergreen's theatre business.

"HISTORICAL DEVELOPMENT OF EVERGREEN THEATRES

"A major part of the 44 theatres in which Evergreen or Pacific now have an interest were once part of a more widespread circuit developed gradually over a long period of years prior to 1926 by two men and their organization, C. S. Jensen and J. G. von Herberg.

"In 1926, Jensen and von Herberg had an interest in 33 theatres located in Astoria and Portland, Oregon; Butte and Great Falls, Montana; and in Bremerton, Olympia, Seattle, Sunnyside, Tacoma, Wenatchee and Yakima, Washington. During the period of their operation of this circuit, Jensen and von Herberg exhibited most of the product which they licensed on prior showings with substantial clearance over subsequent exhibitions.

"The theatres of Jensen and von Herberg were among the best in those communities in which they were located. In Seattle, the Coliseum, Liberty and Strand theatres and the Rex and Rialto in Bremerton were all operated first run by Jensen and von Herberg. These theatres were and still are, with the exception of the Strand, which has been dismantled and is no longer in existence, superior downtown theatres. At the present time, the Liberty and the Rialto are still operated as first run theatres and the Coliseum and the Rex are operated as second run theatres. Evergreen now has an interest in the Rialto, Rex and Coliseum.

"In August of 1926, after extensive negotiations with an individual named Frank E. Elson, Jensen and von Herberg sold all of their theatres in a group to North American Theatres, Inc., a Delaware corporation, hereinafter called 'North American', for a purchase price of approximately $1,500,000. The theatres thus acquired by North American were operated by it during the ensuing year in addition to nine others which were acquired at different intervals during that year. In the spring of 1927, North American had an interest in a total of 41 theatres.

"In 1927, negotiations commenced between Wesco Corporation, hereinafter called 'Wesco', and North American for the purchase of the latter's theatre interests. Pursuant to a written offer dated May 7, 1927 made to and accepted by Wesco, a sale was consummated on June 3, 1927. As a result of this transaction, Wesco acquired an interest in 41 theatres in 12 cities located in the States of Montana, Oregon and Washington.

"These theatres, with the exception of changes in theatres dropped or theatres added, were operated by a subsidiary of Wesco called Pacific Northwest Theatres, Inc., hereinafter called 'Northwest', and associated corporations from the time of their acquisition to the bankruptcy of Northwest.

"The years from 1924 to 1933 represented a period of great activity and change in the theatre business in the Northwest. Many of the theatres which are today the finest in their respective localities were constructed in those years. Several of the film companies entered the area for the first time and competed vigorously with each other for the acquisition of the best outlets for their respective product. Paramount built and opened theatres in Portland and Seattle. The Keith-Albee-Orpheum circuit acquired an interest in theatres in Portland and Spokane and built a new one in Seattle. Universal Pictures, Inc. became interested in many theatres throughout Washington and Oregon between the years 1924 and 1928. In 1928 in Seattle, for example, Universal was operating or had an interest in ten theatres. Local independent exhibitors intensified their activities. John Hamrick opened a new theatre in Seattle, the Music Box, in 1928, which he thereafter operated with first run product along with his Blue Mouse, which he had previously built and opened about 1920. John Danz greatly expanded his theatre holdings and, by 1930, had 17 theatres in Seattle.

"All of the intense and accelerated theatre activity in this period reached a climax at the time of the depression and its accompanying financial distress. None of the theatre interests acquired any of the film distributing companies in the last half of the '20s were retained after their respective bankruptcies in the early '30s except those of Fox Film Corporation.

"In 1932, after I had become associated with Northwest and just prior to its bankruptcy, Northwest was operating or had an interest in subsidiaries operating 50 theatres. It was sustaining an average weekly loss of $30,000. It then became apparent that the competition between exhibitors, affiliated and otherwise, for the theatre outlets had resulted in investments and in lease requirements wholly out of proportion to what could be carried during times of business decline. In spite of efforts to bring about rental reductions to decrease operating costs, Northwest, in the latter part of 1932, found itself in an impossible position and, on its voluntary petition, was adjudicated a bankrupt on December 31, 1932, in the United States District Court for the Western District of Washington, Northern Division.

"In the reorganization that ensued and which resulted in the creation of Evergreen, I and my associates, Mr. Rosenberg and Mr. Finke, made substantial capital investments in order to make the reorganization possible. For this investment we received 40% of Evergreen's stock.

"Evergreen now has an interest in 24 theatres, which were previously operated by Northwest or its subsidiaries, and most of the 24 were originally a part of the Jensen and von Herberg theatre interests.

"Of the other 26 theatres in which Northwest had an interest prior to its bankruptcies but in which Evergreen does not now have an interest, 13 have been taken over and are operated today by unaffiliated exhibitors.

"Four of the former Northwest theatres in which (2721)
Evergreen has no interest are no longer in existence.

"Most of the remaining nine former Northwest theatres in which Evergreen has no interest are located in the State of Montana and are, on information and belief, theatres in which Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation now has an interest.

"THE ORGANIZATION OF EVERGREEN AND ITS PRESENT METHOD OF OPERATION.

"I have heretofore described the extent of the stock interest of National Theatres Corporation in Evergreen and Pacific. Evergreen and Pacific, however, are operated as separate, autonomous business entities. The directors of Evergreen are, besides myself, Messrs. Al Rosenberg, Al Finke, C. R. Innis, A. M. Ahlskog, A. Shemanski, C. H. Howell and C. P. Skouras, none of whom, except C. P. Skouras, is associated with National in any official capacity. The directors of Pacific, besides myself, are Messrs. Al Rosenberg, Al Finke, C. R. Innis and C. P. Skouras. The executives and directors of National Theatres Corporation do not participate in the management or operation of the theatres of these two companies which are directly under the supervision and control of myself and Mr. Rosenberg and Mr. Finke, as are the general policies of the operation. The executives of National Theatres Corporation, by reason of that company's financial interest in Evergreen, naturally pass judgment upon and exercise a certain amount of direction on all important financial transactions, such as new theatre building acquisitions, renovations or other large capital commitments. Beyond this, however, they in nowise interfere or regulate the management of the company and I and my associates have complete authority and discretion with respect thereto. This applies with respect to the making of all contracts and other commitments relating to the operation of the theatres, including film license agreements. The assent or approval of National Theatres Corporation with respect to these is not required nor solicited, either before or after the making thereof.

"As previously indicated, I and my associates have a substantial personal interest in the stock of Evergreen which represents an actual cash investment in the business. When we undertook to make this investment and to take over the management of the operation, we insisted upon the greatest latitude in the formulation and execution of business policies. This control and responsibility was given to us and we have exercised it ever since, unhampered by any outside dictation.

"Evergreen has a wholly owned subsidiary, Evergreen Theatres Corporation, which is a service corporation for all of the theatres in which Evergreen and Pacific are interested. It performs all of the activities incident to the actual operation of the theatres, including the licensing and booking of films, accounting, maintenance of the theatres, planning and arranging for advertising, purchasing supplies, procuring and maintaining of insurance, and other similar functions. It maintains offices in Seattle and Portland.

"Its organization is divided into various departments. One department is known as the 'Film Buying Department.' It consists of a head film buyer and a number of assistants. (Mr. Frank X. Christie, who is the head film buyer, has been associated with Evergreen since 1933, except for a period of time in which he was in the military service.) The general function of this department is to negotiate licenses for the pictures to be exhibited in the theatres and to arrange for their booking (playing dates) after the films have been licensed. The personnel comprising this department is highly skilled and trained in this work. Those who negotiate for the licensing of pictures must see all pictures which are produced. They must have special ability to judge the quality of such pictures. They must have a knowledge of the theatres operated by the company and the communities in which they are located. They must have an accurate evaluation of the tastes of the theatre-going public to which each theatre caters. In other words, to carry on their functions effectively they must know the box-office quality of each picture produced, gauging it in the light of the tastes of the public which patronizes each theatre.

"A. Business Practices Relating to the Licensing of Films.

"In so far as concluding contracts for the exhibition of motion pictures is concerned, Evergreen operates entirely independently. It makes film contracts for theatres in which it is interested and only those theatres.

"The general practice in the licensing of films is that as to each producing company, its local representative in its Seattle or Portland Exchange (as the case may be), together with the district manager, in some cases, as well as the division manager, in others, will sit down with the buyers of Evergreen and negotiate with respect to the pictures which the producer then has available for licensing. In the case of the companies which are parties to the Consent Decree, these negotiations occur with respect to each block of pictures offered by each such company. As to other producers, the negotiations generally relate to the entire season's product.

(2725)

"Prior to the entry of the Consent Decree all distributors licensed their entire season's product at one time. National Theatres Corporation then maintained a central office in New York where negotiations were generally conducted with all of the distributors for the licensing of pictures in all of the theatres in which National was interested. Even under this procedure, however, the licenses were made with respect to each individual theatre and each license agreement had to be approved by myself and my associates. In the latter part of 1941 there was a complete decentralization of the so-called Buying Department of National Theatres Corporation, and, as stated above, the licensing of film with the companies which are parties to the Consent Decree is done locally, that is—as far as Evergreen is concerned—in Seattle or Portland.

"In certain instances a distributor who is a party to the decree may negotiate license agreements with another subsidiary of National Theatres Corporation before it conducts any negotiations with Evergreen. For example, a distributor might negotiate with Fox West Coast in Los Angeles with respect to theatres operated in Southern California. In the course of those negotiations a general formula might be agreed upon for a particular group of pictures for exhibition in the theatres of Fox West Coast. This formula might provide for a film rental based upon certain percentages applicable to each picture, which percentages would apply to those particular theatres which played the pictures on a percentage basis rather than on a flat rental basis. Later, when the negotiations with that distributor are conducted in Seattle, the general formula previously agreed upon for the Fox West Coast theatres might be adopted by Evergreen, or might be used as a general basis for negotiation. Such prior arrangements which the distributor had effected with any of the other subsidiaries of National Theatres Corporation would, however, represent no binding commitment as far as Evergreen was concerned.

"Furthermore, as between Evergreen and the other operating subsidiaries of National Theatres Corporation, there is, of course, full exchange of information between the executives of the respective companies. This information relates to all matters which would be of mutual interest to the executives of these companies, including the terms upon which films have been licensed, the box-office value of particular pictures in particular territories, developments in theatre maintenance and operations generally. As to film terms, National has one employee whose general function it is to maintain contact with its subsidiaries, secure information from them and acquaint them with such facts as might be helpful in their own negotiations.

"When the representatives of the distributors and the representatives of Evergreen have arrived at a satisfactory agreement, the proposed contract is then submitted to me for my approval. No license agreement for films can be concluded without specific delegation of authority from me or without my express approval. In the negotiation of these licenses separate consideration is, in practically all instances, given to each particular theatre in the operations of which Evergreen is interested and a separate and specific deal made on the basis of each individual theatre.

"Evergreen enters into film license agreements with all distributors of worthwhile pictures, including a number who are not defendants in this case, such as Republic, Monogram, PRC and others. The general practice and procedures outlined above apply with respect to all negotiations.

"As to the terms upon which the pictures are licensed, there is no standard formula for every theatre, nor is there any standard formula applicable to each theatre. As to certain of the theatres of Evergreen, all of the license agreements for those theatres provide for film rental of a certain fixed flat amount. However, these flat rental deals vary with respect to each company whose product is licensed, depending upon the quality of the product. For certain pictures one of such theatres might pay $100 flat rental while for another picture it might pay $20. In a number of other theatres the license agreements provide for film rental determined in one way or another by a percentage of the gross business done by the theatre. Here, again, however, there is no standard formula or arrangement which is applied to these so-called 'percentage deals.' They vary greatly in form and substance as to the particular distributors involved. With one distributor the film rental might be predicated solely upon a specified percentage of the gross receipts. As to another distributor the license agreement might provide for what is called a 'sliding scale' arrangement, under which the percentage of the gross receipts to which the distributor is entitled would vary, depending upon the volume of business done by the theatre on the particular picture. Other formulae are also used. This all depends upon the particular negotiations with the particular distributor.

"All of these arrangements simply represent a measuring rod for the determination of the film rental which is to be paid. They are negotiated solely with an eye to arriving at a fair deal for both the distributor and the exhibitor. The various refinements which ofttimes are linked with a straight percentage deal are used only for the purpose of enabling the distributor to receive a higher percentage of the gross on pictures which are outstanding box-office attractions and to reduce his percentage upon productions which have less drawing power than anticipated at the time when the license agreement was made.

"At the time when negotiations are had for the licensing of the pictures and the terms upon which they are to be licensed are under consideration, the matter of clearance is also considered. This element of any licensing arrangement is of vital importance to the distributor. It also very directly affects the exhibitor: If Evergreen undertakes to pay a distributor a high guaranteed film rental plus a percentage of the gross receipts for a film license and proposes to charge a high admission price, it is certainly interested in the clearance which it will have on that picture over the subsequent run thereof which the distributor might license to a competitive theatre. Clearance obviously has a definite effect upon the capacity of Evergreen to secure patronage at its top admission price and be able to pay to the distributor a film rental commensurate with the granting by such distributor of the first run license.

"Generally speaking, the actual negotiations as to clearance do not take place with respect to each block of pictures which is licensed. This is because of the fact that once a fair and reasonable clearance has been determined upon by the distributor and exhibitor, it tends to become fixed and, in the absence of any changed circumstances or conditions, will ordinarily be the same in a series of contracts.

"Of course, the practice of granting clearance is not confined to communities where Evergreen is operating theatres or to Evergreen theatres themselves, and in many places where Evergreen has prior run theatres, they are operated in competition with the theatres of independent exhibitors having an identical run. For example, in Bremerton, Washington, the Roxy theatre exhibits first run the product of Columbia, RKO, Universal and Republic, and as to that product is granted generally the same number of days clearance over second run which the Evergreen theatres have on their product. The same is true of the Grand theatre in Bellingham, Washington, which is operated by an independent with the first run product of Columbia, Universal and Republic and one-half of Warner's.

"One of the outstanding facts which has characterized the development of clearance in communities throughout the Northwest has been the steady reduction in the number of days clearance granted to one theatre over another. In the last 15 years the first run clearance in Seattle, Washington, generally has been reduced by most distributors from 60 to 42 days, and furthermore, clearance is now computed in Seattle from a date not later than the fourteenth day of first run exhibition, so that the availability of subsequent run theatres cannot be affected by first runs extending beyond two weeks. In Spokane, Washington, first run clearance has been reduced from 5 months to 50 days. In Bellingham, Bremerton, Olympia, Wenatchee and Everett, Washington, clearance granted to the first run theatres has been reduced from 5 months to 90 days. The figures on the foregoing number of days are averages.

"My attention has been directed to the claim of the Government that the distributor and the affiliated theatres agree upon clearance and minimum admission prices for the purpose of fixing the actual price which a subsequent run exhibitor may charge, and that such factors are agreed upon for the purpose of improperly subordinating the freedom of action of such subsequent run exhibitor. This I flatly deny. In instances where my company is operating a prior run theatre, I have no concern of any sort as to the maximum price which my subsequent run competitor charges. It is my desire that he charge a price which is as close to the price which I charge in the prior run as he considers feasible. Generally speaking, if my theatre operates first run and charges 60¢, the subsequent run exhibitor who plays 28 days after my first run theatre and charges 50¢ is less competitive than a subsequent run which plays on the same availability but charges only 30¢.

"Consequently, not only have I never entered into any arrangements with any distributor which attempted to fix the maximum price of a subsequent run theatre but I would be ill advised to endeavor to do so.

"In connection with the licensing of films, there are certain other specific points which I emphasize.

"1. In licensing films for exhibition in Evergreen theatres, there is only one controlling consideration, namely, to secure adequate product on fair and appropriate terms.

"2. Evergreen licenses films for the theatres in the operations of which it is interested—and only those theatres. The licenses for pictures are negotiated locally in either Seattle or Portland and no outside person or corporation has any authority to commit it to any license agreement. I and my associates have complete authority to negotiate the terms or to refuse to make any agreement with any distributor, regardless of whether or not it has concluded arrangements with some other subsidiary of National Theatres Corporation.

"3. In negotiating license agreements, Evergreen does not condition the licensing of the pictures in some of its theatres upon the making of a deal with the distributor for all of its theatres.

"4. In negotiating for product with any one of the distributors which is also interested in theatres, Evergreen does not know and has not the slightest interest in whether or not Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation has or has not licensed its product to theatres in which such distributor is interested.

"No representative of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation has ever indicated to me, directly or indirectly, that in licensing film from other distributors any consideration whatsoever should be given by me to whether or not Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation has licensed pictures to the theatres operated by such distributor.

"Evergreen is interested in licensing pictures solely because of their value as box-office attractions and then only when it can secure them on proper terms. When it negotiates with Loew's for the exhibition of Loew's product in its theatres it does not know whether Twentieth Century-Fox has entered into any license agreement with Loew's for the Loew's theatres, or any of them. It does not know whether Fox is even negotiating with Loew's. If Twentieth Century-Fox has made such film contracts, Evergreen does not know of it nor of the terms which are contained therein. Furthermore, if Twentieth Century-Fox was wholly unable to license its product to any Loew's theatre for any reason whatsoever, it would not have the slightest effect upon the desire of Evergreen to enter into license agreements with Loew's. The same applies to any other distributor. Moreover, no representative of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation has ever requested that he be furnished with the terms upon which I licensed pictures from all distributors, nor have I ever furnished such information to any representative of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation.

"My own personal interests all impel me to act for the sole welfare and benefit of Evergreen. I am not a stockholder of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and have no connection with that company. I am not concerned with the effect which the policies of my operation may have upon the distribution problems of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation. Moreover, with respect to the runs which are licensed to Evergreen, and particularly the first runs, I am able to negotiate them because of the character of the theatres involved and their capacity to pay proper revenue to the distributors. Evergreen's first run theatres are licensed on that run because of their superior construction, location, conveniences, seating capacity and other factors which make them superior theatres and which give to them superior public appeal. They do not secure such licenses because of any relationship with Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation or National Theatres Corporation.

"Furthermore, as to theatres in existence before Evergreen acquired an interest in them, they were operated as first run theatres throughout their entire existence, regardless of ownership.

"EVERGREEN'S THEATRES AND COMPETITIVE SITUATION IN EACH COMMUNITY WHERE THEY ARE LOCATED.

"Evergreen operates theatres in the following towns and cities in the State of Washington, showing the population of each for 1920, 1930 and 1940. The 1945 population is an estimate of the Census Board of the State of Washington.

	1920	1930	1940	1945
Seattle	315,312	365,518	368,302	470,000

Newman

"Evergreen also operates theatres in Portland and Eugene, Oregon, whose population for the years 1920, 1930, 1940 and 1944 (Estimate of the Chamber of Commerce in each city) is as follows:

(2736)

	1920	1930	1940	1944
Portland	258,288	301,815	305,394	415,000
Eugene	10,593	18,901	20,838	26,200

"The Evergreen theatres in Seattle, Spokane and Bremerton, Washington, and in Portland, Oregon, cities of over 50,000 population, will hereinafter be discussed in more detail.

Seattle, Washington

"Seattle now has a total of forty-nine theatres. Evergreen or Pacific has an interest in eleven. An independent exhibitor named John Danz has an interest in twenty. He is interested with Evergreen in the operation of four theatres in Seattle, three of which generally operate on a first run or moveover policy and the other one second run. Four of Seattle's theatres are operated by Jensen and von Herberg. The others are operated by unaffiliated exhibitors. No distributor other than Fox has any interest at the present time in any theatre in Seattle, Washington.

The theatres in which Evergreen and Pacific have an interest are the Fifth Avenue, Paramount, Orpheum, Music Hall, Blue Mouse, Music Box, Palomar, Roosevelt, Coliseum, Egyptian and Neptune. The Fifth Avenue, Paramount, Orpheum, Music Hall and Palomar are first run theatres. The Blue Mouse, Music Box and Roosevelt are moveover theatres. The Coliseum is a second run theatre and the Egyptian and Neptune third run.

"The Fifth Avenue (seating capacity 2,366) is one of the outstanding theatres in Seattle. It was built in 1926 and was opened on September 22, 1926, by North American Theatres, Inc., the corporation from which Wesco first acquired an interest in theatres in Seattle. The Fifth Avenue opened as a first run theatre and has always been operated as such.

"The Paramount theatre is the largest theatre in Seattle, having 3,049 seats, and was assessed in 1945, including land, building and equipment, for $278,060. (Under Washington law, the maximum assessed value is one-half the market value.) It was built in 1928 for the Paramount Company as the first run outlet for its product. Pacific Northwest Theatres, Inc. acquired a joint interest in this theatre in 1930, and Paramount ceased to have an interest in the theatre after 1933. It has always been operated as a first run theatre.

"The Orpheum theatre has 2,599 seats, was built in the year 1929, at which time it was an RKO theatre operated on a first run and stage show policy. RKO ceased to have any interest in the theatre after 1933, and in 1934 it was operated by an independent exhibitor. Evergreen acquired its interest in 1935. The theatre always played first run product, irrespective of ownership, as long as it has been a motion picture theatre. Its 1945 assessed value for land, building and equipment is $299,710.

"Evergreen acquired its interest in the Music Hall in 1935. It has 2,282 seats and in 1945 was assessed for $152,160. The theatre was built in approximately the year 1927 by an independent exhibitor and was operated on a first run policy. Pacific Northwest Theatres, Inc. had an interest in this theatre between 1930 and 1933, and operated it under the name of Fox. Between 1933 and 1935, it was operated by an independent exhibitor, and in 1935 Evergreen acquired its interest. It has never been other than a first run theatre or first run moveover.

"The Blue Mouse (851 seats) was built in 1920 by an independent exhibitor and ever since its opening has been a first run theatre or first run moveover. Evergreen first acquired an interest in it in 1935. It was remodeled in 1939 at a cost of $13,071 and has a 1945 assessed value, including land, building and equipment, of $103,730.

"The Roosevelt was built in the year 1933. It has an assessed value of $78,950, seats 736 and is operated as a moveover theatre.

"The Palomar was built around 1915, has 1,437 seats and was assessed in 1945 at $104,000. During the earliest years of its operation, it played vaudeville primarily under the management of Alexander Pantages. During recent years, from about 1938, it has played first run product along with stage shows.

"All of the theatres which have been described in some detail above are centrally located in the downtown district of Seattle in the main theatre section.

"There is one other theatre in Seattle which plays first run pictures, the Liberty with 1,650 seats. Another, the Newsreel, plays first run newsreels and short product. Both are located in the downtown section and Evergreen has no interest whatsoever in either. The Liberty is located in an inferior part of downtown Seattle, four or five blocks away from the main theatre district. It was one of the theatres acquired by Wesco in 1927 from North American, but by 1930 Wesco or its operating subsidiary had ceased to have any interest in the Liberty, and since that time it has been operated by the present exhibitors, Jensen and von Herberg.

"Ever since Jensen and Von Herberg resumed operation in 1930, the Liberty has had the first run product of Columbia and one-half of United Artists and in addition has exhibited the product of several of the independent producers. The Liberty charges the same admission price charged at the Evergreen first run theatres and has the same clearance over second run except that the Liberty clearance over second run commences with the close of the first run exhibition in the Liberty theatre no matter how long the Liberty's first run exhibition extends, whereas the clearance granted to Evergreen theatres dates from the fourteenth day of exhibition or the close, whichever is earlier.

"The subsequent run theatres in which Evergreen or Pacific has an interest are the Coliseum, Egyptian and Neptune. An interest in the Coliseum (1,957 seats) was acquired first by Pacific Northwest Theatres, Inc. in 1927 with the various other theatres acquired from North American Theatres, Inc. It was at that time and had always previously been a first run theatre. Evergreen obtained a lease in 1933 after direct negotiations with the landlord, and has since operated it as a second run theatre. The Coliseum was constructed in 1916, was reequipped in the years 1941 and 1942 at a total cost of $16,773.40, and has now a total assessed value of $283,150.

"The Neptune (968 seats) and Egyptian (1,263 seats) are operated as third run theatres. Both theatres are fine, neighborhood houses located about four miles from the downtown district in a residential section and business center in the University of Washington district. There are thirty-four other subsequent run theatres, all operated in competition with all of the Evergreen theatres. A large number of them are operated by John Danz who has more theatres in Seattle than any other exhibitor.

"Prior to 1934-1945, first run theatres in Seattle generally had a clearance of 60 days after first run closing over second run. Since that time, clearance has been steadily reduced, and at the present first run Seattle theatres generally have 42 days over second run exhibition; 63 days over third run; 80 days over fourth run. The number of days clearance over theatres playing subsequent to fourth run varies with the distributors. All clearance is computed from not later than the fourteenth day of first run exhibition, except in the case of the Liberty theatre.

"Spokane, Washington

"Spokane now has a total of 14 theatres, all of which are located in the downtown area except two. One of the two neighborhood theatres is the Garland which has been recently constructed by an unaffiliated exhibitor and is scheduled to open some time in November, 1945.

"Out of this total of 14 theatres, Evergreen has an interest in four, the Fox, Orpheum, State and the Liberty, all of which are located in the downtown business center. The first three are operated with first run product, the Liberty with second run.

"The Fox is by all standards of comparison the best and largest theatre in the city. It has 2,251 seats and in 1945 was assessed, including the land, building and equipment, for $213,400, which is $100,000 more than any other theatre in Spokane. The Fox was built in 1931 on land owned by Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation and is still owned by one of the subsidiaries of that corporation, from which the theatre is leased by one of Evergreen's subsidiaries. The Fox has always shown the best in first run product.

"The Orpheum has 1,272 seats and was constructed in 1918. In 1945 its total assessed value was $98,385. Up until about 1928 or 1929 it was operated by Alexander Pantages, primarily on a vaudeville policy. In 1929, an interest in the theatre was acquired by RKO and for about four years thereafter was operated by RKO with vaudeville and first run product. In 1933, upon cancellation of RKO's lease, a subsidiary of Evergreen negotiated a new lease with the owner and ever since the theatre has been operated with first run product.

The State theatre has fewer seats, 954, than Fox or the Orpheum. It is, nonetheless, larger in seating capacity than any theatre in Spokane operated by an unaffiliated exhibitor. The State was constructed in 1916 and in the current year has an assessed value of $79,470. In its early history, the State was operated under the name of Clemmer, by an unaffiliated exhibitor, H. S. Clemmer, for many years one of the outstanding exhibitors in the business in the northwest. Universal had an interest in the State between the years 1928 and 1932, but the theatre was operated by Universal for a brief time only. During most of the time, the theatre was leased by Universal to and operated by an unaffiliated exhibitor. Pacific Northwest Theatres, Inc. acquired an interest in the theatre in 1932 on a sublease from Universal. After the bankruptcy of Pacific Northwest Theatres, Inc., Evergreen negotiated a new and distinct lease with the owner of the State. The State, irrespective of ownership, has never played anything but first run product.

"An interest was not acquired in the Liberty theatre in Spokane by any Fox company until 1935. Prior to that time, it had a continuous policy of exhibiting first or second run pictures and had always been operated by independent exhibitors. Evergreen's interest arises out of an agreement dated March 31, 1935, between one of its wholly owned subsidiaries, Spokane Amusement Company, and Principal Theatre Company of Washington, a Washington corporation, in which Mr. Al Rosenberg and Mr. Al Finke and their associates are principal stockholders. As a result of this agreement, Spokane Amusement Company acquired a 50% interest in the Liberty and Principal Theatre Company of Washington acquired a 50% interest in Evergreen's Orpheum. Mr. Rosenberg and Mr. Finke have been associated with Evergreen since its organization, and it was only natural for their separate theatre interests in this city to have become associated with those of Evergreen.

"Spokane has always had, since 1926, not less than 13 theatres, and for most of the time three have played first run product. At the present time, in addition to the three Evergreen first run theatres, there is the Granada, which is operated by an unaffiliated exhibitor. The Granada, prior to 1934, was using first run product of Monogram, the second run of Universal and a third run of Warner Bros., United Artists and RKO. From 1934-1942, it licensed for most of the time, the second run product of Warner Bros., RKO, United Artists and Universal. In 1942, the Granada became a first run theatre, having acquired first run product of Universal and part of Republic and of Columbia. The theatre itself is a relatively small one, having but 550 seats, as compared with the usual size of first run house. In 1945, the assessed value of its equipment was $2,000 as compared with $10,000 for that of the Fox and $3,100 for that of the State. The Granada charges the same admission price charged at the first run theatres operated by Evergreen, 70¢ gross. The Granada was built in 1912 and is older by a least two or three years than any of the Evergreen theatres.

"After the Granada became a first run theatre, the RKO product which it had been licensing second run was sold to the Post Street Theatres, which also plays vaudeville and repeat pictures and which is operated by an unaffiliated exhibitor. All of the third, fourth and fifth run product in Spokane is licensed in theatres of unaffiliated exhibitors.

"The clearance intervals generally applicable in Spokane are much less today than they ever have been. Prior to 1932, the first run theatres had a clearance of 150 days over any subsequent exhibition. This has been reduced from time to time to its present status of, generally, 50 days over second run exhibition.

"BREMERTON, WASHINGTON.

"Evergreen has an interest in four Bremerton theatres, the Admiral, Rialto, Rex and Bay. The first three are downtown theatres. The Bay, a suburban theatre, is located in the business center sometimes called East Bremerton or Manette. The Admiral and Rialto are operated with first run product, the Rex and the Bay with second and fourth run. There are three other theatres in Bremerton, all of which are operated by unaffiliated exhibitors in competition with Evergreen. These are the Roxy (first run), the Tower (third and second run) and the Grand (third and fourth run).

(2746)

"The Admiral, the Roxy and the Bay are all new theatres, having been constructed since 1940. Bremerton during the last five years experienced an extraordinary growth in population from 15,134 in 1940 to an estimated 72,000 in 1945. The new theatres have been built in response to the greatly enlarged demand for motion picture entertainment.

"The Admiral, which is an Evergreen theatre, has more than twice the assessed value of the theatre having the next highest assessed value. In 1945, it was assessed at $74,800. The next highest, the Roxy, was assessed at $32,100. The equipment in the Admiral alone is assessed at $15,000, whereas that of the Roxy is assessed for $5,500. The Admiral was constructed in 1942 and has 1,324 seats and is modern and luxurious in all its equipment and furnishings.

"The Rialto was built in 1917 and seats 777. Both the Rialto and the Rex (331 seats) were theatres originally acquired by Wesco from North American Theatres, Inc. in 1927 along with the Bluebird in Bremerton which closed in 1928, dismantled and no longer exists. Both the Rex and the Rialto were first run and second run theatres in 1926, and for a long time before and exhibited the first and second run product of Fox, Loew's, Paramount and Warner Bros.

"The Bay was built in 1945 at the suggestion of the United States Navy to provide a source of entertainment for the greatly increased population in East Bremerton. It was opened and has been operated by a subsidiary of Evergreen with second and fourth run product.

"The clearance applicable to all theatres in Bremerton is substantially the same, and its history shows a reduction in the number of days interval between exhibitions, which is consistent with the pattern of clearance history throughout the Northwest. Prior to 1934 and 1935, first run clearance over second run was generally 150 days, and now it is generally 90 days.

"Portland, Oregon

"Portland at the present time has altogether 52 theatres. Evergreen has an interest in nine of them. Four of the Evergreen theatres exhibit first run or product including one which plays short product and newsreels only. The first run Evergreen theatres in Portland are the Paramount, Orpheum and Oriental and the Newsreel. Three of Evergreen's theatres, the Music Box, Mayfair and Playhouse, are operated as moveover theatres. All of these theatres are located in the central downtown district of Portland, except the Oriental which is located less than a mile from downtown, in a shopping area. In addition to the first run Evergreen theatres, there are two other first run theatres in Portland, the Broadway and the United Artists, which are both operated by independent exhibitors.

"The other two theatres in which Evergreen has an interest are the Liberty and the Hollywood which play respectively second and third run product.

"Four of Evergreen's theatres in Portland, the Hollywood, Newsreel, Liberty and Music Box theatres, were a part of the circuit acquired by Wesco in 1927 from North American Theatres, Inc., along with four others, the Broadway, United Artists, Highway and the State in which Evergreen no longer has any interest. The Broadway and United Artists are now operated by independent exhibitors in competition with Evergreen's first run theatres in Portland, and the Highway and the State, neighborhood houses, are operated as subsequent run theatres by unaffiliated exhibitors.

"The interests of Northwest or Evergreen in the rest of Evergreen's theatres in Portland were acquired generally in separate, independent negotiations with the respective owners or lessors.

"The Paramount theatre is the best theatre in Portland. It has a seating capacity of 3,054, and in 1945 had a total assessed value of $422,605. The assessed value of its equipment alone amounts to $27,980. The Paramount was built in 1928 by Paramount as an outlet for its product. Pacific Northwest Theatres, Inc. first acquired an interest in the Paramount in 1931. The interest of Northwest was terminated in bankruptcy, and thereafter through direct negotiations with the owner, a new lease was acquired in 1933 by a subsidiary of Evergreen, which has operated the theatre ever since. The Paramount has always shown first run product before the acquisition of any interest by Northwest or Evergreen companies.

"The Orpheum theatre was built in 1912 and for many years was operated principally on a vaudeville policy by Alexander Pantages. Between 1927 and 1932 RKO operated the theatre and between 1932 and 1935, the Orpheum was operated for a time by unaffiliated exhibitors. Evergreen acquired its interest in the theatre in 1935, and continued to have an interest until 1940. In 1940, the theatre was operated briefly by an unaffiliated exhibitor. Later in 1940, the theatre property was sold, and a subsidiary of Evergreen thereafter acquired a lease from the new owners. The Orpheum has 1,732 seats and in 1945 was assessed for a total of $281,735. It consistently has shown first run product when operated as a motion picture theatre.

"The Mayfair (1,498 seats), formerly called the Rialto, was one of the theatres acquired and operated by Pacific Northwest Theatres, Inc. prior to its bankruptcy. The lease on the theatre was disaffirmed in bankruptcy, and thereafter, in 1934, a new lease was obtained by a subsidiary of Evergreen. The Mayfair was re-equipped in 1943 at a cost of $14,094, and was assessed in 1945 for $227,160.

"The Music Box has 895 seats and in 1945 was assessed for a total of $123,510. It was operated by Pacific Northwest Theatres, Inc. and earlier by North American Theatres, Inc., under the name, People's, as a first run theatre. In 1930, Northwest ceased to have an interest in the theatre. Evergreen reacquired an interest in 1935.

"The Playhouse theatre was for many years the outstanding legitimate theatre in Portland. Evergreen first acquired an interest in this theatre in 1935. It was assessed in 1945 at $68,750 and has a seating capacity of 1,255. During most of the period of its operation as an affiliated theatre, the Playhouse has been a subsequent run theatre. At the present time, it is operated on a first run moveover policy. The great increase in population, and the presence of a vast number of service personnel in the last five years in Portland created a distinct need for additional first run theatres. It was for this reason that the policy of the Playhouse was changed.

"The Oriental theatre is a neighborhood theatre located less than a mile from the downtown business center. There is no other neighborhood theatre in Washington, Oregon and Idaho comparable with the Oriental, in size, facilities and in its beauty of decoration. It compares favorably with the finest of first run metropolitan theatres. The Oriental because of its luxuriousness, location and quality of its equipment draws its patronage from nearly all points in the city, as well as from the outlying towns. It was assessed in 1945 for $235,265 and has a seating capacity of 2,038. The theatre was built in 1928, and Evergreen first acquired an interest in it in 1935. Before an interest in the theatre was obtained by Evergreen, the Oriental exhibited first and second run product. From 1935 to 1944, the Oriental exhibited fourth run product. Thereafter, for the same reason which caused the changing of the Playhouse from a subsequent run theatre to a first run theatre, the Oriental commenced to play first run product. The fourth run product previously exhibited at the Oriental is now licensed to an independent exhibitor who operates the Bagdad.

"The theatres operated by independent exhibitors in competition with Evergreen theatres license the first run product of Loew's, United Artists, Universal and one-half of Warner Bros., charge identical admission prices and take the same clearance as the Evergreen first run theatres. The Evergreen first run theatres license the product of Fox, Paramount, Columbia, RKO, Monogram, PRC and one-half of Warner Bros.

"The Newsreel theatre, formerly the Rivoli, was acquired in 1927 by Pacific Northwest Theatres, Inc. along with the rest of the circuit operated by North American Theatres, Inc. The interest of the Fox defendants in the Rivoli did not survive bankruptcy. In 1939 through negotiations instituted by the owner, a subsidiary of Evergreen obtained a lease on this theatre. It was operated thereafter for a few years with second run product. Subsequently it was converted into a newsreel house.

"The Liberty theatre was formerly operated by Pacific Northwest Theatres, Inc. and earlier by North American Theatres, Inc. At the time of the bankruptcy of the former, the lease on the theatre was terminated and thereafter a new and distinct lease was obtained by a subsidiary of Evergreen. The Liberty in 1945 has an assessed value of $227,000 and a seating capacity of 1,832. It was built in about the year 1916, and for the major part of its existence has been a first run theatre. At the present time it is being operated with a second run product.

"The Hollywood theatre was likewise one of those in which an interest was acquired by Pacific Northwest Theatres, Inc. in 1927 from North American Theatres, Inc. The Hollywood is a neighborhood house and like the Oriental is an unusually fine theatre with a fireproof structure, the finest of projection and sound equipment, excellent carpeting and interior decoration. The Hollywood has a seating capacity of 1,491 and in 1945 was assessed for $102,775. The fee of the Hollywood theatre is owned by a subsidiary of Evergreen, and is operated by another to which the theatre is leased. The Hollywood has for many years played third run product.

"Portland has an unusually high total theatre seating capacity for a city of its size, and for that reason, clearance and theatre playing time has been a problem of more than usual complexity for Portland exhibitors and distributors. Portland, with an estimated population now of 415,000, which is in excess of its 1940 population by more than 100,000, has a total theatre seating capacity of 46,363. Seattle, which is larger than Portland in population by 55,000, has about 6,000 fewer theatre seats than Portland. Thirty-three of Portland's fifty-five theatres are located in neighborhood areas, and the clearance problems have been especially difficult as to these thirty-three neighborhood theatres. Consequently, there has been almost continuous negotiation between distributors and exhibitors for a period of fifteen years. At the present time first run clearance is 42 days after the close of first run showing, or after the third week thereof, whichever is earlier. Up until 1940, first run clearance was not computed until after the close of the first run showing. As it stands now, first run exhibitions of longer than three weeks do not affect availabilities of subsequent run theatres. The following is the availability generally applicable to each run after first licensed in Portland:

"Second run	42 days
Third run	56 days
Fourth run	70 days
Fifth run	77 days
Sixth run	84 days
Seventh run	91 days
Eighth run	126 days
Ninth run	161 days

These are not the precise availabilities in each case on the product of each distributor. The number of days varies. These figures represent the average number of days availability.

(2755)

"The fourth to the ninth run inclusive are all licensed to independent exhibitors.

"In addition to the theatres in the foregoing cities of more than 50,000 population, Evergreen or Pacific is interested in the operation of three theatres, two first and one subsequent run, in Bellingham, Washington, three, two first and one subsequent run, in Everett, Washington, two, one first and one subsequent run, in Vancouver, Washington, and two, one first and one subsequent run, in Eugene, Oregon. These four communities have a population of less than 50,000 but more than 25,000. In each, there are from one to three theatres operated by unaffiliated exhibitors in competition with the theatres of Evergreen or Pacific.

"In Bellingham, the competing, independent first run theatre, the Grand, is operated with the first run product of Columbia, Universal, Republic and one-half of Warner Bros. The other unaffiliated theatre exhibits the third run product of Columbia, Fox, RKO and Warner Bros., and spot books the product of Paramount.

"In Everett, the independently operated theatre, the Roxy, exhibits the first run product of Republic, the second run product of Warner Bros. and Universal, and the third run product of Loew's and Paramount.

(2756)

"There are two unaffiliated theatres in Vancouver, the Mission and the State. The Mission shows the first run product of Columbia, Republic, Universal and RKO. The State plays the second run product of Warner Bros. and the third run product of Columbia, Loew's, Fox, RKO and Republic.

"In Eugene, Oregon, three theatres are operated by unaffiliated exhibitors. For one, the Heilig, the exhibitor licenses the first run product of Columbia, RKO, Republic and Universal. Another, the Mayflower, is operated on a moveover policy with the same product which is licensed for the Heilig. The third independent theatre in Eugene exhibits the second run product of RKO and Universal and the third run product of Loew's, Fox, Warner Bros. and United Artists.

"Evergreen is also interested in theatres located in four towns in Washington with a population under 25,000 each. Evergreen has an interest in two theatres in Aberdeen, one of which has been closed for several years because of its poor physical condition. It also has an interest in one in Hoquiam, one in

Olympia and two in Wenatchee. In each of these towns, Evergeen's theatres are operated in competition with theatres of other exhibitors. In Aberdeen and Hoquiam, theatres affiliated with Warner Bros. compete with those of Evergreen. In Olympia and

Wenatchee the competition is with theatres operated by independent exhibitors.

"Neither Evergreen nor Pacific has any interest in the theatres operated in Tacoma, Washington, a city with a 1945 estimated population of 139,000, or in Yakima, Washington, whose population in 1945 is estimated to be 33,400. Moreover there are 16 cities and towns in Washington and 17 cities and towns in Oregon with 1940 populations ranging from 4,000 to 25,000, in which neither Evergreen nor Pacific is interested in the operation of any theatre.

"Evergreen has not conspired or combined with, and has no agreement or understanding with, any other defendant in this case to restrain interstate commerce or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize interstate trade or commerce in the distribution or exhibition of motion pictures. It has no agreement, express or implied, with any defendant, relating in any way to the distribution or exhibition of motion pictures other than the express license agreements which it has made for the licensing of pictures in its theatres.

"I also deny that Evergreen or Pacific, either individually or in conjunction or combination with any other person, has engaged in any practice which is unfair or discriminatory with respect to any exhibitor with which it competes.

(2758)

(The affidavit of ELMER C. RHODEN is as follows:)

"IT IS HEREBY STIPULATED by and between counsel for the plaintiff herein, and counsel for the defendants, Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and National Theatres Corporation, that if called as a witness in this proceeding ELMER C. RHODEN would testify as follows:

"ELMER C. RHODEN, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

"I am now, and since 1935 have been, the President and operating head of Fox Midwest Theatres, Inc. (hereinafter referred to as 'Fox Midwest'), a Delaware corporation, having its principal office and place of business in Kansas City, Missouri. All of the stock of Fox Midwest is owned by National Theatres Corporation, a defendant in this proceeding.

"Fox Midwest is interested, directly or through corporations the stock of which is owned by it, in the owning, leasing and operation of 128 theatres in the States of Missouri, Kansas, Illinois, Nebraska and Iowa. Of these theatres, 115 are open and 13 are closed. Most of these theatres are located in what is generally known as the Kansas City Exchange territory. By that is meant that films are supplied to such theatres through the exchanges maintained by the respective distributors in Kansas City, Missouri.

"I have been associated with the motion picture business for a period of approximately 33 years. My first employment was with General Film Company as a shipping clerk in 1912 while still at school. In 1917, I became a salesman for General Film Company, working out of Omaha. In the fall of 1917, I went into the Army and, upon my return, became a film salesman for A. H. Blank, who had a theatre circuit and was a First National franchise holder. I was a film salesman in Omaha and eastern Iowa for the A. H. Blank Enterprises and came to Kansas City in 1920 as manager of the interests of that company in that area. During the next five or six years, I bought out Mr. Blank's interest and organized Midwest Film Distributors. I then acquired certain theatres and, in 1927, formed Midwest Theatres, Inc., an independent circuit which held leases on approximately 11 theatres at the time the corporation was formed. I entered into partnership with Mr. L. M. Miller, a prominent citizen of Wichita, Kansas, who at that time had a number of theatres. Additional theatres were acquired by our partnership. Our theatre interests were sold to a company controlled by Fox Film Corporation in October, 1929, in the manner more fully described hereinafter. I entered into a five-year contract with Fox to operate the theatres which we sold and any additional theatres which might be acquired in the territory.

"For several years I was President of the Film Board of Trade in Kansas City, Missouri.

"I am familiar with the claims made by the Government in its complaint and the contents of this statement will be addressed to them.

"THEATRE GROWTH AND DEVELOPMENT IN THE KANSAS CITY EXCHANGE TERRITORY PRIOR TO 1929—THE DATE WHEN FOX WEST COAST ACQUIRED INTERESTS IN CERTAIN OF THESE THEATRES.

"The acquisition of theatres in this territory by a subsidiary of Fox West Coast in or about 1929 came at the conclusion of a period of theatre growth which was characterized in its later stages by circuit operations. The development of circuits was a natural incident of the development of the motion picture business. In the first place, the quality of product had considerably improved. The era of arcades and store exhibitions had come to a close. The enhancement in the artistic and cultural value of films created an increased popular demand for better and more expensive pictures. It became imperative for theatre operators to construct larger, more luxurious and commodious theatres, equipped with the latest improvements. The motion picture business was subjected at this point to the same familiar economic forces which inevitably condition any young industry, which is passing through the cycle of rapid development and expansion. The construction and operation of such ventures required larger units of capital than had theretofore sufficed to meet the needs of the industry. It was during this period that great activity developed in construction and expansion on the part of independent operators and distributors.

"The activities of my partner, Mr. Miller, and myself in the field of theatre construction and acquisition, more fully described later, were dictated solely by considerations such as those outlined above. We realized perfectly well that our survival in this business depended upon the construction and acquisition of theatres which would meet the exacting demands of the public and the needs of the distributors for appropriate outlets for the exhibition of their films. We were not motivated by any desire to stifle competition or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize. Our business activities were actuated solely by what we then considered to be and what I still regard as enlightened self-interest. It was a choice either of meeting the growing competition or retiring from business. We chose the former course and availed ourselves of such legitimate means at hand as would insure the success of our business.

"Some of the more important historical highlights of the period just described were the following:

"As early as 1920, Mr. L. M. Miller, who was later to go into partnership with me, had several theatres in Wichita, Kansas. Mr. M. B. Shanberg had theatres in Hutchinson, Junction City and Salina, Kansas. Mr. Frank Newman already had built the first de luxe houses in Kansas City, Missouri, namely, the Newman, Royal, Regent and Twelfth Street theatres.

"In 1923 and 1924, an organization known as Capitol Enterprises, Inc., acquired about 15 theatres, of which 6 were in Kansas City. In 1924, while this circuit was still in process of creation, it was purchased by Universal. During the next few years, Universal acquired some additional theatres in Kansas City and others in Missouri and Kansas. In Kansas City, it built the Uptown theatre, which was subsequently acquired by Fox Midwest, as more fully described later. Early in 1929 Shanberg acquired all of Universal's theatres and this marked the end of Universal's theatre operations in this territory.

"The Paramount interests had already entered Kansas City. Some time in 1924 or 1925, they purchased the Newman and Royal theatres from Mr. Frank Newman.

"During this period, the Shanberg circuit also expanded rapidly. In addition to those theatres operated by Shanberg and those acquired from Universal, various other theatre interests were secured. At the time of the sale to the Fox interests in the fall of 1929, the Shanberg organization was operating approximately 60 theatres in Missouri, Kansas and Iowa. Virtually all of these theatres were being operated under leases or other arrangements.

"In 1928 Woolf and Shanberg built the Midland theatre, one of the largest and finest theatres in Kansas City, Missouri. It was and is a de luxe, downtown theatre with about 3,600 seats. Within a year, it was sold to Loew's and is still operated by it under the name of Loew's Midland.

"At approximately this time, the so-called Miller and Rhoden circuit, in which I was a partner, was also established. Mr. Miller was a theatre operator in Wichita and had acquired several theatres there in addition to substantial investments in real estate which he held.

"In about 1925, I came into control of Mr. A. H. Blank's film exchange and, in partnership with L. M. Miller, began operating it as an independent exchange.

The exchange had formerly been known as the Midwest Photoplay Company. Mr. Miller and I changed its name to Midwest Film Distributors, Inc.

"In 1926 we began acquiring theatres either in our own names or in the name of Midwest Film Distributors, Inc. Shortly thereafter, we formed Midwest Theatres, Inc. and turned over to it the theatres which we had acquired. Some of these theatres we owned, others we leased. By 1929 we were operating 37 theatres, of which 4 were in Kansas City, Missouri. The others were located in Kansas and Missouri.

"I attribute the expansion of the Miller and Rhoden circuit primarily to efficient management and operation; the favorable business standing and credit which we enjoyed, together with the substantial amount of capital which was invested in our enterprises, and last but not least, the advent of sound pictures. The cash investment of Mr. Miller and myself in these theatres was in excess of one million dollars. In addition to this capital investment, we had assumed a number of obligations.

"We acquired many of our theatres, with the exception of those located in Wichita, from so-called independent operators. We were able to acquire these theatres not because of any particular advantages due to our ownership of other theatres, but, rather, because of a hesitancy on the part of many operators to make the substantial investments or commitments necessary to keep pace with the times. Particularly was this so with respect to equipping their theatres for sound. From 1926 to 1929, it had become apparent to me that sound pictures were supplanting the silents and that the latter would soon disappear. Independent operators in Kansas were doubtful as to what would be the effect of the transformation. Sound equipment was quite expensive and many of these exhibitors preferred to dispose of their theatres rather than to assume the risks of further investments.

"Meanwhile, theatre growth was not restricted to circuits but continued to advance under the direction of so-called independent operators, particularly in the large cities such as Kansas City, Missouri. That was true not only then but remains true today, as I shall point out more specifically when I come to discuss some of the particular communities in which Fox Midwest operates.

"Just as the exhibitors found it necessary to construct larger, more luxurious and commodious theatres to meet the current demands of the public and the preferences of the film companies so, also, did the distributors vie with each other for the exhibition of their finer and more expensive productions in these better showplaces. In order to assure a sufficient number of outlets for exhibition of their pictures, they proceeded to acquire some of the finest theatres in the country.

"In 1928 and 1929, competition developed for the acquisition of various theatre interests in Missouri and Kansas on the part of the distributors. Circuits of theatres with whom distributors were negotiating also evinced an interest in acquiring our theatres. In the summer of 1929, one Max Kravetz, acting as an agent for a subsidiary of Fox Film Corporation, came to Kansas City to negotiate directly for the acquisition of theatres. He submitted a proposition to Mr. Miller and myself as to which he and I were not in complete agreement. Mr. Miller wished to sell because he believed that he had too much money tied up in theatre real estate in Wichita and was anxious to liquidate. After considering the entire proposition, I agreed to sell. In connection with the transaction I was employed to manage the operation of these and all other theatres which might be acquired in the territory.

"At the same time that Mr. Kravetz was negotiating with Mr. Miller and myself, he was also conducting negotiations for the acquisition of other theatres in this territory. I have previously described the development of the Shanberg theatre organization. At that time, it was interested in 61 theatres. Paramount, at the same time, was negotiating with Mr. Shanberg. Mr. Kravetz also submitted a proposition and was successful in securing the purchase of these theatres. The total purchase price was in excess of $4,000,000, the payment of a portion of which was deferred over a period of time. Mr. Shanberg was employed at a substantial salary until such time as the purchase price could be paid in full, although, in 1931, his employment contract was terminated and the management of all the theatres vested in myself.

"Certain other acquisitions were made by the Fox subsidiary in the summer of 1929, including the Reid, Yemm and Hays circuit and the Fresina circuit, which were engaged in theatre operations in southern Illinois. Mr. Kravetz also had negotiations with other smaller exhibitors and acquired certain small groups of theatres as a result. As to these as well, the general competitive situation relating to theatre acquisitions hereinabove referred to, also existed.

"Upon the conclusion of these various transactions, the Fox subsidiary which took over the theatres had interests in about 150 theatres. As the operations of this new company developed, it early became apparent that it could not be profitably operated. From 1931 until 1933, when it went into bankruptcy, it continuously lost money. This was due in part to the inflated prices paid for the properties and the character of some of the properties themselves. A number of the theatres were simply not worth operating and some of them were abandoned. Other theatres had been closed at the time they were acquired and were not worth reopening. Because of unprofitable operations, it was necessary to close other theatres. General economic conditions had become steadily worse. All of the properties had substantial carrying charges, which represented a continual drain on the resources of the profitable theatres.

"In March of 1933, the Fox subsidiary filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy. Its operations were taken over by trustees. The number of theatres which were operated by the trustees had diminished to 110 in 1933. In 1934 and 1935, 107 theatres were being operated. The reorganization of the company was completed in January, 1935. The reorganization plan provided for the complete payment of all allowed claims and the properties were vested in the present Fox Midwest Theatres, Inc.

"TRADE PRACTICES IN THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY IN THIS TERRITORY IN EFFECT UP TO 1929—THE YEAR OF THE WEST COAST ACQUISITIONS.

"During my association with the motion picture industry prior to the time when Fox Film Corporation made any of the acquisitions heretofore referred to, I became familiar with the manner in which films were licensed to exhibitors by the distributing companies and the conditions and circumstances of such licensing.

"Basically, the licensing of film and the fixing of runs and clearances were determined much the same as they are today. The same criteria which today determine the reasonableness of clearance, the relative priority of run to be accorded to any given exhibitor, or the terms under which pictures are to be licensed were substantially the same when the number of affiliated theatres was insignificantly few. These same standards continue to apply to individual situations today irrespective of the character of the operation, be it independent or affiliated. It has always been generally the fact that the largest, most luxurious and commodious theatres receive a prior run over theatres which were physically less capable of affording the distributors a proper outlet for first showings of their finest pictures and providing the maximum amount of revenue which could be obtained. This is, and has always been true regardless of affiliation or non-affiliation.

"As a film buyer, I have always tried to obtain for my theatres, the best possible run of pictures at what I considered to be reasonable rentals. I did not always agree with the distributors on what was a reasonable rental or the run which was given to my theatre. In some instances, I was given a playing position which I would have preferred to improve. In other instances, I paid more for film than I should have liked to have paid. In almost all instances the result of the bargaining process which took place between distributor and exhibitor was a deal which represented a compromise of the individual interests of both.

"In short, the situation with respect to the licensing of film prior to the Fox acquisitions was the same as it is today. There were fewer 'percentage pictures' at that time but film rentals were often computed on such a basis. Provisions for minimum admission prices were also inserted in contracts between the exhibitors and distributors in those days. Clearance was then, as it still is, considered to be a vital and essential factor in the industry for the protection of both the distributor and the prior run exhibitor.

"DESCRIPTION OF PRESENT CORPORATE STRUCTURE AND GENERAL BUSINESS PRACTICES OF FOX MIDWEST.

"I have already stated that all of the stock of Fox Midwest is owned by National Theatres Corporation, which also owns the stock of a number of other companies engaged in the operation of theatres.

"The business of Fox Midwest is carried on autonomously as an independent business enterprise. The management, operation and general policies of Fox Midwest are directly under my supervision and control. The directors of Fox Midwest are: E. C. Rhoden, Charles E. Shafer, J. C. Nichols, James M. Kemper, Herbert V. Jones and Charles P. Skouras. All of them except Charles P. Skouras are residents of Kansas City, Missouri. It is true that the financial interest which National Theatres Corporation has in Fox Midwest subjects the latter to a certain amount of direction by the former with respect to certain financial transactions, such as the construction of new theatres, improvements, acquisitions or other capital commitments. In every other respect, however, I am entrusted with complete authority and discretion in the management of the company.

"Fox Midwest Amusement Corporation was organized by Fox Midwest Theatres, Inc. as a service corporation designed to handle the many details of management incident to the operation of the theatres in this large territory. It has a total personnel of 1,982—102 of which are in the home office in the Uptown Theatre Building, Kansas City, Missouri. The remaining 1,880, including managers, are employed in the theatres themselves.

"Various departments of the organization have been created for the purpose of carrying out all functions incidental to the operation of the theatres. These include the licensing and booking of pictures, advertising, purchasing of supplies, auditing of accounts in the field, real estate and insurance, maintenance, etc.

"Most of the personnel in these departments are highly trained and have a specialized knowledge of conditions in this particular territory. This is especially true of the buying and booking department, the personnel of which see all pictures that are licensed by Fox Midwest for the purpose of evaluating and judging their comparative merits and quality. Their knowledge of the various communities in which Fox Midwest operates theatres and the local tastes and prejudices of their inhabitants must be fairly complete.

"Film license agreements are separately and independently entered into between Fox Midwest and each distributor from whom it licenses film. In many instances the bargaining process is quite protracted. It is and always has been considered of the utmost importance that any given distributor does not know the specific terms of any deal entered into between an exhibitor and another distributor. Accordingly, it has been the policy of Fox Midwest to treat such matters as confidential trade secrets in so far as it is within its power so to do. Similarly, I have no knowledge nor has any distributor at any time supplied me with any information concerning the film rentals paid by any theatre which is competitive with a Fox Midwest theatre. On the contrary, it is to the advantage of a distributor not to divulge such matters to us for the obvious reason that its bargaining position might be adversely affected if an exhibitor had specific knowledge of such matters. This is true whether the exhibitor be affiliated with a producer or not.

"It is quite true that certain features of the license agreements have become somewhat standardized because of long experience and usage in the industry. On the other hand, certain provisions of the license agreement which relate to the terms upon which specific pictures are licensed are determined wholly as a result of the bargaining process with each separate distributor. I may point out in this connection that even as between Fox Midwest and Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, the producer-distributor with which Fox Midwest is affiliated, there is as much bargaining and haggling over the terms under which specific pictures are to be played at specific theatres as there is with other distributors. I recall many instances of important differences of opinion between Fox Midwest and Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation in connection with the licensing of its product and the specific film rentals to be paid therefor.

"It is also far from true that there is complete uniformity even on matters of form, although such uniformity as does exist is attributable, as I have said, to long experience and usage in the industry. In (2775)

Kansas City, Missouri, for example, the availabilities of subsequent run theatres are usually set forth in contracts between the various distributors and the subsequent run theatres and are fixed with relation to first run downtown. Thus, theatre X will be given an availability of 56 days following close of exhibition at the first run downtown theatre. Loew's, however, fixes the availabilities of subsequent run theatres with relation to prior runs other than first run downtown. The availabilities of subsequent run houses stem from third city run in some of Loew's contracts. In some other instances the availability of a subsequent run theatre stems directly from the theatre playing immediately prior to it in the competitive zone. While this difference in the manner of framing contracts is, of course, one of form only, it is cited to show that the distributor and the exhibitor each bargain for the express purpose of reaching a deal which will suit and serve his or its own individual interests best.

"Fox Midwest enters into contracts with the distributors only for theatres in which it is interested.

(2776)

"There are many occasions where a distributor may already have negotiated license agreements for certain pictures with another subsidiary of National Theatres Corporation before it does so with respect to the theatres of Fox Midwest. It sometimes happens, under such circumstances, that the agreement thus arrived at, particularly those provisions relating to terms, may be used as a basis for the negotiations with the distributor, relating to the theatres of Fox Midwest. It is in some instances even adopted by the parties in negotiating the deal for this territory. Under no circumstances, however, is Fox Midwest bound by any commitments so made by other subsidiaries of National Theatres Corporation, and all deals made with respect to the theatres of Fox Midwest are consummated with special attention to its requirements and needs.

"Before any license agreement becomes effective it must receive my approval. In the negotiation of film licenses in practically all instances, separate consideration is given to each particular theatre in which Fox Midwest is interested, and a separate and specific deal is made on the basis of each individual theatre.

"In most instances, the terms under which film is licensed to the Fox Midwest theatres vary with each picture, each theatre and each distributor. There is absolutely nothing uniform about this. The license agreements covering certain theatres operated by Fox Midwest provide for the payment of flat rentals. These fixed rentals will vary in amount with each company, depending upon the quality of the picture licensed. In some other theatres the license agreements provide for the payment of film rental determined by a certain percentage of the gross business done by the theatre. These 'percentage deals', however, also vary according to distributor and the quality of the product. In some instances the license calls for the payment of a specified percentage of the gross receipts. In another a sliding scale is provided for under which the returns to the distributor will vary in accordance with the volume of business done by the theatre on the particular picture. The nature of the formula used depends entirely upon what the parties decide as a result of their negotiations.

"As to these 'percentage deals', the parties simply agree that the distributor is entitled to a rental which is to be measured by the gross receipts received at the box-office. This criterion is based upon the proposition that the quality of a picture is determined by box-office grosses, and film rentals, to be fair to both distributor and exhibitor, should bear a definite relationship to the quality of the film.

"Two of the most important provisions in a license agreement are clearance and admission price. Both factors are important to the distributor and the exhibitor. A first-run exhibitor whose theatre represents a substantial investment, who has undertaken to pay a high guaranteed film rental plus a percentage of the gross receipts and who proposes to charge a high admission price, is entitled to the assurance that a reasonable period of clearance will elapse between the close of exhibition of a picture at his theatre and the exhibition of the same picture in a subsequent run theatre which represents a smaller investment, charges a lower admission price and pays substantially less film rental to the distributor. Unless these considerations are accorded their proper weight in the licensing of film, it is obvious that the ability and capacity of the prior run exhibitor to secure patronage at its top admission price will be affected, with the result that (2779) its contractual undertakings with the distributor will be placed in jeopardy.

"On the other hand, I have absolutely no interest in fixing the maximum price which a subsequent run exhibitor may charge. In fact, the higher he pegs it the better it is for the prior run exhibitor. For example, the first run theatres in Kansas City, Missouri, including the Fox Midwest houses, now charge a top admission price of 65 cents. Should a subsequent run exhibitor in that city raise its price to 65 cents, his theatre will become less competitive to the first runs than theretofore.

"I have never entered into any agreements or understandings with any distributor having the purpose or effect of fixing the prices to be charged by a subsequent run theatre, and there would be no business reason which would impel me to do so.

"Contractual provisions for clearance are usually not renegotiated each time the parties consummate a deal for a particular block of pictures. These items are agreed upon in the first instance, only after consideration has been given to numerous factors of business policy and local conditions, upon the basis of which definite clearances are fixed and are readopted in all future negotiations, unless specific conditions or circumstances require a change. There are some instances where clearances in favor of Fox Midwest theatres have been eliminated or voluntarily reduced where it became clear that the length of the existing clearance was not justified in the light of current conditions.

"In entering into license agreements with the distributors, Fox Midwest does not condition the licensing of pictures in some of its theatres upon the making of a deal with the distributor for all of its theatres. It frequently happens that the parties are unable to negotiate an agreement for certain Fox Midwest theatres but succeed in arriving at a satisfactory deal with respect to other theatres. Where that happens, the pictures as to which a satisfactory deal has been made are licensed and exhibited by Fox Midwest and the distributor is free to make other licensing arrangements in those situations as to which it was unable to reach an agreement with Fox Midwest.

"When Fox Midwest negotiates with any distributor for the licensing of film, it does not know and has no interest in whether or not the Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation has or has not licensed its product to theatres in which such distributor is interested.

"Fox Midwest is interested in obtaining for its the-(2781)
atres the best product available on reasonable terms. When it desires to exhibit in one of its theatres an outstanding attraction distributed by RKO, for example, it is not in the least concerned as to whether RKO has made an agreement for the exhibition of Twentieth Century-Fox pictures in RKO's theatres located in some other territory.

"My own personal, pecuniary interests impel me to act for the sole welfare and benefit of Fox Midwest.

I am not a stockholder of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and have no connection with that company. My employment is with Fox Midwest, and the terms of my contract provide for a certain fixed salary with a participation in the profits of the company. I am primarily concerned, therefore, in promoting the best interests of that company. I am not concerned with the effect which the policies of my operation may have upon the distribution policies of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation.

"The Government claims that there is no real competition between theatres affiliated with different distributors in the same competitive area, and that such competition is artificial. My experience in Kansas

(2782)

City, Missouri, demonstrates that this is not true. The Fox Midwest first run theatres in Kansas City, Missouri are definitely in competition with the theatres operated by Loew's, Paramount and RKO for the same movie dollars. Each company adopts a policy which is designed to procure the largest possible patronage. Advertising costs alone, intended to bring people from all over the area into the downtown section to see first run pictures, run into many thousands of dollars.

"As to the licensing of film, the fact that over a period of time the same product is licensed to certain theatres in no wise disproves the competitive nature of the situation. Each theatre usually continues from year to year to exhibit the product of the company with which it has been doing business. For one exhibitor to obtain product previously and over a period of time used by another exhibitor would require that it be able to effectuate a deal with the particular distributor which would insure the latter a much greater return than it had theretofore received from its existing account. No exhibitor could possibly afford to buy up all available product, much less provide adequate playing time for its exhibition, especially now when attractions play on longer runs than has heretofore been the case. If a distributor is now securing fair and reasonable revenue and proper exploitation of its pictures in a desirable outlet, it has no particular interest in jeopardizing that position when no compensating advantages are offered. Where, however, a distributor is unable to reach a deal with an exhibitor or is in any other way dissatisfied with the account, it does have another available outlet with whom it can negotiate.

"What I have said with respect to film licensing practices applies whether or not the competing first run theatre is affiliated with a distributor or not. Examples of the continuation of the licensing of the same product to a first run theatre regardless of whether it is affiliated or independent will be referred to hereafter.

"Theatre Situations in Cities and Towns in which Fox Midwest Operates

"I now take up the more important situations in which Fox Midwest has an interest.

"A. Kansas City, Missouri.

"Pop.	1940 Census	399,178
"Pop.	Present (Est.)	462,493

1. First Run

(2784)

"In Kansas City, Missouri, there are 51 theatres, 6 of which have first run in the city. Three first run theatres are operated by Fox Midwest and one each by Loew's, RKO and Paramount, respectively. There are 45 second and subsequent run theatres, 12 of which are Fox Midwest theatres.

"FOX MIDWEST'S THEATRES.

"Fox Midwest operates the Uptown, Esquire and Tower theatres in Kansas City proper. It also operates the Fairway theatre, located in the Fairway residential addition in Johnson County, Kansas, just a short distance across State Line Road which fixes the westerly corporate limits of Kansas City, Missouri. The Esquire, Uptown and Fairway theatres play the best pictures of Twentieth Century-Fox, Universal and Republic, first run day and date. The Tower theatre, operated by Fox Midwest, plays pictures of nearly all producers which are considered unsuitable for first run single feature showing at the other three theatres. These pictures are exhibited at the Tower on a double feature program, first run, in combination with vaudeville.

"The Esquire theatre is located at 215 E. 12th Street, Kansas City, Missouri. The theatre was remodeled in August, 1938, and is in all respects a first class theatre. It has a seating capacity of 815. The theatre has all the latest improvements and accommodations in the way of equipment and appointments.

"The Esquire, when it was built in 1919, was known as the Twelfth Street. It later became the Downtown and eventually the Esquire. It was built by Richards & Flynn and intended as a first run outlet for First National. Fox Midwest acquired the theatre in 1936. It was renovated and its name changed to the Esquire in the summer of 1938.

"The Uptown theatre is located at 3700 Broadway. The theatre has a seating capacity of 2,043.

"It is a de luxe house in every respect, having been constructed in 1927 at a cost of nearly a million dollars. This theatre was built by Universal and leased to Shanberg. It was transferred to the Fox subsidiary in May, 1930, which later purchased the fee.

"The Tower theatre is located immediately adjacent to the Esquire on the east and seats 2,100 people. It is a modern, well-equipped and appointed theatre in every respect. The Theatre was built in 1921 by the Pantages vaudeville circuit and opened with a combination of vaudeville and motion pictures. By 1929 it had become primarily a motion picture theatre. For some time prior to 1933 the theatre had been closed. In that year it was reopened by the Rewot Corporation, and the name changed to the Tower. Fox Midwest acquired control of Rewot, which also operated the Downtown, in 1936 and 1937 actually taking over the operation of the theatre in 1936.

The Fairway theatre was opened on June 12, 1942. It is located at 2600 West 52nd Street, in a section which has enjoyed rapid improvement and development during the past ten years. This area consists of the real estate subdivisions known as Mission Hills, Indian Hills Mission Woods, Fairway, Fieldton, Prairie Village, Westwood, Bryantwood, and Mission Highlands, and is a development of the J. C. Nichols Company, comprising a small portion of the elite residential area of the Country Club district.

"As a result of the congestion and substantial increase in movie attendance which was developing in the first run Uptown and Esquire theatres, I deemed it desirable to have another first run theatre to afford accommodations to the increased patronage in this growing area. I was also influenced by the wartime transportation problems affecting the residents of this section. It was finally decided to change the Fairway over to a first run day and date operation with the Uptown and Esquire on that product which played first run in those theatres, which was done on or about October 16, 1942.

"Although the theatre only seats 702, it is in every respect a fine house with all modern improvements and appointments.

"COMPETITIVE THEATRES.

"The RKO Orpheum theatre is located at 1212 Baltimore Avenue and has a seating capacity of 2,036. It is in every respect a de luxe theatre. It was originally designed to play vaudeville, which it did until 1928, when it closed. The Orpheum was reopened as a motion picture theatre in 1939 and has operated continuously as such since that time. It exhibits RKO and about one-half of Warner's product. Warners has no theatre in the Kansas City exchange territory.

(2788)

"Loew's Midland is located at 1228 Main Street and has a seating capacity of 3,573. It is the largest theatre in Kansas City and, for that matter in the Middle West. It was built in 1928 by the Woolf-Shanberg interests. In 1929 they sold it to Loew's and the latter has operated it since. It exhibits the product of M-G-M, United Artists and Columbia.

"The Newman theatre is located at 1118 Main Street and has a seating capacity of 1,917. It was built by Frank Newman in 1919 and was the first de luxe movie theatre in Kansas City. It is still a fine, commodious, well appointed theatre and has always operated on a first run policy. It exhibits Paramount and about one-half of Warner's product.

"THE MAINSTREET.

"The Mainstreet theatre is owned by Fox and RKO and is now closed. Fox Midwest's one-half interest was acquired in November and December, 1942 and RKO's one-half interest was acquired in January, 1943. The theatre was built in 1922 at the southwest corner of 14th and Main Streets in Kansas City, Missouri, and has a seating capacity of 3,049. The original cost of the theatre was approximately $1,400,000. In 1926 it was valued at $1,083,000. There have been no extraordinary additional investments since that time. It was operated primarily as a vaudeville and stage show house by the Kansas City Junior Orpheum Company, a subsidiary of Orpheum Theatre & Realty Co. In about 1931 or 1932, it went over to a motion picture house and closed in July of 1938. It was again opened November 6, 1941, by one Albert Schoenberg in association with Will Harris, a vaudeville operator from Chicago, and Ralph Goldberg, an exhibitor in Omaha, Nebraska. The venture was unsuccessful and the theatre closed again on January 5, 1942. During that two-months period, the theatre operated under a combination policy of vaudeville and one feature film of lesser box office attraction.

"In 1936, the Mainstreet was included in a so-called pooling of all the downtown first run theatres in Kansas City, except Loew's Midland. This lasted for approximately six months. I was chosen as the person to supervise the operation, including the Mainstreet. Despite the fact that the Mainstreet theatre had the very best pictures available from the major companies during this period, it did not bring in a large enough gross to make the house profitable, and in some weeks grosses dropped to less than $5,000. There was no vaudeville played in the Mainstreet at that time and it was operating on a straight motion picture policy. The theatre is located away from the heart of the downtown section and in a pawnshop, second-hand store type of neighborhood. Consequently, there was no drop-in or transit business.

"For many years prior to its acquisition by Fox Midwest and RKO, the Mainstreet was owned in fee by three separate interests.

"In 1942 a proposal was submitted to me for the acquisition of the fee to the Mainstreet on what I considered advantageous terms. At that time I had in mind the making of certain policy changes in the downtown operation. Accordingly Fox Midwest first acquired a one-half interest in the fee from the owners of that portion. Then the party who had undertaken to obtain the other one-half could not or would not do so and we subsequently discovered that this one-half interest had been sold to RKO for substantially more than Fox Midwest had arranged to pay. Prior to RKO's acquisition of this one-half interest, Fox Midwest commenced a partition suit against the then owner of the property. After RKO's acquisition an amended petition was filed and this suit is now pending.

"There can be no question but that the theatres which have the first runs in Kansas City, Missouri are by reason of their physical characteristics, equipment, conveniences, appointments and locations pe-(2791)

culiarly fit for first run exhibition. This was true when they were independently operated and it remains true today.

2. Second Run.

"Second run in Kansas City, Missouri, is shown at the Plaza theatre which is operated by Fox Midwest. The Plaza is one of the outstanding showplaces of the Mid-West from every point of view. It seats 1,861. It was built by J. C. Nichols Company in the Country Club Plaza district of Kansas City, Missouri. Originally, it was operated by Woolf & Shanberg. Fox Midwest acquired the theatre under lease from them in May, 1930. It charges an adult evening admission price of 55 cents, and plays the product of all major distributors.

"There is no subsequent run theatre in the entire territory which equals the Plaza either in its capacity for producing revenue for the distributors or in the quality of its physical characteristics and commodious appointments. It represents an investment in excess of $200,000 to build, and is the most desired and sought after outlet by all distributors for the second run exhibition of their pictures.

3. Subsequent Runs.

"There are 44 other subsequent run theatres in Kansas City, Missouri, 11 of which are operated by (2792)
Fox Midwest. These subsequent run theatres themselves are in neighborhoods each of which is considered a separate competitive area. In Kansas City, Missouri, there are approximately nine such areas or zones. In each zone the number of theatres varies from three to nine. In each of them the run which any given theatre has depends upon a number of factors, among the most important of which are the physical characteristics of the theatres themselves, their potential capacity to produce the greatest amount of revenue for the distributors and the amount of film rental which any given exhibitor is willing to pay for a given run within the zone. In two zones certain theatres operated by independent exhibitors have prior runs over theatres operated by Fox Midwest. Mr. Jay Means operates the Oak Park theatre which is first run in a zone with six other theatres, one of which, the Linwood, is operated by Fox Midwest. The Oak Park charges an adult evening admission price of 45 cents and has an availability of 49 days after downtown first run. The Linwood charges an adult evening admission price of 35 cents and has an availability of 84 days after downtown first run.

"In another zone, the Ritz, a subsequent run theatre operated by Dr. N. Zoglin, plays ahead of the Benton theatre, which is operated by Fox Kansas City Corporation.

(2793)

"Where Fox Midwest has first runs in the neighborhood zones, the theatres themselves are physically superior to other theatres in the zone and are capable of producing more revenue for the distributors.

"There are theatres which are not located within the city limits of Kansas City but which are contiguous to it and are operated by independents with no local subsequent run competition from Fox Midwest. The areas in which these independent operators are located are Liberty, Independence, Fairmount, Belton, Blue Springs, Grandview, Lee's Summit. North

Kansas City, Highway 40 and 71 By-Pass (Drive-in theatre), all in Missouri, and Olathe and Bonner Springs, Shawnee and Mission, in Kansas.

"My attention has been directed to certain testimony given by Mr. William Kupper on cross-examination, which appears in the transcript of the testimony in this case beginning with page 1679 of the stenographic record. This relates to certain changes made in 1935-1936 respecting clearance in Kansas City.

"Prior to the 1935-1936 motion picture season, the availabilities of subsequent run theatres in Kansas City, Missouri and the surrounding territory were based upon admission prices. This general system of clearance based upon admission prices had existed in the area since approximately 1929. Under that system, theatres located within the same block or within a few blocks of each other and highly competitive with each other had a day and date availability, when the same admission price was charged at both theatres. This worked a particular hardship to the better theatres which paid higher film rentals than some other theatres which charged the same admission price. The difficulty became acutely accentuated during the period of the depression when admission prices were greatly reduced and the better theatres found themselves playing day and date with most of the theatres in the city although paying much higher film rentals and having much larger operating expense. The film exchanges were having to supply an inordinate number of prints and the situation was generally unsatisfactory. It was further complicated by give-aways, bargain nights and other indirect reductions in price. It was felt that this system was undesirable from the standpoint of distributor and exhibitor alike, and destructive of the business of theatres in close proximity with each other. Attempts to remedy the situation during the N.B.A. period were shortlived.

"Changes were proposed to Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation in a letter dated April 30, 1935, addressed to Mr. Ward Scott, District Manager of Fox Film Corporation by myself as Division Manager of Fox Midwest Theatres, Inc. I proposed, among other things, that particular runs be licensed to subsequent run theatres in these competitive neighborhood zones. This proposal contemplated the establishment of the principle of zoning as a supplement to clearance, which had been in operation in Kansas City prior to 1929 and which has successfully operated in many other parts of the country. I also negotiated separately with each other distributor. Each determined to license its pictures in line with this general idea.

"The propriety of these new arrangements relating to clearance was challenged by Mr. Emmanuel Bolsky, and other independent exhibitors in Kansas City (including one Esterley who is hereinafter referred to), in a proceeding instituted in the United States District Court for the Western Division of the Western District of Missouri. After a full trial of the issues raised in that proceeding, the United States District Judge, Merrill E. Otis, dismissed the complaint, and in connection therewith made certain findings of fact bearing directly upon the legality and fairness of these new run and clearance arrangements as follows:

"'XXVI.

"'The respective contracts made by defendant, Fox Midwest Theatres, Inc., with the respective distributors were made for valuable consideration on what is known as a clear run basis, but the runs in all of the contracts acquired by defendant, Fox Midwest Theatres, Inc., for particular theatres were in some instances prior to and in other instances subsequent to runs acquired by other theatres named in the particular contract as competitive to such theatre.

"'XXVII.

"'The competitive areas suggested by defendant, Fox Midwest Theatres, Inc., in its negotiations for contracts in the year 1935 for the 1935-1936 season were not originated at that time, but were substantially the same as those designated by it in the preceding year.

"'XXVIII.

"'The theatres in Kansas City, Missouri, owned, leased or operated by subsidiaries of defendant, Fox Midwest Theatres, Inc., do not as a whole enjoy, by virtue of the said contracts made in 1935, or any of them, superiority of runs and clearances as compared with the contracts made by defendant, Fox Midwest Theatres, Inc., in 1934 for the 1934-35 season, but, on the contrary, have on the average runs which are inferior to those enjoyed under contracts made in 1934 as respects priority of runs and clearances.

(2797)

"'XXX.

"'The defendant, Fox Midwest Theatres, Inc., so far as shown by the evidence, at no time entered into and at no time has ever engaged with the other defendants in any conspiracy, contract or combination in unreasonable restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or of a monopoly, attempt to monopolize or combination or conspiracy to monopolize to an unreasonable extent any part of the trade or commerce among the several states, substantial or otherwise, and whether having as its objects and purposes the objects and purposes alleged in paragraph V of the plaintiffs' bill of complaint herein, or any other objects or purposes.

"'XXXI.

"'None of the plaintiffs has shown any damage or threatened damage by reason of anything done or threatened to be done by defendant, Fox Midwest Theatres, Inc., or any of the defendants.'

"Furthermore, in the testimony referred to, there is the suggestion that, as a result of this change is clearance, Fox Midwest received some special privileges with respect to second and third run in Kansas City. This is not the fact. Prior to 1935, the Plaza theatre, the character of which has previously been referred to, had for a number of years been licensed second run in the Kansas City area. The third run had also, prior to 1935, been licensed to the Isis or Apollo theatres. These theatres continued to have the same second and third run, respectively, which they had theretofore enjoyed and the change in clearance had no effect upon this situation in any way.

"With respect to this situation, Judge Otis, in the proceeding referred to above, also made specific findings of fact directly related thereto, as follows:

"'XXIX.

"'Under the evidence in this case, there is no complaint made of the runs provided by any of said contracts made in 1935 for the Uptown Theatre, the Plaza Theatre, the Isis Theatre, the Apollo Theatre, the Warwick Theatre, the Lincoln

(2799)

Theatre or the Benton Theatre. All of said theatres have for a number of years enjoyed at least as good runs as any provided for them in any of the said contracts made in 1935.'

"The Fairway theatre was also mentioned in this testimony. I previously referred to it and its playing position, as well as the reasons it is being operated as it is at the present time.

"In this same testimony reference was made to the Rockhill and Bijou theatres in Kansas City and to the fact that there was a change in the playing position of these two theatres. The circumstances surrounding this are very simple and readily explicable. The Rockhill and Bijou theatres are located in a subsequent run neighborhood area and are competitive with each other. There are four other competitive theatres in this zone. The Bijou theatre had been closed on and off for a number of years when it was acquired by Mr. J. W. Cotter sometime prior to 1934. He operated it as a first run theatre in the zone, charging an admission price of 25 cents. The Fox Midwest Rockhill theatre played third run in the zone and charged 15 cents.

"In 1937 Mr. Cotter sold the Bijou theatre to one Esterley. Esterley operated another theatre in Kansas City on a low admission price policy of 10 cents or 15 cents. After continuing Cotter's 25 cent policy for a short time Fox Midwest was advised that he had determined that it would be preferable for him to operate the Bijou on a subsequent run with lower admission prices and with consequent lower film rentals and that he proposed to discontinue buying the first run. Fox Midwest thereupon licensed the first run for the Rockhill theatre and increased its admission price from 15 cents to 25 cents.

"The change in the clearance situation which took place in the 1935-36 season, and which has previously been referred to, bore no relation whatsoever to this situation. In negotiating with the distributors during that season I indicated a willingness to license either first, second or third run for the Rockhill and made a specific offer as to film rental Fox Midwest would pay in accordance with the run which the distributors would license to the Rockhill. The various distributors refused to accept my offer to license a first run, but instead licensed it to the Bijou and the third run to the Rockhill.

"As to the question by the counsel for the plaintiff appearing on page 1682 of the transcript that when this change of run took place the Rockhill 'took a very substantial clearance over the Bijou,' the Bijou availability under its new playing position was no different from that which the Rockhill had when it played on a lower admission price. The Rockhill took no greater clearance over the Bijou than the Bijou had previously taken over the Rockhill.

"The seating capacities of the Rockhill and the Bijou theatres are 1,466 and 700, respectively. The Bijou is not located in a very desirable neighborhood. This is one of the reasons which contributed to the desire of its owner to play on a subsequent run at a lower admission price. It was likewise somewhat competitive with the Oak Park theatre, an independent operation which was playing first run in an adjoining zone. When the Rockhill licensed the first run in the zone instead of the third run it paid substantially higher film rentals.

"Thus the acquisition of the prior run by Fox Midwest came about by reason of the relinquishment by the operator of the Bijou of its first run in that neighborhood area.

"There are 6 first run theatres in Wichita, Kansas, all of which are affiliated with Fox Mfdwest. They are the Miller (seating capacity 1,930), Orpheum (seating capacity 1,659), Palace (seating capacity 1,234),

Wichita (seating capacity 906), Sandra (seating capacity 640) and Boulevard (seating capacity 972).

"The Miller, Orpheum, Palace and Wichita theatres were acquired by Fox in 1929 from Miller and Chambers. The Sandra was constructed in July of 1939 and subsequently sold to Fox Midwest. This theatre operates as a moveover. The Boulevard was opened in May, 1945, and is now playing first run pictures day and date with either the Orpheum or the Miller.

"Second run in Wichita is exhibited at the Uptown theatre (seating capacity 1,389), which is operated by Fox Midwest.

"There are 10 other subsequent run theatres in Wichita, all of which are independently operated. Since Fox Midwest made its initial theatre acquisitions in 1929, there has been a growth of independent competition in Wichita. As of January, 1930, Fox owned 5 of the 10 operating theatres in Wichita. At the present time it owns 7 of the 17 operating theatres in Wichita. In December, 1943, Fox Midwest acquired a theatre in Plainview located just outside of the southeasterly city limits. The availability of this theatre is subsequent to three independently operated subsequent runs.

"The first run theatres of Fox Midwest are in all respects the most suitable for first run exhibitions.

"Kansas City, Kansas, is located just across the Missouri River from Kansas City, Missouri. There are 14 theatres in this city, two of which are operated as first run houses, one by Fox Midwest and one by an independent.

"The Granada theatre (seating capacity 1,248) was built by Midwest Theatres, Inc., a Miller and Rhoden company, in 1929, prior to the time when our theatres were acquired by Fox Midwest. This is the only theatre operated in Kansas City, Kansas, by Fox Midwest. It has always been operated as a first run theatre, and, in my opinion, is the most suitable theatre in Kansas City, Kansas, for this policy. At the present time, it exhibits the product of Twentieth Century-Fox, Loew's, RKO, Universal and United Artists, as well as the product of other so-called independent producers.

"The other first run theatre in this city, the Electric (seating capacity 1,500) is operated by Mr. Frank Grubel, an independent exhibitor. This theatre was constructed in 1906. Though it has been modernized from time to time and is suitable for first run exhibition in this city, it is not as modern, nor as desirable as the Granada theatre. At the present time the Electric theatre exhibits the product of Columbia, Paramount, Republic and Warner Bros.

"The first run theatres in Kansas City, Kansas, are in every respect superior to the subsequent run theatres and are the most suitable for first run exhibition.

"The 12 subsequent run theatres are all independently operated and are in no wise controlled by affiliated exhibitors. All of them vigorously compete with one another and with the first run theatres.

"There are 13 theatres in Topeka, five of which are operated by Fox Midwest. Four of these theatres, the Grand (seating capacity 1,262), Jayhawk (seating capacity 1,344), Orpheum (seating capacity 690) and Gem (seating capacity 612) were acquired by Fox Midwest from Mr. Miller and myself in October of 1929. The Oakland theatre was acquired by Fox Midwest under a lease in May, 1940.

"The Grand, Jayhawk, and Orpheum operate on a first run policy, and exhibit the product of all distributors. The Gem plays second run.

"The first and second run theatres in Topeka, Kansas, are the best and most suitable for first and second run exhibition.

(2805)

The remaining eight theatres in Topeka are operated by independents and have seating capacities ranging from 300 to 600.

"The Oakland theatre, operated by Fox Midwest, plays a fourth run, subsequent to the independently operated Ritz, Cozy and Co-ed theatres, and on the same availability as the independently operated Dickinson, Glen, Princess, and Crystal theatres. Some theatres which had been closed at the time of the acquisition by Fox in 1929 have since opened and are being independently operated.

"The Electric (seating capacity 1,557) is a first run theatre which was acquired by Fox Midwest by lease in January, 1934. In 1939, Fox purchased the fee.

"The Kickapoo (seating capacity 820) formerly the Princess, is a first run theatre which was acquired by lease in June of 1937. In 1944 it was completely remodeled and renamed the 'Kickapoo'.

"The Landers (seating capacity 1,080) is a second run theatre which was acquired by Fox Midwest from the Ensley Barbour estate in December, 1942.

"The Mozark (seating capacity 700) and Granada (seating capacity 700) theatres are operated by the Griffith circuit and have a third run. The Granada was built by independent operators after Fox Midwest acquired its theatres in Springfield.

"The Mulliken (seating capacity 619) is operated by the Dickinson circuit. Its policy of operation includes the showing of triple features. The Mulliken plays fourteen days behind the Mozark and Granada, usually on a spot booking basis.

"The physical characteristics of the first and second run theatres operated by Fox Midwest are in every respect superior to those of the subsequent run theatres and they are the most suitable theatres for first run exhibition.

was acquired from the Frisina circuit in 1930. It is a well equipped, well located theatre, in all respects suitable for first run operation.

"The Roxy theatre (seating capacity 1,000) is operated by the independent Frisina circuit and exhibits the product of Warner and Universal first run.

"The Orpheum (seating capacity 2,000) is operated by Publix Great States Theatres Corporation which, I understand, is affiliated with Paramount. It exhibits the product of Loew's, Paramount and RKO first run.

"The Senate (seating capacity 1,000) is operated by an independent and exhibits the product of Columbia first run.

"The Tivioli (seating capacity 650) is operated by Frisina on a second run policy as is the Strand (seating capacity 700) which is operated by the same interests which operate the Senate.

"The Esquire (seating capacity 800) is operated by Frisina as a third run theatre.

"The foregoing represent the only six cities in the Kansas, Missouri, Illinois, Iowa and Nebraska territory having a population of 50,000 and more in which Fox Midwest has theatres. In three of these cities there is independent or affiliated first run competition with Fox Midwest. In the remaining three cities Fox Midwest has all the first run theatres. In all of these cities, there is independent subsequent run competition.

"Fox Midwest also operates theatres in six cities which have populations of between 20,000 and 50,000, in this same territory.

"In four of these cities, namely, Belleville, Illinois; Salina, Kansas; Sedalia, Missouri and Council Bluffs, Iowa, independent operators exhibit major product first run in competition with the first run theatres operated by Fox Midwest. In the other two cities, namely, Hutchinson, Kansas, and Joplin, Missouri, Fox Midwest operates the first run theatres but there is independent subsequent run competition.

"There are five other cities in the states of Kansas and Missouri having a population in excess of 20,000 in which Fox Midwest has no theatre interests.

"Fox Midwest also operates theatres in about 40 communities in this territory which have a population of less than 20,000.

"In the Government's Exhibit 371 reference is made to only 13* communities in the states of Kansas, Illinois, Missouri and Iowa which come within this category in which it is claimed that there are no independent theatres. Each of the other 27 has independent theatres in operation.

"While Fox Midwest has theatre interests in only 40 communities having a population of between 3,800 and 20,000 there are more than 87 other communities in the states of Kansas and Missouri alone which fall within this population range.

*This figure should be 12. The Government's designation of Fort Madison, Iowa as a town in which there is no independent competition is incorrect. The Iowa theatre (seating capacity 683) in Fort Madison is independently operated by Richard Gaston in competition with the Fox Midwest Strand and Orpheum theatres.

Exhibit 371 purports to list all towns in the United States under 25,000 population in which there are no independent theatres but those towns listed under the states referred to in the text are all under 20,000.

competition with the Fox Midwest houses discloses that this was precisely the situation as it existed prior to the acquisition by Fox Midwest of any interest in those towns. In other words, the appearance of Fox Midwest on the scene did not, in these situations, diminish or eliminate competition. On the contrary, competition failed to develop in certain towns mainly because their populations were not sufficiently large enough to support a greater number of theatres. On the other hand, there are a number of towns in which there was no competition when Fox Midwest acquired an interest but in which independent competition subsequently developed. Furthermore, in the Kansas City Exchange territory there are a number of towns in which there is no competition within the town itself and in which the theatres are operated entirely by independents.

"There are a number of illustrations of the growth of independent competition in this territory which I could cite. Independent operators have also built up substantial theatre circuits. For example, in the past seven or eight years Mr. Dickinson has succeeded in building up a circuit consisting of 23 theatres located in the Kansas City exchange territory, including Kansas City, Missouri, itself.

"Fox Midwest has not conspired or combined with, and has no agreement or understanding with, any other defendant in this case to restrain interstate trade or commerce or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize interstate trade or commerce in the distribution or exhibition of motion pictures. It has no agreement, express or implied, with any other defendant, relating in any way to the distribution or exhibition of motion pictures other than the express license agreements which it has made for the licensing of pictures in its theatres.

"I also deny that Fox Midwest, either individually or in conjunction or combination with any other person, has engaged in any practice which is unfair or discriminatory with respect to any exhibitor with which it competes."

(2811)

(The affidavit of F. H. RICKETSON, JR. is as follows:)

"IT IS HEREBY STIPULATED by and between counsel for the plaintiff herein and counsel for the defendants, TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX FILM CORPORATION and NATIONAL THEATRES CORPORATION, that, if called as a witness in this proceeding, F. H. RICKETSON, JR. would testify as follows:

"I am a resident of Denver, Colorado, where I have resided continuously since 1918, except for the period of approximately one year in 1931 and 1932. Since the year 1925, I have been continuously engaged in the motion picture theatre business. From 1935 to date, I have been President and a director of Fox INTER-MOUNTAIN THEATRES, INC., hereinafter referred to as 'FOX INTER-MOUNTAIN', a Delaware corporation, having its principal office and place of business in Denver, Colorado. The defendant, National Theatres Corporation, owns all of the stock of Fox Inter-Mountain.

"Fox Inter-Mountain has an interest, either directly or through subsidiary corporation, in 92 theatres* and 5 dismantled theatre properties located in various cities and towns in the States of Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nebraska, New Mexico, Wyoming and Utah.

"I am generally familiar with the allegations of the plaintiff in this action.

"ORIGIN OF THE BUSINESS OF FOX INTER-MOUNTAIN PRIOR TO ACQUISITION BY AFFILIATE OF FOX FILM CORPORATION.

"A great many of the theatres now operated by Fox Inter-Mountain were originally part of two separate, independently operated groups of theatres, organized prior to 1929.

"One of the independent groups of theatres was organized and built up by three pioneers in the motion picture business in the Denver Exchange territory, Gus and Max Kohn, and Frank Fairchild. These three men began their theatre activities in 1909 and gradually acquired over the next twenty years a total of approximately 20 theatres located in five towns in Colorado, one in Wyoming and two in New Mexico. In all but one town the theatres operated by these individuals were the only theatre or theatres in the respective communities where they were situated.

"The theatres were operated by the Kohns and Fairchild until August, 1929, when they disposed of their interests to Fox Rocky Mountain Theatre Co., an affiliate of Fox Film Corporation.

---

*Fox Inter-Mountain is also operating, under temporary arrangements with one exhibitor who is in the armed forces, 4 theatres in Colorado and 2 in New Mexico.

"The other independent circuit was developed by me and my associates between the years 1925 and 1929. Previous to 1925, I had been employed by the Paramount Company and worked for a time in its distribution department and for a time in its theatre department. After my employment with the Paramount Company ceased, I decided to enter into the theatre business for myself. Together with a partner, A. E. Dickson, I acquired an interest in a theatre located in Montrose, Colorado. During the next few years my associates and I acquired interests in theatres in several other towns in Colorado, Nebraska and Wyoming and by 1929, the theatre business under our management consisted of approximately 25 theatres located in Denver, Boulder, Delta, Montrose, Sterling and Walsenburg, Colorado, Sheridan, Wyoming and in Sidney, Nebraska.

"In all the towns in which I was operating theatres, with the exception of Denver, Colorado, there were no other theatres in these towns besides ours. Many of these communities were relatively small and could not then, nor can they now, support more than one or two theatres.

"In the 1920s there were many important changes in the motion picture industry. In that period not only the technique of exhibition was radically changed, but the public was demanding constantly greater service from the exhibitors. Many new theatres were built in Colorado, Wyoming and New Mexico in response to public demands for better theatre accommodations. I and my associates erected new theatre buildings of a modern type in some of the towns in which we were operating. Likewise, producing companies had begun to acquire theatre holdings in this territory in order to have satisfactory outlets for their product. In the early '20s Universal had theatres in Nebraska as well as one in Denver. Paramount had an interest in theatres in Denver and other Colorado towns which it was using as an outlet for its product. RKO, or as it was known in those days, the Keith-Albee-Orpheum Circuit, was operating a theatre in Denver. In addition, there were several other independent circuits operating in the territory.

"In this same period sound pictures were introduced and exhibitors were faced with new conditions of radical importance. To equip a theatre with facilities for reproducing sound pictures was quite expensive. The cost of operating, and the cost of film, was rapidly increasing.

"Certain distributors in this period evinced an an interest in the acquisition of theatres. In August of 1929 negotiations commenced between me and representatives of Fox Rocky Mountain Theatre Co. for the purchase of the theatres in which I had an interest. In the same period representatives of Paramount also made an offer to me, as did certain other exhibitor organizations. I and my associates determined that the offer made by the Fox affiliate was the most desirable from our standpoint and the sale to Fox Rocky Mountain Theatre Co. was concluded in October, 1929.

"At approximately the same time that the above acquisition was made by Fox Rocky Mountain Theatre Co., arrangements were concluded for the purchase of the theatre interests of Kohn and Fairchild, hereinabove referred to, as well as the theatre interests of three other exhibitors in Western Nebraska, which theatres were part of the Denver Exchange territory. Likewise acquired were theatres located in Wyoming which had formerly been operated by three other exhibitors. None of the theatre interests so acquired at that time was in competition with each other.

"After the acquisition of these two groups of theatres by Fox Rocky Mountain Theatre Co., I was employed by that company to supervise the operation of its newly acquired theatres in the territory served by the Denver offices of the distributors, which I did, and have since, with the exception of a brief period during 1931-1932.

"In 1932, the theatre business felt the full effects of the depression, both nationally and in the rocky mountain states. During that year, Fox Rocky Mountain Theatre Co. sustained large operating deficits, although substantial amounts of additional capital were invested in the operation. Many of its leases and other fixed obligations and commitments became too burdensome to enable it to carry them under existing business conditions. On March 8, 1933, the company was adjudicated a bankrupt in the District Court of the United States for the Western Division of the Western District of Missouri. From that time until its reorganization in 1935, its affairs were conducted by a trustee in bankruptcy. In the ensuing reorganization, which resulted in the formation of the present Fox Inter-Mountain Theatres, Inc., all of the allowed claims were paid and to a large extent the theatres theretofore operated under my supervision have continued as a part of the present Fox Inter-Mountain company.

"DESCRIPTION OF PRESENT CORPORATE STRUCTURE AND GENERAL BUSINESS PRACTICES OF FOX INTER-MOUNTAIN.

"As previously stated, National Theatres Corporation owns all of the stock of Fox Inter-Mountain. National Theatres Corporation also has a stock interest in various other subsidiaries which are engaged in the motion picture exhibition business in other parts of the United States. Fox Inter-Mountain conducts its business, however, as a separate, local independent company.

"The directors of Fox Inter-Mountain are: F. H. Ricketson, Jr., Arthur H. Bosworth, Henry C. Van Schaack, I. Weiner and Charles P. Skouras. All of these persons reside in Denver, Colorado except Mr. Charles P. Skouras. Henry C. Van Schaack and Arthur H. Bosworth are not officers of Fox Inter-Mountain or officers or directors of National Theatres Corporation. As President of Fox Inter-Mountain, I am in charge of and supervise all of the general policies of its operation. Naturally, on account of its financial interest, National Theatres Corporation exercises a certain amount of direction over matters involving financial commitments of a capital nature, such as new theatre construction, acquisitions, improvements and the rehabilitation of theatre buildings.

"The actual operation of the Fox Inter-Mountain theatres is conducted through Fox Inter-Mountain

(2818)

Amusement Corporation, a wholly-owned subsidiary 'service corporation.' Among the services performed by Fox Inter-Mountain Amusement are: the licensing and booking of films, the necessary purchasing and maintenance for each theatre, the obtaining and carrying of insurance, and the furnishing of general accounting facilities and other services incident to the operation of the theatres. The service corporation is organized with several departments, each of which performs and is responsible for one or more of the several functions of the corporation. It has a total of 83 persons employed in its various departments in the Denver office of the corporation and a total of 1,251 other employees who manage and maintain the theatres.

"The geographical extent of the area in which Fox Inter-Mountain has theatres has made necessary the operation of the theatres by districts. There are four geographical districts and over each is a district manager. One is the Denver city district; another the northern district, which includes towns in Northern Colorado, Nebraska and Wyoming; the third is the southern district, which includes towns in Southern Colorado and New Mexico; and the fourth is the Montana district, which includes towns in Idaho, Montana and Utah. Each of the district managers, except the district manager of Idaho, Utah and Montana, has his office in Denver. Fox Inter-Mountain maintains a separate office in Salt Lake City, where the manager of this district resides. This district is operated with a greater degree of autonomy than that which exists in the other districts.

"All licenses for motion pictures to be exhibited in Fox Inter-Mountain's theatres located in Colorado, Wyoming, Nebraska and New Mexico are entered into in the Denver Exchange territory. Separate consideration and negotiations are involved with respect to those theatres serviced out of the Salt Lake City Exchange territory and separate license agreements are generally made for these theatres. While the personnel of the film buying department furnishes services in connection with the film licenses for these theatres, as well as those served out of the Denver Exchange territory, the district manager of the theatres in Montana, Utah and Idaho generally participates in negotiations relating to films for these theatres.

"A. Business Practices Relating to the Licensing of Films.

"Fox Inter-Mountain licenses pictures only for those theatres which it operates.

"One of the departments of Fox Inter-Mountain Amusement Corporation is the film buying department, consisting of 9 employees, including buyers, bookers, statisticians and skilled film clerks. The chief function of this department is to negotiate and obtain licenses for the pictures which are to be exhibited in the various theatres of Fox Inter-Mountain and to arrange for the dates on which the pictures are to be shown. All of the personnel of the department must be highly trained and skilled. They must be qualified to appraise the quality of all pictures. They must know thoroughly all of the theatres in which Fox Inter-Mountain has interests and the communities in which such theatres are located. They must have an accurate knowledge of the public taste, and must be able to apply that knowledge with respect to each theatre in the locality where it is situated. Some pictures will inevitably be more popular in one community than they will be in another and the film buying department must decide when film are licensed which pictures should play in which theatres in every situation in which Fox Inter-Mountain has an interest.

(2820)

"The product is licensed from the distributing corporations which are parties to the Consent Decree in groups, generally containing five or less pictures, each as offered by the respective distributors. The product of each of the other distributors except United Artists is generally negotiated for and licensed on the basis of the entire season's product.

(2821)

"Prior to the latter half of 1941, almost all of the distributors offered and licensed their entire season's product at one time. National Theatres Corporation then maintained a central office in New York, where negotiations were generally conducted with each of the distributors for the licensing of pictures for theatres in which National was interested. In the latter part of 1941, there was a complete decentralization of National Theatres Corporation's film licensing department. Thereafter, the licensing of films and the negotiations preliminary thereto have assumed a local character.

"In certain instances a distributor may have licensed its product to a subsidiary of National Theatres Corporation other than Fox Inter-Mountain before negotiations between Fox Inter-Mountain and that distributor have been commenced. In such an instance, a general formula may have been worked out between the distributor and the other subsidiary of National, and the formula might relate to the computation of film rental based upon certain percentages applicable to each picture, which percentages would be applicable to the theatres which play the pictures on a percentage basis, rather than a flat rental basis. Subsequently, this formula, worked out and agreed upon by another subsidiary of National and a distributor, might be adapted to the theatres of Fox Inter-Mountain or it might suggest a general basis for negotiations. However, Fox Inter-Mountain is not bound to adopt the formula or to follow any other method made by a subsidiary of National other than itself.

"Naturally, there is an exchange of information between the executives of the various subsidiaries of National Theatres Corporation. The information exchanged has to do with all phases of theatre operating business, such as the terms on which films are licensed, the box office possibilities of pictures, and methods and policies applied in the general management and operation of theatres.

"All license agreements which have been negotiated between the representatives of Fox Inter-Mountain and any distributor are either submitted to me for my approval or authority to execute the same must be specifically delegated by me.

"When film licenses are negotiated, each theatre in which Fox Inter-Mountain has an interest is generally given separate consideration and a separate, independent deal is made as to each such theatre.

"Fox Inter-Mountain endeavors to license all worth-while film product produced by all producers, including some which are not defendants in this case —Republic, Monogram, PRC and others. The film licensing procedures used by Fox Inter-Mountain with respect to these other producers are the same used in (2823)
licensing films from the producers who are defendants in this case.

"There is no standard formula for determining licensing terms for every theatre in which Fox Inter-Mountain has an interest, and there is no standard formula applicable to each theatre. Licensing agreements for some of the theatres of Fox Inter-Mountain provide for a payment of a specific, fixed amount as film rental. The flat rental to be paid under the license agreement with respect to such theatres inevitably varies with the distributor and with the picture. The film rental for certain pictures might be $100 and on others it might be $20. License agreements for other theatres of Fox Inter-Mountain may provide for a determination of film rental on the basis of a percentage of the gross business done by the theatre. As in the case of the flat rental, there is no standard formula for determining the percentage term which is applicable to every theatre or to any one theatre. The methods of determining the rental under these percentage rental terms will vary in many respects depending upon the particular distributor involved. A license agreement with one distributor might provide for a film rental based simply on a certain percentage of the gross receipts. A license agreement with another distributor might provide for what is called a 'sliding scale' arrangement, under which the percentage of gross receipts which is to be paid as rental will be graduated in accordance with the amount of business done by the theatre on a particular picture.

"All of these various methods by which product is licensed for a theatre on a percentage basis simply represent a means of determining the amount of rental which the exhibitor should fairly pay. The various refinements which sometimes occur in license agreements calling for the payment of rental based on percentages are used solely for the purpose of enabling the distributor to realize a greater amount of return on pictures which are outstanding box office attractions, and to minimise his return on pictures which are not as popular and make less money than was expected at the time the license agreement was made.

"During the time when negotiations are going on between the representative of Fox Inter-Mountain and the distributor for the licensing of films, the subject of clearance is considered. My attention has been directed to the fact that the history, purpose and effect of clearance generally has been described in other testimony in this proceeding and I will not, therefore, discuss that phase of the matter in this statement.

"I do wish to point out, however, that clearance, while an important part of every film license, is not separately negotiated every time a film license is made.

Once a fair and reasonable clearance has been agreed upon between a distributor and an exhibitor, it tends to become fixed and will ordinarily be the same in a series of license agreements in the absence of changed competitive conditions. There are exceptions, however, to this.

"I have been advised by counsel that the Government has made the contention that the distributor and the affiliated theatres agree upon clearances and minimum admission prices for the purpose of fixing the admission price which the exhibitors of subsequent run theatres can charge. This I deny as far as Fox Inter-Mountain is concerned. Where Fox Inter-Mountain has a prior run theatre, I have no interest whatsoever in what the maximum admission price might be at subsequent run theatres of competing exhibitors. In fact, it is preferable from the standpoint of Fox Inter-Mountain, that an admission price be charged at competing subsequent run theatres which, in amount, is as close to what is charged by a prior run

Fox Inter-Mountain theatre as the subsequent run exhibitor believes desirable.

"Therefore, not only have I never entered into any license agreements, contracts, understandings express or implied, with any distributor in an attempt so to fix the maximum admission price of a subsequent run competing theatre, but it simply would not be (2826)
prudent to do so on my part from a business point of view.

"I desire to emphasize the following facts relating to the licensing of films:

"1. In licensing films for exhibition in Fox Inter-Mountain theatres, the controlling and only consideration is to secure adequate product on fair and desirable terms.

"2. In negotiating for product with any of the distributors who is interested in the operation of theatres, Fox Inter-Mountain and its executives do not and are not concerned with whether Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation has licensed its product for exhibition in theatres in which any such distributor has an interest.

"No representative of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation or National Theatres Corporation has ever indicated to me directly or indirectly, that in licensing films from other distributors, consideration should be given by me to whether or not Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation has licensed pictures to the theatres operated by such other distributors. For example, when negotiations for pictures are conducted with Warners, Fox Inter-Mountain does not know whether Twentieth Century-Fox has licensed any of its product to Warners for exhibition in theatres affiliated with Warners. Moreover, it does not have any knowledge as to whether Twentieth Century-

(2827)

Fox is even negotiating with Warners, or as to whether a license agreement exists with Twentieth Century-Fox for Warners' theatres, or any of the terms of any such license agreement that might exist. If for some reason, Twentieth Century-Fox did not license its product to Warners' theatres, the desire of Fox Inter-Mountain to license Warner product for Fox Inter-Mountain theatres would not be changed. The same would be true in the case of any other distributor.

"Furthermore, I am employed under a contract by Fox Inter-Mountain, the terms of which require that I devote my full attention to the operation of Fox Inter-Mountain theatres in consideration of a fixed salary and a participation in the profits of the Company. I also own stock in National Theatres Corporation. All of my personal interests indicate, therefore, and the fact is, that I am not concerned with the effect which my policies of operation may have upon the distribution of Twentieth Century-Fox pictures in other theatres.

"Twentieth Century-Fox, by reason of its ultimate interest in the operations of Fox Inter-Mountain, as well as other subsidiaries of National Theatres Corporation, naturally offers its pictures to Fox Inter-Mountain for licensing in the Fox Inter-Mountain theatres, and all of such theatres license the product of this distributor. In connection with such licensing, however, there are often protracted negotiations as to the terms which the Fox Inter-Mountain theatres will pay to Twentieth Century-Fox, for Fox Inter-

Mountain and I, individually, have a very definite interest in procuring film service from this distributor on as reasonable terms as is consistent with the quality of its product.

"Furthermore, in view of the relationship referred to above, Fox Inter-Mountain naturally endeavors to give to the pictures of Twentieth Century-Fox, particularly in important first run situations, the best possible exploitation and treatment consistent with good exhibition policies.

"FOX INTER-MOUNTAIN THEATRES AND THE COMPETITIVE SITUATION IN THE COMMUNITIES WHEREIN THEY ARE LOCATED.

"A. Denver, Colorado

"The population of Denver in 1930 was 287,861 and by 1940 it had increased to 322,412. The estimated population of Denver in 1945 is 450,000, or more than 100,000 greater than it was in 1940. This is the only city having a population in excess of 100,000 in which Fox Inter-Mountain operates theatres.

"Denver has been the center of great war-time activity and, as indicated by the figures referred to above, there has been a great influx of population since 1942.

(2829)

"There are 38 theatres in Denver. Fox Inter-Mountain has an interest in 12.

"(1) First Run Theatres

"There are four large theatres operating on a first run policy in downtown Denver. Two of them are operated by Fox Inter-Mountain, one by RKO (in which operation I am informed Loew's also has an interest) and one operated by an independent exhibitor. The latter two theatres are in direct and vigorous competition with the theatres of Fox Inter-Mountain. There follows a description of the theatres and the product licensed by them.

"The Denver theatre (2510 seats) is operated by Fox Inter-Mountain. It was constructed in 1927 by an affiliate of Paramount. Paramount's interest in this theatre was terminated in the bankruptcy of that company in 1932, and since that time Paramount has not had any interest in it. The Denver theatre is located in the heart of the downtown theatre section of Denver. It is a fine, up-to-date de luxe theatre, and, in my opinion, because of its location and modern conveniences, provides the best first run outlet for product in the city.

"The Paramount theatre (2,096 seats) is also one of Denver's finest theatres. It is located directly across the street from the Denver and was constructed in 1931. It is modern, commodious, up-to-date in every respect and can likewise be considered one of the de luxe theatres of this section of the country. It, too, was originally constructed by an affiliate of Paramount, but the interest of that company was also terminated in the Paramount bankruptcy.

"The product of Twentieth Century-Fox, Warner Bros., Universal, United Artists and Columbia is licensed for first run exhibition in these theatres. It should be noted that for a period prior to 1937 these theatres were operated by an independent exhibitor and during such operation substantially the same product now being exhibited first run in the theatres was licensed to this independent operator. The product licensed to these two theatres would, in my opinion, be offered to them, regardless of affiliation, because they have the potential ability to pay the highest film rental and to afford to a distributor the best in the exploitation of its product.

"The RKO theatre, the Orpheum (seating capacity 2,596) is the largest theatre in Denver. It, too, is a fine de luxe theatre, having been constructed in 1931 by an affiliate of RKO. Originally it operated for a short while with a policy of vaudeville and first run pictures, but for the last ten years has operated substantially exclusively on a motion picture policy. This theatre has for a number of years been operated exclusively as a first run theatre and at the present time regularly exhibits first run product of RKO and Loew's.

"The Denham theatre (1,392 seats) is operated by an independent exhibitor, Mr. Dave Cockrill. While it does not have as large a seating capacity and is not as well located as the other downtown first run theatres, it is, nevertheless, well suited for first run exhibition and has all of the customary facilities and equipment of a first run house. The Denham regularly licenses the product distributed by Paramount and has done so for a long period of time.

"The three interests operating these four theatres compete with each other in every possible way consistent with fair business practices. No agreement or understanding of any kind exists between them with respect to the operation of their first run theatres.

"Fox Inter-Mountain is also interested in the Telenews theatre in downtown Denver, which theatre, however, exhibits only newsreels and short subjects. The product exhibited in the Fox Inter-Mountain theatres in downtown Denver is also exhibited day and date in two other theatres operated by Fox Inter-Mountain, namely, the Esquire (742 seats) and the Webber (732 seats). This policy of day and date operation in these theatres was inaugurated during the war. The downtown theatres referred to above had been particularly congested with patronage, largely of a transient nature, partly by reason of excursions into Denver made by the many members of the Armed Services from nearby military camps and stations. Theatre accommodations were crowded, and transportation facilities were overburdened. For the purpose of relieving this situation the policy referred to above was adopted.

"The Aladdin theatre (1,376 seats) and the Rialto theatre (878 seats) are also operated by Fox Inter-Mountain theatres and are operated as moveover theatres. They charge the same admission price as the downtown theatres, but exhibit on such policy only the product exhibited in the Fox Inter-Mountain downtown first run theatres.

"(2) Subsequent Run Theatres

"There are 29 subsequent run theatres in Denver. Five of these are operated by Fox Inter-Mountain. The others are operated by independent exhibitors. With respect to three of the Fox Inter-Mountain theatres, independently operated theatres in competition with them regularly exhibit product on the same or on a prior run. All of these subsequent run theatres are in competition with each other, as well as with the first run theatres.

(2833)

"B. Communities With A Population Less Than 100,000

"Fox Inter-Mountain has no theatre interests in any of the cities of Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nebraska, New Mexico, Utah and Wyoming having a population of over 50,000 but under 100,000.

"Fox Inter-Mountain is interested in the operation of theatres in three out of a total of eight cities in these states which have a population of from 25,000 to 50,000. It also operates theatres in thirteen cities out of a total of thirty-one located in the seven above states with populations ranging from 10,000 to 25,000. In the approximately 395 communities in these states having a population of less than 10,000, but more than 1,000, Fox Inter-Mountain has theatre interests in only eighteen*.

"Colorado

"There are two cities in Colorado with a population of more than 20,000 but less than 55,000. Fox Inter-Mountain has no interest in theatres in either city. Five cities have a population ranging from 10,000 to 20,000. Fox Inter-Mountain has a theatre interest in three of these, Boulder, Fort Collins and Trinidad.

(2834)

"Fox Inter-Mountain operates the only theatres regularly operated in Boulder and in Fort Collins. In Trinidad, Fox Inter-Mountain has two theatres; one operates on a first run policy, the other on combined first and second run. There are two other theatres in Trinidad operated by independent exhibitors on a second and third run policy in competition with the Fox Inter-Mountain theatres.

"Colorado has 73 towns with a population under 10,000, but over 1,000. Fox Inter-Mountain has an interest in theatres in eight* of these towns. As indicated in the Government Exhibit No. 371 in this case, Fox Inter-Mountain operates all of the theatres in Del a, Durango, Leadville, Longmont, Sterling and Walsenburg. In 50 other towns in Colorado with a population under 10,000 but over 1,000, one exhibitor other than Fox Inter-Mountain, operates the only theatre or theatres.

"Idaho

"Idaho has seven towns with populations of from 10,000 to 26,000. Fox Inter-Mountain has an interest in three of these towns, Pocatello, Idaho Falls and Nampa. In Pocatello and Idaho Falls, the Fox Inter-Mountain theatres are operated in competition with the theatres of other exhibitors. In Nampa, Fox Inter-Mountain operates the only two theatres. Prior to the time when the theatres in Nampa were acquired by Fox Inter-Mountain, there were only two theatres in that community. The situation has remained unchanged.

(2835)

"Fox Inter-Mountain has a theatre interest in one out of forty-five Idaho towns having a population under 10,000, but over 1,000. The three Fox Inter-Mountain theatres in this town, Caldwell, were acquired in 1937, two from the same exhibitor who had previously operated the theatres with first and second run product. Idaho has twenty-nine other towns of less than 10,000 but more than 1,000 population in the Sale Lake City Exchange territory where one exhibitor operates the only theatre or theatres in the town.

"MONTANA

"Montana has two cities, Butte and Great Falls, of over 25,000 but under 50,000 population. In Butte, Fox Inter-Mountain theatres are operated in competition with the theatres of an independent exhibitor in both first and second runs. In Great Falls, Fox

(2836)

Inter-Mountain operates the first run theatres. There is subsequent run independent competition.

"Montana has four cities with a population of from 10,000 to 25,000, Anaconda, Billings, Helena and Missoula. Fox Inter-Mountain operates all of the theatres located in Billings, Helena and Missoula.

"Fox Inter-Mountain operates theatres in only one of forty-seven towns of Montana with a population under 10,000, but over 1,000, namely; Lewistown, where it operates all of the theatres. There are thirty-five other towns in Montana in the Salt Lake City Exchange territory of less than 10,000 but more than 1,000 population where the only theatre or theatres are operated by one exhibitor.

"NEW MEXICO

"Fox Inter-Mountain operates no theatres in any of the New Mexico cities having a population of over 10,000.

"Fox Inter-Mountain operates theatres in two* out of the forty-one towns in New Mexico having a population under 10,000, but over 1,000. As appears from Government Exhibit No. 371, Fox Inter-Mountain operates all of the theatres in these two towns, Las Cruces and in Las Vegas. The independent exhibitor from whom the theatres were acquired by Fox Inter-Mountain in each instance operated these theatres without competition. New Mexico has twenty-two other towns in the Denver Exchange territory of less than 10,000 but more than 1,000 population where one exhibitor operates the only theatre or theatres in the town.

(2837)

"NEBRASKA

"Nebraska has two important cities, Omaha and Lincoln. Fox Inter-Mountain has no interest in any theatres in either.

"In the seven cities with a population of from 10,000 to 20,000, Fox Inter-Mountain has theatre interests in one town, North Platte. Here, the Fox Inter-Mountain theatres are operated in competition with the theatres of an independent exhibitor.

"There are 100 towns in Nebraska with a population under 10,000 but more than 1,000. Fox Inter-Mountain has interests in three of these communities, and, in each instance, the Fox Inter-Mountain theatres are the only theatres in the town. Further, in each instance, the Fox Inter-Mountain theatres were operated without competition by the exhibitor from whom the theatres were acquired. Nebraska has thirteen other towns in the Denver Exchange territory of a population of less than 10,000 but more than 1,000 where one exhibitor operates the only theatre or theatres in the town.

"UTAH

"Fox Inter-Mountain Theatres operates two theatres in only one city in Utah, namely Ogden, which had a population in 1940 of 43,688. These theatres are operated in competition with theatres operated by an affiliate of Paramount.

"WYOMING

"Wyoming has four cities with a population from 10,000 to 25,000. Fox Inter-Mountain operates in three of these, Cheyenne, Rock Springs and Laramie, and in these three communities there are no other theatres, as appears from the Government's Exhibit 371.

"Wyoming has twenty-seven communities under 10,000 but more than 1,000 population. Fox Inter-Mountain operates in only four of these, and in these four communities there are no other theatres. Wyoming has twenty-three other towns between 1,000 and 10,000 population where one exhibitor, other than Fox Inter-Mountain, operates the only theatre or theatres.

"With respect to the foregoing general description of the competitive situation in the territory in which Fox Inter-Mountain operates, it should be noted that the territory comprises many sparsely settled sections in which small communities are separated from each other by wide distances. In many of these communities, as I have previously indicated, there is only one theatre and in others in which there are two theatres in existence only one is in operation. Because of their size and because of economic conditions existing in them, it is not feasible to operate more than one theatre.

"As indicating that it is inherent in the nature of the business in these smaller communities than only one theatre can be operated, or that where there are more, they are operated by a single exhibitor, I have referred in the discussion of the competitive situation of Fox Inter-Mountain to the large number of communities in this territory in which all the theatre operations are conducted by a single, independent operator.

"In all of the communities in which it operates, competitively or otherwise, the theatres of Fox Inter-Mountain provide adequate and suitable accommodations for the public at fair admission prices; its theatres are well operated and well-maintained. In all competitive situations its theatres are either better than, or comparable with, competing theatres.

"Fox Inter-Mountain has not conspired or combined with, and has no agreement or understanding with any other defendant in this case to restrain interstate trade or commerce or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize interstate trade or commerce in the distribution or exhibition of motion pictures. It has no agreement, express or implied, with any other defendant, relating in any way to the distribution or exhibition of motion pictures other than the express license agreements which it has made for the licensing of pictures in its theatres.

"I also deny that Fox Inter-Mountain, either individually or in conjunction or combination with any other person, has engaged in any practice which is unfair or discriminatory with respect to any exhibitor with which it competes."

(2841)

(The affidavit of Charles P. Skouras is as follows:)

IT IS HEREBY STIPULATED by and between counsel for the plaintiff herein and counsel for the defendants, Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and National Theatres Corporation, that if called as a witness in this proceeding Charles P. Skouras would testify as follows:

My address is 1609 West Washington Boulevard, Los Angeles, California. I am the president of National Theatres Corporation, one of the defendants in this case. I have held that office since April of 1942.

The directors of National Theatres Corporation are: Spyros P. Skouras, Charles P. Skouras, H. C. Cox, J. R. Dillon, E. G. Hines, Dan Michalove, W. C. Michel, Otto E. Koegel and Donald A. Henderson.

I am also the president of Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation (a wholly owned subsidiary of National Theatres Corporation), having held that office since its organization in the spring of 1933.

The directors of Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation, all of whom are residents of Los Angeles County, California, are as follows: Charles P. Skouras, John B. Bertero, George Topper, George Bowser, T. H. Sword and H. C. Cox.

I have been engaged in the theatre exhibition business continuously since 1912. I first became associated with National Theatres Corporation in January of 1932. At that time it was known as Wesco Corporation and was a wholly owned subsidiary of Fox Film Corporation, and I was employed to act as one of the managers of the theatres in which it was interested.

(2842)

DESCRIPTION OF NATIONAL THEATRES CORPORATION.

National Theatres Corporation is a holding corporation which itself does not operate theatres, but which owns the stock of other corporations which operate approximately 600 theatres, either directly or through subsidiaries, in the continental United States. Approximately 98% of the stock of National Theatres Corporation is owned by the defendant Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation. National Theatres Corporation now has five principal domestic subsidiaries. Each of these subsidiaries conducts its affairs independently of the others. Each has its principal office in the area in which it operates. Each has its separate president and operating head who has authority to direct and supervise its theatre operations and those of its subsidiaries. These five principal subsidiaries are as follows:

1. Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation, which, directly or through its subsidiaries (in a few of which it owns only an indirect minority interest) operates or supervises the operations of approximately 265 theatres in California and Arizona. It has its principal office in Los Angeles and a subsidiary office in San Francisco. I am the president and chief executive of this company. (For convenience, Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation is hereinafter referred to as "Fox West Coast" and any theatre in which it has an interest, direct or indirect, and which is supervised by it or a subsidiary, is hereinafter referred to as a "Fox West Coast theatre.")

2. Evergreen State Amusement Corporation, 53.58% of the stock of which is owned by National Theatres Corporation, is interested in approximately 44 theatres in Washington and Oregon and has its principal offices in Seattle, Washington. The principal minority stockholders, Messrs. Frank L. Newman, Sr. (president of the company), Al Rosenberg and Al Finke, are the operating heads of this company.

3. Fox Inter-Mountain Theatres, Inc., is interested in approximately 100 theatres in Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, New Mexico, Idaho, Montana and Nebraska. It has its principal offices in Denver, Colorado, and a subsidiary office at Salt Lake, Utah. F. H. Ricketson, Jr. is the president and operating head of this company.

4. Fox Midwest Theatres, Inc. is interested in approximately 128 theatres in Missouri, Kansas, Illinois, Nebraska and Iowa and has its principal offices in Kansas City, Missouri. Elmer C. Rhoden is the president and operating head of this company.

5. Fox Wisconsin Theatres, Inc. is interested in approximately 66 theatres in Wisconsin and the upper peninsula of Michigan, and has its principal offices in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Harold J. Fitzgerald is the president and principal operating head of this company.

National Theatres Corporation (which up to November 1934 was known as Wesco Corporation) acquired its interests in these five principal subsidiaries in connection with the reorganizations through bankruptcy proceedings of certain theatre operating companies which were already established in their respective areas. Substantially all of the stock of these predecessor companies had been owned, directly or indirectly, by National Theatres Corporation prior to their bankruptcies.

National Theatres Corporation through National Theatres Amusement Co. Inc., its wholly owned service company, furnishes advice on financial, tax and fiscal matters but does not exercise any immediate supervision or control over the operation of the theatres of these five principal subsidiary corporations. Theatre policies, admission prices, methods of operation and the transaction of all matters pertaining to their operations are determined upon and conducted separately by the management of each.

National is consulted with respect to the financial advisability of the leasing, construction, improvements, acquisition of new theatres and commitments involving substantial obligations or expenditures. However, the respective executive officers of these five principal subsidiaries have complete authority, subject, of course, to the approval of their respective boards of directors, to enter into all contracts and commitments relating to the operations of the theatres operated by the companies they head, particularly with respect to film license agreements. Each of these five subsidiaries has its own film licensing departments. National Theatres Amusement Co. Inc. has one employee whose function it is to furnish advice and service to the film buyers for each of these five principal subsidiaries. None of such film licensing agreements are subject to National's approval, and none of them are ever submitted to it for approval.

While there is a continual exchange of information between the chief executive officers of the five principal subsidiaries concerning all matters of common interest and pertaining to the exhibition business of these companies, including film license terms, nevertheless complete authority with respect to film licensing agreements rests with the chief executive officer of the respective subsidiaries.

Prior to the latter part of 1941 National Theatres Corporation, through a subsidiary company, did maintain a film licensing department in New York which conducted negotiations for film licenses on behalf of all of these subsidiaries, but since that time this practice has been abandoned. The film licensing has been decentralized and placed in the hands of the local companies at their respective offices.

FOX WEST COAST THEATRES CORPORATION

The remainder of this statement will be devoted to a discussion of the history, operating policies, practices and competitive situations of Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation.

History of Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation

The predecessor of Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation, namely, West Coast Theatres, Inc., was incorporated under the laws of California in December 1920, and was organized by four partners to take over the operation of nineteen theatres located in five cities in California, namely, Los Angeles, Venice, Pomona, Bakersfield and Taft. Prior to incorporation the business had been carried on by a partnership known originally as Gore Bros. & Lesser. In August of 1920 a new partner was taken in, Mr. Adolph Ramish, and the name of the partnership was changed to Gore Bros., Lesser & Ramish.

(2847)

"About two years after its organization the new company acquired from two pioneer exhibitors, Turner and Dahnken, about 16 theatres located in the principal cities of Northern California such as Oakland, Berkeley, Richmond, San Jose, Watsonville, Fresno and Salinas, and at about the same time acquired from them and their partner Langley about 16 theatres in Southern California, which, with the exception of three theatres in Riverside, were all located in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. By 1925 the new company had an interest in approximately 85 motion picture theatres and was operating in many of the important cities in California. In that year, 1925, the company floated a bond issue and secured funds to construct a group of de luxe neighborhood theatres which, for the most part, were located in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. Thus the Fox West Coast circuit was, to a great extent, built up under the management of the Gore Bros., Lesser and Ramish.

"In about 1926 Ra..sh sold his one-third interest to Fox Film Corporation. In about January 1927 the Gore brothers and Lesser sold their two-thirds interest to National Theatres Corporation which had been organized by Hayden Stone & Co. for the purpose of acquiring this interest in the West Coast circuit.

"In about April 1928 Fox Film Corporation acquired all the stock of National Theatres Corporation and thus secured a 100% interest in West Coast Theatres, Inc.

"Fox West Coast Theatres was adjudicated a bankrupt in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of California, Central Division, on February 28, 1933. On April 4, 1933, William H. Moore, Jr., Charles C. Irwin (who had no connections with the motion picture industry) and I were elected trustees of the estate of the bankrupt and we served in such capacities throughout the administration of the estate. The circuit was operated by the trustees from February of 1933 until February 2, 1935, at which time the assets of the bankrupt estate, consisting principally of the newly organized Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation, were purchased by National Theatres Corporation.

"Description of Fox West Coast Organization.

"The theatres of the various subsidiaries and affiliates of Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation are operated through a subsidiary corporation called Fox West Coast Agency Corporation. The agency corporation maintains executive and accounting offices in Los Angeles, as well as executive offices in San Francisco. It has a large maintenance and repair division constantly at work keeping these theatres in first-class condition. It employs a group of experienced theatre operators to act in an executive capacity as district managers of the theatres in various administrative districts. It also employs a staff of experienced film buyers and bookers to license the pictures which are to be exhibited in the theatres it services, to arrange proper programs and playing dates and to see that the films are at the theatres at the proper dates. The agency corporation maintains two screening rooms, one in Los Angeles and one in San Francisco, where the film buyers, bookers, district managers and publicity department can screen pictures in order to determine, from a 'box office' point of view, their quality and suitability for exhibition in the various theatres, the combinations of pictures that should be put together on double bills, and the type of publicity and exploitation that is likely to be most productive in securing good patronage at the theatres.

"Licensing of Motion Pictures.

"Fox West Coast Agency Corporation has two experienced film buyers who are in charge of more than thirty employees in the film buying, booking and statistical department. These men are charged with the responsibility of seeing that suitable pictures are continuously available for exhibition in the theatres at film rentals which the theatres can afford to pay and still operate at a profit.

"Films are licensed from distributors upon a wide variety of terms. These terms vary extensively from distributor to distributor and often from picture to picture. Most of these variations arise for the fact that it is very difficult to determine in advance a picture's exhibition value, so that these men are continually negotiating with representatives of the distributors to arrive at fair film license payments. All of these various formulae are designed to correlate the price of the picture with the exhibition quality of the film. Such correlation would be relatively simply in theatres playing a single feature program because it could then be based directly upon the gross receipts of the theatre. However, when a theatre is using double features or accompanying the pictures with stage shows there is always room for argument as to how much of the business is dependent upon any particular feature. As a result, license fees and their methods of determination vary greatly from distributor to distributor and from picture to picture. Some pictures are purchased from some distributors upon a 'flat rental' i.e., a fixed number of dollars for the right to show a picture for a certain length of time. Others are based upon a percentage of gross receipts, others upon a combination of the two systems, such as a percentage of gross receipts with a maximum or minimum figure or a percentage which will vary on reaching certain agreed upon maximum or minimum figures. The formulae referred to are not all inclusive and there are other bases which develop in the bargaining between distributor and exhibitor.

"The Fox West Coast film buyers operate under my direct supervision, and on some occasions, particularly where large film rentals are involved, I participate in the film licensing negotiations myself. Film License agreements negotiated by the Fox West Coast film buying department are signed by it and, as stated above, are not submitted to or approved by National or its board of directors. Likewise, licenses made with distributors, other than Twentieth Century-Fox, are never submitted to or approved by that company. In no instance is there any correlation between film license payments made by Fox West Coast and whether the distributor receiving those payments is interested in theatres. In no case is there any consideration given by Fox West Coast in the licensing of film from any distributor, with or without theatre affiliations, to the distribution problems of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, and Fox West Coast has not concerned itself or been influenced by the status of any negotiations or the effect of any license agreements between Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and any other affiliated exhibitor.

"I have an employment contract with National Theatres Corporation calling for my employment as the chief executive officer of that corporation for a period expiring December 25, 1954. Under this contract a very substantial part of my compensation is based upon the profits of National Theatres Corporation, and I therefore have a large personal interest in the successful operations of National Theatre Corporation and its subsidiaries. Except for 300 shares of common stock owned by me and members of my immediate family I have no interest in the profits of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation. I have no interest in the profits of any other defendant in this action. I and my immediate family hold 25 shares of the Class B stock of National Theatres Corporation.

Each share of this stock receives the same dividend payable with respect to each share of Class A and is convertible into the Ordinary Class A stock. According to my information the remaining 15 outstanding shares of the Class B Stock are owned by the presidents of three of the other principal operating subsidiaries of National Theatres Corporation, namely, Messrs. Rhoden, Ricketson, Fitzgerald, or by members of their respective families. These 40 shares are convertible in the aggregate into twenty per cent of the equity stock of National Theatres Corporation. Hence, it would not benefit me or the other owners of the Class B shares to deviate from sound exhibition policies to assist the distribution department of Twentieth Century-Fox pictures. I do not do so and I have never been asked to do so.

"Our affiliation with Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation has never been of any significance in enabling us to negotiate more favorably than we could otherwise do with any other producer or distributor of motion pictures. The ability of Fox West Coast to license the product for exhibition in its theatres is based primarily upon its successful exhibition in the past of pictures of the distributor in question; upon the fact that its theatres are designed and, accustomed to furnish the best accommodations to the public and the best outlet for the distributors' product on the runs on which they are licensed; and upon its reputation for efficient management and the consistent payment of fair film rentals. Affiliation with Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation does not assist or hamper Fox West Coast in any way in its negotiations for the pictures of other distributors; and in licensing pictures for exhibition in its theatres, Fox West Coast has never taken into account or considered, or been asked to take into account or consider, the effect of such licenses, or the terms thereof, upon the relations of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation with the other defendants in this action.

"The variations in customer relationship in the various towns where Fox West Coast operates show that there is no relationship between the product exhibited by Fox West Coast and whether or not the distributors thereof are affiliated with theatre operators. Reference will later be made to specific situations which show that both Fox West Coast and its competitors exhibit the pictures of distributors, with and without theatre affiliations, on various 'run' sequences; in some instances the competitor having the first run and Fox West Coast having the subsequent run of the same picture, and in other cases the reverse being true.

"Run and Clearance.

An integral part of the negotiations of film licenses is the determination of what run the theatre licensing the picture will have, how long it will have to wait after the picture is released before it can play the picture, and how soon the picture will become available to other competing theatres. However, once a theatre has licensed a run which proves to be profitable, it is usually to its best interests to endeavor to continue to license pictures on the same run unless the competitive situation changes considerably. It is also usually to the best interests of the theatre to secure substantially the same run from all of its suppliers, for it is hard to get a theatre's regular customers used to a variable playing policy. Consequently, Fox West Coast usually negotiates and endeavors to contract for substantially the same run of the pictures of the same distributors for which it has been contracting.

"Moreover, once the distributor has established a satisfactory customer relationship with a theatre, the distributor will desire to continue substantially the same relationship. Unless the theatre of its established customer has become obsolete or its location has become unsuitable, or for some reason its ability to pay satisfactory film rentals has become impaired, the distributor ordinarily does not change customers. The result of these economic considerations is that so long as the distributor has a satisfactory customer and the customer has sufficient pictures of box-office value at prices which he can afford to pay, an established distributor-customer relationship usually continues to remain fairly static.

"In negotiating for a particular run an exhibitor will also negotiate with the distributor for clearance to protect what he is contracting for, that is, the right in his competitive area to exhibit the picture at a certain time prior to the time that some competitor is privileged under his license agreement to exhibit the same picture. The clearance which the prior run exhibitor is granted by the distributor over the subsequent run exhibitor is dependent upon a number of factors having an economic bearing upon the extent of the competition between the two theatres, such as location, seating capacity and admission price. Once the clearance is granted to the prior run exhibitor over his competitor it usually remains constant so long as the economic factors upon which the clearance is based do not change, for in the absence of such change it is obvious that the extent of competition remains about the same.

"In licensing films from distributors Fox West

(2857)

Coast has never entered into any agreement or understanding with any distributor relating to clearance which had as its purpose any improper subordination of a subsequent run licensed to an independent exhibitor. It is only interested in securing from a distributor such proper clearance as the distributor is willing to grant to it. Furthermore, distributors with theatre affiliations and distributors without such affiliations grant to the prior run theatres of independent theatre operators the same clearances they grant to the prior run theatres of Fox West Coast in comparable situations and, conversely, the subsequent run theatres of Fox West Coast are subject to the same clearances as are the subsequent run theatres of independent theatre operators in comparable situations.

"Admission Prices.

"Fox West Coast has not entered into any agreement, plan or arrangement with any distributor to establish or fix the admission prices of any competing theatre. The admission prices charged in the Fox West Coast theatres are not determined for the purpose of fixing or affecting admission prices charged by its competitors, but are fixed in reference to the economic factors operating only upon its own theatres, including the price the public is willing to pay to see the picture, the type and location of the theatre, the service provided, and the economic influence of the admission prices being charged by competitors.

"Fox West Coast and, so far as I know, no distributor or competing exhibitor is concerned with what increases in admission prices an exhibitor may make over and above the minimum prices which he represented he would charge at the time he licensed pictures. The higher the admission price charged by a subsequent run, the less effect does it have on the prior run patronage. Consequently in situations where Fox West Coast has a prior run it would manifestly not be to its interest to limit in any way the right of the subsequent run to raise its admission price and it has never done so. In some instances Fox West Coast has found that, in some of its better theatres, it can secure higher admission prices than competitors playing similar runs, and sometimes even higher than competitors with earlier runs.

"It is only necessary to examine competitive admission prices to see there are no established scales or systems. For example, in the Los Angeles area all of the first run theatres operated by Fox West Coast are charging an 85¢ admission price, while most of the first run theatres operated by others whether affiliated or non-affiliated are charging an 80¢ admission price. A 60¢ admission price is charged in most of the Fox West Coast first neighborhood run theatres, although some charge a 55¢ admission price. Some of the similar first run neighborhood theatres operated by non-affiliated exhibitors also charge 60¢; others charge 55¢ and still others, in some suburban areas, charge 44¢ although exhibiting pictures at approximately the same time.

"If the comparison is carried down to the later subsequent runs the variations are even greater. For example in the area surrounding Westlake Park in the central part of Los Angeles, Fox West Coast's first neighborhood run charges a 60¢ admission price, and the unaffiliated second, third and fourth runs charge 44¢, 40¢ and 36¢ respectively. In the area immediately north of this Westlake Park area the independent first run charges 55¢, the second run 50¢, the third run 42¢, and the fourth run 25¢.

"In the area immediately west of this group the Fox West Coast first and second run charge 55¢. The other runs are operated by unaffiliated exhibitors at the following admission prices: the third run charges 50¢, the fourth run 35¢, the two fifth runs 40¢, the sixth run 35¢ and the last run 40¢.

"Relationship of Fox West Coast with Other Defendants.

"Fox West Coast leases two theatres from Loew's.

(2860)

It has an agrement with Paramount, providing for the leasing of three theatres in San Francisco under arrangements whereby the latter participates in the profits from the operation of these three theatres and three other theatres in the same locality. These are the only instances in which any distributor, other than Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, has any interest in theatres operated by Fox West Coast.

"Loew's

"The State Theatre, Los Angeles, and the Warfield Theatre, San Francisco, were leased by affiliates of Loew's in 1923 to a corporation owned jointly by Loew's and West Coast Theatres, Inc. In the early '30s this arrangement was terminated, and the two theatres were leased directly to Fox West Coast at reduced fixed rentals. Loew's only present interest in these theatres is that of a landlord entitled to receive a fixed monthly rental, commensurate with the true rental value of the theatres. For several years many outstanding pictures of Loew's have been given, and are now being given, their first run exhibition in the Los Angeles theatre, Los Angeles, in which Loew's has no interest whatever. In San Francisco many of the outstanding pictures of Loew's are exhibited first run in the Fox Theatre in which Loew's also has no interest whatever.

"PARAMOUNT

"In 1930 Paramount Publix Corporation, or an affiliate, was the operator of the State (formerly known as the California) theatre and the St. Francis theatre, in San Francisco, California. It also then had under construction a new theatre, the Paramount.

Under date of December 10, 1930, Paramount Publix Corporation and Fox Film Corporation entered into an agreement whereunder the former agreed to cause its appropriate affiliate to lease these three theatres to Fox West Coast at annual fixed rentals aggregating $450,000. As additional rental Fox West Coast was to pay to the landlord affiliate of Paramount 35% of the earnings of Fox West Coast from its first run operations in the cities of San Francisco, Portland and Seattle* in excess of its earnings from such operations for each preceding fiscal year commencing with the fiscal year 1931. None of the leases relating to the State, St. Francis or Paramount required to be executed under the terms of said agreement of December 10, 1930, were actually executed by Fox West Coast or any of its subsidiaries. In October, 1932, both Fox

West Coast and Fox Film Corporation disclaimed any liability to Paramount arising out of or under the agreement of December 10, 1930, and each of them refused to make any further payments to Paramount, asserting, among other things that Paramount had committed certain violations of the agreement.

"On March 14, 1933, Paramount was adjudicated a bankrupt by the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, and Charles D. Hilles, Eugene W. Leake and Charles E. Richardson were duly elected its trustees in bankruptcy. These trustees filed large claims against the estate of Fox West Coast Theatres, a bankrupt, and threatened legal proceedings against Fox Film Corporation. Protracted negotiations concerning the respective claims of the parties took place between the trustees of Paramount, and trustees of Fox West Coast and representatives of Fox Film Corporation. These negotiations culminated in the execution of the agreement dated as of January 25, 1934 between the said Paramount trustees, Fox Film Corporation and Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation (Exhibit 232). This agreement of January 25, 1934, provided that it should not become effective until it was approved by the bankruptcy court having jurisdiction of the Paramount bankruptcy and by the court having jurisdiction of the Fox West Coast bankruptcy. This agreement was approved by both bankruptcy courts and became fully effective. Under the terms of this agreement, the appropriate Paramount affiliates agreed to and did lease the Paramount, St. Francis and State theatres to Fox West Coast at average fixed annual rentals aggregating $228,000 (that is, approximately $220,000 less than provided for in the December 10, 1930 agreement) plus 37½% of the net earnings from the operation of all theatres operated by Fox West Coast in downtown San Francisco. At the time of the execution of the agreement the only other theatres operated by Fox West Coast in downtown San Francisco were the Embassy, the operations of which were unprofitable, and the Warfield, which had made a profit of approximately $22,000 for the year 1933. The Fox theatre in downtown San Francisco was acquired in 1936 and the United Nations theatre was acquired in 1943.

*As part of the same transactions, provisions were made for the leasing of a Paramount theatre in Seattle and one in Portland at separately specified rentals. These leases have since expired.

"In short, the present arrangements under which Paramount participates in the profits from the operation of these Fox West Coast theatres in downtown San Francisco stem from an agreement which was entered into by Fox West Coast because, as was aptly put by its trustees in their petition for approval of the

(2863-A)

January 23, 1934 agreement 'by the terms thereof there will be withdrawn claims asserted against said estate in the aggregate face amount of $10,818,754.31 some of which are duplications and/or amendments) . . .' and 'said rentals are at a figure which will permit said theatres to be operated at a substantial profit in the opinion of your petitioners . . .".

(2864)

RELATIONSHIP OF FOX WEST COAST WITH UNITED ARTISTS THEATRE CIRCUIT, INC.

"My attention has been directed to the claim of the Government that United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., which is not a defendant in this case, should, however, be considered as an affiliate of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation; and in this connection reference has been made to the fact that Fox West Coast and United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. are interested in the operation of certain theatres in California.

"The only situations in which there is any connection between Fox West Coast and United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. are with reference to United West Coast Theatres Corporation, a company in which they are both stockholders and with reference to the United Artists and Four Star Theatres in Los Angeles, which are operated by Fox West Coast in conjunction with the State and Chinese theatres for the joint interest of Fox West Coast and United Artists Theatre Circuit.

"Prior to September of 1931 United Artists Theatres of California, Ltd. (a subsidiary of United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., which I understand is not a producer or distributor of motion pictures) had acquired or constructed a group of 11 theatres located in several California communities. At that time it entered into agreements with Fox West Coast providing for the operation of these theatres, and certain Fox West Coast theatres in the same areas, by a new corporation called West Coast United Theatres Corporation. 75% of the stock of the new corporation was owned by Fox West Coast and 25% by United Artists Theatres of California, Ltd. This contract was made before I first became associated with Fox West Coast or National Theatres Corporation, before Mr. J. Schenck became associated with Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, and before Skouras Theatres Corporation was organized. All of the theatres of the new corporation were operated by Fox West Coast's service corporation.

"When Fox West Coast Theatres went into bankruptcy in the spring of 1933 the United Artists Theatres of California, Ltd. terminated the leases of its theatres to West Coast United. The trustees in bankruptcy of Fox West Coast Theatres immediately opened negotiations with United Artists Theatres of California, Ltd. to reinstate the leases of these pictures. In September of 1933 a new agreement was entered into between Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation and United Artists Theatres of California, Ltd. and this new agreement was approved by the Bankruptcy Court having jurisdiction of the Fox West Coast bankruptcy. It provided for the organization of a new company to be known as the United

West Coast Theatres Corporation. 70% of the stock of the company was to be and is owned by Fox West Coast and 30% by United Artists Theatres of California, Ltd. There were leased to the new company substantially the same theatres that had formerly been leased to West Coast United. The theatres so leased to the new company are managed by Fox West Coast's service corporation. No executive of United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. or any of its subsidiaries is connected with the management of Fox West Coast or its service corporation, Fox West Coast Agency Corporation. The position of United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. in this situation is solely that of a minority stockholder having no direct voice in the operating policies of the theatres.

"Fox West Coast and United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. are also interested in the operations of five other theatres in Los Angeles. Arrangements with respect to these theatres are reflected in an agreement dated September 20, 1937. This agreement represents the extension (with some modification) of an original arrangement entered into in 1934, at a time when the affairs of Fox West Coast were being administered by its trustees in bankruptcy. At that time (as well as at present) Fox West Coast and United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. were each stockholders in the company, which owns the Chinese theatre in Hollywood Prior to 1934 and at the time of its bankruptcy on February 27, 1933 Fox West Coast had a twenty-five year lease on the Chinese theatre which was terminable as a result of its bankruptcy. In 1932 the Chinese theatre had lost more than $100,000 and the theatre did not operate during a substantial part of the year 1933. The bonds of the landlord corporation, in which Fox West Coast owned and still owns a 1/3 interest, were in default. It had filed proceedings under Section 77B of the Bankruptcy Act and there was a possibility of complete loss of this property and the wiping out of the respective interests of Fox West Coast and of United Artists Theatres Circuit, Inc.

"United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., or a subsidiary thereof, was the lessee of the downtown United Artists Theatre which, as I recall, was also closed in 1933 during the time the Chinese was closed. Fox West Coast's 25-year lease of the Chinese had been extinguished and in order to continue the company's interest in the operation of that theatre and to save its investment in the property, Fox West Coast made arrangements with the other shareholder, United Artists, for Fox West Coast to operate the Chinese and United Artists theatres together with the State Theatre under an agreement whereby each would receive

50% of the profits from the operation of those theatres. The Four Star Theatre in the Wilshire Boulevard district was already leased to United West Coast Theatres Corporation and provision was made that it might from time to time be included in the first run operating arrangement. At about the same time, in order to preserve the Fox West Coast investment in the Chinese, I made arrangements with several distributors for simultaneous first run exhibition at the State Theatre in downtown Los Angeles and the Chinese Theatre in Hollywood (which I will refer to in detail later) and under this arrangement pictures with the greatest box office appeal were given simultaneous showings while the United Artists Theatre afford an additional first-run outlet for pictures not suitable for such simultaneous exhibition. Except for the United Artists Theatre, United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. was not engaged in theatre operations in this area and had no suitable organization or other facilities for operating its sole theatre; and hence it was desirous that Fox West Coast take over the management of the theatre. Accordingly, the original arrangement referred to above was effected under which United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. and Fox West Coast were each to receive 50% of the profits resulting from the combined operations of the four theatres referred to.

(2869)

"With respect to the operations of these theatres, the same situation exists as in the case of the theatres leased to United West Coast Theatres Corporation. They are managed and operated by Fox West Coast Agency Corporation and United Artists does not control or participate in such management and operation.

"Cities Where Local Monopolies Are Alleged

"The Government has charged Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation with maintaining local theatre exhibition monopolies in six cities with a population of 100,000 or over: Los Angeles, Long Beach, San Diego, San Francisco, Oakland and Sacramento. In all of these cities there are not only a substantial number of competing subsequent run theatres, but there are competing first run theatres operated by persons not affiliated with any motion picture distributor or producer. To demonstrate these facts I have considered in detail the competitive situation in each of these cities.

A.

"Cities Of Over 100,000 Population
Los Angeles

"The principal city in which Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation operates is Los Angeles, California.

(2870) There are approximately 222 theatres in the City of Los Angeles and 58 of them are operated by Fox West Coast.

"Description of Los Angeles

"The population of Los Angeles in 1920 was 576,673; in 1930 it was 1,238,048; and in 1940 it was 1,504,277. The 1943 population of Los Angeles has been estimated at 1,775,000. The old downtown shopping and business section is about six blocks long and four blocks wide, with its center along Broadway between Third and Ninth Avenue.

"Since about 1920 there has been a second downtown shopping area in the part of greater Los Angeles known as Hollywood, which is located about seven miles to the northwest of the old downtown Los Angeles section. Although it is within the City of Los Angeles it is in fact a separate community with its own main street along Hollywood Boulevard and its own shopping and amusement area.

"Los Angeles grew to its present size during the era of automobile transportation. The result is that it has no adequate public transportation system and residents of Los Angeles expect to travel from one part of the city to another in their own automobiles. As a result, the two downtown shopping areas in Hollywood and along Broadway have become very congested and they do not afford adequate parking

(2871) space for all the people who would normally desire to shop there. This has led to the development of a new shopping area along Wilshire Boulevard, south of Hollywood and west of downtown Los Angeles. This new shopping area runs from just east of Vermont Avenue to Beverly Hills, so that it is about eight miles in length and only a few blocks wide. This area is not heavily built up like the downtown and Hollywood shopping areas, but it contains the largest and finest department stores in the City of Los Angeles. These stores are located from one to several blocks apart and are surrounded by large parking lots, so that prospective shoppers can drive to the stores in their automobiles and find convenient parking space right at the store. Within the last ten years this area has developed to such an extent that it really amounts to a third downtown section, or a third city within the Los Angeles metropolitan area. A new large shopping area is now developing in the southwest section of the city. The large department stores, most of which have already opened stores in two or more of the other three areas, are now acquiring additional sites in southwest Los Angeles. This illustrates the rapid decentralization trend of merchandising in the Los Angeles metropolitan area.

"Description of First Run Exhibition in Los Angeles.

"When I joined Fox West Coast in 1932, it was already operating what I consider to be two of the finest theatres in southern California, namely, Grauman's Chinese theatre in Hollywood (2,048 seats) and State theatres (2,404 seats) in downtown Los Angeles. The Chinese was then the most famous theatre in the world. It had an international reputation for gala premieres of the finest pictures. The State is a big de luxe house located the corner of Broadway and Seventh, the busiest corner in Los Angeles. I consider that the finest theatre location in the city. Prior to the depression the Chinese had operated on a road show policy, playing long runs at advanced admission prices, usually $1,50. In the early '30s Fox West Coast was unable to acquire suitable pictures to continue this policy, and the theatre was closed.

"I negotiated with Fox Film Corporation and Loew's, Inc. to license their pictures for simultaneous first run exhibition at the State and Grauman's Chinese theatres, and thus simultaneous first run exhibition in downtown Los Angeles and Hollywood was inaugurated.

"When the success of this type of simultaneous first run showings became apparent, other first run exhibitors over a period of time also adopted similar practices so that now RKO, Warners, Paramount and Blumenfeld all offer simultaneous first run facilities in downtown Los Angeles and Hollywood, competing with the first run theatres operated by Fox West Coast.

"As I have already indicated, in the late '30s and early '40s another major shopping area developed along Wilshire Boulevard in central Los Angeles. This area includes most of the better residential section of Los Angeles. Following the trend of merchandising in metropolitan Los Angeles, I negotiated with the distributors to license the Ritz, in central Los Angeles, for similar simultaneous first run exhibition. This also proved successful and Warners and Mr. Blumenfeld have opened first run theatres in this area, competing with the Fox West Coast first run houses.

"At the present time there are thus three areas in metropolitan Los Angeles which are treated for motion picture exhibition purposes as separate communities with separate first run theatres.

Charles P. Skouras

"(a) Downtown Los Angeles

"In the downtown Los Angeles section there are 9 first run theatres. Their operators, seating capacities and adult evening general admission prices are as (2874)
follows:

Theatre	Operator	Seats	Run	Admission Price
State	FWC	2,404	1	85¢
Los Angeles	"	1,980	1	85¢
United Artists	"	2,100	1	85¢
Hillstreet	RKO-Pantages	2,916	1	80¢
Warners	Warners	2,500	1	80¢
Paramount	Fanchon & Marco-Paramount	3,347	1	80¢
Music Hall	Blumenfeld	902	1	80¢
California	Frank Fouce	1,900	1-Spanish	60¢
Orpheum	FWC	2,207	1,2 Vaudeville	98¢ to $1.20

"Fox West Coast's Theatres:

"The State theatre, one of the finest, has the best location of any theatre in Los Angeles. It is now exhibiting first run most of the pictures distributed by Twentieth Century-Fox and some of the pictures distributed by Loew's, RKO, Columbia, Universal, Republic and International Pictures, and Selznick International pictures which are distributed by United Artists. The Los Angeles theatre, another fine house, is excellently located about one-half block from the State. It is now exhibiting first run most of the pictures distributed by Loew's. The United Artists theatre is also a deluxe 'show case' type theatre and exhibits other pictures of the same distributors who license product to the State and Los Angeles and also some of the pictures distributed by Monogram and PRC.

(2875)

"Competitive First Run Theatres:

"The Paramount, Warners, Hillstreet and Orpheum theatres are large deluxe theatres about equally suitable for first run exhibition. They are the finest houses in downtown Los Angeles except for the State, Los Angeles and United Artists. All these theatres are within a block or two of the center of the shopping district. The Paramount theatre exhibits Paramount pictures and some of the pictures distributed by Republic. The Warner theatre exhibits Warner pictures. The Hillstreet exhibits pictures distributed by Universal, Columbia and RKO, including pictures produced by Goldwyn, Walt Disney Productions and International Pictures. The Orpheum specializes in vaudeville and usually shows a single first run feature distributed by Monogram, Republic, or PRC. The Music Hall, while well located, is a long narrow theatre which does not have the same deluxe appearance or size as the others. It is now showing exclusively the first run of United Artists product. The California theatre is an older, poorly located house. It shows Spanish language pictures exclusively.

(2876)

"(b) Hollywood

"In Hollywood there are 8 first run theatres. Their operators, seating capacities, and adult evening general admission prices are as follows:

Charles P. Skouras

Theatre	Operator	Seats	Run	Admission Price
Chinese	FWC	2,028	1	85¢
Egyptian	"	1,535	1	85¢
Guild	"	968	1	85¢
Paramount	Fanchon & Marco-Paramount	1,500	1	80¢
Pantages	RKO-Pantages	2,812	1	80¢
Warners	Warners	2,756	1	80¢
Music Hall	Blumenfeld	500	1	80¢
Hawaii Music Hall	Blumenfeld	1,000	1	80¢

"In Hollywood the product of the various distributors is licensed to the same operators of these first run houses as in downtown Los Angeles, except that the pictures exhibited first run with vaudeville at the Orpheum usually do not receive a first run in Hollywood but are sometimes played first run at the Vogue. The Chinese usually plays the same pictures as the State, the Egyptian the same as the Los Angeles, the Guild the same as the United Artists, Warner's Hollywood the same as Warner's Downtown, the Paramount in Hollywood the same as the Downtown

(2877)

Paramount, the Pantages the same as the Hillstreet and the Hollywood and Hawaii Music Hall's the same as the Downtown Music Hall.

"The Chinese, Warner's Hollywood, Pantages and Egyptian are large deluxe theatres constructed for first run exhibition. The Hollywood Paramount and the Guild were constructed as legitimate theatres and they have been recently converted into motion picture houses. They are now good first run theatres, but not quite comparable to the other four. The Hollywood Music Hall and Vogue are well located and have good appointments, but they are not large enough to provide as suitable first run facilities as the other first run houses. The Hawaii Music Hall is located the eastern end of Hollywood Boulevard, outside of the downtown Hollywood area.

"(c) Wilshire District

"In the Wilshire district there are now 7 first run theatres. Their operators, seating capacities, and adult evening general admission prices are as follows:

(2878)

Theatre	Operator	Seats	Run	Admission Price
Ritz	FWC	1,402	1	85¢
Carthay Circle	"	1,518	1 & M.O.	85¢
Four Star	"	900	1 & M.O.	85¢
Fox Wilshire	"	2,296	1	85¢
Beverly Music Hall	Blumenfeld	850	1	80¢
Wiltern	Warners	2,000	1	80¢
Uptown	FWC	1,800	1	85¢

"Pictures which receive their first Los Angeles runs in theatres operated by RKO and Paramount do not receive a first Los Angeles run in the Wilshire district. The other theatres play a first run of the same product which their operators are showing first run in Hollywood and downtown Los Angeles.

"With the exception of the big de luxe Fox Wilshire, these theatres are slightly smaller in size than most of the first run houses in Hollywood and downtown Los Angeles. Otherwise, they are comparable to the first run theatres in the other two areas. The Four Star and the Beverly Music are small de luxe theatres like the Vogue and Hollywood Music Hall, while the others are large, fine theatres. The Carthay Circle, Fox Wilshire, Uptown and Wiltern were constructed for first run operation; the Ritz was constructed as a de luxe neighborhood theatre and has been converted to first run since the outbreak of the war.

"Description of Subsequent Run. Exhibition in Los Angeles

"In Los Angeles neighborhood areas the first exhibition occurs 21 days after first run Los Angeles closing whether the first runs are affiliated or non-affiliated and whether the first subsequent runs are affiliated or non-affiliated. There are about 23 different Los Angeles neighborhoods each with theatres playing a 'first' subsequent run. Thirteen of these first subsequent runs are operated by Fox West Coast; 9 are operated by non-affiliated exhibitors; and in one area a first subsequent run theatre is operated by Fox West Coast and one is also being operated by Warner Bros. All of these first subsequent run theatres exhibit substantially all the better pictures distributed in Los Angeles, whether they have their first run in affiliated or non-affiliated theatres, and whether or not they are distributed by distributors who own theatres or distributors who do not own theatres. The second subsequent runs in each of these neighborhoods usually play 7 days after the first runs, the third play 7 days after the second, etc., and the distributors all license second, third, etc., subsequent runs in each neighborhood.

"There are approximately 185 of these neighborhood subsequent run theatres of which Fox West Coast operates 32 (14 of which are 'first subsequent' run in their respective areas), unaffiliated theatre exhibitors operate 153, and Warner Bros. operate one. 18 of the 32 subsequent run theatres of Fox West Coast are operated second, third or fourth subsequent run.

"In Los Angeles the Fox West Coast subsequent run theatres exhibit not only the pictures of distributors which license first run to it but also the pictures of distributors which license first run to its competitors.

"San Diego, California

"San Diego had a 1930 population of 147,795, a 1940 population of 203,341 and an estimated 1943 population of 390,000. In San Diego there are 31 theatres. Fourteen of these are operated by companies affiliated with Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation. Seven San Diego theatres are playing first run and 5 of these 7 are affiliated with Fox West Coast. Three other theatres are playing a continued first run or moveover policy. Two of these are operated by Fox West Coast. Outside the City of San Diego but in the San Diego metropolitan area, there are 6 additional theatres, none of which are operated by Fox West Coast.

"There are two first run operators in San Diego, Fox West Coast and Gus Metzger. Mr. Metzger is not affiliated with any motion picture distributor or producer. He operates the first run Broadway (800 seats), Tower (600 seats) and Spreckles (1,800 seats) theatres, using all of the product of Universal and Columbia and about one-half of the Warner product. The product of Fox, Metro, Paramount, RKO and the balance of Warner's is shown at Fox West Coast's first run theatres: The Fox (2,878 seats), the California (2,027 seats), the State (1,012 seats), the Adams (684 seats), the Loma (1,184 seats). All of the first run and moveover theatres in San Diego are in competition with each other.

"The Fox theatre is one of the largest and finest theatres on the Pacific Coast. The California, Orpheum, State and Spreckles are de luxe first run theatres. The Broadway, Tower and Adams are small theatres with excellent appointments. The Loma was erected within the last year. It is a good sized, de luxe, modern theatre and one of the best in town.

(2882)

"For subsequent run purposes San Diego is divided into three neighborhoods. The subsequent runs in each neighborhood have substantially the same availability as similar runs in the other neighborhoods. Fox West Coast plays the second, third and fourth runs in the downtown area and in the North Park area, playing both the pictures it has exhibited first run and those its competitor has exhibited first run. Non-affiliated theatres play similar runs in the South San Diego area. The first run theatres, both affiliated and non-affiliated, have the same clearance of 35 days over the theatres in the neghborhood areas. The non-affiliated subsequent run theatres in the suburbs, such as Oceanside, La Mesa, La Jolla, Linda Vista, Ocean Beach, Coronado and National City, play earlier than the subsequent run Fox West Coast theatres in the San Diego subsequent run areas.

"Long Beach, California

"The population of Long Beach in 1930 was 142,032; in 1940, 164,271. The Rand McNally 1945

Atlas estimates the Long Beach population for 1943 at 225,000. There are 20 motion picture theatres in Long Beach, 4 of which are operated as first runs and 3 of which are operated on a continued first run or moveover policy. Fox West Coast operates 7 theatres in Long Beach, 2 of which are first runs (West Coast, 2,072 seats, and United Artists, 1,242 seats) and 2 of which are moveovers (Long Beach, 1,164 seats, and Imperial, 856 seats). Of the other three theatres of Fox West Coast, one operates second run, one fourth run and one is a newsreel house.

"Cabart Theatres Corporation (under the management of Milton Arthur and not, so far as I know, affiliated in any way with any distributor) operates 5 theatres in Long Beach, 2 of which are first run (State, 1,356 seats, and Cabart, 950 seats) and one of which is a moveover (Rivoli, 1,100 seats). Cabart generally plays first run of the product of RKO, Columbia, one-half of Warner's and one-half of Universal. The product of the other defendant distributors usually plays first run at the Fox West Coast theatres.

"All of the early run theatres in Long Beach are well operated first class houses suitable for first run operation and there is active competition between the respective operators.

"First run theatres in Long Beach, both affiliated and non-affiliated, take 35 days clearance over Fox West Coast's second run Egyptian (1,080 seats) theatre and the subsequent run theatres customarily take (2884)

7 days clearance over the next subsequent run. Fox West Coast's two subsequent run theatres, the second run Egyptian and fourth run Belmont (842 seats), play pictures which are played first run by Fox West Coast and also those that are played first run by its competitors.

"San Francisco, California.

"San Francisco had a 1930 population of 634,394 and a 1940 population of 634,536. Because of war activity on the Pacific Coast, the city has had a very large transient population during the last several years. There are 82 theatres in San Francisco, 8 of which are operated by Fox West Coast. 10 San Francisco theatres are presently operating on a first run policy with the product of the distributor defendants. 5 of these theatres are operated by Fox West Coast; 1 is operated by RKO; and 4 are operated by J Blumenfeld. These theatres are all in the same competitive area and there is active competition between their respective operators.

"All of these theatres are large houses with de luxe appointments. The Fox, with 4,651 seats, is the largest and finest theatre in the West.

(2885)

"At the present time, these first run theatres are playing the product of the various distributors as follows: The Golden Gate theatre (2,825 seats), operated by RKO, is playing RKO product; the Orpheum (2,900 seats), Esquire (975 seats), United Artists (1,200 seats) and Tivoli (1,400 seats), all operated by Mr. Blumenfeld, are playing United Artists, Columbia, Universal, PRC and one-half of Monogram product.

"The product of Twentieth Century-Fox, Loew's, Paramount, Warners, Republic and about one-half of Monogram is exhibtied first at theatres operated by Fox West Coast: the Fox (4,651 seats), the Paramount (2,646 seats), the Warfield (2,656 seats), the St. Francis (1,455 seats) and the State (2,133 seats).

Charles P. Skouras

"Fox West Coast has only three other theatres in the City of San Francisco. One of these, the United Nations (1,149 seats) is a downtown theatre operating on a second run policy. The other two, El Capitan (2,574 seats) and the Rialto (1,530 seats) are large, fine neighborhood theatres which operate on a second run policy.

"The clearance granted to Fox West Coast's first run theatres over subsequent runs is no greater than that accorded to the competitive theatres operated by the Independent exhibitor, and the Fox West Coast second run plays no earlier than the non-affiliated second run.

"Oakland, California

"Oakland had a 1930 population of 284,063 and a 1940 population of 302,163. It is located directly across San Francisco Bay from the City of San Francisco and is located in the San Francisco metropolitan area. There are 38 theatres in Oakland, 8 of which are operated by Fox West Coast Theatres.

"There are 8 Oakland theatres which are operated first run, of which 5 are operated by Fox West Coast. All of these theatres are in the same competitive area, and their respective operators are in active competition with each other. They are as follows:

"The Fox (3,335 seats), Paramount (3,434 seats) and Orpheum (2,561 seats), operated by Fox West Coast, represent very large investments and are fine theatres with excellent locations in downtown Oakland. They are particularly desirable for first run exhibition and are undoubtedly the superior houses of the city. They are now exhibiting first run the products distributed by Twentieth Century-Fox, Loew's, Paramount, RKO and about one-half of the product distributed by Warner Bros. Fox West Coast's Grand Lake theatre (2,177 seats), located about a mile and a half out of the downtown section in one of the better residential sections, and Fox West Coast's Franklin theatre (836 seats), a downtown house, are operating on continued first run policies showing the pictures of these same distributors.

"Mr. Blumenfeld, the same exhibitor who has been referred to in connection with Los Angeles and San Francisco, operates the T & D theatre (2,760 seats) which is almost as large as Fox West Coast's first run theatres, but it is older, not so well equipped, and located a few blocks out of the better downtown amusement section. He also operates the Roxy (1,080 seats) and Esquire (1,370 seats). His theatres exhibit the first run product distributed by Columbia, Universal, PRC and approximately one-half of the pictures distributed by Warner Bros.

"Fox West Coast operates only three other theatres in Oakland. Two of these theatres, the State (1,524 seats) and the Senator (1,624 seats), operate on a second run policy. They are large de luxe neighborhood theatres comparable to or better than any other neighborhood theatre in the area. The third theatre, the Tower (600 seats), operates on a fourth run policy.

"In Oakland the subsequent run theatres of Fox West Coast exhibit not only the pictures of distributors which license first runs to it but also the pictures of those distributors which license their pictures first run to the competitors of Fox West Coast.

(2888)

"Cities With Population of 50,000 to 100,000

"The Government has charged Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation with maintaining a theatre exhibition monopoly in six cities with a population between 50,000 and 100,000: Phoenix, Arizona; and Berkeley, Stockton, San Jose, Pasadena and Santa Monica, California. In all of these cities except San Jose and Pasadena there are competing first run theatre operators. I shall consider each of these cities in detail and indicate the competitive situation.

"Berkeley, California

"Berkeley had a 1930 population of 82,109 and a 1940 population of 85,547. Berkeley is part of the San Francisco metropolitan area. It is located across San Francisco Bay from the City of San Francisco about 8 miles to the northeast. It is immediately north of Oakland and geographically it constitutes the northern part of Oakland. There are 10 motion picture theatres in Berkeley, 4 of which are operated by Fox West Coast Theatres. There are 3 theatres in Berkeley now generally playing on first run policies. Two of these theatres are operated by Fox West Coast and one by J. Blumenfeld. All of these theatres are in the general competitive area and their respective operators are all in competition with each other.

"At the present time, the Berkeley theatre (1,400 seats), operated by Mr. Blumenfeld, is showing first run in Berkeley the product of the following distributors: Columbia, Universal, PRC and approximately one-half the product of United Artists. The pictures distributed by Twentieth Century-Fox, Loew's, Paramount, Warner's, RKO, Monogram, Republic and approximately one-half of United Artists are shown first run at the United Artists (1,642 seats) and Campus (1,191 seats) theatres of Fox West Coast.

"The United Artists, Campus, Berkeley, UC (1,498 seats) and California (1,410 seats) are all located a few blocks from each other in the principal downtown business district of Berkeley and they are all in the immediate vicinity of the campus of the University of California. In addition to these downtown theatres, there are 5 theatres in the suburbs of Berkeley, located in varying directions from one to three miles from the downtown area.

"All first run theatres of Fox West Coast and of (2890)

Blumenfeld take the same clearance over second run theatres of Fox West Coast and of Blumenfeld. Fox West Coast's fourth run UC theatre plays the product of the distributors whose pictures are shown first run at the Fox West Coast theatre as well as those whose pictures are shown first run by its competitor. Fox West Coast's second run California theatre shows some of the pictures which were exhibited first run by its competitor, and the balance of the pictures shown first run by Fox West Coast's competitor are also shown second run by that same competitor.

"The United Artists theatre is the largest, finest and best appointed house in Berkeley. The California, UC and Berkeley are large de luxe theatres.

"Sacramento, California

"Sacramento, the capital of California, had a 1930 population of 93,750 and a 1940 population of 105,958. There are 18 theatres in Sacramento and one in North Sacramento. Fox West Coast operates, or is interested in the operation of, only 5 of these theatres. Of the 5 first run theatres in Sacramento, Fox West Coast is interested in the operation of 3 and Mr. Blumenfeld operates 2. Mr. Blumenfeld also has an additional theatre, which operates first run a substantial portion of the time.

"The Senator theatre has 2,100 seats and is the finest theatre in the Sacramento Valley. The Alhambra theatre is a 2,000 seat de luxe neighborhood theatre. Blumenfeld's best first run theatre is his 1,100 seat new neighborhood Tower theatre. His downtown Esquire and Times theatres have only 998 seats and 500 seats, respectively.

"Mr. Blumenfeld exhibits the first run product of Columbia, Universal, PRC and approximately one-half of Warners, while Fox West Coast exhibits the first run of the other defendant distributors.

"There is active competition between the first run theatres operated by Blumenfeld and Fox West Coast in Sacramento. Fox West Coast's second run Hippodrome (1,769 seats) and third run Rio (1,292 seats) show the pictures having their first run in their competitor's theatres as well as those having their first run in theatres in which Fox West Coast is interested.

"Stockton, California

"Stockton had a 1930 population of 47,963 and a 1940 population of 54,714. There are 9 theatres in Stockton, 4 of which are operated by Fox West Coast. There are 3 first run theatres in Stockton, 2 operated by Fox West Coast and one by Mr. Blumenfeld. The operators of these theatres are in active competition with each other.

"The Sierra theatre (615 seats) operated by Mr. Blumenfeld is exhibiting first run Columbia, Universal, PRC and about one-half of United Artists. Fox West Coast is exhibiting first run one-half of the United Artists pictures and all the product of the other defendant distributors. It also exhibits second and fourth run the product of all the defendant distributors including those having their first run in theatres operated by their competitors.

"Fox West Coast's first run California theatre has 2,170 seats. This is much the finest theatre in town, Fox West Coast's new Ritz theatre, with 926 seats, is also a suitable first run theatre. The subsequent run, State theatre, operated by Fox West Coast, has 1,500 seats and the non-affiliated, third run Stockton theatre 1,000 seats.

"Fresno, California

"Fresno had a 1930 population of 52,513 and a 1940 population of 60,685. There are 10 theatres in Fresno, 4 of which are operated by Fox West Coast and one of which is operated by Warner Bros. Two of the Fox West Coast theatres play first run, the (2893)

Warners theatre plays first run, and Gerald Hardy's theatre, the Hardy, also plays some first runs.

"These theatres are all in the same competitive area and are in active competition. At its Wilson (1,897 seats) and Tower (930 seats) theatres Fox West Coast is playing the first run of the product distributed by Twentieth Century-Fox, Metro, Paramount, United Artists, PRC and three-fourths of RKO. The Warner theatre (2,173 seats) is playing the first run of Warners, Columbia, Universal, Republic and one-fourth of RKO. The Hardy theatre (1,336 seats) is playing the first run of Monogram and the second runs of Republic and Universal.

"Fox West Coast's second run Kinema (1,282 seats) and third run State (1,279 seats) play second and third run pictures of all the defendant distributors, including those pictures which have had their first run at the theatres operated by its competitors.

"San Jose, California

"The population of San Jose in 1930 was 57,561 and in 1940, 68,457. There are 9 theatres in San Jose and 3 additional theatres in the suburbs. Fox West Coast operates 3 theatres in San Jose: the California (1,748 seats), Mission (1,178 seats) and Padre (998 seats). These theatres all operate on a first run policy, showing the pictures of all the defendant distributors. The California is the largest and finest theatre in town. The Mission is a good sized comparable house and the Padre a smaller de luxe theatre.

"Turner and Dahnken, Inc., acquired by Fox West Coast in 1923, operated first run a group of theatres in a number of cities in Northern California, and were exhibiting pictures first run at the Mission theatre in San Jose at the time their interests were acquired by Fox West Coast. The California was built in about 1925. The Padre was acquired in about 1936.

"Pasadena, California

"Pasadena had a 1930 population of 76,086 and a 1940 population of 81,864. Pasadena is a fashionable residential suburb of Los Angeles located about 10 miles northeast of downtown Los Angeles. It grew to substantially its present size in the 1920s, so that, in comparison with other similar cities in the Los Angeles metropolitan area, its growth since 1930 has been comparatively slight. There have been no new theatres built in Pasadena since 1931.

"There are 11 theatres in Pasadena. Fox West Coast operates three of these theatres, the Academy (1,673 seats), United Artists (912 seats) and Pasadena (894 seats) on a first run policy. It operates two, the Tower (745 seats) and Uptown (910 seats) on a moveover or continued first run. All of these theatres are well maintained modern houses. The United Artists is the newest theatre in the city. Fox West Coast spent over $100,000 in the early '40s rehabilitating the Academy and Uptown theatres. The first run theatres are wholly adequate to serve the first run needs of both the distributors and the public. Their admission prices are no higher than those charged in other comparable situations like Long Beach and Santa Monica where Fox West Coast has first run competitors. Fox West Coast also operates four subsequent run theatres and there are two independent subsequent run theatres. All these Pasadena theatres compete with the theatres in the neighboring suburbs of Los Angles, such as Eagle Rock, High Park, Alhambra, El Sereno and San Gabriel.

"At the time of the acquisition by Fox Film Corporation of its interest in Fox West Coast, the latter was operating five theatres in Pasadena which had been constructed or acquired during the regime of the Gore Bros., Lesser, and Ramish.

(2896)

"Santa Monica, California.

"The population of Santa Monica in 1930 was 37,146 and in 1940, 53,500. Santa Monica is a suburb of Los Angeles, located directly west of Beverly Hills and that part of Los Angeles known as Westwood. It is about 13 miles from downtown Los Angeles. It borders on the Pacific Ocean and, together with Venice, the suburb directly south of Santa Monica, constitutes the principal beach area for Metropolitan Los Angeles, as well as being a residential suburb.

"At the place where Santa Monica and Venice meet, there is quite an extensive amusement park, known as Ocean Park. There are 2 theatres in Ocean Park, one being on the Santa Monica side of the boundary line and the other on the Venice side. Ocean Park has always been treated for motion picture exhibition purposes as a separate community. The first runs in Ocean Park play seven days after first run Los Angeles and the first runs in Santa Monica play seven days after first run Ocean Park.

"There are 7 theatres in Santa Monica proper, 3 of them being operated by Fox Coast and 4 by operators not affiliated with any motion picture distributor. Three of these theatres operate on a first run policy. The non-affiliated Hitching Post (360 seats) plays western and action pictures distributed by Republic, Columbia, Universal, Monogram and PRC. The non-affiliated Majestic (647 seats) plays pictures distributed by Warners, Columbia, Universal, Monogram and PRC and approximately one-half the pictures distributed by United Artists. The Fox West Coast's Criterion (1,200 seats), which is the finest, largest and best located theatre in the city, plays pictures distributed by Loew's, Twentieth Century-Fox, Paramount and RKO and one-half the pictures distributed by United Artists. Substantially all these pictures play second run at the non-affiliated El Miro (887 seats), third run at Fox West Coast's Wilshire theatre (1189 seats), fourth run at the non-affiliated Aero (650 seats) and last run or as revivals at Fox West Coast's Bundy theatre. The Bundy, a new, modern theatre with 912 seats, represents a substantial investment. The Hitching Post and Aero are smaller, inferior theatres.

"The operators of these theatres are all in active competition." Both Fox West Coast's third-run Wilshire theatre and its last run Bundy, as well as the non-affiliated second run El Miro theatre, play the pictures of those distributors whose pictures are exhibited first run by Fox West Coast and those whose pictures are exhibited first run by its non-affiliated competitors.

"Phoenix, Arizona

"Phoenix had a 1930 population of 48,118 and a 1940 population of 65,414. There are 11 theatres in Phoenix, 2 of which are operated by Fox West Coast, 6 of which are operated by an affiliate of Paramount and 3 of which are operated by persons having no affiliation with any motion picture distributor. Three of these theatres operate on first run policies, 2 others as moveovers or continued first runs and 2 others on mixed policies, partly first and partly subsequent run.

"The largest and finest theatre in Phoenix is the Fox theatre (1,796 seats), operated on a first run policy by Fox West Coast and showing first run pictures distributed by Twentieth Century-Fox and United Artists, some of the pictures distributed by Republic and PRC and about one-half the pictures distributed by Warner Brothers, RKO and Universal. Fox West Coast's new Vista theatre (730 seats) operates on a moveover policy, showing substantially the same pictures as the Fox on a continued first run. It opened in September, 1944, inaugurating the continued first run of these pictures and, thus, playing (2899)

prior to Paramount's second and third runs. The Orpheum theatre (1,590 seats), operated by Paramount, shows first run pictures distributed by Paramount, Loew's, Columbia and about one-half the pictures distributed by Warner's, RKO and Universal. The Azteca theatre (950 seats), operated by an independent, shows first run of Spanish and Mexican pictures. The Phoenix theatre (755 seats), operated by another independent, shows first runs of Monogram and some other Western pictures, together with fourth and fifth runs of Paramount, Loew's, Twentieth Century-Fox and Warner Bros. The Rex (400 seats), operated by the same man who operates the Azteca, shows first run Western pictures and last runs of other pictures. All these theatres are in competition.

"Cities With Populations Between 25,000 and 50,000

"There are 12 cities in the State of California with populations between 25,000 and 50,000. I understand that the Government charges that in 8 of these cities theatre exhibition is dominated by exhibitors affiliated with motion picture distributors. The following analysis of the theatre situation in those 8 towns will demonstrate that this charge is without substance or (2900)
significance.

"Alhambra.—Alhambra is a part of metropolitan Los Angeles, located immediately north of East Los Angeles, immediately south of South Pasadena and immediately east of the part of Los Angeles sometimes referred to as El Sereno. Bordering Alhambra on the southeast are Monterey Park and Garvey and to the east is San Gabriel. Fox West Coast operates 4 theatres in Alhambra. These theatres compete with the unaffiliated theatres in El Sereno, East Los Angeles, Monterey Park, Garvey and San Gabriel.

"Bakersfield. Bakersfield is the principal city in the San Joaquim Valley. There are 8 theatres in Bakersfield and one theatre in Oildale, a contiguous suburb. Fox West Coast operates 5 of these 9 theatres.

"Beverly Hills. Beverly Hills is a part of metropolitan Los Angeles, being completely surrounded by the City of Los Angeles. Theatres in Beverly Hills are in competition with the affiliated and non-affiliated theatres in that section of the City of Los Angeles. There are 5 theatres in Beverly Hills, 3 operated by Fox West Coast, one by Warner Bros., and one by Mr. Blumenfeld. Two of these theatres, the Fox Wilshire and Mr. Blumenfeld's Beverly Music Hall, are playing first run in the City of Los Angeles. The others are playing Los Angeles neighborhood runs.

"Huntington Park and Inglewood. These towns are part of metropolitan Los Angeles. Huntington Park is located just east of south Los Angeles and Inglewood just west of south Los Angeles. This entire south Los Angeles area is built up residentially so that it is impossible to tell from its appearance where the political boundaries are.

"Fox West Coast operates one of the 4 theatres in Huntington Park and also operates the Lyric theatre in what is called Walnut Park, which is outside the Huntington Park city limits. Warner Bros. operate a theatre in Huntington Park and two theatres are operated by unaffiliated exhibitors. These Huntington Park theatres compete with the theatres in south Los Angeles, almost none of which are affiliated with distributors. They also compete with affiliated and non-affiliated theatres in nearby municipalities forming a part of the same residential area, such as Bell, Southgate, Lynwood and the section of Los Angeles County immediately south and east of the city limits.

"Fox West Coast operates 5 of the 6 theatres in Inglewood, the other one being operated by an unaffiliated exhibitor. These Inglewood theatres compete with the theatres in south Los Angeles and with the unaffiliated theatres in Hawthorne and Lennox to the south.

"Riverside and San Bernardino. These cities are located about ten miles apart, about forty miles east of Los Angeles. The theatres in these cities compete with each other and with the non-affiliated theatres in neighboring cities like Colton, which is located directly between them, and Fontana, which is west of San Bernardino and northwest of Riverside. The Riverside theatres also compete with the non-affiliated theatres in Arlington to the south. In San Bernardino, there are 8 theatres, 5 of which are operated by Fox West Coast, one of which is operated by Warner Bros. and two of which are operated by exhibitors not affiliated with any motion picture distributor. In Riverside there are 4 theatres, or 5 theatres if the small theatre located on the stage of the Fox Riverside is counted as a separate theatre. One of these 4 theatres is operated by an unaffiliated exhibitor and the others by Fox West Coast.

"Santa Barbara. There are 5 theatres in Santa Barbara, one of which is operated by Fox West Coast and 4 of which are operated by Warner Bros.

(2903)

"D.

"Cities of Less than 25,000 Population

"I am informed that in Exhibit 371 the Government lists certain cities in California with populations of less than 25,000 where Fox West Coast is said to operate the only theatre or theatres in the town. Under ordinary circumstances, a theatre with a seating capacity of about 1,000 can alone adequately provide the facilities desirable for a community of 10,000 or less located outside a metropolitan area. Hence, in a small community, an established exhibitor giving good motion picture service will generally have the only theatre or theatres in such a town. Furthermore, this established exhibitor is usually the first to know whether his theatre has become inadequate to service the community because of the lack of sufficient seats, an increase in population, or otherwise. He is generally the first to provide more seats or better facilities for his community and, as a consequence, it will generally be found that, regardless of the fact of affiliation, the one or two theatres in a small city are owned by the same exhibitor.

"Fox West Coast is charged with having the only theatres in ten cities in California located outside the Los Angeles metropolitan area. Five of these cities are in Southern California and five in Northern California. There are 286 towns in California, excluding Los Angeles County, which have populations of less than 25,000 and also have motion picture theatres.

There are only one or two theatres in most of these towns and there are competing exhibitors in only twenty-five of them. Thus, Fox West Coast is charged with having theatres in only 10 of the 255 towns in California where there is only one motion picture exhibitor, namely, Banning, Fullerton, Pomona, Porterville, Redlands, Redwood City, San Carlos, San Luis Obispo, Tracy and Watsonville. A similar charge is made in Exhibit 371 with respect to 14 localities in the Los Angeles metropolitan area. Some of these localities are merely local names for parts of the City of Los Angeles and some of them are politically separate municipalities within the City of Greater Los Angeles. Theatres in all these communities compete with nearby theatres in other parts of metropolitan Los Angeles.

"Fox West Coast operates two theatres in the part of the City of Los Angeles called Wilmington. These theatres compete with the affiliated and non-affiliated theatres in neighboring sections of Los Angeles and in Long Beach, which is contiguous to this part of Los Angeles. The theatres in Bell, Bell Gardens, Compton and Maywood are all in the Huntington Park area. They compete with the independent theatres in Southgate and Lynwood, which are located between Compton and Bell, forming a part of a continuous residential area. They also compete with the non-affiliated theatres located in Downey to the west and Watts to the east and the affiliated and non-affiliated theatres in Huntington Park. The theatres in Hermosa Beach, Manhattan Beach and Redondo Beach compete with the unaffiliated theatres in El Segundo, Hawthorne Gardens, Torrence and Lomita. North Hollywood and Van Nuys, which is contiguous, are each part of the City of Los Angeles. The Fox West Coast theatres there compete with the unaffiliated theatres in Burbank and the affiliated and non-affiliated theatres in Hollywood. Ocean Park is a name given to the amusement section comprising the southern part of Santa Monica and the northern part of the section of the City of Los Angeles sometimes called Venice. The theatres in what is called Ocean Park compete with the affiliated theatres in Venice and West Los Angeles and with the affiliated and non-affiliated theatres in Santa Monica and Culver City, all of which are a part of a single competitive area, and are also competing with other theatres in the western part of the City of Los Angeles. The two Fox West Coast theatres in South Pasadena compete with the affiliated theatres in Alhambra to the south and with the affiliated and non-affiliated theatres in Pasadena to the north and on the west with the theatres both affiliated and non-affiliated in that part of Los Angeles known as Highland Park. They also compete with the non-affiliated theatres in the part of Los Angeles to the southwest known as El Sereno.

"Statistical Data

"In 1930, that is, before I became associated with either Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation or National Theatres Corporation, Fox West Coast operated theatres in 62 cities in California. Today it operates theatres in 62 cities in that State. In the meantime, it has lost its theatres in 8 cities (Napa, Turlock, Azusa, Hawthorne, Norwalk, Downey, Burbank and Whittier) and acquired theatres in 8 different cities (Cleremont, Compton, Sherman, Manhattan Beach, Maywood, Monrovia, Pacific Beach and San Carlos). In 4 of these there previously were no theatres, and new theatres were built by Fox West Coast. In the remaining 4 Fox West Coast acquired existing theatres.

(2907)

"In 1930 the company operated 51 theatres out of 181 theatres in the City of Los Angeles; today it operates 58 theatres out of 222 theatres in that City. The estimated increase in the population of Los Angeles today over that of 1930 is 500,000, or about 40%. There has been an increase of 41 theatres to service this additional population, of which 30 have been constructed and are operated by unaffiliated exhibitors.

"From the above, it can be seen that the small increase in the number of Fox West Coast theatres has no more than kept pace with the expansion of the population or the general development of theatres.

"In 1930 Fox West Coast operated the 'first subsequent run' theatres in 17 neighborhood areas of Los Angeles. Today it has the corresponding run in only 13 of these neighborhoods. In 1930 there were approximately 550 theatres in California to service a population of 5,677,251 and, in 1945, approximately 1,050 theatres to service an estimated population of 7,750,000. Thus, there has been an increase of about 500 theatres in 15 years to service this population increase of 2,000,000. In 1930 Fox West Coast operated 194 theatres throughout California; today it operates 257, or 63 more than it did in 1930. It thus appears that, while the number of theatres has almost doubled in the fifteen-year period, more than 400 of the 500 additional theatres are operated by other exhibitors.

Charles P. Skouras

"In the areas where Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation operates, there are other competing theatre circuits, and such circuits have been expanding rapidly. For example, the Blumenfeld circuit has grown from 7 theatres in 1932 to 35 theatres today. This circuit operates chiefly in Northern California and its principal theatres are generally in competition with Fox West Coast. In about 1932, Blumenfeld operated only one or two theatres in competition with Fox West Coast. Now he operates a number of first run theatres in competition with Fox West Coast in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland, Berkeley, Sacramento and Stockton.

"Southern California Amusement Co., Inc. is an example of a similar rapidly growing-non-affiliated circuit in the Los Angeles metropolitan area. Although the owners of this circuit (Harry Vinnicof, J. Y. Berman and James Edwards, Jr.) operated some theatres in 1930, the circuit was not in existence then. This circuit now operates about 38 theatres in the Los Angeles metropolitan area.

"Fox West Coast has not conspired or combined (2909-2920) with, and has no agreement or understanding with, any other defendant in this case to restrain interstate trade or commerce or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize interstate trade or commerce in the distribution or exhibition of motion pictures. It has no agreement, express or implied, with any other defendant relating in any way to the distribution or exhibition of motion pictures other than the express license agreements which it has made for the licensing of pictures in its theatres and other than the agreements with Loew's and Paramount referred to on pages 17-19 hereof.

Charles P. Skouras

"I also deny that Fox West Coast, either individually or in conjunction or combination with any other person, has engaged in any practice which is unfair or discriminatory with respect to any exhibitor with which it competes.

(Sgd) Charles P. Skouras."

Mr. Caskey: I now ask to have the stipulation of Dan Michalove, vice-president of National Theatres Corporation, incorporated into the record. Mr. Michalove's affidavit deals with the operation of a theatre in Detroit and in Philadelphia.

(The affidavit of DAN MICHALOVE is as follows:)

"IT IS HEREBY STIPULATED by and between counsel for the plaintiff herein and counsel for the defendants, Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and National Theatres Corporation, that if called as a witness in this proceeding DAN MICHALOVE would testify as follows:

"I reside at 300 Central Park West, New York City. I am a vice-president and a director of National Theatres Corporation, one of the defendants herein. I have been employed by that company, or one of its subsidiaries, in an executive capacity since 1938. I have been engaged in the motion picture exhibition business for over 25 years.

"National Theatres Corporation, in addition to the theatres operated by its five principal subsidiaries, is now interested, through two wholly owned subsidiaries, in the operation of two outstanding first run 'show case' theatres: The Fox Theatre in Detroit and the Fox Theatre in Philadelphia. These theatres were initially designed to operate with symphony orchestras and stage shows. Both of these theatres were originally constructed by affiliates of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation not only to provide an adequate first-run outlet for its product, but also to further the exploitation of its pictures. These theatres are important releasing points for the product of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation not only in the city in which they are located but in all communities in the surrounding territory. In consequence, Twentieth Century-Fox contributes in large measure to the preparation and the expense of advertising and other exploitation material deemed desirable in the proper launching of its product in these two large theatres.

"Fox Theatre—Detroit

"The Fox Theatre in Detroit, Michigan, with 5,041 seats is the largest and finest theatre in the City of Detroit. It is operated on a first-run policy showing first run in the City of Detroit subtantially all of the better pictures distributed by Twentieth Century-Fox, Universal and Columbia. The Fox will occasionally also exhibit a first-run picture distributed by such other distributors as RKO and Monogram. In Detroit, National Theatres Corporation, through a subsidiary, also has a minority interest in the operations of the Adams Theatre (1,545 seats) which operates on a first run or continued first run policy showing pictures distributed by the same companies as those whose pictures are exhibited at the Fox.

"For a period of about seven years between 1931 and 1939 the Fox Theatre was operated by the Union Guardian Trust Company as Receiver. During this period it exhibited first run in the City of Detroit, the pictures of substantially the same distributors as those now being shown in the theatre. The Fox Theatre operates, and has always operated, in competition with the other first run Detroit theatres, and with the subsequent run theatres in its area, its principal competitors being United Artists and Michigan Theatres.

"Fox Theatre—Philadelphia, Pa.

"The Fox Theatre in Philadelphia, Pa. is one of the largest and finest theatres in Philadelphia. It has 2,423 seats and is about the same size as the other principal first run theatres with the exception of the 4,700 seat Mastbaum. In the middle 1930's the Fox Theatre was leased to Stanley Company of America, which operated the theatre as a first run Philadelphia house until October 5, 1945, when its existing lease was terminated and the operations of the theatre were again taken over by a subsidiary of National Theatres Corporation. The Fox Theatre is now playing, first run in the City of Philadelphia the pictures distributed by Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation. The Fox theatre operates in competition with other first run Philadelphia theatres and with the subsequent run theatres located in the same area.

"Neither National Theatres Corporation, nor its subsidiaries operating theatres in Detroit and Philadelphia, respectively, have conspired or combined with, and none of them has any agreement or understanding with, any other defendant in this case to restrain interstate trade or commerce or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize interstate trade or commerce in the distribution or exhibition of motion pictures. None of them has any agreement, express or implied, with any other defendant, relating in any way to the distribution or exhibition of motion pictures other than the express license agreements each of such subsidiaries has made for the licensing of pictures in its theatre or theatres.

"I also deny that National Theatres Corporation, or its subsidiaries operating theatres in Philadelphia and Detroit, respectively, either individually or in conjunction or combination with any other person have engaged in any practice which is unfair or discriminatory with respect to any exhibitor with which they or any of them compete.

(Sgd.) Dan Michalove."

(2925)

Mr. Caskey: In the course of the testimony the defendant Twentieth Century-Fox called its general sales manager, Mr. Kupper, and there were also present in court the vice-president in charge of production, Mr. Connors, and the eastern sales manager, Mr. Smith, and their stipulations were received orally. I have now stipulations from the other three division sales managers, Mr. Harry G. Ballance, who has the South; Mr. William C. Gehring, sales manager for the Central Division, and Mr. Herman Wobber, who has the West.

I ask to have these incorporated into the record.

(The affidavit of HARRY G. BALLANCE is as follows:)

"HARRY G. BALLANCE, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

"I have been employed by Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation or its predecessor since November 28, 1932 when I became southern district manager. On August 3, 1942, I became division manager for the southern division and on August 27, 1945, the southern division was made an entirely autonomous division.

"As such sales manager, I have direct charge of The Twentieth Century-Fox Film exchanges in Atlanta, Georgia, Charlotte, North Carolina, New Orleans, Louisiana, Dallas, Texas, Memphis, Tennes-(2926)

see, and Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

"In the respective exchange areas over which I have supervision, there is not now, and to the best of my knowledge, information and belief there has not been any contract, agreement, understanding or concert of action between Twentieth Century-Fox and any one or more of the defendants with respect to any of the following matters:

"The restraining of competition among or between the defendants, or any of them, in either the distribution or the exhibition of motion pictures.

"The terms upon which or the time when feature films were or were to be licensed by any distributor defendant to any exhibitor.

"The discriminating in favor of so-called 'affiliated' against so-called 'independent' theatres with respect to any of the license terms granted because of the fact of being a part of a circuit or because of the so-called 'affiliation.'

"The exclusion of so-called 'independent' exhibitors from operating first run theatres in competition with so-called 'affiliated' theatres.

"The exclusion of so-called 'independent' exhibitors from operating subsequent run theatres on the same run as and in competition with so-(2927)
called 'affiliated' theatres.

"The use of first and other early run so-called 'affiliated' theatres to control the film supply, run, clearance or admission prices of operators of competing 'unaffiliated' theatres.

"The division of available films among theatres owned or controlled by two or more producer-exhibitor defendants.

"The preventing or hindering of the distribution of motion pictures produced by so-called 'independent' producers.

"The form of license agreement used or to be used after 1930, in licensing the exhibition of films or any provision included or to be included therein.

"The film rental, whether flat or percentage, charged or to be charged by Twentieth Century-Fox to any theatre or theatres.

"The run granted or to be granted for any theatre, whether a so-called 'affiliated' theatre or a so-called 'independent' theatre.

"The clearance granted or to be granted for any theatre, whether a so-called 'affiliated' theatre or a so-called 'independent' theatre, or the manner or form in which the clearance in any city or area shall be set up or stated.

(2928)

"The minimum admission prices inserted or to be inserted in licenses for any theatre, whether a so-called 'affiliated' theatre or not.

"In saying this I do not, of course, refer to individual contracts licensing the exhibition of films which Twentieth Century-Fox, as a distributor or exhibitor has regularly made in the course of its business with another of the defendants herein, the legal effect of which is limited to the contracting parties. I do deny any combination of the defendants to do the acts which I have mentioned at any time after the ending of the National Recovery Act.

"In each of the exchange areas over which I have supervision, Twentieth Century-Fox has not prevented any defendant or any so-called 'independent' distributor from competing with Twentieth Century-Fox for the distribution of film product. Nor has it ever discriminated in favor of so-called 'affiliated' theatres against 'independent' theatres with respect to any of the license terms granted because of the so-called affiliation. Nor has Twentieth Century-Fox ever conditioned its granting a license for the exhibition of films distributed by Twentieth Century-Fox in theatres operated or controlled by another producer-exhibitor defendant upon such other defendant granting

(2929)

National theatres a license for the exhibition of films distributed by such other defendant in theatres operated or controlled by National.

"Nor has Twentieth Century-Fox any agreement or understanding with any prior run exhibitor, either a so-called 'affiliate' or 'independent', fixing the minimum admission price which Twentieth Century-Fox must insert in its license agreement with a subsequent-run exhibitor."

Jurat. signed HARRY G. BALLANCE.

(The affidavit of WILLIAM C. GEHRING is as follows:)

"WILLIAM C. GEHRING, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

"I have been employed by Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation or its predecessor since December 30, 1918, when I was engaged as a poster clerk in the Buffalo branch office. Since then I have been a salesman and an assistant manager in several exchanges, a branch manager in several exchanges, a home office representative with special sales duties in New York and on December 28, 1936, I was made central sales manager. On July 7, 1942, I became western sales manager and on August 27, 1945, I became sales manager for the central division.

"As such sales manager, I have the direct supervision of the Twentieth Century-Fox Film exchanges in Chicago, Illinois, Detroit, Michigan, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, Cincinnati, Ohio, Cleveland, Ohio, Indian-(2930)

apolis, Indiana, Des Moines, Iowa, Minneapolis, Minnesota, Omaha, Nebraska, Kansas City, Kansas, St. Louis, Missouri, and of all of the Canadian exchanges.

"In the respective exchange areas over which I have supervision, there is not now, and to the best of my knowledge, information and belief there has not been any contract, agreement, understanding or concert of action between Twentieth Century-Fox and any one or more of the defendants with respect to any of the following matters:

"The restraining of competition among or between the defendants, or any of them, in either the distribution or the exhibition of motion pictures.

"The exclusion of so-called 'independent' exhibitors from operating first run theatres in competition with so-called 'affiliated' theatres.

"The exclusion of so-called 'independent' exhibitors from operating subsequent run theatres on the same run as and in competition with so-(2931)
called 'affiliated' theatres.

"The use of first and other early run so-called 'affiliated' theatres to control the film supply, run, clearance or admission prices of operators of competing 'unaffiliated' theatres.

"The division of available films among theatres owned or controlled by two or more producer-exhibitor defendants.

"The preventing or hindering of the distribution of motion pictures produced by so-called 'independent' producers.

"The form of license agreement used or to be used after 1930, in licensing the exhibition of films or any provision included or to be included therein.

"The film rental, whether flat or percentage, charged or to be charged by Twentieth Century-Fox to any theatre or theatres.

"The run granted or to be granted for any theatre, whether a so-called 'affiliated' theatre or a so-called 'independent' theatre.

"The clearance granted or to be granted for any theatre, whether a so-called 'affiliated' theatre or a so-called 'independent' theatre, or the manner or form in which the clearances in any city or area shall be set up or stated.

"The minimum admission prices inserted or to be inserted in licenses for any theatre, whether a so-called 'affiliated' theatre or not.

"In saying this I do not, of course, refer to individual contracts licensing the exhibition of films which Twentieth Century-Fox, as a distributor or exhibitor has regularly made in the course of its business with another of the defendants herein, the legal effect of which is limited to the contracting parties. I do deny any combination of the defendants to do the acts which I have mentioned at any time after the ending of the National Recovery Act.

"In each of the exchange areas over which I have supervision, Twentieth Century-Fox has not prevented any defendant or any so-called 'independent' distributor from competing with Twentieth Century-Fox for the distribution of film product. Nor has it ever discriminated in favor of so-called 'affiliated' theatres against 'independent' theatres with respect to any of the license terms granted because of the so-called affiliation. Nor has Twentieth Century-Fox ever conditioned its granting a license for the exhibition of films distributed by Twentieth Century-Fox in theatres operated or controlled by another producer-exhibitor defendant upon such other defendant granting National Theatres a license for the exhibition of films distributed by such other defendant in theatres operated or controlled by National.

Jurat. (signed) WILLIAM C. GEHRING.

(The affidavit of Herman Wobber is as follows:)

"HERMAN WOBBER, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

"At the present time I am one of the four Divisional Sales Managers of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation. I have been employed by Twentieth Century-Fox since November 12, 1932, when I became District Manager of the Pacific Coast Division. On June 6, 1938, I became General Sales Manager at New York City. On June 1, 1942, I left New York to become Western Division Manager and Pacific Coast District Manager. On September 14, 1942, I became Division Manager for the West Coast and on August 27, 1945, the Western Division was made a separate autonomous division.

"Nor has Twentieth Century-Fox any agreement or understanding with any prior run exhibitor, either a so-called 'affiliate' or 'independent,' fixing the minimum admission price which Twentieth Century-Fox must insert in its license agreement with a subsequent-run exhibitor."

Mr. Caskey: Will you mark this for identification.

(Marked Defendant Twentieth Century-Fox Exhibit F-23 for identification.)

Mr. Caskey: I offer in evidence F-23 for identification, being a resume of the film rentals paid by National Theatres to several distributors of motion pictures from the year 1935 through 1944 in terms of percentage.

Mr. Wright: I take it on this Exhibit F-23 that the initials GWTW stand for the picture Gone With The Wind. The Court does not know that.

Mr Caskey: I will so stipulate.

(Defendant Twentieth Century-Fox's Exhibit F-23 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Caskey: Will you mark this for identification.

(Marked Defendant Twentieth Century-Fox's Exhibit F-2 for identification.)

(2938)

Mr. Caskey: I offer in evidence Exhibit F-24 for identification, being a schedule showing the earnings after taxes and dividends paid by National Theatres Corporation.

(Defendant Twentieth Century-Fox's Exhibit F-24 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Caskey: Will you mark this for identification.

(Marked Defendant Twentieth Century-Fox's Exhibit F-25 for identification.)

Harold J. Mirisch

Mr. Caskey: I offer in evidence F-25 for identification, an illustrated schedule prepared from Exhibit F-21 showing the relationship of the revenue derived from the first-run in the 92 cities compared with the total revenue in the United States on the picture Sweet Rosie O'Grady, and the distribution of that first-run revenue among nine groups of theatres, including five of the defendants. The phrase "National Theatres" embraces the Roxy Theatre.

(2939)

Mr. Caskey: I offer in evidence Defendant Fox's Exhibit F-26, which is again simply an illustration of the data already in evidence as F-19. It consists of three charts and is, I think, self-explanatory.

(Marked Fox's Exhibit F-26 in evidence.)

Mr. Caskey: Finally, I offer in evidence Defendant Fox's Exhibit F-27, two charts, showing the percentage of revenue derived from the five exhibitor defendants to the total revenue. This is predicated upon Exhibit F-18 already in evidence.

(Marked Fox's Exhibit F-27 in evidence.)

Mr. Caskey: The defendants Twentieth Century-Fox and National Theatres Corporation rest.

Mr. Leisure: If the Court please, we have three stipulations which we have taken up with Mr. Wright, general denials, with respect to Mr. Ned E. Depinet, Mr. Harold J. Mirisch and Mr. J. Malcolm Kingsberg, which we ask to have incorporated in the record.

(The stipulations are as follows):

"IT IS HEREBY STIPULATED, that if HAROLD J. MIRISCH were called as a witness in behalf of the RKO defendants in the above-entitled action, he would testify that he is, and since June 1942 has been generally in charge of the licensing of pictures for exhibition in theatres operated by Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation or its subsidiaries, and during said time has been generally familiar with the policies pursued by the RKO defendants in the licensing of pictures for exhibition in said theatres.

(2940)

"APPENDIX A

"IT IS FURTHER STIPULATED, that if said witness were called upon to testify in response to the questions annexed hereto as Appendix A, he would answer in the negative.

"1. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding between any RKO defendant or defendants and any other defendant or defendants to divide the available films among the affiliated theatres owned or controlled by two or more producer-exhibitor defendants located in the same competitive area without competitive negotiations?

"2. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding between any RKO defendant or defendants and any other defendant or defendants not to compete with one another in the licensing of motion pictures to be exhibited in cities or towns where two or more of them had interests in theatres?

proceeds from the operation thereof is divided between two or more exhibitor defendants for the purpose of unreasonably restraining competition or monopolizing exhibition or distribution with respect to such theatre?

"4. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding between any RKO defendant or defendants and any other defendant or defendants to refrain from building, buying or offering to lease theatres in areas where they might compete with existing affiliated theatres?

"5. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding between any RKO defendant or defendants and any other defendant or defendants to acquire a monopoly or to monopolize the business of exhibiting motion pictures in the United States or in any city, town or competitive area therein?"

"IT IS HEREBY STIPULATED, than if NED E. DEPINET were called as a witness in behalf of the RKO defendants in the above entitled action, he would testify that he is, and since June 25, 1942 has been, president of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., and that between January 14, 1932 and June 25, 1942 he was vice president of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., and that during all of such time he has been generally familiar with the policies of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. in licensing the pictures which it distributes.

(2942)

"IT IS FURTHER STIPULATED, that if said witness were called upon to testify in response to the questions annexed hereto as Appendix A, he would answer in the negative.

"APPENDIX A

"1. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding between any RKO defendant or defendants and any other defendant or defendants to fix the terms upon which motion pictures would be licensed for exhibition to any exhibitor in the United States?

"2. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding between any RKO defendant or defendants and any other defendant or defendants to license any pictures for exhibition in any theatre before the pictures have been purchased and before any exhibitor has had a fair opportunity to estimate the value and character of the films licensed and before such films have been completed or trade shown?

"3. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding between any RKO defendant or defendants and any other defendant or defendants to condition the licensing of one or more films or group of films upon the licensing of another film or group of films?

"4. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding between any RKO defendant or defendants and any other defendant or defendants to condition the licensing of film in one theatre or group of theatres upon the licensing of film in another theatre or group of theatres?

"5. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding between any RKO defendant or defendants to enter into long term franchises with circuits or theatres or to suppress competition offered by competing theatres during the terms of such long term franchises or to preclude independent distributors from licensing their pictures to those circuit theatres?

"6. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any understanding or agreement between any RKO defendant or defendants and any other defendant or defendants to discriminate with respect to the license terms granted to circuit theatres because such theatres are part of a circuit?

"7. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding between any RKO defendant and any other defendant or defendants to favor, in licensing their pictures, the theatres in which the defendants or any of them have an interest as against the theatres of exhibitors in which none of the defendants has an interest either with respect to run, clearance, license fees, or any other license terms?

(2944)

tion of such other defendant licensing its pictures for exhibition in a theatre or theatres in which RKO has an interest?

"9. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding between any RKO defendant or defendants and any other defendant or defendants to exclude independently produced motion pictures from theatres in which the defendants or any of them have an interest?

"10. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding between any RKO defendant or defendants and any other defendant or defendants to exclude non-affiliated exhibitors from the operation of competing first run theatres in cities and towns where there are theatres in which a defendant or defendants have an interest?

(2945)

"12. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding between any RKO defendant or defendants and any other defendant or defendants to control the film supply, run, clearance and admission price of operators of unaffiliated theatres in the cities, towns or competitive areas where affiliated theatres are located or elsewhere?

"13. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding between any RKO defendant or defendants and any other defendant or defendants as to the terms upon which each or any of them would license its film to unaffiliated exhibitors?

"14. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding between any RKO defendant or defendants and any other defendant or defendants to deprive any theatre operator of the supply of film or to withhold film from an unaffiliated exhibitor or to limit the terms and conditions on which licenses would be made to any unaffiliated exhibitor?

in the same competitive area without competitive negotiations?"

"IT IS HEREBY STIPULATED, that if J. MALCOLM KINGSBERG were called as a witness in behalf of the RKO defendants in the above-entitled action, he would testify that he is, and since September 20, 1943 has been, vice president and treasurer of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation (Delaware); that from April 26, 1934 until the corporation was dissolved on September 29, 1944, he was vice-president of Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation; that he is, and since January 18, 1940 has been, vice president of B. F. Keith Corporation; that he is, and since December 1941 has been, president of RKO Orpheum Corporation; that he is, and since February 17, 1942 has been, president of RKO Midwest Corporation; that he is, and since May 26, 1942 has been, president of RKO Proctor Corporation; and that during the time he occupied the positions above stated he was familiar with the policies of the RKO defendants in respect of the licensing of pictures in theatres operated by Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation or its subsidiaries.

"IT IS FURTHER STIPULATED, that if said witness were called upon to testify in response to the questions annexed hereto as Appendix A, he would answer in the negative.

(2947)

"APPENDIX A.

"1. Has there been or is there to your knowlege any agreement or understanding between any RKO defendant or defendants and any other defendant or defendants to divide the available films among the affiliated theatres owned or controlled by two or more producer-exhibitor defendants located in the same competitive area without competitive negotiations?

"2. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding between any RKO defendant or defendants and any other defendant or defendants not to compete with one another in the licensing of motion pictures to be exhibited in cities or towns where two or more of them had interests in theatres?

"3. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding between any RKO defendant or defendants and any other defendant or defendants to enter into joint agreements with respect to a theater where the film buying control or proceeds from the operation thereof is divided between two or more exhibitor defendants for the purpose of unreasonably restraining competition or monopolizing exhibition or distribution with respect to such theatre?

"4. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding between any RKO defendant or defendants and any other defendant or defendants to refrain from building, buying or offering to lease theatres in areas where they might compete with existing affiliated theatres?

"5. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding between any RKO defendant or defendants and any other defendant or defendants to acquire a monopoly or to monopolize the business of exhibiting motion pictures in the United States or in any city, town or competitive area therein?"

Judge Bright: Is that your case, Mr. Leisure?

Mr. Leisure: Yes, sir.

Judge Hand: All the defendants then rest, is that right?

Mr. Seymour: I had certain reservations, your Honors will recall, to add a few affidavits and the problem of correcting the record, and those reservations persist, and, subject to them, I have rested.

Judge Hand: Are they on the wing now?

Mr. Seymour: I am told so.

at this time.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I would first like to see that some corrections are made of record here with respect to exhibits. There were certain exhibits, that is, Nos. 72, 120 and 133 which have been stamped by the clerk as received in evidence, but the record transcript does not reflect them as having been received, and I think the transcript should be corrected accordingly. I take it there is no objection from anyone.

Mr. Proskauer: Probably won't be if you will talk so we can hear you.

(2950)

Mr. Wright: As to Exhibit 153, that is also marked as having been received in evidence. However, I do not believe it clearly appears in the record that it was received, and it should appear in the record as having been received.

Mr. Caskey: Just a minute, Mr. Wright. 72 is the first one?

Mr. Wright: 72. That appears at page 283 of the transcript; and 120 at page 318; Exhibit 133 at page 325.

Mr. Davis: Are you using the numbers now that are in your——

Mr. Wright: The typewritten transcript.

Mr. Davis: But not the numbers in your Government Exhibit list?

Mr. Wright: Yes, I am referring to the exhibit——

Mr. Davis: The same numbers?

Mr. Wright: Yes, the same numbers.

Mr. Caskey: As to those three, 72, 120 and 133, our records show they were admitted.

Mr. Wright: I do not think there is any question about it. And 153 is also marked as having been received and I think the record was ambiguous in that respect and it should clearly appear that it is in evidence. That I think is at page 348 of the transcript.

Mr. Caskey: We show it admitted.

Mr. Wright: There are a couple of errors in description in the list of Government's exhibits for identification that I would like to call to the Court's attention at this time. The description as to 221, if you will turn to page 104 of the Government's exhibits for identification——

(2951)

Mr. Davis: What is wrong about that?

Mr. Wright: 221 should have, in addition to the theatre names that you see there, added to it the Tower and the 69th Street.

Mr. Proskauer: Whatever the agreement shows, it shows. I haven't got it before me.

Mr. Wright: That is right, but this is just for your——

Judge Bright: They are all of Philadelphia?

Mr. Wright: — and the Court's convenience. (To Judge Bright:) Yes.

Then as to the following exhibit, 222, the description you see there should be stricken. That exhibit is a supplementary agreement between Paramount and Fox West-Coast, dated November 5, 1943, which supplements Exhibit 232, and if you will turn to page 102, Exhibit 200, at the bottom of the page, the theatre names there, Crotona, Nemo and Park Plaza, those should be stricken, and the correct theatre names are Riverside, Colonial and 81st Street.

(2952)

Then I have some corrected data which has been furnished us by the defendants since our case was closed, which I should like to have marked and added. The first is an exhibit which I should like to have marked as 95-A, which corrects errors that appeared in Exhibit 95. That relates to RKO's interrogatory answers.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 95-A.)

Mr. Wright: And a supplemental answer to interrogatories 3, 12 and 13, submitted by Warner Bros., which modifies the data previously offered in evidence as Exhibit 125. I will ask to have that marked as Exhibit 125-A.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 125-A.)

Judge Bright: 125 was excluded, wasn't it?

Mr. Wright: I think not.

Judge Bright: Oh, I see. Part of it was.

Mr. Caskey: 4 and 5 were excluded, your Honor.

Mr. Wright: Yes, that is correct. What I have just offered relates to 3, 12 and 13.

And I have here supplemental interrogatory data furnished by Warner Bros., which I will ask to have marked as Exhibits 126-A and 126-B respectively; 126-A relating to Lawrence, Massachusetts, and 126-B relating to Columbus, Ohio, and Atlanta, Georgia, and Oakland, California, all of which supplement the data previously in evidence as Exhibit 126.

(2953)

(Marked Government's Exhibits 126-A and 126-B respectively.)

Mr. Wright: Mr. Davis has just handed me some corrections here. The first one, which relates to Exhibit 163, I will ask you to have marked in evidence as Exhibit 163-A.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 163-A.)

Mr. Wright: And this second letter also pertains to 163 and we will have that marked as Exhibit 163-B.

(Marked Exhibit 163-B.)

Mr. Wright: Then I should like to have marked and received in evidence as Exhibit 266-A, a supplementary agreement dated May 18, 1944, and letter attached, dated November 15, 1943, which extended the term of the franchise that is in evidence as Exhibit 266, one for Columbia pictures in the Warner circuit, extending it through the 1945-46 season.

Mr. Frohlich: May I see that, Mr. Wright.

Mr. Wright: The franchise in evidence is here as 266 and the supplement 266-A, you have there in your hand.

Mr. Frohlich: This extends it down to the 1945-46 season?

Mr. Wright: Through the 1945-46 season.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 266-A.)

Mr. Wright: And I have here the pages which were missing from Exhibit 272, which Mr. Raftery furnished. That is an agreement between United Artists Corporation and Fox West Coast Agency Corporation. I ask to have this marked as Exhibit 272-A.

(2954)

Mr. Raftery: I gave you the whole file. Is that taken out of that, or what is it?

Mr. Wright: No, this relates to Stage Door Canteen.

Mr. Raftery: All right.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 272-A.)

Mr. Caskey: I would like to see it.

(Exhibit handed to Mr. Caskey.)

Mr. Caskey: Where is 272?

(Exhibit 272 handed to Mr. Caskey.)

Mr. Caskey: This is unexecuted and I have no knowledge of it.

Mr. Wright: I will withdraw it and go on to something else if there is any question about it.

Mr. Raftery: I want it in.

Mr. Wright: I say, I will withdraw it temporarily for checking and go on to something else if there is any question about what it is.

Mr. Raftery: When we produced the document we explained to the Court and to Mr. Wright that we did not have an executed copy, but we vouch for the authenticity of the copy; and we had an extensive examination of witnesses about the sliding scale on (2955)

Stage Door Canteen, and those are the supporting documents. If Mr. Caskey can produce the original I shall withdraw the copy, but we want it in evidence.

Mr. Caskey: Well, go ahead, and we will look at 272.

Mr. Wright: Then I have here a letter agreement dated September 22, 1943, between United Artists and Loew's Inc., relating to the exhibition of a picture in the Loew's Greater New York Circuit, which supplements Exhibit 270 in evidence, and I will ask to have this marked as 270-A.

Mr. Caskey: Is that one that I gave you?

Mr. Wright: That is my understanding.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Wright, the pencil notations on this are not part of the offer, are they?

Mr. Wright: I think those were on it when they were handed to me. I have no objection to their being erased.

Mr. Davis: I do not know where they come from and I do not know what they mean, but I do not think they ought to be part of the exhibit.

(Pencil notations erased.)

(Marked Government's Exhibit 270-A in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Now I should also like to offer at this time, the correspondence which was identified while Mr. Mochrie was on the stand. I take it, Mr. Leisure, there is no objection to its not being the original?

(2956)

Mr. Leisure: As to this letter, if the Court please, it is a typewritten copy, not a carbon copy, and the witness did not remember receiving it, and we have no copy or original in the file. Now, if Mr. Wright will endeavor to locate a carbon copy of some kind—I do not want to raise any technical objection. On the other hand, when the witness does not have any recollection of the letter in any way, and it is not even a carbon copy, it does not seem to me that it would be proper not to raise objection to it.

Mr. Wright: Well, I might point out that in Exhibit 389, which Mr. Mochrie signed, he did recall writing that letter, and he refers there to his reply to Mr. Weiss' letter of July 24th. Now we can, I suppose, have Mr. Weiss give us a statement to the effect that this is a copy of the letter that he wrote on that day.

Mr. Leisure: I wonder if we can work it out outside the courtroom, Mr. Wright. I do not want to take the time of the Court, and I assure you I shall raise no technical objection. The only question, of course, is whether or not this reply you hold in your hand is the reply received by Mr. Mochrie, if he received one.

Mr. Wright: Mr. Mochrie's is the reply, and the (2957)
carbon is the letter to which he replied.

Mr. Leisure: Oh, I see. I do not think we will have any trouble with it, probably, but I think we ought to discuss it outside the court, if you would like to. I won't raise any technical objection.

Mr. Wright: Then I will ask to have marked and offer as Exhibit 391, the copy of theatre manager's weekly reports referred to in the testimony of Mr. Goldenson but not produced at that time.

Mr. Seymour: May I see it, Mr. Wright?

(Reports handed to Mr. Seymour.)

(Marked Government's Exhibit 391.)

Mr. Wright: And I shall also offer in evidence as Exhibit 392, the list of grosses of foreign pictures released by United Artists Corporation which were on the list offered in evidence by Mr. Montague of Columbia as successful foreign pictures.

Mr. Raftery: Were those grosses?

Mr. Wright: Those were the grosses that you produced.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 392.)

Mr. Wright: I merely want to call the Court's attention to the fact that on that list of eleven pictures there is only one, In Which We Serve, which grossed in excess of $600,000, and only one other which grossed in excess of $500,000.

Mr. Raftery: Why don't you give the gross instead of saying in excess of $600,000.

Mr. Wright: I will read them all into the record if the Court wants to hear them.

Mr. Raftery: No. Just In Which We Serve.

Mr. Wright: In Which We Serve, the top figure is $1,514,000. Major Barbara at the bottom is $216,682.74. And I repeat, there are only two on the entire list which grossed more than $500,000.

Judge Hand: That is a kind of an argument just against bigness, as tending to show monopoly, I suppose.

Mr. Wright: Well, Mr. Montague, as you recall, offered this list of what he called foreign pictures which had been successes in this market. I attempted to show he did not have any knowledge of what they grossed at the time he was on the stand, and this I think confirms the fact.

I shall offer as Exhibit 393 a statement received from RKO as to theatre interests of its officials.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 393.)

Mr. Wright: And I offer as Exhibit 394, a list of franchises made by RKO which was furnished in response to our request for a list of franchises made with the defendants at any time, which were more than ten years; those made since 1930 which were (2959)

more than five years, and those made since 1935 which were two years or more.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 394.)

Mr. Wright: I shall also offer as Exhibit 394-A a letter from counsel for RKO adding one franchise to that list, and also noting that six of the franchises on the list have been extended through the season 1947-48.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 394-A.)

Mr. Wright: And as Exhibit 394-B, I offer the form of the extension in each case. The date of the extensions is April 22, 1942. That is since the date of the consent decree.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 394-B.)

Mr. Wright: And as Exhibit 394-C, I offer a letter from RKO counsel, setting forth agreements now in force between RKO theatres and Fox, Universal and Columbia, which extend through the 1947-48, 1945-46, and 1946-47 playing seasons respectively, the agreements which were with Universal and Columbia having been executed on January 19, 1942, and January 19, 1944, respectively.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 394-C.)

Mr. Wright: I shall also ask to have marked and offer in evidence as Exhibit 395, a franchise agreement between Fox Film, Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, and RKO Proctor Corporation, by their agent RKO Film Booking Corporation, dated August 1, 1934, which relates to the pooling agreements in evidence as Exhibits 200, 201, in which certain RKO theatres were pooled with certain Skouras and Randforce theatres, and these agreements provide that the RKO books for all of the other theatres as well as the RKO theatres.

(2960)

(Marked Government's Exhibit 395.)

Mr. Wright: And I shall offer in evidence as Exhibit 396 the list of franchises supplied by Loew's Inc. in response to the similar request to that which I just referred to as having been made from RKO.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 396.)

Mr. Davis: May I see that Exhibit 396, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Yes (handing).

Mr. Davis: You notice, of course, that all those franchises expired. There is nothing there which contradicts the testimony of the witness.

Mr. Raftery: Were those with respect to Loew's as a distributor or Loew's as an exhibitor?

Mr. Davis: Loew's as a distributor.

Mr. Wright: I offer as Exhibit 397 a statement or a stipulation between Paramount and ourselves which reads as follows:

"Towns in addition to those read into evidence in which there are no theatres except as indicated other than those in which Paramount has a direct or indirect financial interest. These towns have a population of less than 25,000 and comprise the balance of the situations in this category in which special agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation under the supervision of the Department of Justice conducted a survey. This includes only towns where there was an F. B. I. survey and only as to such of said towns as to which the parties have reached an agreement, as to the facts herein."

(2961)

Then there is set forth the name of the town, the population, the Paramount theatres, and in each case Paramount has all the theatres in the town except where there is another theatre catering to colored or Mexican patrons, independently operated.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 397).

Mr. Seymour: These stipulations are quite correct but they are all subject to the objection of materiality and relevancy that I think I made when the original list went in.

Mr. Wright: Surely. And I shall offer as Exhibit 398 an additional list of towns in which Paramount has all of the first-run theatres.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 398.)

(2962)

Mr. Wright: I would like to have marked and I offer it it evidence as Exhibit 399, a document which represents the form of agreement used in making the so-called Paramount formula deals with the Paramount affiliates. This agreement, I think, has some special significance. I would like to call the Court's attention to precisely what is in it.

This document has, first, a list of the circuits which are parties to the deal, with a percentage key opposite each one, showing the percentage of the national gross of the feature pictures involved that each of the so-called Paramount partners in the deal is to contribute.

Of course these circuits listed in this first column are in some cases a hundred per cent owned, in some cases only fifty per cent owned, by Paramount.

Then the form of agreement I should like to read your Honors, with your indulgence:

"AGREEMENT made this day of as of by and between PARAMOUNT PICTURES INC. and PARAMOUNT FILM DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION (hereinafter collectively referred to as the 'Distributor'), parties of the first part, and" —in that case the exhibitor circuit is inserted— "a corporation, for itself and as agent for its subsidiary and affiliated corporations operating the theatres covered by this agreement (2963) (hereinafter collectively referred to as the 'Exhibitor'), parties of the second part.

"First: The Distributor, subject to the terms and conditions hereinafter specified, grants to the Exhibitor a limited license under the respective copyrights of the motion pictures licensed hereunder to exhibit in the theatres listed in the annexed Schedule 'A', hereby made a part hereof, for the respective runs designated therein, the feature photoplays which shall be generally released by the Distributors for exhibition in Motion Picture Theatres in the United States during the period commencing September 25, 1942 and ending September 23, 1943"——

Judge Hand: Were they theatres or subsidiary companies of Paramount or were they theatres of the other defendants?

Mr. Wright: The Schedule A attached lists and involves only the theatres of these various affiliates that are listed in this first page. The schedule——

Judge Hand: You did not exactly answer my question. I mean, were they theatres that were subsidiaries of Paramount or in which they had an interest, or were they theatres of the other defendants here that have been spoken of——

Mr. Wright: No.

Judge Hand: Roughly, as affiliates?

(2964)

Mr. Wright: These are all theatres in which Paramount has an interest and, insofar as I know, none of the other defendants is interested in the theatres covered by this agreement. They are, however, for all of the theatres—the theatres listed, of course, include theatres in which Paramount has varying degrees of interest from 100 per cent down to perhaps 15 or 25.

"Second: The term 'run' as used in this agreement shall be deemed to mean any of the following:

"1. The exhibition of one (1) feature photoplay at a single theatre for a consecutive number of days;

"2. The simultaneous exhibition of the same feature photoplay on the same days and dates at two theatres located in the same locality or town, charging the same admission prices, commonly referred to as a 'day and date exhibition';

"3. If after the exhibition of a feature photoplay at one theatre the said feature photoplay is moved over to another theatre within the same town or locality charging the same admission price for a continuous run, the exhibition at both theatres for the purposes of this agreement shall be deemed one run."

I merely call attention to these provisions because under this form of agreement the use and actual number of exhibitions in these theatres on the schedule are left wholly flexible within the determination of the exhibitor and he is not restricted in the number of simultaneous first-runs or such moveovers as he may desire to use in any locality.

Judge Goddard: Does it contain a definition of first-run, whether it is the first time a picture is shown anywhere or first time shown in a certain locality?

Mr. Wright: I take it, clearly, the schedule when it says here, naming the theatres, "Town, Omaha; State, Nebraska; Run, first" means first-run in the City of Omaha; that is, the area is shown in each case with the statement of the run.

Judge Bright: Mr. Wright, isn't that provision about moveover the same as in the ordinary license agreement?

Mr. Wright: I beg your pardon?

Judge Bright: Isn't that provision in that agreement with reference to moveover practically the same as in your individual license agreements?

Mr. Wright: With this exception, here your individual license agreement generally covers or is limited to a particular group of theatres, and here you are extending that privilege of flexibility in runs over the entire country through this.

(2966)

Mr. Seymour: Oh, you are wrong about that, Mr. Wright. Each of these formula deal agreements is made with a particular theatre operating company and relates to the theatres in that locality. This moveover privilege is the same privilege that is given to independent exhibitors who have two houses under common ownership and who charge the same rices in both houses. I don't think there is any doubt about that.

Mr. Wright: I think, as applied to an agreement of this type, there is a very obvious difference, when you consider what is being shown here in relation to the way the rental is being computed. In the ordinary license agreement you license a specific run or runs in particular theatres and the rental is made dependent on performance in those particular theatres, whether it be on one run or a series of runs, but in this case the exhibitors are given this complete flexibility of this type without any corresponding increase or decrease in license fee burden. Your license fee under this kind of deal is simply an allocation among these circuits of the total film rental burden and when you make a deal of that kind and at the same time give these people complete flexibility as to how many day and date runs they shall have or how many moveovers shall be had in any particular area, then it seems to me that practice in and of itself is a serious discrimination against a man who is bound to buy and pay for particular runs on the basis of what the picture earned in those runs.

Judge Bright: As I understand it, on this particular agreement that you refer to, the percentage of their rental is based on the national gross, whereas on the ordinary license agreement it is based on the gross of the particular theatre.

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Bright: Might not the payment to be made by one of these circuits be more onerous in those instances than it would be if they had an individual license?

Mr. Wright: That is, I suppose, conceivable, but having been given these unlimited privileges there, without any increase in the license fee being made dependent upon the expansion or extension of that privilege, I think you would normally expect that the privilege would be used in the manner most profitable to the circuit.

Mr. Seymour: You will recall, if I may intrude, Mr. Reagan testified as Judge Bright's question indicates, that Paramount's distribution department considered that this method of getting compensation was better, from the point of view of the distribution department, than any other methods; that they got higher rentals this way. The rental this way is dependent upon the success of each picture.

(2968)

Mr. Caskey: Your Honors will recall in regard to subsidiaries of National Theatres Corporation, that Mr. Reagan specifically testified it was not an apportionment of any burden, but he first of all arrived at a figure which he thought he should get, he then increased that percentage, and then negotiated it out, and he testified categorically that the result which he received was greater than he would have received in any other manner.

In regard to the similar contracts for National, I think that Mr. Wright ought to temper the generality of his language. Take a specific case, Spokane, Washington. You can only have a simultaneous run or a moveover if you have got a theatre that can be operated on the same admission policy as your principal theatre. These contracts relate to two or three or one picture, so it is no privilege to go out and acquire additional theatres because they relate to pictures already made to play in theatres already in existence, and you are definitely limited in your simultaneous first-run right or your move-over right by the facilities that you have and the number of people you can get to come to your theatres at the same admission price.

Judge Bright: As I understand Mr. Wright's position, it is that because of this liberal provision for moveover that, possibly, in a circuit where there are a number of theatres that these exhibitors would so manipulate the picture that they could earn much more than they otherwise could, is that it?

Mr. Wright: That is precisely it, and under an agreement like this without any corresponding increase in film rental.

Mr. Caskey: Yes, but the manipulation, if we may use that word of Mr. Wright's, you book the picture say in Spokane, into the Fox theatre, which is the best theatre in town, and now, if you have got a right to play it simultaneously in some other theatre you first of all have to have the theatre, and that theatre has got to be a theatre of sufficient attractiveness to the public so that people will come to it and pay the identical admission price that they will pay in the Fox theatre, and the same thing applies when you talk about a moveover, you have to move it over some place to a new theatre. So that in each one of these situations you are limited by the actual theatre situation as it exists from time to time, and I repeat the suggestion that I just made, that these are one picture or two picture or five picture deals and they relate to the immediate present and not some situation that may exist in the future.

Mr. Seymour: Of course there is one other observation to be made, if I may. This privilege of moveover being in the agreement, it must be assumed that in negotiating the percentage which was being charged to this particular exhibitor group, the privilege of moveover was taken into account in fixing the percentage so that the distributor got the benefit of the moveover privilege in increased rentals.

Mr. Wright: May I go on with the argreement and show how——

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Wright: —the method operates?

> "Third: For the purposes of this agreement the following computation shall be made with respect to each feature photoplay aforesaid."

That covers all the features released during that season.

"There shall first be determined the sum equal to the total gross income derived by the Distributor from licenses for the exhibition of such feature photoplay in the United States (excluding income from army camps and income under this agreement and income under all similar agreements entered into between the distributor and theatre operating corporations which are directly or indirectly wholly or partly owned subsidiaries of Paramount Pictures, Inc.),"—that is to say, you take out of this preliminary computation the rentals paid by this list of Paramount affiliates who are parties to this kind of deal—"and which sum is hereinafter referred to as 'Figure X'." That is, the actual gross less the amount contributed by these affiliates who are parties to deals of this kind and less Army camp income.

"Figure X for such feature photoplay shall then be considered as that percentage of a 'Base Amount', which Base Amount shall be 100%, less the sum of the percents shown in subdivision (a) next below in this agreement and also in all similar agreements entered into for such feature photoplay between the Distributor and theatre operating corporations which directly or indirectly are wholly or partly owned subsidiaries of Paramount Pictures, Inc."

That sum of percents referred to there is the sum of the percentage contribution of each circuit which, in this case adds up to a little more than a total of 20 per cent.

"The amount so ascertained by such a calculation with respect to Figure X is hereinafter referred to as the 'Base Amount'.

(2972)

"For the license herein granted to exhibit such feature photoplay, the Exhibitor agrees to pay as a license fee:

"(a) A sum equal to % of the Base amount."

And the percentage that is inserted in the blank there is the percentage listed here, that is, for Balaban & Katz that would be 2.45.

Judge Bright: What does that mean, two and a fraction per cent?

Mr. Wright: Yes, 2.45 per cent is the percentage figure for Balaban & Katz. Then there is a similar figure for each one of the circuits making a similar deal.

Judge Bright: Does Balaban & Katz have to pay 2.45 per cent of the gross in all of the theatres in that circuit?

Mr. Wright: No, two and a fraction per cent of the national gross figured according to this rather complex formula, which I will try——

Judge Bright: For all the theatres in that circuit?

Mr. Wright: Yes. What they pay for is the privilege of using the pictures in all the theatres of their circuit which are listed on Schedule A, there attached, on the runs named.

(2973)

Judge Bright: Are the number of times that they can move the picture in that particular circuit specified?

Mr. Wright: No, they are not. All that is specified on Schedule A is a series of runs in certain areas. Under that move-over day and date privilege they may have several first-runs simultaneously in the area or they may have a series of consecutive first-runs. There is no limit in the agreement as to the number of runs that they shall have. The priority is specified in the schedule by assigning to them first-run, or first and second run, or first, second and third, as the case may be, in the particular areas where they operate theatres.

Judge Bright: Are the deals attached to that kind of agreement, which specify the use of the film?

Mr. Wright: No, the deal is simply right here in the payment of, let us say, for Balaban & Katz, of 2.45 per cent of the national gross on the picture for the privilege of exhibiting it in the theatres listed on the schedule on the runs designated on the schedule. That is the deal. Of course, under that system you never have a particular rental for any particular theatre. You never know at any time what the film rental for any theatre in the circuit is. It is a blanket circuit deal.

Let me read further. It gives an example of how this computation is made.

(2974)

"For the license herein granted to exhibit such feature photoplay, the Exhibitor agrees to pay as a license fee:

(a) "A sum equal to % of the Base Amount." And in each case the amount filled in there is the percentage assigned to the circuit that makes the agreement.

"(As an example,"—this I am reading from the agreement here—"As an example, assume that the total gross income derived by the Distributor from licenses for the exhibition of Glass Key in the United States (excluding income excluded as aforesaid)"—that is, after you have excluded what these other circuits pay—"is the sum of $800,000 (Figure X), and assume that the total of the percentages shown in subdivision (a) above"—that is, the percentage assigned to the various circuits, which in this case totals something more than 20 per cent—"and in the like subdivision in all similar agreements"——

Judge Hand: Where do you get this from?

Mr. Wright: This I am reading from the agreement itself.

Judge Hand: This is from the agreement itself?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Goddard: Do you happen to have a copy of that agreement?

(2975)

Mr. Wright: This is the only copy I have—that was given to us.

Perhaps I had better start that again.

"(As an example, assume"—and again I am reading—"that the total gross income derived by the Distributor from licenses for the exhibition of Glass Key in the United States (excluding income excluded as aforesaid) is the sum of $800,000 (Figure X), and assume that the total of the percentages shown in subdivision (a) above and in the like subdivision in all similar agreements entered into for such picture between the Distributor and theatre operating corporations which directly or indirectly are partly owned subsidiaries of Paramount Pictures Inc. is 20%". Then this is the way the base amount is computed: You take 100/80ths of $800,000 and get $1,000,000, your base amount, and then your percentage in the case of Balaban & Katz of 2.45 is applied to $1,000,000, and your film rental would then be $24,500.

Judge Bright: What is the reason for the 100/80ths?

Mr. Wright: Well, what they do as a method of adjustment is, in the first instance, you see, they deduct the rentals that the parties to the formula deals pay and your 100/80ths adjustment is to put back into the final figure the amounts that they paid, distributed in accordance with the formula assigning a given percentage to each one.

The agreement goes on to state:

"Such license fee shall be paid in the following manner.

"(1) Within seven (7) days after the date of general release as fixed by the Distributor in the United States of such feature photoplay, the Distributor shall estimate the Base Amount. The Exhibitor shall pay to the Distributor a sum equal to % of such estimate in equal weekly instalments"—— and again that percentage there is his percentage of the total burden there; Balaban & Katz would be 2.45——

"of 1/17th of such total on the first business day of each consecutive week following the date of general release, the first of which instalments shall be paid on the first business day of the second week of general release of such feature photoplay.

"(2) During the sixteenth week following the date of general release of such feature photoplay, the Distributor shall again estimate the Base Amount (hereinafter sometimes referred to as 'second' estimate), and a committee composed of Charles M. Reagan and Leonard Goldenson shall participate in computing such estimate."

Those are, you will recall, the sales manager and the head of the theatre department of Paramount respectively.

"If the second estimate shall be greater than the first estimate, the Exhibit shall pay simultaneously with the seventeenth instalment payable hereunder a sum representing the difference between the amount payable in accordance with the first estimate and the amount payable in accordance with the second estimate. If the second estimate shall be less than the first estimate, the Distributor shall refund to the Exhibitor such sum representing any excess payment or reduce the amount of the last instalment, as the case may be."

That is simply a method of adjusting the preliminary payments as they go along playing the picture.

This third paragraph takes care of final adjustments:

"At the end of the eighteenth month following the date of general release of such feature photoplay, the Comptroller of the Distributor shall make a final computation of the Base Amount, and shall certify such final computation to the Exhibitor. Not later than thirty (30) days after the determination of such final computation, the Exhibitor shall pay any additional sum required to be paid, or the Distributor shall refund to the Exhibitor any excess payment, as the case may be, as the result of such final computation."

I think it is apparent from the terms of the agreement that, of course, in certifying the final computation, not only is the national gross disclosed to each of these circuits, but the percentage allocations and payments made by each of them is disclosed to the other.

The agreement goes on to state——

(2979)

Judge Bright: What harm is there in that?

Mr. Wright: It simply, I think, contradicts this picture of the Paramount affiliates being operated as separate units which are not concerned with each others film licensing arrangements. Under this kind of deal they are necessarily all parties to the general scheme of allocation and get regular data which shows exactly the extent to which this film rental burden has been distributed among them.

As a matter of fact, I think the one obvious purpose of a deal of this kind is to afford a certain degree of protection to these various partners against film rental discrimination that might be based on the fact that Paramount had a greater interest in one than in the other. Under this system, where each is allocated a fixed percentage, there is assurance to each, I suppose, that he will not be discriminated against by Paramount in the terms that he finally pays.

Mr. Seymour: All I want to observe is that this arrangement does not contradict to the slightest extent the testimony, which is uncontradicted and unimpeached and undisputed, that the film deals made by these various operating heads of the operating companies in which Paramount is interested with other distributors has no relationship whatever to what those distributors are doing in connection with those theatres. This has nothing whatever to do with that subject.

Mr. Wright: Let me read the next paragraph——

Judge Goddard: Do you contend, Mr. Wright, that a theatre wholly owned by Paramount, say, or one of the affiliates, receives better treatment than a theatre in which Paramount or one of the affiliates has a 25 per cent interest, for instance?

Mr. Wright: Under this kind of a deal I would say pretty clearly they would not. I am just suggesting that one purpose of this kind of arrangement is to satisfy the partner in whom Paramount may have only a 25 per cent interest that the film rental that he will be discriminated against as against some circuit in which Paramount might own 100 per cent, by simply taking the market and allocating it in this way and then paying off on the basis of the allocation instead of the performance in the individual theatres, that you have a completely non-competitive disposition of your rental——

Judge Hand: I really do not think I can sit here and hear an exhibit offered and endless argument about it as it goes on, endless argument and talk.

Mr. Wright: May I just read one——

Judge Hand: It gets so that it illustrates nothing to me and means nothing. Now, I imagine you want to have it mean something and to tell me what, but you certainly ought to point it out a great deal better than you do, or else offer it and let it alone.

(2981)

Mr. Wright: May I then read one more provision and then tell you what I think it shows and drop it?

Judge Hand: All right, go on.

Mr. Wright: This provision——

Judge Hand: But I have been listening to this vague talk about three-quarters of an hour, and the case cannot go on in this way.

Mr. Wright: The succeeding paragraph in this final settlement states:

> "If the Distributor shall fail to license such feature photoplay to any representative circuit of theatres, in the United States to which the distributor licensed its 1940-41 season feature photoplays, there shall nevertheless be included in Figure X in the aforesaid final computation such gross income as would have been received from such circuit for such feature photoplay unless any sums received by the distributor from competitive theatres for the same runs of such feature photoplay. For the purposes of this agreement, the term 'representative circuit of theatres' shall mean > such circuit of theatres from which the distributor received $100,000 or more as license fees for the exhibition of its 1940-41 season feature photoplays."

Now, within that definition, if the Court please, are the circuits of theatres operated or affiliated with the other defendants in this case; and I think it is highly significant that in working out this apportionment of film rental among these circuits in which Paramount is interested, they also take into account the question of what, if any, contribution has been made by all of the other circuits, including those in which the other defendants are interested.

Now, this goes on to say——

Mr. Proskauer: Does you Honor care to have any comment on that as we go along or would you prefer that we hold our fire?

Judge Hand: Hold it. I do not know what this means.

Mr. Seymour: I should like to state just a word about that, if your Honor pleases. It is a contract involving Paramount which is in question, and may I just comment so that the record will not have Mr. Wright's comment without any from me. What this provision obviously means is, and what it obviously states is, if on a particular picture any representative circuit does not license the picture—for example, there are many large independent circuits in this country which might not license this particular picture; there are other circuits including those affiliated with defendants which might not license it; and these Paramount companies, these Paramount operating companies, as we have sometimes called them, the theatre-operating companies with whom these agreements are made are not to be let off in their film rental because on a particular picture some other customer of Paramount has chosen not to buy, and therefore the amount that the other customer would have paid goes into the computation so that their rental is larger, and it has not anything to do with the question of affiliation.

Mr. Proskauer: Certainly we have nothing to do with it, these other companies. We know nothing about this.

Mr. Wright: The principal significance it has, so far as the Government is concerned, is that in certain instances in computing a final settlement of film rental it is again necessary to disclose to these exhibitors not only what the other Paramount partners may have paid for Paramount films but what deals were made with the other circuits in which these defendants are interested, as well as any other circuit which may have paid more than $100,000 in film rentals; and that the computation, the final computation of gross income is to be based or shall be determined by a majority of a committee consisting of—and that space is left blank, and we have asked to have the names of the committee involved, but I do not believe we have yet got them.

Could we have those now?

Mr. Seymour: I shall be glad to furnish them to you now if you like.

Mr. Wright: Why don't we have those names put in now?

Mr. Seymour: The names of the committee originally included in the agreements were Barney Balaban, Y. Frank Freeman, Neil Agnew, Austin C. Keough, Leonard Goldenson, Charles Reagan, Samuel I. Pinanski, Earl Hoblitzelle, R. B. Wilby and A. H. Blank. Neil Agnew, of course, is no longer a member of such a committee because he has been out of Paramount for some months.

Mr. Wright: We will offer the exhibit as——

Mr. Seymour: Have you made it clear, Mr. Wright, in connection with that offer that those lists of theatres are the lists annexed to the various agreements? They are not all annexed to one agreement. I do not know that you made that clear.

(2985)

Judge Bright: List of theatres or list of circuits?

Mr. Seymour: No. There is, I understand, in the exhibit a list of circuits, so-called circuits, which is annexed to the document. The document is a form which was made originally with those various theatre operating companies which Mr. Wright has called circuits, and in addition we have furnished to the Government and the Government is now offering the list of theatres in each operating company which was annexed to the agreement as actually executed with that operating company. In other words, this is both a particular agreement, and all the exhibits annexed to all the agreements. They were not all annexed to one isn't that correct, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: That is what I understand as to the theatre lists. However, it is my understanding that the first page of that exhibit setting forth the various parties and percentages is annexed to each.

Mr. Seymour: No, you are wrong about that, Mr. Wright. The top sheet, as I understand it, is a list prepared for your convenience of the companies with whom the formula deal was made——

Judge Hand: Now what in the world is this talk about? Here are two people arguing about what an exhibit shows, and one says it shows one thing and the other says it shows another. When you get all through with this talk what are we to think? We have got to look at the exhibit, I should think. I cannot have the thing go on this way.

Mr. Seymour: You are quite right, your Honor. Mr. Wright I did not think made plain what the contents of the exhibit was.

Judge Hand: And you tried to ask him something and he does not give a direct answer, and then the thing gets all mixed up. We are not just floating down the river.

Mr. Seymour: Well, let me state it, and then if there is any correction, let Mr. Wright make it, and that will be the description of the exhibit, because otherwise we will have a very confused record for your Honors.

The top sheet on the exhibit is a list of the theatre-operating companies with which formula deals were made and the percentage included in the several formula deal agreements with those several companies. The next part of the exhibit is a typical or a form of the formula deal agreement which was made with those many companies; and finally there are annexed lists of theatres which were taken from the various formula deal agreements with those various companies. One of those lists—that is, the theatres in a particular company was annexed to the particular formula deal of that company. They were not all annexed to one formula deal agreement made with all the companies as a part of one agreement.

Isn't that correct, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: You gave it to us. I accept your statement as to what the fact is.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 399.)

Mr. Wright: I will ask to have marked as Exhibit 400 a tabulation that was furnished to me by counsel for Warner in explanation of the exhibit which was offered in evidence here the other day as W-13. That was the statement which was put in purporting to show that the Warner domestic distribution and production business was operated at a loss except for the last two years. It was given to me with the statement that "We trust that you will keep this schedule confidential since it contains data which has never been disclosed."

Now, we have no desire to disclose it to other defendants. We do wish to disclose it to the Court.

Mr. Proskauer: Who sent you that? May I see the schedules?

(Papers handed to Mr. Proskauer.)

Mr. Proskauer: Well, I do not know that I have any power to keep Mr. Wright from offering it. The incident was when I put in a schedule, he asked me whether I would write him a letter showing how it was made, and I said he would have it before sundown on Saturday. He called me later and said he had not received it. It had been mailed Friday night. What I supposed I was giving Mr. Wright was the detail in that statement to enable him to check the accuracy of the schedule which was put in evidence. Why he wants to put this in in view of that situation, I don't know. He is perfectly entitled to comment and make any correction in our statement.

Do you claim that this is any way impugns the accuracy of the statement offered in evidence?

Mr. Wright: It simply explains how it was computed, and that we think is significant.

Mr. Proskauer: How? With your Honor's permission, what is the significance of it?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, you will recall that the Exhibit W-13 showed a series of red figures here which were supposed to be losses on U. S. A. production and distribution divisions in the years 1937 through 1942 inclusive. It shows profits only in 1943, 1944, for those divisions. Now, the manner in which that loss was arrived at is this: They first took the profit from the theatre divisions; then took the profit from the foreign division, including Canada, and then deducted those from profits before taxes and arrived at an alleged loss on the domestic U. S. A. production and distribution division.

Mr. Proskauer: That is right.

Mr. Wright: However, there is a footnote in each case which I think explains the accounting sleight-of-hand by which these results were achieved. The profit from foreign division, including Canada, is stated to be before intercompany film royalties payable for American-made pictures. That is without deducting anything for payments to the American company which produced and made the pictures on which the profit was earned. Then the footnote on the losses, the alleged losses in the U.S.A. production and distribution divisions says, "Before foreign intercompany film royalties receivable for American-made pictures." So that again that figure does not include what was paid on account of American production by the foreign distribution.

Mr. Proskauer: I will make a quick suggestion. Why don't you put in the two explanatory footnotes which are the things which you say show some sleight-of-hand? I am a pretty good accountant, I think, and I say they don't show any sleight-of-hand at all.

(2990)

Mr. Wright: As far as——

Mr. Proskauer: Put them in and let us argue it.

Mr. Wright: We desire to offer the exhibit in this form because it also shows separately the profits from the theatre division, and I think——

Mr. Proskauer: I withdraw all objection to it. Let him mark it.

Mr. Wright: ——the fact that the profits from the theatre division in 1944 were six times what they were in 1940, operating the same number of theatres I think tends to rebut the situation made in figures which were offered——.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honors, can't I end this by withdrawing all objection to it and suggesting that he offer it, and challenging him to make good on his statement about accounting sleight-of-hand?

Judge Hand: It is admitted.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 400.)

Mr. Wright: I will ask to have marked with the next two exhibit numbers these two United Artists contracts. 401 is one with the Robb & Rowley Circuit for Stage Door Canteen. The other is for the Roxy Theatre at San Angelo, Texas, with an independent exhibitor named W. V. Atwell.

(2991)

Mr. Raftery: Is this rebuttal, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Yes, it is.

Mr. Raftery: Of what?

Judge Hand: That is a question of terminology. Go ahead, Mr. Wright. Proceed.

(Marked Government's Exhibits 401 and 402.)

Mr. Raftery: Is this part of what you got Monday?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Colloquy

Mr. Raftery: I have got another bundle here that you asked for yesterday, whenever you want it.

Mr. Wright: Now, I simply want to call your Honor's attention to what is in them and the purpose of the offer. The circuit deal with Robb & Rowley for Stage Door Canteen marked in evidence as 401 shows the payment of the following flat rental license fees for the following runs in San Angelo: The first-run at the Ritz, $50; second-run at the Plaza, $30; third-run at the Angelos, $15; fourth-run at the Lyric, $12.50.

Mr. Raftery: What is the date of that contract?

Mr. Wright: That is dated May 1943.

Judge Hand: Where are these runs?

Mr. Wright: In San Angelo, Texas.

(2992)

Mr. Raftery: This circuit, by the way, is not a party to this action in any respect. It is an independent circuit.

Mr. Wright: The contract with the independent exhibitor operating the Roxy, the same picture, fifth-run—it says run, fifth, available 120 days after first-run, is $20 against 35 per cent of the gross. The guarantee is more than the circuit paid for either of the two preceding runs, and the percentage is included, which was not in any of the deals for the preceding runs.

Judge Bright: In the same town?

Mr. Wright: Yes, those are all in San Angelo.

Mr. Proskauer: The circuit was a non-affiliated circuit. Is that clear?

Mr. Wright: Well, the extent of the affiliation appears in the record. It is a circuit in which the United Artists Theatre Circuit owns a half interest, and which, in turn, is one in which Mr. Joseph Schenck is interested; but for our purposes I do not think it makes any particular difference on this question of discrimination between the independent circuits.

Mr. Raftery: What is the discrimination, Mr. Wright? That is what I am trying to find out.

Mr. Wright: I think there is a very obvious film rental discrimination in that situation.

(2993)

Judge Bright: You mean the fifth run man pays more than the third and fourth?

Mr. Wright: Yes, sir.

Mr. Raftery: We contend all through we have got a perfect right to do it. There is no exhibitor here complaining. If the exhibitor has a complaint why isn't he brought here? They just throw the contracts in; we do not know the type of theatre; we do not know any of the circumstances. It is de minimis. That picture, according to the record, grossed four million dollars in the United States; and he comes in here with a $20 thing; and, we submit, it may be competent for some reason, but he is just attempting to burden the Court with a lot of misleading de minimis.

(2994)

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor, the record in this case already shows that in numbers of cases independent theatres having a prior run paid less than subsequent theatres both percentagewise and in money. There is no criterion by which—and we shall argue this at length, your Honors; I am referring to it because Judge Bright has raised this question several times; this is not the time to do it in detail; but I want to register the caveat that there are many instances in which subsequent-run theatres are much more profitable than prior-run theatres; can afford to pay a larger percentage rental; can afford to pay a larger lump sum rental; and that that situation does not turn on whether it is an affiliated or non-affiliated theatre; and we shall develop that in argument.

Mr. Wright: Now, if the Court please, I would like to say what we have attempted to do on this rental discrimination question. We took 26 theatres as to which there was material in evidence because they had been involved in the Appeal Board decisions where there were findings to the effect that the circuit theatres in—certain of these circuit theatres and the independent complainants' were comparable theatres, and there is, of course, a description of the theatre situation as it exists in the town in question; and we subpoenaed, or we asked by letter each of the defendants to produce the contracts made with those particular theatres for two seasons, I believe the 1943-1944 and the 1944-1945 seasons. Now, those letters went out on November 3rd. The only companies that we have received the contract data from are United Artists and Universal, and as to those, as to United Artists, the one we received was so incomplete, that the only contracts which were furnished where the same picture was licensed to the independent opposition and the circuit theatre, were those which I have just offered.

Now, as I say, from the others, from six of them we have received none of the data, and we cannot go ahead with this film rental discrimination rebuttal until that material is in our hands. I had hoped that it would be available in time to put in today when I suggested that we reconvene today instead of later.

But judging from what has occurred, I now feel that we cannot complete that showing until some time next week, and we have some other data that we can put in this afternoon, but I would suggest a week's adjournment from today so that we might have that time to assemble this material we have asked for, and then I think we can put it in very quickly. But rather than attempt to struggle along here, getting material piecemeal and then offering it——

Judge Goddard: Mr. Wright, has anyone complained about that, any of the parties?

(2996)

Mr. Wright: You have before you——

Judge Goddard: Will you answer that yes or no? I want to make my question just as simple as possible. I want to know if either of the parties complained of that.

Mr. Wright: Not only this independent exhibitor but every independent exhibitor in the business complains bitterly about what we say is a well-established fact that there is discrimination in rental terms between the licenses made with independents——

Judge Goddard: I want to repeat my question, because I am going to try to get an answer.

Mr. Wright: Surely.

Judge Goddard: Did either of the parties to that contract complain about it?

Mr. Wright: Yes. I say that every independent exhibitor who is in opposition to a circuit complains that he is discriminated against in rental terms on the deals he makes and those that the circuit make. Now, prior to the time that these sales representatives took the stand here and said that there was no discrimination, these defendants had also taken the position that Mr. Raftery just now takes, that they have a perfect right to discriminate against anyone and everyone in any way that they please; and that if that were the position now we won't spend time on this. But in view of the effort that has been made, it seems to me to mislead the Court as to what is the well established and known industry fact, that is, that your small exhibitor is constantly discriminated against in rental terms. I have felt bound to make additional license contract offers of this kind, and I submit that the question of discrimination would not be aided by calling someone to the witness stand and having him complain. The discrimination is shown by what was done and not by who may yell the loudest.

Mr. Raftery: If your Honor please, may I answer your question directly?

Judge Goddard: I should like to have an answer.

Mr. Raftery: We had no complaints on that contract. Secondly, Universal and United Artists have given Mr. Wright every document in our possession that he has asked for, with the exception of the latest which he asked for late yesterday, and here is another bundle (handing).

Now, Universal and United testified—first we put our distribution contracts in as to United. Our obligation is to get the most from every exhibitor we can get regardless of race, creed or color or affiliation. That is our obligation to our producer. And that contract goes back to him for rejection or approval. We do not have the final say. Mr. Scully says he tries to sell all his pictures on the highest terms, and each negotiation is separate. Now, the fact that you are able to get $20 from an account, you are getting down to pretty near the last available dollar, because when you get down to the twenties—we have one producer, by the way, who won't let us sell any exhibitor who pays less than $35. I suppose Mr. Wright says that is discrimination, but that man only makes one picture every five years, so we only have that headache once in five years. We contend we have a right to get as much as we possibly can from each account. We are selling him an intangible. We are not selling cotton shirts or even Bobbs Merrill books. We have that intangible, an exhibition right, a performing right, and that is all we license, and we say under the Interstate case, Justice Stone said that each of us acting separately and independently can exercise our monopoly of copyright in any way we see fit. Now, that is said in the prevailing opinion, Mr. Wright to the contrary notwithstanding. He said it both as to Paramount in its relations with Jefferson, and he said it as to all eight of us who were found guilty of conspiracy because of that O'Donnell letter. He said that if we had acted separately and independently we could have put either of the restrictions in the contract, but we did not. We acted as a result of the pressure of the O'Donnell letter. When he got to the Paramount Jefferson subsidiary, which Mr. Wright says is price fixing and discrimination, he said Paramount could have done it separately, but they did it not by virtue of the ownership of the copyright, they did it by virtue of the pressure of the exhibitor who had no interest in the copyright.

Now, we say loading the record with this sort of evidence does not help the Court in any respect in the issues involved as regards distributors as distinguished from exhibitors. We make no claim here that we charge any man less than his competitor or more. We get all we can from every one of them. And just because Robb & Rowley did not pay as much as Mr. Wright thinks they should pay, that is the best we could get out of him.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor, I have no objection to the evidence, but we are not a public utility, and we have got a right to license our pictures as we please so long as we do not do it by conspiracy; and that is what the essence of this case is coming down to. While I have no objection to the evidence, I challenge the right of a quasi-judicial officer to come in here and say that every independent exhibitor is objecting to this thing. There is no such situation existing.

Mr. Frohlich: May I, if your Honor please, take an objection—I do object to this line of evidence offered by Mr. Wright. He has failed to make out a case, an affirmative case against at least these three defendants at this table. He now seeks afresh to make out a case against them on so-called rebuttal. Now, we brought our witnesses down. We tendered an issue to the Court. Mr. Wright is not trying to rebut evidence that we produced here; he is trying now for the first time to show some form of discrimination which he failed to show on his main case; and, technically, I think he is violating the rules of evidence, and I technically object, strenuously, to every attempt by Mr. Wright to follow this line of evidence.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Mr. Davis: I should like to p. in an objection against the receipt of this evidence against Loew's, Inc., which is not a party to these exhibits.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Mr. Proskauer: I suppose we all have that general objection all the time?

Judge Hand: Yes.

Now, what about these anticipated exhibits or wandering exhibits that Mr. Wright is talking about?

Mr. Davis: We were asked to exhume certain contracts. We have exhumed them and are ready to turn them over to Mr. Wright.

(3001)

We got our request yesterday at 2 o'clock, quite a lengthy request, and we have not found it possible in the intervening hours to have it together, but we hope to have it in time to serve Mr. Wright's purposes. We cannot produce exhibits as if you drop a nickle in the slot.

Mr. Caskey: If your Honor please, I think the question is much more serious than has been indicated. If we are going into any show of discrimination in film rentals in the selected situations that are dealt with in the Appeal Board decisions which were admitted provisionally, it may require the framing of a completely new issue. Now, I should not suppose that any of these defendants would want to rest the case on any such basis or any such narrow selection, and if there is going to be any attempt to show in isolated contracts without any oral testimony, without any complaint, without any proof as to what the effect of the film rental was on the theatre, no more proof except that some man paid 10 cents for coffee and another man paid 5 cents, of course——

Judge Hand: Have you got your papers here?

Mr. Caskey: No, sir. Our letter came yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock. That is when we got it.

Mr. Wright: I think there were two letters. The one that came yesterday was the repeat request. The original was sent out on November 3rd.

Mr. Proskauer: Mine was not a repeat request. I got it at 3 o'clock yesterday. It was a request for some more information. We spend half our time trying to meet Government requests that come to us in letters in a form threatening subpoenas if we do not comply. We will give him all he has called for in the letter we got at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon before sunset tomorrow.

Judge Bright: Have you any other rebuttal now, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Raftery: Excuse me. Here is another one I just found.

Judge Bright: Is there anything further now?

Mr. Wright: I think we can go ahead this afternoon. I wanted to put in some profit figures through an FBI agent who made an examination of the data on file with the Securities and Exchange Commission. Now, we can go ahead with that.

Judge Bright: With the exception of this additional information which you have just requested of the defendants, is that the end of the rebuttal?

Mr. Wright: Our rebuttal will also include a statement or an examination of our statistician who has been tabulating not only our material but examining the data that has been pushed in here today and recently, and charts and figures, and we shall examine him not only with respect to computations of his own but certain data which has been offered by the defendants; and with that plus the introduction of documentary material, that I think will complete our rebuttal; and I do not think the time of presentation will be great, but we have not been able to get the statistician ready to testify because of these constant changes that have been made in the data he has been tabulating. He has to recompute every time one of these changes comes in; and, of course, as to the material which has come in, he has not even had a chance to look at it or examine it.

(3004)

Mr. Leisure: If the Court please, we received a letter from Mr. Wright yesterday at eleven o'clock, and working yesterday afternoon and last night we have the material, but if Mr. Wright is not going ahead—they are original documents and we would like the privilege of photostating them before we turn them over to him, if that is satisfactory to Mr. Wright.

Judge Hand: Well, I do not see why you did not give them notice long ago of this thing. You say you gave them all notice November 3rd?

Mr. Wright: We sent out that letter that I referred to here covering the 26 theatres on November 3rd, to each counsel for each distributor.

Mr. Caskey: Mr. Wright, have you got a copy of such a letter?

Mr. Wright: Yes, I think we have.

Mr. Caskey: I would like to see it. I have not gotten it.

Mr. Wright: Here is the form of the letter (handing).

Mr. Frohlich: We never got that letter, you know, Mr. Wright. You never sent it to us.

Mr. Raftery: So that the record will be straight as to what I have given you——

Mr. Wright: What?

(3005)

Mr. Raftery: I want the record to show what I have given you, because you have intimated that I did not give you everything. Under date of November 12th there was sent by mail to Universal a request for certain documents.

Judge Hand: Did you get a request on the 3rd?

Mr. Raftery: I gave him that stuff long ago, whatever he asked for. The big bundle——

Judge Hand: You mean he wanted more?

Mr. Raftery: Yes. This is the 12th.

Judge Hand: I see no reason why you did not have this thing out. You knew this case was marching along——

Mr. Wright: I said——

Judge Hand: Now wait a minute, please. This is rebuttal, you say, to show specific discrimination. Why didn't you ask them for it and get it before?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, we did not know until the witnesses took the stand that the claim was going to be made that they did not discriminate as to film rentals in dealing with independents and circuits.

Judge Hand: I am surprised at that statement on your part, that you did not know their defense by this time or that that was one of their defenses.

Mr. Wright: We did send out the letter on November 3rd, and Mr. Raftery got the letter, and I did not say that he had not or that United Artists had not produced material. United Artists and Universal did produce material. It was the other six that produced none.

Judge Hand: Did you send it to them?

Mr. Wright: My understanding is that the same letter was sent out to counsel for each of the eight companies.

Mr. Proskauer: Your letter of yesterday repeated the letter of November 3rd, but added a mass of additional information you wanted.

Mr. Caskey: I have the letter. Let me read it. It relates to eight cities, not 23.

Mr. Wright: I said 23 theatres.

Mr. Caskey: All right, in eight cities. It says:

"Enclosed is a list of documents which we may desire to use in the presentation of rebuttal evidence in the above case. If you desire the issuance of a subpoena as a condition for their production, we shall appreciate your letting us know promptly."

Now those for those eight cities are available. Now yesterday there came the additional letter.

Mr. Raftery: I got two letters, and this is what I produced, Mr. Wright: On November 12th you asked for license agreements for Middleboro, Massachusetts, Brockton, and you also asked for the Playhouse, (3007)
Ayer, the clearance, 1937-38 form of license agreement.

Now we have produced all we have got. We did not sell Brockton in any of those years, so we have no Brockton. We did not sell either of the theatres in Lowell, the Strand or the Merriman, so we have nothing for Lowell. We have produced Ayer, and at two o'clock the boy will be here with the additional back season stuff for Middleboro. Now this morning we get a letter of November 13th, and he wants the license for the Plaza theatre at Atlanta, for the exhibition of Stage Door Canteen. We phoned for that this morning as soon as we got it.

Judge Hand: Where is that?

Mr. Raftery: Plaza theatre, Atlanta. I don't even know the theatre. The other——

Judge Hand: Well, I am not going to see this thing go on as an examination before trial here during trial. This case has got to proceed, and we are not going to tie up three Judges here in trial to suit the convenience of anybody.

Why do you keep serving them with these papers?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, that is the only way that we can assemble the data. We either give them the letter or serve them with a subpoena.

Judge Hand: I am not talking about that. I am talking about the late date at which it is done.

(3008)

Mr. Wright: Some of this matter—those two theatres he just referred to—was testimony which was developed in the course of cross-examination of defense witnesses about this question of whether or not certain of the distributors adhere to the same clearance as that granted by others.

If the Court please, the only way I know to resolve those questions is by the production of the agreements themselves, and we want to produce and offer the material as fast as we can get it, but it has not been possible to get out one letter which would cover everything. As we have checked the record there have been other agreements that we have decided that we would want. As we have made that check we have notified these people as to what was wanted. I want to proceed as expeditiously as we can, but I cannot do it without that material. I will say this——

Judge Hand: You have got to go to your limit, apparently, now. Why don't you go on with it?

Mr. Wright: I haven't even had a chance to examine it or look at it. I say, we could stop and examine——

Judge Hand: I have constantly told you to deal with each other across the table and not come into court in this way. You have had four days here.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, there was no one available, I think, insofar as the defendants' offices were concerned, either on Saturday or on Monday.

(3009)

Mr. Raftery: We were there all day.

Judge Hand: We will have to determine on some method of procedure now.

Mr. Wright: I say I can go ahead this afternoon with this summary of this SEC material, I propose to get that out of the way, but I am pointing out that I simply haven't been able to—Mr. Borwick hasn't been able to get his material ready simply because there has been no time for him to recompute this material and to actually examine the material which has gone in as a part of the defense, some of which has just been put in here now.

Judge Hand: We will adjourn until two o'clock.

(Recess until 2:00 p. m.)

(3010)

AFTERNOON SESSION

Judge Hand: Proceed.

Mr. Wright: Mr. Maloney.

JAMES J. MALONEY, called as a witness on behalf of the Government in rebuttal, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Maloney? A. New York City.

Q. And what is your occupation? A. I am a special agent, Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Q. You are also an accountant? A. That is correct, sir.

Mr. Proskauer: Mr. Wright, try to let us hear you, won't you?

Q. You participated, did you, in an examination of certain data filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission at the request of the Antitrust Division of the Justice Department? A. Yes, I did.

Q. The material examined was the statements, the financial statements, filed by seven of the defendants in this case? A. That is correct.

Mr. Wright: Will you mark this for identification.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 403 for identification.)

Q. I will show you this work sheet that has been marked for identification as Exhibit 403——

Mr. Seymour: May we have copies, Mr. Wright?

(3011)

Mr. Wright: Yes, but I am not sure that there are enough to go around.

Q. Now can you tell us what that exhibit that you have in your hand is? A. Yes. The amounts appearing on this exhibit which is entitled "Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. Statement of Profit and Loss,"—the amounts appearing on this tabulation were obtained from the annual statements filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission, or, rather, from copies of those statements which are on file at the New York Stock Exchange.

Mr. Proskauer: Mr. Wright, we won't make any question but what this is a collation of our reports on our profits made to the SEC. I do not know what the purpose of it is. We never claimed we were doing business at a loss.

Mr. Wright: We offer the exhibit in evidence.

Mr. Davis: Isn't it proper, your Honors, that they should say for what purpose this exhibit is offered? We have seen a quantity of exhibits go in without any knowledge of their relevancy. I think the time has come now that we should ask what the relevancy of these exhibits is to the case.

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, Warners offer testimony both as to certain rising costs, and then some other figures to the effect that certain domestic operations were unprofitable, and figures which, as I understood Mr. Proskauer's statement when they went in, were entitled to show that Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., had absorbed these increases in cost and had not passed along to the public these increases.

Now this statement is offered to show that the profits after taxes of Warner Bros. Pictures since 1940 have increased very greatly, that these figures show not only that increases in cost have not been passed on, but that such savings as may occur from the integration of these businesses far from being passed on to the public have resulted in exorbitant and excessive profits to this defendant.

Mr. Proskauer: As I said, we do not want you to be put to the proof of the authenticity of the figures.

We are taking them subject to check and correction as far as we are concerned, your Honors. But what I am at a loss to know is how a statement of what our overall profit is in any way negatives the specific testimony we gave as to a breakdown of those profits or in any way tends to negative the evidence we gave that while our costs have gone up very remarkably, our admission prices have remained about static. What relation is there between the two things?

Judge Hand: I do not see myself.

(3012-A)

Judge Goddard: This includes foreign and domestic, does it not?

Mr. Wright: This is the consolidated statement of Warner Bros. Pictures. This includes the parent and all subsidiaries.

Judge Hand: Go ahead.

(3013)

Judge Bright: You say this is after taxes?

Mr. Wright: The net profit figures are after taxes.

Judge Bright: The statement does not show that.

Q. Is that correct, Mr. Maloney? A. Correct, the statement merely indicates that it is net profit.

Q. Did you make an examination with regard to the taxes paid by the same company since the excess profits tax has been in effect? A. The amounts of such taxes were obtained from the statements on file——

Q. Have you got a statement of those there? A. Yes, I have.

Q. Will you just——

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honors will find that this statement does not jibe with the one that was put in this morning. The reason for that is that the one that was put in this morning was before taxes, and this one is after taxes.

Judge Hand: Now he is going to prove taxes.

Judge Bright: To testify to excess profits taxes.

Mr. Proskauer: I mean, federal profit taxes and income tax.

Q. Will you just read the data you have there, taken from the Securities and Exchange Commission reports, which show the extent of the excess profits taxes paid by this company? A. Yes. The amounts of excess profits taxes (3014) applied only for the years 1941, 1942, 1943 and 1944. For those years the amounts were, for 1941, $7,150; for 1942, $4,000,000; for 1943, $9,990,000; for 1944, $9,135,000.

Judge Hand: Do you claim their rates were any higher during these times?

Mr. Wright: Oh, yes, indeed, if the Court please. The only way in which profits of this character could have been earned while the operation of the theatres remained at the same level, in number, would be by an increase in margin.

Judge Hand: I did not say anything about them remaining the same level in numbers. I don't know whether they did or not. I asked you whether you claim their charges were any more.

Mr. Wright: Yes, we do.

Mr. Proskauer: I have only to observe that there is no proof of that. The only proof in the case is what I put in.

Judge Bright: Do you mean by "charges were more" that the cost to the public was increased?

Mr. Wright: Yes, indeed.

Judge Bright: In what respect?

Mr. Wright: Admission prices .

Judge Bright: Doesn't the proof showed the ad-(3015)
mission prices stayed about static during this period?

Mr. Wright: I do not believe that it does. What he offered was not a study of what had happened to admission prices; he merely took a net figure of so many admissions taken in, divided by the total number of people who attended theatres. I submit that that kind of an average does not give you any accurate picture at all as to what happened to the admission price level, and that these figures, and the figures we offered before, as to theatre operations show that—there is also in evidence that the number of theatres throughout this period, the number and character and location of theatres operated by Warner throughout this period, has remained substantially constant. Now, the only way, as I see it, in which you can account for the enormous rise in profits that occurred, and the excess profits that were earned is by increases in your margin between what was charged to the public and what it cost you to give what the public got. That is what these figures do.

Judge Hand: I do not see how that follows in the least. It may be a fact, but I do not see how it follows from that.

Mr. Proskauer: May I state that the evidence in this case shows the explanation, and that is, the enormous increase in attendances in theatres during the war period. The criticism of my figures is just baseless. I showed the average admission price in all theatres in the country, of ours, for a 15-year period. How to get it more fairly than to take the gross admission and divide it by the admissions to get the admission price, I don't know.
(3016)

Judge Hand: How it proves anything but proves that people took in a great deal more money, or made a great deal more money, except possibly as some kind of a link in something else, I cannot imagine. That is why I am afraid to exclude it because it may be some kind of a link. I tell you it proves nothing in itself.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, we would not have offered it had defendants not sought to go into the profit situation. In our view, in the first instance, the question of whether or not there has been a restraint here is not dependent upon a consideration of these——

Judge Hand: Now you are making an entirely different argument, if I understand you. You are trying to meet something else, you say, that they have gone into, which is, that they haven't—they have had a hard time and they wouldn't have got on without these arrangements, and now you say you meet that by proof that they earned a lot of money. Maybe it is so, and maybe their argument is no defense whatever to the suit for violation of the Sherman Act. I shouldn't wonder if both were true.

Judge Goddard: Wouldn't the attendance figure throw some light on this?

Mr. Wright: Why, the attendance figures are in there, yes. I would submit that, regardless of whether or not your increase in margin is due to increased attendance or increase in admission price level, in either case it is perfectly apparent from the figures that we offer that the public absorbed your increased costs and that Warner Bros. operated with an excessive margin, as shown by the payments that were made.

Judge Hand: You mean you are now coming to some kind of argument like this, I should say—I don't know—that if they made more money, they should have reduced their rates?

Mr. Wright: If they had been in a competitive industry, that is——

Judge Hand: In other words, you do not show at all that their rates were raised by reason of conspiracy or anything else. You say they made so much money, that they should have lowered their rates.

Mr. Wright: That profits of this character——

Judge Hand: You see, this thing, well, it is like the old lines of Sir Edwin Arnold in "The Light of Asia,"

"They flash and vanish

(3018)

Bid them not to stay.
For knowledge brightens as they flee away."

These things just come across the screen and hit us with a new thought.

Mr. Wright: Let me say this, profits of this character could not have been earned under a competitive rate structure. That is the fundamental fact, I think, that emerges from these figures.

Judge Goddard: Mr. Wright, do the figures of the other affiliates and the independents also show an increase in profits during these years?

Mr. Wright: Yes. I was going to offer a similar statement for each of the other six defendants——

Judge Goddard: For the independents?

Mr. Wright: (Continuing) —which filed with the Exchange.

We have no profit data on independent exhibitors generally. I would assume that there may also have been substantial increases in profit there due to increased prosperity. However, they aren't——

Judge Hand: There you would argue that they would make them because of the conventional example of the confederates here, and, therefore, they charged more, otherwise they would have lowered them. Well, go on.

(3019)

Judge Bright: You offered that, did you not?

Mr. Wright: Yes, we offered it.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 403.)

Mr. Wright: I will ask to have this next work sheet marked as Exhibit 404 for identification.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 404 for identification.)

Q. Mr. Maloney, could you explain what that Exhibit 404 for identification, which you have in your hand, is? A. This exhibit, which is entitled "Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and Wholly Owned Subsidiaries, Analysis of Income," reflects amounts of income and net profit, which were obtained from copies of the annual statements filed with the SEC, which copies are on file at the library of the New York Stock Exchange. It covers the period from 1934 to 1944.

Mr. Caskey: I want to examine on the voir dire before this is taken.

Mr. Wright: Go ahead.

Preliminary Cross-Examination by Mr. Caskey:

Q. Mr. Maloney, did you prepare this statement yourself? A. No, I did not, sir.

Q. You did not prepare it yourself? A. That is correct.

Q. Did you examine the basic data yourself? A. I did not examine them in detail: I observed them.

(3020)

Q. Did you check this document against a basic data yourself? A. No, I did not.

Q. Do you know whether this statement, gross income from sales and rentals of film and accessories, is true or not? A. I know, sir, that it was prepared under my observation.

Q. Do you know it to be a fact that the amount of film rental for the year December 25, 1943, increased $90,000,000 over the previous year? A. Because the statement was prepared under my observation, I——

Q. You know that to be true? A. I know that the work of the man preparing it was accurate and to that extent I know that it is true.

Q. Don't you know that in fact in July, 1943, Fox Film acquired all the capital stock of National Theatres Corporation? You know that to be a fact? A. I believe you when you state it. I never heard it before in my life.

Q. Don't you know that for the year ended 1943 and the year ended 1944, in accordance with the requirements of the Securities and Exchange Commission a consolidated report was filed, lumping theatre admissions and film rentals for those last two years? A. As stated before, when you tell it to me, I believe you. I do not know it to be a fact otherwise. (3021)

Q. You do not make any representation to this Court that you testify that the film rentals of National Theatres Corporation increased from $67,000,000 to $154,000,000 from 1942 to 1943, do you?

Mr. Wright: Excuse me. Just a minute. Let me say this, if the Court please: If there is any question as to the authenticity or accuracy of any figure that is on here, I will withdraw the exhibit so that a proper correction can be made. There is no desire to have anything in here, on the part of either of us, which does not correctly reflect what was reported to the Commission.

Mr. Caskey: I certainly think this is objectionable. The witness has not prepared it, he has not checked it. It is not in accordance with the evidence that has already been received. We object to it.

Judge Hand: Objection sustained.

Mr. Wright: I will ask to have this Paramount statement marked with the next exhibit number.

Judge Hand: This is another exhibit, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 405 for identification.)

By Mr. Wright:

Q. Now, can you tell us, Mr. Maloney, what that Exhibit 405 for identification is? A. Exhibit 405 is entitled "Paramount Pictures, Inc. and Subsidiaries Consolidated, Analysis of Income Per Consolidated Statements of Profit and Loss." It covers the period from 1935 to 1944 and reflects amounts of income and net profit which were obtained from copies of reports filed with the SEC, which copies are in the library of the New York Stock Exchange.

Mr. Wright: We will offer this 405 for identification in evidence.

Q. One question: These net profits here are also after taxes, is that right? A. That is correct.

Mr. Seymour: Let me just ask a couple of questions:

By Mr. Seymour:

Q. What is the last column on this sheet? A. You mean the heading of it?

Q. No. What does it show? What period does it cover? (3023)

A. The fiscal period ended December 30, 1944.

Q. The last column? A. That is correct.

Q. What column contains the figures for the year 1940? A. For the year when?

Q. 1940. A. The column bearing the heading January 4, 1941.

Mr. Wright: May it be understood, if the Court please, generally as to each of these exhibits, if there is any figure in error on any of these, whether they have been received in evidence or not, it is of course subject to correction in accordance with the figures on file.

Mr. Seymour: I am sorry to say that I am not in a position to examine the witness in detail about this, but as long as it is taken subject to correction and subject to objection on the grounds of materiality and relevancy, if we have any corrections we shall supply them to Government counsel.

Judge Hand: All right. Admitted.

Mr. Seymour: Let me just ask one other question:

Q. The first column which covers the 1934 period is the period when Paramount was in bankruptcy, isn't that so? A. I believe that is the case.

(Government's Exhibit 405 for identification received in evidence.)

(3024)

By Mr. Wright:

Q. Now, as to Paramount, did you also make an examination as to the extent of the excess profits tax payments? A. Yes, we did.

Q. And what did you find there? A. According to the copies of the statements available at the New York Stock Exchange, the amounts of charges for excess profits taxes appearing in the statements for the following fiscal periods were as follows:

For the fiscal year ended January 3, 1942, $39,784;

For the fiscal period ended January 2, 1943, $4,340,796.63;

For the fiscal year ended January 1, 1944, $19,963,292.21;

And for the fiscal period ended December 30, 1944, $20,355,359.90.

Mr. Caskey: Will you state for the record the rates of taxation that were applicable during those years?

The Witness: That is not possible, sir. I don't know them.

Mr. Wright: Will you mark this with the next exhibit number.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 406 for identification.)

Q. Will you tell the Court what this Exhibit 406 for (3025) identification is? A. Exhibit is entitled "Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation and Subsidiary Companies." It reflects amounts of income and net profit or loss obtained from copies of statements filed with the SEC, which copies are on file with the New York Stock Exchange.

Q. And the net profits that are written in ink at the bottom there are—the first figure in parenthesis is a loss, is that right? A. That is correct.

Q. And the rest are net profits after taxes? A. That is correct.

Mr. Wright: I will say that we are not offering the part that is stricken out with the red pencil on the exhibit, and dividend payments. All we are offering is the analysis of income and net profits. We offer them in evidence.

Mr. Leisure: If the Court please, we object on the grounds of materiality and relevancy as to this exhibit.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Mr. Leisure: And we ask that it be received subject to check and correction.

Judge Hand: Yes.

(Government's Exhibit 406 for identification received in evidence.)

Q. Did you also make an examination with respect to (3026) the excess profits payments of RKO? A. Yes, sir, we did.

Q. And what did you find there? A. The amounts appearing as charges for excess profits taxes in the statements available at the New York Stock Exchange indicated that for the year ended December 31, 1943, the charge was $495,000; for the year ended December 31, 1944, the charge was $3,483,960.

Mr. Wright: Will you mark this for identification, please.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 407 for identification.)

Q. Would you tell the Court what Exhibit 407 for identification is?. A. Exhibit 407 is entitled "Loew's, Inc. Consolidated Analysis of Income as shown in Profit and Loss Statements." It covers the period from 1933 to 1944 and reflects amounts of income and net profit after taxes as well as before taxes as obtained from copies of statements filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission, which copies are on file at the New York Exchange.

Mr. Wright: We offer that.

Mr. Davis: I object to that, if the Court please. I should like to ask the witness a question or two on preliminary cross-examination.

Judge Hand: Yes.

(3027)

Preliminary Cross Examination by Mr. Davis:

Q. Again, Mr. Witness, you did not prepare this yourself? A. No, I did not, sir.

Q. You did not examine the figures on which it is based? A. I did not in detail.

Q. You did not make the computations that it contains? A. I might point out, sir, no computations are involved in the schedule.

Q. There are no additions or subtractions in it? A. Well, except to the extent that it is necessary to add them to get this total. To that extent I did not make them.

Q. That is not a computation according to your conception? A. That is a computation.

Q. That you did not do? A. I did not.

Q. You did not verify this by any of the documents on which it was based? A. The original documents?

Q. The original documents. A. I did not.

Q. What is the name of the person who did do that work? A. If I may refresh my recollection?

Q. Certainly. A. The work of which you speak was performed by Special Agent Richard Trout of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Q. What is his occupation? A. He is a Special Agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

(3028)

Q. How long has he been so employed? A. I am not aware, sir.

Q. Was he employed for this particular job and none other? A. Oh no, he was not.

Mr. Davis: Now, if the Court please, I object to this on several grounds which I shall state: The first is it is not verified by the person who made it, and in this respect it is quite different from a computation drawn from the books of a corporation kept in its regular course of business and made either by the person in charge of the books or by some other person whom he delegates and who acts under his direction. There is no showing whatever that this witness had any part in this computation or is competent to verify that. In the second place, I object to it because it is wholly irrelevant to this case.

By way of illustration, it is a matter of common knowledge that the petroleum industry has been very prosperous, and I assume that you could make a similar statement from the books of any petroleum company in the United States within the last five years and show a steady upward curve of profit. That, says Mr. Wright, could not occur in a competitive industry, and if you showed him the petroleum industry that all the companies were prospering, ipso facto, according to Mr. Wright's conception, you would have shown that there was some sort of conspiracy or combination among them, which is clearly an obvious non sequitur. The fact that there is profit here has nothing whatever to do with the alleged combination or restraint of trade on the part of these defendants. I submit that the suggestion that there is anything pro-bative here eludes any possible reason. I object to the introduction of this exhibit.

(3029)

Judge Hand: We will sustain the objection on the first ground. We have admitted other schedules despite the second ground, although their relevancy here I should think is very doubtful on that.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, on that first ground, as long as they are subject to correction I see no reason why they should not go in. We have admitted a great mass of tabular material from the defendants here without insisting on examining the witness who prepared it.

Judge Hand: Well, you cannot have utterly different things in here. If they are so, I should think you had better withdraw it and find out about it. This witness manifestly is not qualified. They raise the objection. It may not be a worthy objection to raise if you can confer and straighten the thing out, but it is obviously a good one now. Of course, Mr.

(3029a)

Caskey's exhibit there stands in the same position exactly and was excluded on the same ground.

Mr. Wright: Will you mark this Exhibit 408 for identification, please.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 408 for identification.)

(3030)

Mr. Raftery: I won't object to it, Mr. Wright. Go ahead and offer it.

By Mr. Wright:

Q. Will you tell the Court what Exhibit 408 for identification is? A. Exhibit 408 is entitled "Universal Pictures Company, Inc. State of Consolidated Profit and Loss." It reflects the amounts of profit and loss for the period from 1935 to 1944, as these amounts were obtained from copies of statements filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission, which copies are available at the New York Stock Exchange.

Q. Now the first four years' figures, those are losses? A. Those first four years are losses. The remaining years are profits.

Q. Those are profits after taxes? A. That is correct.

Mr. Wright: That is offered, and I take it there is no objection.

Mr. Seymour: May we see it?

Mr. Wright: Yes (handing).

(Government's Exhibit 408 for identification received in evidence.)

Q. Did you also make an examination of the Universal data on file with the Commission with respect to excess profit tax payments? A. Yes, we did.

Q. What did you find there? A. The amounts charged (3031) for excess profits taxes for the year 1943 was not available at the New York Stock Exchange for the fiscal period ended November 1st, 1941. The amount charged was $711,000.

Mr. Raftery: What year?

The Witness: November 1st, 1941.

A. (Continuing) For the fiscal period ended October 31, 1942, it amounted to $3,181,000, and for the fiscal period ended October 28, 1944 it amounted to $6,897,900.

Mr. Wright: Will you mark that with the next exhibit number?

(Marked Government's Exhibit 409 for identification.)

By Mr. Wright:

Q. Now, would you state to the Court what Exhibit 409 for identification is? A. Exhibit 409 is a schedule consisting of two pages entitled "Columbia Pictures Corporation, Schedule of Profit and Loss." The schedule reflects the net profits of the company for the period from June 30, 1934, to June 30, 1944, and was obtained from copies of statements filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission, which copies are available at the New York Stock Exchange.

Q. Those net profit figures were also after taxes? A. They were.

Mr. Wright: I will offer it in evidence.

(3032)

Mr. Frohlich: No objection to this, Mr. Wright.

(Government's Exhibit 409 for identification received in evidence.)

Q. Now, did you also make an examination with respect to the excess profits payments of Columbia? A. That has been made. However, the figures are not presently available, Mr. Wright.

Q. You do not have the figure there with you? A. No.

Judge Goddard: What is the difference between the figures on this page which is attached and the main sheet? On the attached page there seems to be a different figure.

Mr. Wright: The main sheet, I believe, is the analysis of income, and there was not room, apparently, to put the net profit figure on that sheet, and so that was put on an additional sheet which is attached to the front here.

Q. Now did you cause to be prepared some charts which reflect the net profit figures after taxes that you have testified to here? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Do you have the Warner Bros. chart there? A. Yes.

Mr. Wright: I will ask you to have this chart of Warners marked with the next exhibit number for identification.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 410 for identification.)

Mr. Wright: We have no copies of this.

(3033)

Mr. Caskey: Aren't they based on excluded exhibits?

Mr. Wright: I do not think the Warners exhibit was excluded.

Mr. Seymour: May we look at that?

Mr. Wright: Yes. All that this does is put in graphic form what has already been received in evidence in precise detail.

Judge Bright: As to all of the companies?

Mr. Wright: No, that is just as to Warner. There is a separate one for each company.

Mr. Proskauer: It is a graphic illustration that we did better in the war years.

Mr. Wright: If you have the Warner work sheet there, this is simply a statement in chart form of the net profit figures that appear at the bottom of the work sheet. I think that is 403.

Will you mark these with the next four exhibit numbers?

Judge Hand: I do not know what your claim is about it. It has gone up and it has gone down here by strides.

(3034)

Mr. Wright: I think the descent there, your Honor, is a plateau which is far in excess of anything which has appeared before——

Judge Hand: It is still in the highlands. Well, all right.

Mr. Seymour: May we see the rest of the chart, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Yes, as soon as they are marked.

Mr. Seymour: Of course there is no more objection to these graphs than there was to the original figures. Your Honors have overruled the objection to the figures. Now I suppose equally relevant would be graphs and charts showing the performance of American business generally through the war years; the increased consumption of agricultural products on the part of the average citizen, and perhaps quite a fancy array of those charts could be prepared too.

Judge Hand: Of course.

Mr. Proskauer: What this case needs is some charts.

Judge Hand: You could equally put in what some independent did in the way of increase in Montana.

Mr. Seymour: The only difficulty of course with that sort of thing is that the Government and not we are able to get that sort of information. This is public information which we provided the Government with.

Mr. Frohlich: I would like to call the Court's attention, if you please, to Columbia Exhibit No. 409, just put in evidence, and the Court will note that the profits appear from 1934 to 1944 and that from 1934 to 1937 the profits were a million, a million eight hundred, a million five hundred, a million three hundred, and then there were four bad years, and then during the war period they ran up again to one million and six hundred, one million eight hundred, and two million dollars. With the exception of that last item of two million, the figures prior to 1938 were larger than during the war years, so that Columbia has had a stationary history for the past ten years. There has been no increase; on the contrary there has been a decrease for a four-year period.

Judge Hand: All right, we are going to let this thing in. It is a great deal safer to let in evidence of this sort. I do not see what in the world it proves, but it may connect with something.

Mr. Leisure: With regard to this graph, in order to clarify it as far as RKO is concerned, may I ask the witness a couple of questions?

Judge Hand: Yes.

Preliminary Cross Examination by Mr. Leisure:

Q. Mr. Maloney, I take it that this graph was prepared (3036) from the figures that appear on the tables that have been offered heretofore, is that true? A. That is correct, it was.

Q. Would you mind picking up, please, sir, your table 406 for RKO?

Judge Hand: You mean for the purpose of making another graph like this, like this Warner one, like 410?

Mr. Leisure: 411 is the one I am addressing my attention to, and he says it was based on the figures in 406, the RKO figures.

Judge Hand: I haven't seen 406?

Mr. Leisure: Could you give the Court copies of the 406 one so they can see it, please, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: I think your Honors have it.

Mr. Leisure: You have that? It is the last graph that I am addressing my attention to.

Judge Bright: We haven't copies of that.

Mr. Wright: He has the only copy, the one that is marked.

Q. Do you have before you, Mr. Maloney, 406? A. I do.

Q. I note down at the bottom you have stricken out by red pencil the next to the last line under "Net Profit or Loss," is that right? A. That is correct.

Q. And then below that you have written in, in ink, in place of $988,191.20, you have written in $695,416.20. That (3037) makes a total difference of $293,785, does it not, Mr. Maloney? A. That is the difference.

Q. Would you mind telling us where you got the figures from which you wrote in? A. The figures appearing in ink are, respectively, the amount representing either net loss or net profit for that year. It is my understanding that the figures previously appearing, and which have now been crossed out, were those representing the net profit or loss before certain adjustments had been made to that amount.

Q. Those were the figures that were given by the SEC, were they not, the ones you have stricken out? A. May I ask which figures you refer to?

Q. The one just above the ones written in in ink. A. Both figures appear in the statements filed with the SEC.

Q. But what is the basis for the difference between the two columns, if you know? A. In detail, I don't know. In general I can state that it represents adjustments to income other than operating adjustments.

Q. Do those differences appear on the face of the chart here as to why those differences were made? A. You refer to the chart as being Exhibit 406?

Q. Yes. A. The differences do not appear on the face of 406.

Mr. Leisure: I move to strike it out. The chart is clearly erroneous if it does not show why these changes were made. I don't know how he computes this difference of $293,785 and it does not appear on the face of the chart. I move to strike out the chart on that basis.

Judge Bright: On none of the charts do any operating expenses appear.

Mr. Leisure: He changes the figures though, Judge Bright.

Judge Bright: I see that.

Mr. Leisure: And there is no showing here on what he bases it. We cannot check that.

Judge Hand: Well, I dislike to keep hearing and entertaining these motions, some of which I will have to, to strike things out. I do not think it is the way to do it. For reasons that we have already stated, or fears that we have already expressed, we think evidence of this sort should be admitted at this stage of the case. Now, when it comes to the details of it, and the correctness of it and the checking of it, that ought to be done between the Government and yourselves. There ought not to be questions raised by motions to strike out as a good motion disposing of this kind of thing.

Do you know anything about this?

Mr. Wright: Yes. If the Court please, the figure that was originally on there was not the final net profit or last loss figure, and I told them to get the final figure as it appeared on the SEC reports so that we would have comparable figures in each case, and, as I understand it, the figure in ink is the final figure as reported to the SEC, and that is why we drew the line through the other figure and substituted the ink figure. There is no matter of computation involved there, as far as the witness is concerned. It is simply a question of copying what was on the SEC report.

(3039)

Judge Hand: What about that, Mr. Leisure?

Mr. Leisure: If there is any way we can check how he got the second figure, we will be glad to do it.

Judge Bright: Aren't those your figures that you furnished the SEC?.

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Leisure: There is no showing on the chart where they came from. That is the point of my objection.

Judge Bright: He says they came from the SEC, your reports to the SEC.

Mr. Leisure: If we can check it there, it will be all right, but there is no showing on the chart where it did come from. That is the point of my objection.

Judge Bright: Well, he has testified where they came from.

(3040)

Judge Hand: Don't you know this thing yourself? Haven't you got data here or in your office or in the office of your client?

Mr. Leisure: The general counsel for the company says he does not think it is accurate, that is why I made my objection, and there is no showing on the chart as to where it came from.

Mr. Wright: If it is incorrect, it can be corrected.

Judge Hand: It will be received subject to a motion to strike, if it is found incorrect.

Mr. Wright: I would like to collect those——

Mr. Proskauer: Can't collect mine because I want to question the witness very briefly.

Preliminary Cross Examination by Mr. Proskauer:

Q. Are you an accountant? A. Yes, I am.

Q. Did you devise the form in which these exhibits were put in here? A. To a certain extent, I did.

Q. In notice on the RKO Exhibit No. 406 you showed as a separate item theatre admissions for the years 1940 to 1944 inclusive and you showed on the chart that RKO theatre admissions increased thirteen million dollars, in round numbers, in those four years; you note that, don't you? A. I do, sir.

Q. Why, in drawing up the Warner exhibits, did you not follow the same course but instead lumped film rental income, theatre admissions, sales, and incidental miscellaneous income? A. To the best of my recollection the detailed figures were not available.
(3041)

Q. Have you got your work sheets there? A. Yes, I do, sir.

Q. Would you mind looking at them for Warner Bros. and tell me whether those do not show separately? A. Be glad to.

Q. Don't bother with that because we will supply them separately.

Mr. Wright: We will be glad to have the separately stated figures, if they are available. We would prefer it in that form.

Q. Look at your sheets. I also notice that on Exhibit 403 Warner Bros. exhibit, you do not show any expense whatever; you simply show income and then net profit. Have you got the expenses there? A. No, sir.
(3042)

Q. They showed on the statement, didn't they? A. Oh, yes, they did, sir.

Q. Why didn't you put the expenses on? A. We weren't interested in them for the purpose of this statement.

Q. Have you got the expenses there? A. No, we do not, sir.

Q. Don't you know that in the years in question, on our sheet, that there was a reduction of expense for interest of $2,700,000 a year? A. No, I do not know that, sir.

Q. Don't you know that in those years Warners had plowed back into paying off their bonded indebtedness enough money to reduce that expense by $2,700,000 a year? A. No, I do not, sir.

Q. Don't you also know that in the expense account there was a difference of a million dollars a year in depreciation charged off? A. No, I do not, sir.

Q. Have you got those in there? A. No, sir.

Q. As an accountant, do you think that was a fair way to prepare this chart? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You thought that the Court should be influenced to believe that these profits had been going up without any regard to the fact that a primary reason for that was a reduction of some $3,700,000 a year in these expense items? (3043)

A. I can only——

Q. Did you think that was fair? A. As you stated it, sir?

Q. Yes. A. As you state it, I do not.

Q. What is there about my statement of it that you think is inaccurate or unfair? A. I might say, sir, that the scrutiny of the available records at the New York Stock Exchange did not purport to be either an audit or a detailed examination of the results of the operations of any of the companies involved.

Q. What are you talking about, the New York Stock Exchange? I thought you said you got these from the SEC. A. I did not, sir.

Q. Have you got the Stock Exchange data? Have you got the Stock Exchange data there? A. With me? No, sir.

Q. Don't you know in the year 1929 our stock was currently selling at some substantial sum over $100 a share? A. No, sir, I do not.

Mr. Wright: I submit, if the Court please, this is not a proper cross-examination. I see no point in taking him into a field where he has not even been offered as having any knowledge.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Q: I want to ask you one final question.

Mr. Proskauer: I indicate to the Court that I am going to supply this additional data.

(3044)

Q. (Continuing.) If you are an accountant, I would like you to take our profit for the year ending August 31, 1944, and check my calculation, that it was approximately $142,000,000, yes, the gross income, not the profit, the gross income for the last year here. A. Don't have the figures.

Q. Have you got it there? A. I have in front of me Exhibit 403.

Q. Just tell me if my calculation is correct, that our gross business, so to speak, was approximately $142,000,000, that is, our income from royalties, rents, film rental and miscellaneous income and these other items on here, being the total amount of income that we took in from our business, was approximately $142,000,000.

Judge Hand: This is 1944?

Mr. Proskauer: That is right, sir. I am taking the last year.

A. The total income stated, including the total of the items under the caption "Other Income", amounts to approximately $142,000,000.

Q. And the profit was just under $7,000,000, wasn't it? A. The profit as stated——

Q. As you show it. A. (Continuing) —is $6,953,000.

Q. I want you to check my calculation that on a gross (3045) of about $142,000,000, we earned $7,000,000 in round numbers, which was approximately 4.9 per cent. Perhaps I can help you by showing you my lead pencil calculation.

Mr. Wright: Obviously, counsel can make any calculation he pleases from the exhibit without——

Mr. Proskauer: What is it? This thing has been offered here to show some kind of swollen profits, and I am showing by this witness's mouth that we did business on a margin of less than 5 per cent.

Mr. Wright: You are not showing anything out of the witness's mouth that is not available on the face of the chart. I submit it is a waste of time.

Mr. Proskauer: I ask my right to show it out of the horse's mouth—the witness's mouth.

Q. See if I do not divide correctly, Mr. Maloney, will you? Is it Maroney or Maloney? A. Maloney.

Q. Mr. Maloney. A. Without reference to your division, it is approximately 4.9 per cent.

Q. You have confidence in my division. A. I do, sir.

Mr. Proskauer: That is all, sir.

Mr. Davis: If the Court pleases, your Honors have admitted all these other computations. I objected to the computation as to Loew's, perhaps in a spirit of some impatience, because I had sat here and seen a miscellaneous mass of irrelevant documents laid on the table and I had a hideous feeling that some day (3046) somebody has to plow through them, and that possibly that might even be myself. I was as much moved by consideration of my own convenience as the Court's in objecting to these documents. I think my objection was sound. I am delighted that your Honors ruled with me. I maintain my objection as to their relevancy, for if these documents showed that the companies had all lost money, I suppose that would be no defense to a charge that they had combined and conspired in the hope that they might make it, and I know of no reason why the two sides of that equation are not the same, that if they have made money, it is not proof that they combined and conspired in order to achieve that result. And I want to say before I conclude that I do not understand at all what idea is in Mr. Wright's mind when he says that they haven't passed along their profits to the public in the form of reduced theatre admissions. I say boldly for Loew's, Inc. that when we make profits, we used first to pay our fixed charges and the remainder belong to our stockholders and does not belong to the public at all, and there is no reason why our stockholders should be called on to pass on to the public the profits that have been earned on their investment. We are not a public utility. Our rates are not subject to regulation. We have a perfect right to charge any price that the public is willing to pay for its amusement, and the only restraint on it is that if we charge too much, the public will turn their backs and find some other way to spend their leisure time, but certainly that is not a matter within the confines of the Sherman Act.

Having relieved myself to this extent, I withdraw my objections heretofore made to the admission of this as to Loew's.

Mr. Wright: I believe Loew's exhibit is already marked for identification.

Judge Hand: Yes, it is.

(Government's Exhibit 407 for identification received in evidence.)

By Mr. Wright:

Q. I will ask you the same questions with respect to this Loew Exhibit that I did the others, as to what, if any, examination you made with respect to excess profits payment by Loew's? A. The amounts of charges for excess profits taxes appearing in the copies of statements filed with the SEC were obtained.

Q. Can you tell us what they were? A. The amounts appearing as charges for excess profits tax were as follows: For the fiscal period ended August 31, 1942, $1,666,883.09; for the fiscal year ended August 31, 1943, $14,816,915.87; and for the fiscal year ended August 31, 1944, $4,428,273.79. (3048)

Mr. Wright: I will also have to ask to have marked for identification a graph which simply sets forth in graphic form the data that is recorded in Exhibit 407.

Mr. Davis: I want to ask the witness a question.

Judge Hand: 410 was admitted, wasn't it?

Mr. Wright: 410?

Judge Goddard: Yes.

Mr. Wright: I believe that is the Warner graph.

Judge Bright: Here it is up here.

Judge Hand: I do not think that Judge Proskauer objects to that any more than to anything else.

Mr. Proskauer: Oh, you mean that chart?

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Proskauer: I am devout follower of the chartist movement.

Mr. Wright: I will ask to have the Loew graph marked as 415 for identification.

Mr. Proskauer: All I want to do is put in the data on here on a couple of sheets, showing our financial history since the year 1929.

Judge Hand: I suppose it shows a kind of Swing Low Sweet Chariot curve.

Mr. Proskauer: There is more than that. It shows what I intimated in my cross-examination, 1929 was our big year, and it also shows that the witness, with characteristic fairness in this case, deliberately omitted and that was what is shown in all these other things, the abnormal theatre attendance during the war period.

(3049)

Mr. Wright: I will now——

Mr. Davis: Before you drop this line, I want to ask a question.

Preliminary Cross-Examination by Mr. Davis:

Q. In the chart 407, giving the profits of Loew's for the years from 1933 to 1944, do the receipts there include receipts from foreign as well as domestic business? A. If I may refresh my recollection a moment?

Q. Surely. A. I am very sorry I have to tell you that these documents do not indicate in sufficient detail to warrant my statement whether or not all foreign subsidiaries have been included.

Q. You do not know then whether they have been included, or if included, how much foreign business amounted to? A. That is correct, sir.

Q. On the next to the last line on this table you will find the line "Less provision for taxes." How does that line compare in amount with your statement of the excess profits taxes? A. Up until the fiscal year ended August 31, 1941, and including that year, no statement was made by me as to the amount of taxes. With respect to the three years ended (3050)

August 31, 1942, '43 and '44, the amounts of taxes as stated in Exhibit 407 differ from the amounts as previously stated by me for excess profits taxes, and in each case the amounts appearing in Exhibit 407 are in excess of the amounts previously stated by me.

Q. Do you know what additional taxes are included in that excess? A. If I may observe for one moment, please. The entire amount of the excess is also federal taxes, presumably federal income tax. The prior statement made by me did not refer to income taxes.

Q. For the year 1942 what did you report for excess profits taxes? A. I stated that in the annual report filed for that year a charge appeared in the amount of $1,666,883.09.

Q. As against a total tax item of $9,704,001.40? A. That is correct.

Q. What did you report for excess profits taxes in 1943? A. I stated that the amount appearing as a charge for such taxes in the annual report filed was $14,816,915.87.

Q. Against a total tax of $23,731,916.66? A. That is correct, sir.

Q. For 1944 what excess profits taxes are on your statement? A. The amount appearing as a charge for those taxes for that fiscal year was $4,428,273.79.

Q. Against a total tax item of $15,161,968.69? A. That is correct, sir.
(3051)

Q. It is true, is it not, that on your table and on your chart, with the exception of the closing months of the year 1944, the year of highest earnings as the year 1937? A. It appears from the information available that the year in which Loew's, Inc. and its subsidiaries made the greatest net profit was the fiscal year ended August 31, 1944. No other information appears.

Q. Does it not appear from your chart that the year of highest earnings, except for the closing months of 1944, was the year 1937? A. I can only answer that question——

Q. Have you that chart before you? A. I know what is on the chart. I can only answer the question by stating that that particular type of chart, while I do not purport to be an expert chartist, that type of chart only reflects the points on it. The lines drawn between the points are not of significance.

Q. I can't labor the obvious, but it is very clear, isn't it, that there is a mountain peak on this chart in 1937 and a valley, the depth of which was reached in 1940? A. May take me a little longer because I only have the figur to look at.

Q. You may look at the picture. A. If I may.

Q. Although I think the picture speaks for itself in that regard, if it speaks at all. A. It appears that the lowest point of earnings was the year ended August 31, 1933.

Q. Isn't it a fact on your—lease the chart aside—on your table—I am only asking this question to put on the record what is perfectly obvious on the table itself—in the year 1937 the net profits were $14,333,716.70 and in the year 1944, $14,817,285.79? A. If I may correct your figures. The last one should be $14,517,285.79, that is correct.

Q. I am wrong, '517. So that there is a difference there of something less than $200,000 in those two years? A. That is correct.

Q. And those are the big years on the table? A. Those are the two highest points on the chart and the two biggest years in the table.

Mr. Wright: I will offer in evidence these graphs marked 410 to 414 inclusive, 410 being the one for Warner Bros., 411 RKO, 412 Paramount, 413 Columbia, 414 Universal, and 415 Loew's.

(Government's Exhibits 410 to 415 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Mr. Leisure has agreed that these exhibits, previously identified as 388 and 389, may be received in evidence.

Judge Hand. Is that the one——

Mr. Wright: This is an exchange of letters that was identified while Mr. Mochrie was on the stand. I won't bother to read them at this time.

Judge Hand: Have you mollified Mr. Caskey yet? If that were possible, you could say the house proceeds.

Mr. Proskauer: I have been trying it for years. I have been trying that in vain for years.

Mr. Caskey: If Mr. Maloney will come down to the office tomorrow, I will have the auditor of the company there and they can make up the chart, and if they agree on it, it may go in. I assure your Honor this is not a question of technicality. This is just plain wrong. The film rentals of Twentieth Century-Fox did not increase 90 million dollars in one year.

By Mr. Wright:

Q. Can you do that, Mr. Maloney? You can get over there tomorrow.

Judge Hand: It looks extravagant.

Mr. Caskey: If it did, they didn't tell their attorneys.

Judge Hand: We call that a sinister suggestion.

Mr. Wright: That is all, I think, Mr. Maloney.

Mr. Raftery: May I give you some more papers, Mr. Wright?

This is the letter that came this morning. He wanted the second-run contract for Stage Door Canteen in Atlanta, the Riviera Theatre in Los Angeles, Bard's Adams Theatre in Los Angeles, The Stage Door Canteen Sunset contracts in Cincinnati, and the contracts of the Fox West Coast Agency Corporation for sub-runs in Los Angeles. I have only a memo contract, which is a spot booking contract, and that's that.

(3053a)

Now, on Universal I have the rest of that stuff.

(3054)

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, with reference to working out an orderly procedure, I would like to say this: Of course, we can stand here and mark for identification material that is handed to us and just offer it, but I do not think that that makes the kind of a record that anybody wants in the case, and I should like to renew my request for a recess in the hope that we can gather together this contractual material and perhaps in some cases avoid encumbering the record with the actual contracts themselves at all; perhaps submit simply a schedule of rental terms or the clearance provisions or whatever it is we wish to establish in the particular case.

Judge Hand: What do you want, until Monday?

Mr. Wright: We would be able to go ahead Monday. I am hopeful that given a recess of that kind we could finish the whole presentation in a matter of about two court days. That is, of course, with the proviso that we actually have an opportunity to get at the material and organize it so it can be put in with the minimum delay.

Mr. Proskauer: Do not organize it the way you did these things here today.

Judge Hand: Now, where is this material? Does it have to be flown here from the West Coast? Or is it here?

(3055)

Mr. Wright: As I understand it, there are copies of all of these contracts at the home offices of the exchanges in New York.

Mr. Caskey: Let me understand these things, Mr. Wright. We certainly have not told you any such thing, and it is not correct. You asked for the 1941-42 contracts, which are not at the home office.

Judge Hand: When did you give notice to your principals there to get them?

Mr. Caskey: On the list that came out on November 3rd, they are here available. On the ones that came this morning, we called up; one of my associates called up during court, and this is dated November 12. They want license agreements for 1941-42. Those license agreements are in Ogdensburg.

Judge Hand: Ogdensburg, New York?

Mr. Caskey: Yes.

Now, I want to say to Mr. Wright one thing: There are two classes of data, really, that were asked for. One, as far as Fox is concerned, where the answers to certain of the interrogatories is deemed by the Government to be imperfect, we told Mr. Marcus on the 5th day of October that we could not supply the additional data, and no matter how many more letters they write the answer is still the same; so I do not want Mr. Wright to come into court next Monday or any other time and say we haven't got them, because that would be perfectly true, we haven't got them. We simply have not got the data. That may not be true as to some minutiae, but generally speaking we have not got them. As to the contracts, we will start giving it to them as soon as the court adjourns and do the best we can.

(3056)

Judge Hand: Now, as to the material in Ogdensburg; it either could be flown down from Burlington, or sent down by mail.

Mr. Caskey: Actually we have to send someone down to get it because there is no file clerk there.

Judge Hand: And then you have this West Coast stuff that is all here except what was asked for on the 12th; is that so; or is it all here anyway?

Mr. Caskey: Well, as I understand it, all contracts for the 1942-43 season and subsequently are here.

Judge Hand: So you have got everything but the material from Ogdensburg?

Mr. Caskey: That is right; and the material which is the alleged deficiency in the answers to the interrogatory.

Judge Hand: Could Mr. Wright go on without (3057)

Ogdensburg? How about it? Does it amount to anything? Can't you agree on it?

Mr. Wright: I do not know what he is referring to offhand. I think it would not be of significance in itself.

Mr. Caskey: It is the license agreement for the 1941-42 seasons covering the exhibition of Fox pictures in the Middleboro Theatre, Middleboro, Massachusetts. Theatre, Brockton, and part theatre, Taunton; and the first-run exhibition in Boston for that season. That is what we haven't got. That is what is in Ogdensburg.

Judge Hand: Those things are in Ogdensburg?

Mr. Caskey: Yes, at the warehouse.

Judge Hand: That is a queer place to put them.

Mr. Caskey: That is where Fox maintains its plant where they reclaim the silver nitrate from the films, and we have a warehouse there. We had someone testify that there were over a hundred thousand of these contracts.

Mr. Seymour: I should like to report, if your Honors please, on the status of my pending request. We handed Mr. Wright this morning at the conclusion of the morning session photostats of 148 contracts that he called for. We will photostat and give him in the next few days the balance of all the contracts that he has called for, and we will then have complied with all his requests except one, and if we do not get any more requests he will be all right.

Now, the one that we cannot comply with is one for Paramount equivalent to the one Mr. Caskey has just mentioned. On Monday of this week one of Mr. Wright's associates asked two of my associates to get in touch with theatres all over the United States and find out admission prices charged several years ago and clearances in effect several years ago which are not in the contract; and we told him that it would take weeks to get that information; and they suggested that we might give it to them after the case was completed and then they could use it in their brief. Now, I am utterly unwilling to have the case proceed after the end of it in that way.

Judge Hand: You are entirely right. We are not going to have it, you can be sure of that.

Mr. Seymour: And so I am unable to supply that information. I want to give Government counsel notice now that we cannot procure and furnish that information within any reasonable time, and therefore we decline to do it. We have given him all the information presently available through the interrogatories and much additional information. That we cannot obtain and supply.

Mr. Wright: We are glad to find that out. I might say, your Honor, that this data that he is referring to now is interrogatory answer material which was reported to the Court as being ready to be handed over to us last July. It never was. If it is never going to be, that is all right. But he is not talking about any new request. That was material that was then to be given us and which we never got.

Now, I would agree with the Court there is no point in deferring any further or holding the case open to pick up any additional interrogatory data that was supposed to come to us before and never got to us. We will just have to work with what has now been given us. But as I pointed out, they have been in many instances giving us revised or different figures, which has involved our recomputing in each case tabulations that we have already made, and there is a substantial burden of tabulation imposed there by reason of changes that occurred since we recessed.

Now, we have not yet seen, if the Court please, even the defendants' complete case. As I understand from Mr. Seymour, he still has some more, additional, affidavits which he wants to get in, and, of course, we should have those too before we close our rebuttal.

Judge Hand: How about those?

Mr. Seymour: As I told your Honors, the affidavits which we propose to supply are with one exception in the same category as affidavits already in. There is one exception to that which I mentioned specifically. The minute those affidavits are in New York so that we have them we will furnish copies of them to Mr. Wright and we expect to have them by the end of this week. The only other problem, as far as we are concerned, is this problem of corrections. It has been impossible to assemble proposed corrections and discuss those with Government counsel. That would need to be done.

Mr. Wright: I would assume, your Honors, that an adjournment to Tuesday would be safer than a Monday adjournment, and I am sure that we could use the time in shortening and getting together in that period the actual presentation.

Judge Hand: As I understand it, you have got three affidavits to be furnished by Mr. Seymour. Then you have got a checking up of this Fox business by Mr. Caskey. You have no more evidence, have you?

Mr. Caskey: No, sir.

Judge Hand: You have got the Ogdensburg ware house data. How many exhibits in that? Three or four?

(3061)

Mr. Wright: I think there are only a couple of contracts involved there.

Judge Hand: A couple of contracts at Ogdensburg? Now, what else is there?

Mr. Wright: We have also asked for specific letters in addition to specific license agreements.

Mr. Proskauer: I can't hear you.

Judge Hand: He said, "We have also asked for some specific letters in addition to the license agreements."

Mr. Caskey: I may say as to one letter we have no copy of it and no knowledge that it exists, and our information is that it does not exsit, and I have no personal knowledge of the situation; but we will have no copy to furnish Mr. Wright; so if you are going to offer secondary evidence you had better be prepared to go ahead on that basis.

Judge Hand: Well, what more is there? Secondary evidence that you have about this letter?

Mr. Wright: It may be necessary, of course, in the event that a letter we have requested is not produced where we only have——

Judge Hand: He says it won't be. He tells you it won't be.

(3062)

Mr. Wright: Yes. Well, in that case we shall attempt to get in touch with the party who can make an affidavit as to the copy and submit that to Mr. Caskey in an attempt to secure a stipulation which would make it competent if we need to use it. It seems to me it is the kind of thing there is no need to call a witness for.

Mr. Caskey: I certainly do not want to be put in a position where I am charged with delaying the case because I do not agree to some affidavit. If you have got competent evidence, put it in. I know nothing about it. It is a letter dated January 2, 1935, relating to Sterling, Colorado, which I understand has a population of 648.

Mr. Seymour: One of my colleagues asked me not to cut myself off from the possibility of sur-rebuttal if the Government should put anything by way of rebuttal in that we thought warranted it. We have not seen that yet and we do not expect to see it.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor, I do not think this warrants it, but I want to put in a couple of short schedules with the proof of what my cross-examination questions suggested.

Judge Hand: If we adjourn until Tuesday do you think you can finish the case on Tuesday and Wednesday?

(3063)

Mr. Wright: For our part we would make every effort to do just that.

Mr. Raftery: If your Honor please, that was the question I was going to ask, for a very selfish reason: I have got to go to England a week from Saturday, and I was going to suggest Monday instead of Tuesday, thinking of possible sur-rebuttal which might come from some of my learned colleagues. But I would hate to see it go over to Tuesday, because I have been for months trying to get passage, and I just had passage confirmed. It is very difficult to get over there, and I have got to go a week from Saturday. Now, I prefer Monday if we could go on Monday, and we would at least have three days instead of two before Thanksgiving.

Mr. Wright: We would like, of course, to accommodate Mr. Raftery in any way we could, and I am sure that if there were any occasion to put anything in that he wanted before we left we could work it out so that he would not be detained. But I do think that we would be put under a severe strain in getting this material ready by Monday, and I do not think there would be any net saving in time if we had to go ahead Monday instead of Tuesday.

Judge Hand: Well, my associates who are very (3064)

Thanksgiving and family-minded and live in the provinces and go there are anxious to have the thing go on Monday lest it be hung over. They want to finish this thing by Thanksgiving; and your trip abroad points that way. I do not believe anybody will be much distressed, in the condition this case is in now, by the addition of these contracts in Ogdensburg, and so on.

In how large towns were these exhibits?

Mr. Wright: As I recall it, all that is involved in that Ogdensburg situation is an attempt to straighten out the testimony on cross-examination here. There was a difference or dispute as to whether or not the clearance given by the other distributors had been maintained by Paramount. The only way we could see to do it is to get the contracts of all distributors so you could compare them in that situation, and that is the way this Ogdensburg thing arose before and after.

Mr. Caskey: You mean we are asked to produce these contracts so that you can——

Mr. Raftery: Mr. Wright—excuse me, Mr. Caskey—here is the situation on Middleboro for Universal, and the other town of Ayers. I have held them back since 3:10 p.m., and I have not anything for the current season because he did not buy the product in Middleboro; and the theatre in Taunton you have asked for you have already got in the M. & P. franchise. So now you have got that to compare with the testimony.

Judge Hand: So Ogdensburg is cleared?

Mr. Raftery: Well, that is Universal. You can study those.

Mr. Wright: Certainly, your Honor, the absence of the Ogdensburg material would not prevent us from going ahead on Monday or closing the case on Wednesday. But we would like to have it if we can get it.

Judge Hand: Well, I think it is better to put this over until Monday. You are all of you going to be anxious to get away for Thanksgiving, and I think it is a wiser disposition of it, really. It makes no difference to me, of course, which you do, but I think we shall adjourn until Monday at 10:30.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor, could we use a few minutes here to discuss what we are going to do after the case is closed here? I should assume the Court would like an oral argument at some stage of the case.

Judge Hand: There is no doubt about that.

Mr. Proskauer: And my suggestion is—and I suggest this to the Court as a way which I think would be most helpful to the Court—if we could get Mr. Wright's brief and give our answer, and then have an oral argument, I think it would enormously reduce the area of conflict. We would know exactly what we are to meet, and if we could make some tentative arrangement at least as to how we are going to handle that, it would be a great comfort to those of us who have other court engagements that are waiting until we can give some word here.

Judge Hand: Well, when could you have your brief ready, do you think, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Well, if the Court please, I think to save time we would prefer an exchange of briefs. We have already filed a fairly extensive trial brief, and it seems to me that we could both exchange briefs, I should say, within 30 days after the close of the case, and then set the matter down for argument.

Judge Hand: I should think you had better serve a brief on them within two weeks after you have closed the case, and give them then ten days to answer that brief.

Mr. Seymour: It is awfully short, if your Honor please.

Mr. Raftery: Unfortunately I won't be back here until the 16th of December. I made sure I had passage back before I went over, and I certainly would not have any time to write a brief.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor, let me suggest how this case envisions itself to counsel. I anticipate we are going to get a brief from Mr. Wright charging us with high crime and misdemeanor in Ogdensburg, in that town with a population of 680, and a great many local situations.
(3067)

Mr. Wright: That is quite wrong if that is what you are anticipating.

Mr. Proskauer: I am delighted to hear you say that. I do not know what else you have, but if you have anything else we are glad to get it. But the moment we know what there is there we have got to organize this material with reference to the specific charge. I should think we need two weeks——

Mr. Seymour: If your Honor please, if the Court feels they can indulge us, Mr. Wright may know what is in this great mass of documents, and he will probably point out what he likes about those or what strikes him as of some significance——

Judge Hand: I should think two weeks for him and two weeks for you——

Mr. Seymour: If you could give us any more time, your Honor, in view of the fact that we are going into that Christmas period——

Judge Hand: Well, I know that. Of course, I realize that you have all done very well in this case, but what are we going to do if we just have this case stringing along with three judges tied up here? We cannot take up other things while this is pending.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor, would you consider it fair to give Mr. Wright three weeks and give us three weeks and then let us appear whenever you say and argue? You do not have to bother about it while we are briefing. I think we would all be much happier, and I am venturing to plead for my friend Mr. Wright over there.

Mr. Wright: I might say, your Honor, we have an argument set for December 6th in Buffalo in an attempt to dispose of objections which have been raised to findings and motions to modify the judgment in the Schine case, which I shall probably have to argue myself. I would find three weeks quite short, but I would prefer the exchange to save the time that way.

Mr. Proskauer: An exchange is wholly unacceptable to us. I do not want to write a brief and then find that I have not surmised the mysteries of Mr. Wright's mind.

Judge Hand: I rather think you need that time. What are you going to do about your briefs? Have separate briefs for everyone?

Mr. Proskauer: We are going to have separate briefs, your Honors, but I assure you we will confer and try to avoid duplication as far as possible.

(3069)

Judge Hand: I hate very much to do it because it is not at all agreeable to the Circuit Court of Appeals, this whole layout. They do not like it a bit, and they do not like the emergency certificate or anything about it. They are about as sore about it as anything you can imagine. It just takes men right out, takes three men out of the court, and leaves the situation with a huge amount of investigation and doubtless a long opinion to write weeks from now.

Mr. Proskauer: I can suggest a very short opinion, your Honor.

Judge Hand: We cannot tell you about this right now. We are not going to.

Mr. Proskauer: I have studied this situation pretty carefully in the last few days, and I am sure that ultimately we will save your time if we can get the Government's brief, giving them a reasonable time—I suggest three weeks—and giving us that time to meet it, and then coming before your Honors and arguing it out on those briefs. And if anybody wants to file a memorandum in reply, we can do it on the argument day, say, or just after the argument day. Sometimes things develop in the argument that one would like to file a brief memorandum on.

Judge Hand: I can be very sure of one thing, and that is that no matter what happens, except casualties like death, we are not going to postpone the final submission after the first of the year. I mean, the argument may be made the 2nd or 3rd of January, or something like that, but we are not going to just string this thing along. You know, it is really too expensive a way to do this, whether it is decided right or wrong. There has got to be some kind of arrangement so that the courts can do their business.

Mr. Proskauer: If Mr. Wright would file his brief by the 1st of December—well, we would like a Christmas holiday, but I suppose no lawyer is entitled to any holiday.

Judge Hand: I think in this case you had better try and finish before Thanksgiving, and then divide the time between that and—what is the 1st day of January?

Mr. Caskey: Tuesday, sir.

Judge Hand: Divide the time between the 2nd or 3rd of January in some way about the submission of briefs. That gives you about what you both think you need.

Mr. Proskauer: Which means we are going to be working during the Christmas holidays, and unfortunately that falls on the defense, which is a penalty we have to pay for their filing the certificate.

(3070a)

Well, your Honor will give us the final answer then when we meet next week?

Judge Hand: Yes. I think that suggestion, though, is about the best you can possibly do.

We will adjourn now to Monday at 10:30.

(Adjourned to November 19, 1945, at 10.30 a.m.)

(3071)

New York, November 19, 1945;
at 10:30 o'clock a. m.

Trial resumed.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I want to say first that those boxes of exhibits you see there around the witness chair are exhibits already in evidence. That does not represent the material we propose to offer; and I want to make a progress report on what was done during the recess to simplify the presentation.

We had two sessions with counsel, one on Friday afternoon with those who do not work Saturdays, and the other on Saturday afternoon with the others, at which we marked in the order in which we would present them and supplied copies of the material we propose to offer here which summarizes this material that is in evidence, and made available the witness who made the tabulations for such questioning as to how any of the charts were prepared.

We also have attempted to follow the Court's suggestion and have one master list of theatres in which all defendants have interests which all defendants agree to. Some have agreed to the figures in our appendix as such; others with modifications, and others are still in the process of checking. I hope to have that disposed of at the end of the day.

Now, as to the contract material that we asked to inspect, such as that which was made available for inspection, we have prepared certain schedules on, and propose to submit those schedules with the supporting data today, and then offer tomorrow either the schedules without the data—Mr. Shears, who was in charge of that, I believe can tell tell the Court exactly what the status of that is.

Mr. Shears: We ask that those schedules purporting to show rental discriminations be marked for identification.

Mr. Davis: May I interrupt, Mr. Wright. I want to get a modest offering off my back that has been around here for a week.

Mr. Wright: Oh, sure.

Mr. Davis: We introduced in evidence a schedule showing the amounts which we had paid for feature pictures exhibited in our theatres. That was in dollars. I now want to offer in evidence a schedule showing the films which were exhibited in our theatres and the source from which they came. I have photostats here, Mr. Wright, just received.

(3073)

(Marked Defendant Loew's Exhibit L-16.)

Mr. Davis: I also want to offer in evidence supporting that schedule a folder containing statements of all the films purchased or licensed to us from 1934 to 1945 inclusive in the 73 critical cities. I offer that in evidence. Photostats of this will be furnished as soon as we get them.

(Marked Defendant Loew's Exhibit L-17.)

Mr. Wright: I have not seen these, if the Court please. I assume they are taken subject to such correction as might be necessary on checking.

Judge Hand: Yes.

(3074)

Mr. Raftery: Your Honor, may I correct the record? You remember the two Stage Door Canteen contracts that Mr. Wright put in last week, and he said that we sold the first-run in San Angelo, Texas, for $50. Well, on checking our records I find that the first-run was sold for 35 per cent of the gross and paid a film rental of $465. So I have listed each of the runs in the town including the run in question. The run in question was the fifth run and he paid $20 against 35 per cent of the gross. He paid us $3.05 overage, so we got $23.05. I would like to give Mr. Wright a copy of the schedule and I would like the Court, that is, I mean the clerk, to attach that to Mr. Wright's exhibit. And I also have the supporting memo contract for his inspection, showing we got 35 per cent of the gross first-run in that town.

Mr. Wright: There is a conflict between this schedule and the exhibit. The exhibit shows four runs at flat rentals ahead of the Roxy. Which is supposed to be correct?

Mr. Raftery: There are three ahead of the Roxy and one after the Roxy—$12.50 played after. Those are the play dates; that is the performance.

Mr. Wright: Thank you.

Mr. Raftery: Here is the other contract, 35 per cent of the gross first-run.

(3075)

Mr. Wright: We have no objection.

Judge Hand: Mr. Wright, can't you have this thing in once and have it right?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please——

Judge Hand: Or do you still dispute inferences to be drawn and things of that sort?

Mr. Wright: We would have been glad to submit this schedule in the first instance. We were only given those contracts that I put in there.

Judge Hand: I am not talking about your unfortunate position, due to ignorance or withholding something. I am talking about what the situation is here before us. I don't care anything about how it arose.

Mr. Wright: Well, I say, as far as we are concerned, on Mr. Raftery's statement, I take this schedule as a correct representation of what the situation is. I did not object to it. I assume it is correct.

Mr. Raftery: Mr. Clerk, it is 401 or 402, I don't know which. It is either one of those two contracts.

Mr. Wright: Is there any more defendants' material that was to be offered?

Mr. Seymour: Do I understand, Mr. Wright, that this gentleman is marking for identification some things you are going to furnish to us?

Mr. Wright: I don't think they need to be marked for identification but we have assembled in these folders with a schedule the documents which support the schedule, and those, I assume, can be checked. We could offer the schedule without offering——

(3076)

Mr. Seymour: When are you going to make them available?

Mr. Wright: Right now. They should be checked I think here or upstairs.

Mr. Raftery: Mr. Wright, have you any of the stuff that he took from us on Friday? Have you anything for us?

Mr. Shears: I would like to have those marked for identification.

Judge Hand: Can it be ascertained with reasonable certainty whether you defendants have rested, or have rested subject to proceedings had and to be had and all kinds of reservations?

Mr. Proskauer: I have——

The Court (Judge Hand): Where is your case?

Mr. Seymour: I will tell you where mine is.

Judge Hand: We put it in, here a little, there a little, line by line, precept upon precept.

Mr. Seymour: I will tell you what my situation is for Paramount. I reserved the right to offer certain affidavits. There are still two to come. We hope they will be here by tomorrow. I thought I would put it in all at once. Subject to correction of the record, which I have already referred to, we have no evidence on our direct case.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, we would like to see them today because in preparing our motion to strike, which we still haven't been able to complete because of this delay in presenting defendants' evidence——

Mr. Seymour: I have furnished the affidavits the moment they arrived in New York. I furnished several affidavits at the end of last week, when we were out of court, and we will furnish the others when they get here.

Mr. Wright: You are not referring then to any affidavits, copies of which haven't been given to us, is that correct?

Mr. Seymour: That is right.

Mr. Davis: For Loew's Incorporated, if your Honors please, we are through in chief. We reserve the right to offer material in sur-rebuttal, if it becomes necessary.

Judge Hand: Of course. You are through except for that.

Mr. Proskauer: I am through excepting I want to make good my threats to Mr. Maloney on my cross-examination of him, just strictly sur-rebuttal, and I may have another chart in what I think is strictly sur-rebuttal.

(3078)

Mr. Caskey: We rest.

Mr. Leisure: Mr. Davis's position covers our position.

Mr. Raftery: We rest subject to the fact that we got two more letters on Friday for about a hundred more papers. I have given him the papers and unless they come up with some tricks, like first-run San Angelo, we rest.

Mr. Proskauer: That reminds me, though, your Honor, that we also got gentle requests for a large number of papers on Saturday. There is quite a sick list developing from our assiduity in preparing the Government's case at the last minute, and I do not know what is going to develop from these new documents he has asked for. I reserve whatever may be necessary with respect to those.

(3079)

Judge Hand: Does the Government know? Of course, you can brood on the infinity of it forever, and it is pretty near infinity, this thing, and keep the thing at loose ends.

Mr. Wright: If the Court pleases, we are trying to cut down just as far as we can any further documentary material by this schedule procedure, and in so far as anything that hasn't yet been produced, of course, we cannot do anything about that. We are not going to attempt to do anything with any documents, in connection with which we requested inspection, beyond what has been done by Mr. Shears which I submitted to them this morning. So that is out of the way, as far as we are concerned.

Mr. Caskey: Mr. Wright, you hand me this letter——

Mr. Shears: Just a moment. I would like to make a statement on that paper, and it will clear it all up,

I am sure. These schedules which have been submitted to defendants, if your Honors please, are to be marked for identification only this morning. They represent tabulation of data taken from license agreements selected for the most part from Appeal Board decisions from towns in five states, New York, Louisiana, Texas; Washington, D. C.; and Kansas, Missouri. They were supplied in response to our requests of November 3rd and November 14th. They reflect the degree of cooperation of each defendant, some 100 per cent, some zero. From two defendants we have received no comparable material, or material so incomplete that no comparison could be made. The folders attached to each schedule contain the supporting license agreements that were made available to us.

Judge Hand: Is that statement of yours a mere statement of fact or a complaint, or what is it?

Mr. Shears: It is a mere statement of fact to explain the schedule.

Mr. Proskauer: I don't hear you.

Judge Hand: A mere statement of fact.

Mr. Shears: The folders attached to each schedule contain the supporting license agreements that were made available to us, and we would be glad to have each defendant check over his own material, either here or up in Room 1901. I shall offer these schedules without the supporting documents tomorrow at 10:30, to avoid encumbering the record.

It is submitted that the material received today is too late for these tabulations.

The balance of the license agreements supplied, we are returning. We have no attention to defendants adding any comparable material they may feel that we have overlooked.

Mr. Seymour: You are not going to compliment us by name for our cooperation?

(3081)

Mr. Shears: I would be glad to mention that RKO has given us 100 per cent cooperation and Columbia zero.

Mr. Caskey: I do not know what our percentage is, but I understand that—— Judge Hand: I take it we are to understand that is merely a statement of fact and not a complaint.

Mr. Shears: That is correct.

Mr. Caskey: Of course, as far as we are concerned, at 7 o'clock on Friday we had furnished the Government with 565 contracts. We had not furnished them with the contracts relating to New Orleans. They were told on Saturday that they could not be available until this morning. They were tendered this morning, about 10:10, and they were rejected. I offer them again, if they are wanted, but I assume that they are not.

Mr. Shears: I should like to state in answer to that that our letter of November 3rd requested the New Orleans material. I submit that is sufficient time to have submitted it for tabulation prior to this morning.

Mr. Frohlich: Let me say this about Columbia's alleged lack of cooperation. That is not the fact. We received a list from Mr. Wright a few days ago for about 50 contracts in these various cities. I came down and spent Saturday afternoon with Mr. Wright, all afternoon with him, and told him that of the fifty,

(3082)

Columbia only sold in 12 situations and it had only three contracts available and would be happy to give them to him, and he said, "You don't have to bother with it. I won't be able to use it."

Judge Hand: Why don't you tell me these things at the time of your argument?

Mr. Caskey: They were delivered, some on Thursday and some on Friday. We tendered them 565 contracts.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor, with all this talk of cooperation and non-cooperation, I think it is fair to say that it is quite outrageous for the Government to come to us at the last minute with this kind of request and then put in schedules, such as are going to be shown here, I understand, where they selected a few cities, and ask your Honor to draw inferences from those, when we got now the burden of showing that those are not typical, and we will show it.

(3083)

Mr. Gillespie: Your Honor, on behalf of Loew's I should like to state that by six o'clock last night, Sunday night, the Government had every document which was requested when this court adjourned last Wednesday. On Thursday we received a further request for contracts in some 60 cities. We have been working to get those together. We hope to have them some time today, or part of them some time today. But I do not want Loew's to be left out in the open with regard to the position they have taken about supplying these documents.

Mr. Proskauer: From Warner's they have had every document they called for.

Now, may we be informed what is being offered? None of us know. We don't hear you——

Mr. Wright: Nothing is being offered.

Mr. Raftery: Mr. Shears, could we now have back what you took and did not offer?

Mr. Shears: Yes (handing).

Mr. Raftery: I am sending these back, but I should like the Court to see what they did not use. They used, I think, two contracts in each batch (indicating).

(Marked Government's Exhibits 416, 417, 418, 419, 420, 421, 422 and 423 for identification.)

Mr. Caskey: Mr. Wright, we spent three long hours Friday afternoon assigning numbers to these exhibits.

(3084)

Mr. Wright: We will keep the same numbers, the same order, but the numbers will have to be moved up. I trust that won't be too much of an inconvenience.

Mr. Frohlich: Were those numbers, Mr. Wright, just read off the same numbers we had on Saturday?

Mr. Wright. No. These are the schedules that were just read in. The numbers on the exhibits we had Saturday will be moved up by 8 in each case. 416 will be 424, and so on.

Judge Goddard: What is that about changing numbers?

Mr. Wright: This is material not yet offered on which we are changing numbers. I numbered at the conference on Friday and Saturday the charts that we were going to offer consecutively with the next exhibit numbers. Now, this, having been identified in between, we will have to move those numbers up. That is something that I do not think concerns the defendants or the Court particularly at this time.

Judge Goddard: It is important to have these exhibit numbers right, because when we look for an exhibit and the number does not correspond——

Mr. Wright: We will have them right. This material that he is talking about is material which has not yet been identified.

(3085)

Judge Goddard: The clerk tells me that Exhibits 416 to 423 are schedules; is that correct?

Mr. Wright: Yes. Those are for identification.

Mr. Raftery: Excuse me, Mr. Wright: May I ask a question before you go into that? I worked yesterday examining all of that stuff. Isn't everything you are about to offer already in evidence? All those charts, doesn't that represent something that is already in?

Mr. Wright: I will see when I get to it. I have another document I want to offer.

Now, with reference to the work sheet that we offered while Mr. Maloney was on the witness stand, Fox has supplied us with a sheet which they say is correct, and we will ask to have that marked as Exhibit 404 in place——

Mr. Proskauer: Could we hear what it is that you are offering?

Mr. Wright: We will ask to have marked as Exhibit 404 a tabulation of Fox net profits that were submitted to us by Fox as being correct, which we are substituting for the one identified as 404 to which they objected.

Judge Bright: Have you extra copies of it, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Caskey: We will supply them. We have plenty, and I shall get them.

(3086)

Mr. Wright: This is the only one that was given to us.

Judge Bright: We have copies of the other, haven't we, 404?

Mr. Wright: I believe you have the one that was marked 404.

I will ask to have marked as 404-A the graph that was prepared.

Mr. Caskey: The last, 404-A, is objected to.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 404-A for identification.)

Mr. Wright: I want to call the Court's attention—

Mr. Caskey: Put a witness on the stand. Don't testify yourself about it.

Mr. Wright: This 404-A is the chart or the graph which was prepared to fit the 404 that we offered. The only difference, if the Court please, between what we offered and what the defendants have offered here is on that figure for the last year; so we added a line to the chart which shows their figure with the dotted line for the last year, and ours is on the heavy line. The difference was accounted for by a charge of some $900,000 which they reported simply as a reserve for contingencies; so that——

(3087)

Mr. Davis: Who is this about?

Mr. Wright: This refers to Fox.

Mr. Caskey: I know of no principle upon which a chart can be put in evidence to reflect an exhibit which was excluded. 404 was excluded when the witness was on the stand. Now he offers what he says is a chart reflecting the excluded evidence; and I object to it, and I object to any offer without a witness who can be examined on it.

Mr. Wright: I will call Mr. Maloney——

Judge Bright: Isn't there a new exhibit offered now as 404 in place of the old one?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Bright: What is the difference between that and the one that was offered?

Mr. Wright: That was shown on this exhibit that I just had marked for identification, 404-A.

Judge Bright: There is an objection to the new 404?

Mr. Wright: No. His objection is to the graph. He supplied the new 404 himself.

Judge Hand: Do you criticize the new 404?

Mr. Wright: We accept it with the qualification that we think as to this one year where they show this $900,000 difference, our figure properly shows the net profit. They simply took a reserve for contingencies and deducted it from the net profit. I do not think it is really worth spending time on beyond attempting to clear up the discrepancy between the witness's work sheet and what is offered here as 404. This chart shows graphically what the difference is, that is all.

Judge Bright: What is the difference between the new 404 and the other 404?

Mr. Caskey: May I explain it, sir?

Judge Bright: Yes.

Mr. Caskey: In the old 404 the accountant had labeled the revenue from 1943 and 1944 as film rental when it was, in fact, not all film rental but also represented the theatre receipts of both the Roxy Theatre in New York and National Theatres Corporation. And our point, and the reason we are objecting to this chart is that from the period 1933 to 1942, inclusive, the figures are of Fox Film Corporation without any theatre interest being consolidated.

Now, in 1943 and 1944 the theatre interests are consolidated, so they are not comparable; and that is why we object to a chart that is predicated on something that is not in evidence.

Judge Hand: I never thought this thing out very much, but when he made that objection before I did not see why it was not right.

(3089)

Mr. Wright: Well, we are accepting his——

Judge Hand: All right, if you are accepting it what is the use of having about three or four exhibits in graphs in here when one is right?

Mr. Wright: I have no desire by this chart to do anything more than to show your Honors the difference between what we offered and what he offered and what we finally accepted.

Judge Hand: Why don't you withdraw one if it does not take something into account, and not leave it there to confuse us. You have to put this in so that the wayfaring man, even though a fool, may not err.

Mr. Wright: If the Court does not think the graph is helpful I will withdraw it.

Judge Hand: All right.

(Government's Exhibit 404-A for identification withdrawn.)

JAMES J. MALONEY, resumed the stand.

Judge Goddard: Mr. Wright, the original 404 was marked for identification?

Mr. Wright: That is right, and that is withdrawn.

Judge Goddard: And you have substituted another 404 for identification?

Mr. Wright: We are substituting this 404 in evidence supplied by the defendant Fox.

Judge Goddard: Has that been received in evidence?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Caskey: Then 404, the old chart, should be physically destroyed.

Judge Bright: We have marked our copies "No value."

Judge Goddard: Will you have duplicates of this?

Mr. Caskey: Yes, sir, I will in an hour.

Mr. Wright: He is going to supply us with some.

Judge Hand: This is the original, isn't it?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Direct examination continued by Mr. Wright:

Q. Now, Mr. Maloney, you also took from the SEC a statement of Fox, the excess profits figures that were recorded there. Can you just read those into the record? A. The amounts of excess profits taxes charged in the annual statements filed with the SEC for the years 1942, 1943 and 1944 appeared as, for 1942, $2,900,000; for 1943, $20,250,000; for 1944, $19,800,000.

Q. And when you were on the stand the other day I believe you did not have the Columbia figures. Could you read those in for the excess profits? A. Yes. The amounts of excess profits taxes charged on the annual statements of Columbia Pictures Corporation for the year 1942 appeared as $370,000; for the year 1943, $2,970,000; for the year 1944, $3,645,000.

Mr. Wright: That is all.

Cross examination by Mr. Caskey:

Q. Mr. Maloney, you know now to be a fact that during the last two years to which you refer the figures are the consolidated figures of Twentieth Century-Fox, including National Theatres? A. I was aware that the figures for all years were the consolidated figures as furnished by the corporation to the SEC.

(3092)

Q. Yes, but you knew that the corporations consolidated were different? A. The corporations consolidated were different, I believe, in each of the years.

Q. That is correct. So they are not comparable figures? A. The corporation had different subsidiaries during the various years.

Q. So the figures are not comparable? A. That I could not agree to.

Q. And have you ascertained since you are on the stand what the rates of taxation were? A. No, I have not.

Q. Or whether or not there were not sharp increases in the tax rate? A. No, sir, I have not.

Q. Or whether those figures for each of the years are based on comparable tax rates? A. I have not made any research of the income tax rates, sir.

Judge Hand: Mr. Stenographer, don't take this down unless somebody wants it.

(Discussion off the record.)

Judge Hand: Now let Mr. Wright briefly state his position in regard to this, and you answer it just as you have, Mr. Caskey. We have not had all this endless talk on the record. That will make a record.

Mr. Wright: Our position with respect to Exhibit 404 is that when read with Exhibit F-24, I believe it is, previously offered in evidence by Fox, it is the best available picture of the net earnings of both the

Fox Film Corporation and its theatre operating subsidiaries during the period in question. It is perfectly clear that the 404, of course, does not reflect any profits of the theatre owning subsidiaries prior to 1942 except insofar as they appear in 404 as dividends paid by National to Fox. That is because during that period National Theatres was a 42 per cent owned subsidiary of the parent Fox; beginning with 1942 when they had a 100 per cent interest in National Theatres; a consolidated statement was filed for both, and the net profits figures there for the last years on the chart are the net for the entire theatre operating and distributing and producing business.

Mr. Caskey: Have you got F-24, Mr. Marcus?

Judge Bright: Which do you want?

Mr. Caskey: F-24.

(Exhibit handed to Mr. Caskey.)

Mr. Caskey: If the court please, it was my position that the Exhibit 404 is not on a comparable basis, as Mr. Wright has now explained, from the first year through 1942. The statement is a consolidated statement of the income and profits of the Twentieth Century-Fox and its distribution subsidiaries. Commencing in 1943 and for 1944, it is a consolidated statement of Twentieth Century-Fox, its distribution subsidiaries, and in addition National Theatres Corporation, the Roxy Theatre, and De Luxe Laboratories.

Prior to 1943 the only income that is shown in the schedule from theatres is the income received as a dividend on the 42 per cent of the stock of National Theatres Corporation.

Now I have in my hand Exhibit F-24, and to make the figures at all comparable it will be necessary to subtract the amount of dividends and add to it the amount of net profits; and since this is an appropriate place, I might read into evidence the profit figures of National Theatres Corporation.

Judge Bright: Is that what F-24 is?

Mr. Caskey: Yes. 1940, two million——

Judge Hand: Reading from F-24.

Mr. Caskey: (Continuing)

	$2,033,000;
1941,	$2,404,000;
1942,	$3,402,000;
1943,	$4,490,000;
1944,	$5,156,000.

Mr. Wright: I take it those figures are all after taxes, just as the other figures we had?

Mr. Caskey: Yes. Now, the same argument that I make as to this, applies to the testimony of the witness as to the provision for excess profits tax. In the year 1942, it was $2,900,000. It jumped in 1943 to $20,250,000, and was slightly less, $19,800,000, in 1944. In both of those latter years there was, first of all, a higher tax rate than there was in 1942. Second, there was a difference in the method of computing the tax, because when Fox was consolidated with National it got the advantage of National's tax base, or the burden of it; and, in addition, the consolidation, the provision for taxes is for both companies and not just the distribution corporation.

Judge Hand: I think that explains it anyway. Personally I should not think that the figures were comparable, without your correction.

Now, is there any more from this witness?

Mr. Wright: Nothing more from this witness.

Mr. Wright: Now we have some additional exhibits necessary to complete material already in evidence, and I will now offer those. One is a rider marked 182-A, which supplements Exhibit 182 in evidence, a contract between Loew and RKO.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 182-A.)

Mr. Wright: I will ask to have marked as 226-A an agreement dated September 1, 1938, between Paramount, Fabian Brooklyn Theatres, Inc., and Stanley Mark Strand Corporation, a franchise agreement which supplements an agrement in evidence as 226, which is the pooling agreement referring to the Brooklyn first-run theatres.

(3095-A)

(Marked Government's Exhibit 226-A.)

(3096)

Mr. Wright: And I also ask to have marked as 232-A an agreement, a 20-year agreement, dated December 10, 1930, between Paramount Publix and Fox Film, which is referred to and supplements the agreement in evidence marked as Exhibit 232.

Mr. Caskey: Will you read me Mr. Wright's remarks?

(Record read.)

Mr. Caskey: I certainly object to any such characterization. No objection to the agreement as such, but this agreement was made in 1930, it was terminated by bankruptcy, and a new agreement was made with the trustee in bankruptcy. This does not supplement anything, except as an historical record.

Judge Hand: Overruled. This is an original sale that was presumed to continue through bankruptcy.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 232-A.)

Mr. Wright: We again have this problem as to Exhibit 272-A, which is supplemental pages that are, according to United Artists, properly a part of Exhibit 272. We want it in the record. United Artists wants it in. Fox objected before, and I assume they object, but in view of the position of United Artists, I suppose it will, at least, be admitted as between United Artists and ourselves.

Mr. Proskauer: Could you tell us what you are offering?

(3097)

Mr. Caskey: Unsigned document. We certainly object to it. We have no copy of it.

Mr. Wright: This is the unsigned copy that was furnished to us by Mr. Raftery with the statement that it was an authentic copy of the agreement. We have no other copy.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Judge Bright: That is the Stage Door Canteen.

Mr. Wright: That contract, I believe, refers to Stage Door Canteen.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 272-A.)

Mr. Wright: Your Honors will recall an Exhibit F-21 was offered by Fox, which showed certain rental tabulations, with respect to the film Sweet Rosie O'Grady in the 92 cities with more than 100,000 population. When the witness was on the stand we asked if he could supply figures as to the total rental in the towns in question and as to the total affiliated rental, and then we asked for that data, and we got, in this document which I will ask to have marked, I think, for convenience, as F-21A—is that agreeable, Mr. Caskey?

Mr. Caskey: Certainly.

Mr. Wright: (Continuing) —the statement that I submit by Fox giving total film rental for the picture in each of the towns. We were not furnished with a statement as to what the total affiliated rental was in each of the towns.

(3098)

(Marked Exhibit F-21-A.)

Mr. Caskey: May I just place on the record this observation: F-21 shows that the total United States gross on Sweet Rosie O'Grady was $2,821,000, of which $775,000 was derived from the first run in these 92 cities having a population of 100,000 or more. This Exhibit F-21-A shows that the total revenue derived from all exhibitions in all theatres in those towns was $1,301,693.49, which means that $525,000 was derived from the second and subsequent runs in those towns, if my mathematics is correct. Those are copies of 404 (handing to the Court).

Mr. Wright: I also want to offer additional material that was received in response to, or in answer to, interrogations subsequent to the close of our case, which was used by Mr. Borwick in the tabulations that I am about to offer. The first is a letter from counsel for Loew's, Inc., containing supplemental data with respect to Exhibit 57, which is already in evidence, and I will ask to have that—I believe it is the second supplement—marked as Exhibit 57-B.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 57-B.)

Mr. Wright: And I am offering as Exhibits 139-A and B supplemental data furnished by the defendant

(3099)

Columbia, which supplements Exhibit 139 in evidence.

(Marked Government's Exhibits 139-A and 139-B.)

Mr. Wright: And I will ask to have marked as 57-A this folder marked 57-A, which contains additional answers submitted by Loew with a covering letter, which supplements Exhibit 57 in evidence.

Judge Bright: Mr. Wright, that 57 carried a number of subdivisions up to dash 38.

Mr. Wright: Yes, it was subdivided in numbers, I think one number for each town covered. These, I think, refer to additional towns. Instead of giving it an additional sub number, I just gave them A and B numbers.

Judge Bright: They do not supplement any one of those particular numbers?

Mr. Wright: No, that is right. It was a general supplement to the interrogatory data.

Mr. Davis, if the Court please, calls my attention to the fact that the covering letter in here refers only to the sheet relating to Portsmouth, Virginia. There are five other sheets in here, relating to New Orleans, Atlanta, Oakland, Columbus and Woodbridge, New Jersey, respectively, which are not covered by this letter, but as to which there is no question as to authenticity, so I am offering them also.

Mr. Davis: I think perhaps the only inaccuracy in the record, Mr. Wright, would be your statement that those are furnished in response to a later request. I imagine they went forward to you at the time of original delivery.

Mr. Wright: As to that, I am quite sure that these came in recently, and I will endeavor to locate the covering letter.

Mr. Davis: It doesn't make any difference when they came in, I have no objection to their admission, but I don't want the record to be inaccurate.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 57-A.)

PETER M. BORWICK, called as a witness on behalf of the Government, in rebuttal, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Wright:

Mr. Raftery: May it please the Court, may I now ask Mr. Wright a question? Are you about to offer what you exhibited to counsel on Saturday?

Mr. Wright: That is correct, plus, I think there were two or three of these tabulations which were not complete at that time and which——

Mr. Raftery: Which we haven't yet?

Mr. Wright: (Continuing) ——you may not have received yes.

(3101)

Mr. Raftery: But will you admit everything you are about to offer now is already in the record in those exhibits in some form or other?

Mr. Wright: With the exception of one or two of these tabulations, all of them are based upon material which is in evidence, that is, they represent either summaries or tabulations of that material.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honors, I would like to get this clear. I understand that with the single exception that Mr. Wright made, none of this evidence is tendered as new evidence; it is tendered as a compilation of existing evidence, so we have a right to test it by its correspondence with existing evidence.

Mr. Wright: That is right.

Mr. Raftery: Plus the fact, if your Honors please, that we are contending that this is properly trial brief material and we are just wasting the time of the Court in putting in another volume of argument, because everything I examined yesterday is argument and everything he is about to offer, and take up perhaps another day, is already in the record and is available for anybody to examine, and you can make whatever argument you want out of it. I spent the whole day yesterday going over every one of these documents and I cannot find one that is not already in the record. Now, he did not have the United Artists or Universal material complete, but everything he has in here of the United Artists and Universal is already in in documentary form. We submit that an offer of proof, or if he will concede that this is not evidence but argument, and put them in one after another—I object to the offer on the ground it is merely repeating what is already in.

Judge Hand: Well, of course, it is argument. The statements of all these tabulators that we have constantly in our litigation are nothing but computations that, if not disputed, or if the Court agrees with it, are supposed to help it to draw certain conclusions. It is not fact evidence of the ordinary sort, of course.

Mr. Raftery: There are very, very important errors in the record.

Mr. Proskauer: It was with that in mind that I wanted to get clear that this was not offered as independent evidence, but as tabulation of existing evidence.

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Proskauer: On which we shall have considerable to say in brief and argument.

Mr. Caskey: And on the cross-examination.

Mr. Raftery: That is what I was worried about.

Judge Hand: Won't you be able to stay your hand from that and submit some new tabulations?

Mr. Caskey: What is that number?

Mr. Wright: 416. I am having it marked as 424 because of the intervening exhibits.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 424 for identification.)

Mr. Wright: The copy that you have, I believe, is a photostat with pencil corrections.

Mr. Caskey: No pencil corrections on this.

Mr. Wright: Well, you were told what—your people were told what the corrections were.

Mr. Proskauer: Mr. Wright, we cannot try a case on the basis of what our people were told, and if you have any corrections to make on the exhibit, please make it on the record and tell us what you are talking about.

Mr. Wright: I am talking about the photostat that you have marked as No. 416, which has been marked for identification as 424.

Mr. Davis: Are there any corrections on that? I have a perfectly clean photostat.

(Discussion betweeen Mr. Wright and Mr. Davis, off the record.)

Q. First, will you state your name and address? A. Peter M. Borwick, Washington, D. C.

Q. You are a first lieutenant in the Army? A. That is correct.

Q. You are attached to the military government branch of the Army? A. That is correct.

Q. And you have been loaned to the Justice Department for the purpose of tabulating the interrogatory material supplied by the defendants in this case? A. Yes.

Q. And you were a civilian in 1940? A. That is correct.

Q. And at that time you were in charge of tabulating the material furnished by the defendants in this case in response to interrogatories served in 1939? A. That is correct.

Q. Then you again took up the work with reference to the 1945 interrogatories in July of this year? A. That is correct.

Q. And this Exhibit 416 for identification that you have in your hand there is one of those prepared by you? A. That is correct.

Mr. Proskauer: 416?

Mr. Wright: I beg your pardon; 424.

(3105)

Q. Are the figures that are reported there under the respective columns headed RKO; Fox, Warner, Paramount and Loew's, figures which were supplied by those defendants respectively in response to Interrogatory 12? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, there was no computation made by you as to those figures? A. Except for the percentages involved.

Q. You computed the percentages and then you put in a figure there that appears below the first five figures headed, "Total paid to Producer-Exhibitors"? A. That is correct.

Q. Those figures were supplied by an addition made by you and that term "Producer-Exhibitors" is one defined in the complaint as referring to the five groups, RKO, Fox, Warner, Paramount and Loew's respectively? A. That is correct.

Q. And in this case refers to rentals paid to them as distributors, is that right? A. That is correct.

Mr. Wright: We offer this 424 in evidence.

Preliminary Cross Examination by Mr. Caskey:

Q. Lieutenant, the figures that you have headed Fox are the figures of National Theatres Corporation, are they not? A. That is correct.

Q. And you did not include any of the figures for the Roxy theatre? A. If the report you gave us included the Roxy theatre, why was that figure included.

(3106)

Q. Do you know whether or not the Roxy theatre is included? A. Well, I can tell you by looking at the answer to Interrogatory No. 12.

Q. I show you my copy. A. I would say that if the Roxy theatre is not included in National Theatres, of course it is not included.

Q. Do you know whether it is or is not? A. I cannot say offhand.

Q. So that you have no knowledge then as to whether this total figure includes the Roxy theatre or not? A. I do not unless you so specify.

Q. Do you know—you made the chart—do you know whether it does or not? A. No, I do not.

Q. In addition——

Judge Hand: Is this thing going to be in dispute?

Mr. Caskey: Yes, sir.

Judge Hand: Wait a minute. Whether it includes it or not?

Mr. Caskey: Well, I do not see how there can be any question——

Judge Hand: Are you putting in evidence here by a witness who does not know what the exhibit includes?

Mr. Wright: It does not make the slightest difference for our purposes whether it is in or out. We merely took the figure given by them in response to the interrogatory and tabulated it here. I do not believe it was included. As far as we are concerned, it makes no difference for our purposes whether you include it in the tabulation or whether you exclude it. The overall picture is unchanged.

(3107)

Mr. Caskey: How can you say that, Mr. Wright, when you know the Roxy theatre plays only Fox product, and certainly pays a very large film rental during the year? The fact is that it is not included. There is no doubt of that.

Judge Hand: All right, if that is true, if it is incapable of refutation, it ought to be admitted here. Is it?

Mr. Wright: We concede it. Yes, it is not included.

Judge Hand: Then do not examine any more about this, or cross-examine.

Mr. Caskey: No, sir, I might lose my stipulation.

Judge Hand: And I presume you have some other fine points.

Mr. Caskey: I respectfully submit that is not even a fine point. I submit it is a very important point.

Q. Again, the figures as to National Theatres Corporation, as your footnote shows, do not relate to the 1943-44 product at all. A. Covers the period December 26, 1943, (3108) to December 30, 1944, and includes shorts and newsreels, according to this footnote.

Q. And whether it includes 1943-44 product or not, do you know that except by inference? A. Well, the interrogatory asked rentals paid on features released during the 1943-44 season, and again we took the figures as you gave them to us and annotated them with proper footnotes to explain these particular figures.

Q. Yes, but now you take the first column, the RKO figure. That purports to represent, in the second column, the amount which the RKO theatres paid to Fox on the 1943-44 season, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. $2,181,000 on the actual 1943-44 product? A. That is right.

Q. But the figure in the first column, under Fox, of $2,411,000, does not represent that at all, does it? A. Would you repeat——

Q. It doesn't represent what was paid to RKO on the 1943-44 product? A. Well, I have already explained it.

Q. Can't you answer my question yes or no? A. Well, I copied a figure as you gave it to me and with a proper annotation.

Q. Won't you say on the stand that this figure of $2,411,000 is not a comparable figure to the $2,181,000; won't you say that? A. No, I would not say it unless I knew exactly (4109) what the content of that figure is, and if you in your answer to Interrogatory 12 did not give me the exact description of what that figure purported to be, then I cannot give you the answer.

Q. You know the $2,400,000 includes shorts and newsreels? A. That is right.

Q. And that the $2,181,000 does not include any shorts and newsreels? A. Apparently not.

Q. So to that extent they are not comparable? A. To that extent they are not comparable.

Q. You know that the Fox figure includes some figures which were released after October 1, 1944? A. I do not know that.

Q. Well, don't you know from the work that you have done in this case that the 1944-45 product was released commencing about September or October 1, 1944? A. Approximately.

Q. And don't you know from the work that you have done that the National Theatres played that product in the fall of 1944 and paid for it? A. What product are you talking about?

Q. I am talking about the 1944-45 product that was played in September, October, November and December 1944. A. Yes, but on the other hand it excludes from that figure the product played the previous fall; in other words, if your (3110) figure was comparable to the figure given by others, that is, you would have given us a figure on rentals paid for products released only between September 1, 1943, and September 1, 1944. However, since your figure begins on January 1, 1944, you have excluded from your figure the three or four months of 1943, so that what you leave off on one end you include on the other end.

Q. So it is fair to say that during the year from December 26, 1943, to December 30, 1944, that some of this rental relates to 1943-44 product? A. That is right.

Q. Some of it relates—— A. The bulk of it relates to 1943-44 product.

Q. All right. Some of it relates to 1944-45 product. A. A minor part of it, I would say, relates to the '44——

Q. But some of it? A. Well, some of it, or minor part of it, would be more precise.

Q. Do you know how much? A. No. If you give me the figures as to the number of features you released, I could tell you during that overlapping interval.

Q. Some of it relates to 1942-43 product? A. I would say a very small amount of it, if any.

Q. You asked me if I would give you the figures as to the number of features that Fox released. Haven't we both been talking about the product of RKO? Isn't that what we have (3111) been talking about, the $2,400,000 figure? A. That is right.

Q. That Fox paid to RKO for exhibiting RKO pictures? A. That is right.

Judge Bright: When you get all through, how much difference does it make in whole percentage?

Mr. Caskey: I haven't any idea. I will ask the Lieutenant that if he knows.

The Witness: I cannot give you a very precise answer because we do not have the figures except for this period.

Judge Bright: Do you claim it makes any material difference?

The Witness: I personally don't believe that it makes any material difference.

Mr. Caskey: Well, I can only say, generally speaking, that film rentals have increased. I think that the company paid, in general, a higher film rental in October 1944 than it did in 1943, but what I am objecting to and want the record to show is that we are not comparing two identical things.

Judge Bright: What I want to know is whether it makes any difference.

Mr. Caskey: Well, in the aggregate I have no doubt that the $25,000,000 figure for the year 1944 is higher than the '43 figure.

(3112)

Judge Bright: How much?

Mr. Caskey: Maybe two million dollars. I can find out exactly.

Judge Bright: Two million dollars additional in the three months that he has excluded from the one end to the other end?

Mr. Caskey: No, I say the whole year, because 1944 was the largest grossing year the theatres had.

Judge Bright: You mean two million dollars that you got more than is shown on this, or two million dollars less, or two million dollars more than you have paid RKO, or two million dollars less?

Mr. Caskey: What I mean is that I think that we paid at least two million dollars less for the 1943-44 product of all the companies that we paid during the fiscal year 1943-44.

Judge Bright: You are only comparing the two columns, the ~~RKO~~ column and your own?

Mr. Caskey: That is the only one I have shown on cross-examination.

Mr. Wright: May I say something here, if the Court please? When these interrogatories were propounded, in order to make it possible for them to answer them in the simplest way, we gave them an option to either give us the figures which would exactly cover the season or, if their books were kept on another basis, to give us the figures as per their books for the closest available period. That is the reason for these discrepancies and I submit the different periods are, of course, accurately covered here in the footnotes. There is no question as to what is involved, and, in view of the manner in which this furnishing of this data was handled, I do not think that this cross-examination is proper at all.

Mr. Caskey: It is not the data. It is trying to compare them that causes the difficulty.

Mr. Proskauer: May I suggest, your Honors, that all this exhibit is trying to do is to show the film rentals that were paid by these various companies, and it has no legal significance unless it spells out a pattern of conspiracy. That is what it is offered for. I don't want in all this discussion about whether a thing is comparable and all that sort of thing, to lose sight of those exhibits we put in that set these figures up in correct form and showed, as far as Warners are concerned, that beyond the possibility of argument, there was no relationship between what we bought from and what we sold to these co-defendants.

Judge Bright: Judge, if they are offered to show an alleged conspiracy, it doesn't make any difference whether there is two million more or two million less, does it?

Mr. Proskauer: Speaking for myself, and not as an admission, and giving you an opinion of counsel, I agree with you. That is why I interrupted because I did not want that discussion about whether that was important to obscure what I think is the real point about these figures.

Mr. Caskey: Judge Bright, you recall, though, that the charge is more than conspiracy, and that charge has been largely abandoned.

Judge Bright: I am not arguing that question. I am arguing the theory that two dollars more or two dollars less does not make any difference on what they offer to prove, but this witness has only offered this chart on the figures which were sent to the Government by the defendants themselves.

Mr. Caskey: That is right, and the figures are not on a comparable basis because they have alternates as to how to furnish them.

Judge Bright: I do not understand he is comparing them on a comparable basis. He is only offering it as a tabulation of what you submitted to the Government.

Judge Hand: Go on, Mr. Wright.

Mr. Wright: Mark this as Exhibit 425.

Mr. Raftery: Mr. Wright, for the record, we did not furnish any of these figures. They were furnished by either Columbia, Universal or United Artists.

(3115)

Mr. Wright: That is right. These are figures as reported by the five companies whose names appear at the head of the five columns.

Mr. Raftery: The theatre owners.

Mr. Wright: Yes. I take it 424 is received in evidence.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 424.)

Mr. Proskauer: Might I suggest that when your Honors come to look at this also, that you note the very large percentages that the companies pay to themselves.

Judge Hand: Which?

Mr. Proskauer: This one that has just been marked, your Honor, 424 I think it is.

Judge Bright: What was your statement?

Mr. Proskauer: I wanted to suggest, and we will argue this out more, that you note the very large percentages, gross percentages, that the companies pay themselves. Take Loew's, for example. If you look at the Loew column, at the end, at the bottom, you will see that became 46.4 per cent. If you take Paramount and look at the Paramount column, both horizontally and vertically, you will find that is 28 per cent. And so I am merely calling attention to the fact that this includes large sums that were just intercompany transactions.

Mr. Wright: No question about that.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 425 for identification.)

(3116)

Mr. Wright: (Addressing Mr. Seymour) This Exhibit 425 for identification correspondends to the photostats that you have marked as 417.

Mr. Proskauer: Mr. Wright, may I call your attention to a slight addition that I am sure you will accede to. That footnote No. 4 should have added to it "exclusive of This Is The Army," just as you had it in the other exhibit. Factually that is correct.

Mr. Wright: You are referring now to a footnote on which exhibit?

Mr. Proskauer: The one you are offering. On 424 you did have a footnote "excluded about $1,465,000 paid for This Is The Army."

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Proskauer: Just in the interest of accuracy that should be stated on this exhibit also, and it would come properly as an addendum to footnote No. 4.

Mr. Wright: That is agreeable.

Mr. Davis: May I suggest, Mr. Wright, that in the column of Loew's here you show received by Loew from Loew's Theatres $8,878,852.

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Davis: Will you agree that that figure is incorrect because it omits the receipts from the Astor Theatre and from the Buffalo theatres, and that the proper figure should be $9,138,905?

Mr. Wright: That data, I believe, was not supplied to us when the tabulation was made up.

Mr. Davis: That may well be.

Mr. Wright: But we are perfectly willing to have the supplemental statement read into the record with the exhibit.

Mr. Davis: And that, of course, will modify the percentage calculation, which I have not had time to compute.

Judge Bright: What was that corrected amount?

Mr. Davis: The corrected amount is $9,138,905. And I may say to avoid confusion, in Exhibit 424, a similar figure stated is $9,282,490. That is due to the fact that the figures which entered into 424 are the amounts billed; and the figure which I have just given the Court for Exhibit 425 is the cash received. There is a lag there between the billing and the receipt which accounts for that discrepancy.

By Mr. Wright:

Q. These figures on Exhibit 425 for identification, those are, are they not, the rentals received from the various affiliated theatres and others as reported on statements made by each of the eight distributor defendants in response to interrogatory No. 3, is that correct? A. Yes, sir.
(3118)

Q. And there are, I notice, a number of discrepancies in the table between the amounts reported by these various distributor defendants as having been received from the various theatres listed there that were affiliated with other defendants and the amounts reported as having been paid by them to the same distributors as reported in Exhibit 424. Can you tell us generally what accounts for those differences? A. Well, in Exhibit 425 we did as we did in Exhibit 424, copy the figures as given to us with proper annotations to make it clear just what those figures cover.

Now, it appears from an analysis of these footnotes and answers to these interrogatories that the differences in part, in addition to the one that Mr. Davis explained, is due to the fact that the coverage, the time coverage, varies, and in some instances—now, here in the case of Paramount Exhibit 425 covers a period of March 10, 1945, and Exhibit 424, the footnote says "For accounting purposes as of December 30, 1944." But they reflect the license fees for the pictures released during the 1943-1944 motion picture season.

Q. Well, in any event, the data you have recorded in the footnotes shows the periods covered, and that, in turn, is taken from the answers themselves, is that right? A. That (3119) is correct, sir.

Mr. Wright: Now we offer 425.

Preliminary Cross Examination by Mr. Caskey:

Q. Lieutenant, the total that the eight producers show as received from Fox was $22,485,000, is it not?

Mr. Wright: That is correct.

A. I beg your pardon? I am sorry.

Mr. Caskey: Will you read the question.

Q. (Read.) A. Yes.

Q. And the total shown on Exhibit 424 by National as paid to all eight distributors was $24,200,000? A. No. You say 22 million?

Q. No. I said the total paid to the eight distributors is $24,200,000. A. You mean paid by Fox National Theatres?

Q. Paid by National to the eight. A. The figure I have got is $25,000,000.

Q. Wait a minute. You have got to take out all others, don't you? A. Oh yes, I beg your pardon, that is right.

Q. So the discrepancy or the difference, however accounted for, is about $1,800,000? A. Approximately I should say. I could not tell you unless I calculated it.

Q. That is about 7 per cent? A. I said I would not venture a guess as to the actual percentage unless I calculated it. (3120)

Q. You have set forth a calculation. Look at your Universal calculation of a million seven. You give it 6.6. A. Universal 6.6?

Q. I say that a million eight would be about 7 per cent. A. (No answer.)

Q. All right. Well, you don't know where that 7 per cent is distributed? A. No. As I said before, Mr. Caskey, we made no attempt at reconciling the figures, any difference that existed between those figures. We merely copied them as you gave them to us or as other defendants gave them to us.

Q. That is right. But the sum total of it is that Fox's receipt from the four affiliated groups, taking it together, is slightly less than 25 per cent of its total national gross? A. You mean of the other affiliated groups?

Q. Yes, sir. A. Well, it is right there.

Q. Well, I want to bring it out. A. It is right there in the record.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, all of these things are apparent on the face of the tabulation. There is nothing accomplished by cross-examination.

Judge Hand: I think you are right. It is not getting anywhere.

(3121)

Mr. Caskey: Very well, sir, if it is clear that commencing with the column on the left and reading across, Fox, the amount there under each one of those five columns is the amount said to be received from the theatre groups.

Q. That is correct, isn't it? A. That is right. Yes.

Q. And by adding the four figures you get the total percentage received from the four groups? A. That is right, or any other groups.

Mr. Caskey: Yes.

Mr. Raftery: May I ask Mr. Wright a question? I just want to be clear on this.

Mr. Wright: Surely.

Mr. Raftery: This column, third from the end, the five circuits paying the next highest film rentals, are they affiliated circuits?

Mr. Wright: I do not believe that they are. The footnote notes where they include a circuit such as Skouras or Randforce about which there might be a dispute. I think that, however, is noted in the footnote.

Mr. Raftery: But, generally, those are independent exhibitors included in that thing?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Raftery: And when you get over here to United Artists, 50.3, does that mean from independents only or does the 50.3 add the 2.8——

(3122)

Mr. Wright: 50.3 is the rental which United Artists showed that it got from the five affiliated circuits.

Mr. Raftery: And the five independents?

Mr. Wright: No, no. What was gotten from the five next highest independents was the figure, for United Artists—I beg your pardon, I read the wrong figures. Your figure for the total rentals received from affiliated theatres is 46.9. Your figure for the next five highest, which are independents, is 2.8.

Mr. Raftery: So it is really 53.1 from independents and 46.9?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

(Government's Exhibit 425 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Will you mark this 426 for identification?

(Marked Government's Exhibit 426 for identification.)

Mr. Caskey: What is the next one?

Mr. Wright: 426 for identification is the one you have numbered 418 without the percentages, because the percentages were objected to by one of the defendants.

Mr. Frohlich: Do I understand you are taking out these percentages, Mr. Wright?

(3123)

Mr. Wright: Yes, those were objected to by one of the counsel. This——

Mr. Proskauer: Why don't you just offer it, Mr. Wright? I do not believe anybody is goin to object to it.

Mr. Wright: I offer it.

Mr. Caskey: May we see it as it now exists?

(Exhibit handed to Mr. Caskey.)

Mr. Proskauer: Is this for the 1943-44 season?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

(Government's Exhibit 426 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And would you mark this next one as 427?

(Marked Government's Exhibit 427 for identification.)

Mr. Wright: That is a similar one to 426 but for the 1936-37 season, and it has the average film rentals for the reason computed at the bottom there. I do not believe the computation of the average rental appears on the photostat which you have.

Mr. Proskauer: Irrespective of that, would you let me inquire, with the Court's permission, is the point of these two exhibits—I ask this so we won't be lost in briefing—that there has been a very large increase in the number of films of the more expensive type? Is that the point?

(3124)

Mr. Wright: That is one point.

Mr. Proskauer: Is there any other point? There is no question about that factually.

Mr. Wright: The other shows the relative box-office quality, which is some indication——

Mr. Proskauer: I don't hear you, Mr. Wright. The relative what?

Mr. Wright: The relative box-office quality of the features released by the eight defendants is also suggested or indicated by the exhibit.

Mr. Caskey: Well, if it is offered for that purpose I certainly object to it.

Mr. Proskauer: I can't object because he shows we are doing so well, in the highest brackets, that we must be producing very good pictures.

Judge Hand: Have you offered this in evidence, 427?

Mr. Wright: Yes, I have offered it.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Wright, as to these percentages here, shall we strike them out?

Mr. Wright: The percentages were stricken, because counsel for one defendant thought they might be misleading. They made no difference to us.

Mr. Davis: I understand they went out of 426. Are they also on the way out of 427?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Davis: I just want to know so that I can make my exhibit conform.

Judge Bright: They do not appear in our exhibits.

Mr. Wright: I said they were stricken because of an objection by one counsel.

Judge Hand: Admitted.

(Government's Exhibit 427 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: The next one I will ask to have marked as 428 for identification. I think that is your 420.

Mr. Seymour: May I suggest, Mr. Wright, that you have those four which are a part of one group marked together at one time, because I would like to examine them. I mean, mark it at this time, and then I will examine them all.

Mr. Wright: Well, I will go ahead with the examination of these, and then we will get to the other as soon as we can.

Direct Examination Continued by Mr. Wright:

Q. Now, this 428 for identification that you have was prepared, was it not, from the admissions of fact respectively (3126) furnished by the eight distributor defendants? A. That is right.

Mr. Davis: A little louder, Mr. Witness, please, sir.

Q. The exhibit number opposite the name of the distributor is the number of the admission of fact of the particular distributor that was used? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Caskey: What was that?

Mr. Wright: I said the exhibit number opposite the name of the distributor is the number of the admission of fact of the particular distributor that was used.

Mr. Caskey: It was not on our copy.

Judge Bright: Is this a substitute for one of your schedules that is in your trial brief?

Mr. Wright: Similar schedules were in the trial brief. This, however, has been expanded to include the 92 cities. The schedule in our trial brief included only 73, and this also has some corrections as to those.

Q. Can you tell us just what you did in preparing the figures that appear in that first column there under Warner? A. We took Warner's admission of facts and determined what exhibitors got the first-run contracts in the City of New York and indicated the theatre affiliated with Warner as indicated beside New York, New York.

Q. That is, the abbreviations you have under there, (8127) Warner, Paramount, and so on, in each case indicate the defendant with which the first-run account in question was affiliated, is that right? A. That is correct, sir.

Q. And that information was obtained from the theatre lists in evidence supplied by the defendants? A. Yes, sir.

Q. As to affiliation? A. Yes, sir, that is correct, sir.

Q. Now, that admission of fact, I believe, that Warner gave you showed, did it not, all of the theatres in which any features distributed by Warner had a first run in the town in question during that season; is that right? A. That is correct.

Q. And then you show in some cases the names of two or more exhibitors with the figure "&" between them. Can you tell us what that means with reference to the admission? A. Well, that merely means that the product was split between two or more exhibitors.

Q. And the affiliation of the exhibitors between whom it it was split is indicated there? A. That is correct.

Q. You did not attempt to show on this table the extent of the split? That is, whether it was 50-50 or ⅓-⅔? A. That is correct.

Q. And how about the cases where a number of the pictures had their exhibition, or where a few pictures were exhibited by one theatre, and the majority, the great majority of the pictures were exhibited by another? What was done there? A. Well, we excluded all pictures—that is, we excluded from the computation any exhibitor or group of exhibitors who exhibited during this season a total of six pictures or less.
(3128)

Q. That is, if the exhibitor shown on the admission had a first run of only six or less of the season's product of the distributor for that year, that exhibitor was disregarded in building the table, is that right? A. That is correct, sir.

Q. Then your total at the bottom, where you say all independent 15, that is the number of the towns in which the first-run outlets were all independent for that particular distributor? A. That is correct.

Q. And the number 7—there was a split between affiliated and independent theatres? A. That is so indicated.

Q. And the number 70 is the number of towns where the first-run outlets were all affiliated for that particular distributor? A. Figure 7? Do you mean——

Q. The final figure 70. A. Oh, I beg your pardon. I thought you said 7.

Q. In these situations where you have a dash connecting two or more exhibitors' names, those indicate so-called (3129)
pool situations? A. That is right.

Q. Now, the information as to the pooling in the town, that was not obtained from the admission of fact, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. The pooling data was obtained from other exhibits in evidence which are noted in footnotes at the bottom opposite each pool? A. That is right, sir.

Q. Now, will you tell us that procedure you follow with reference to the Fox column? Was the same treatment followed there? A. Yes, the same procedure was followed in the Fox situation as was carried out in the Warner situation.

Q. And was the same true as to the Paramount admission, the Paramount Company? A. Yes, except with a few exceptions.

Q. What are the exceptions there? A. Well, we eliminate from the computation all so-called Hopalong Cassidys which are considered westerns, and in four situations we made an exception to the rule of six or less.

Q. Which were those four situations? A. One I think was Camden, New Jersey, where during the 1943-44 season Paramount sold eight features to a fellow by the name of Varbalow for exhibition in the Towers and Victoria theatres.

Q. Why did you— A. Oh, I beg your pardon. Those are the only two theatres. I say these were the only two theatres to which these eight features were sold.

(3130)

Q. Do you have the split noted there in Camden? A. No, we do not.

Q. Well, what was the reason for excluding the Camden situation there? A. Wait a minute, I beg your pardon. I show a split. I beg your pardon.

Q. Then Camden is no exception, is it? A. Camden is no exception, that is correct.

Q. What, if any, exceptions are there? A. We showed an exception in the case of Loew's——

Q. I am confining your testimony to Paramount. Were there any exceptions as to the treatment used? A. I beg your pardon. The exception was made in the case of Cleveland, Ohio.

Q. What was the situation at Cleveland? A. Well, in Cleveland the regular first-run account of Paramount was Loew.

Q. Yes. A. And in addition Paramount sold four pictures to the Circle Theatre, one picture to the New Broadway Theatre; one picture to the Windemeer Theatre; one picture to Windemeer and Commodore theatres; one to the Lorein-Fulton Theatre, I think it is, and one to the New Broadway and Commodore, and one to the Hilliard Square Theatre, for a total of ten features.

Q. Now, why did you exclude these outlets from your tabulation? A. Well, one reason was that we did not believe that these theatres constituted regular first-run accounts.

(3131)

Q. Why not? A. In view of the fact that RKO, Warner and Loew theatres in that town had clearance over these theatres I just mentioned.

Q. Did you compare those with that list of first-run theatres that were submitted by Mr. Rodgers on behalf of Loew? A. That is right.

Q. Were any of them on that list? A. No, they were not.

Q. Now, were there any other exceptions? A. In the case of Paramount?

Q. Yes. A. Norfolk, Virginia.

Q. What was the situation there? A. Well, Paramount licensed one feature to the Roxy Theatre; six to the Rosna or Rosne, I am not sure which; five to the Center Theatre.

Q. Why did you exclude those theatres? You say Norfolk? You show the Paramount product is divided there between the Loew independent pool and the independents, do you not? A. I beg your pardon, I am sorry. This computation is not applicable.

Q. There was no exception made as to Norfolk, is that right? A. That is correct, sir.

Q. Well, were there any other exceptions as to Paramount? A. Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

(3131a)

Q. What was the situation there? A. Paramount licensed two to the Harris Senator Theatre; one to the Art Cinema Theatre; one to the Hilltop Theatre; two to the Colonial, and one to the Arcade, for a total of seven.

(3132)

Q. And why were those independent outlets excluded from your Paramount column? A. Well, one reason was that the theatres in the Loew-Warner pool had clearance over these theatres.

Q. Now, that was not true of the Harris, was it? A. Well, I would not be absolutely sure unless I check it. (Checking) Well, it would appear from Paramount's answer 6 to 11 that the Loew's Penn, Stanley, Warner, Ritz theatres got clearance over all other theatres in Pittsburgh.

Q. Well, did you check those theatres against Mr. Rodgers' list? A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. Which, if any, of those appear on his list as a first-run theatre? A. Pardon me just a moment.

Two of those theatres Loew in its Exhibit 13 includes as regular first-run theatres.

Q. Which ones? A. One is the Harris Senator, and the other is the Art Cinema.

Mr. Davis: Say that again, please.

The Witness: I beg your pardon. I said that Loew in Exhibit No. L-13 includes the Art Cinema and the Harris Senator Theatres as regular first-run theatres.

Mr. Davis: Where?

The Witness: In Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Q. And how many of the Paramount pictures released during that season did those two theatres get? A. The Harris
(3133)
Senator got two and the Art Cinema got one.

Q. Well, were there any other exceptions in computing the Paramount column? A. No, there were not.

Q. How about as to Loew? Did you follow the same method there? A. Yes, we followed the same procedure.

Q. Were there any exceptions? A. Yes.

Q. Where were they? A. In the case of New York City, Loew's sold three features to Radio City Music Hall and we considered that as a split and included the independent along with Loew's Theatres.

Q. Why was that? A. Well, in New York it appears that the practice of these defendants is to sell pictures to the Radio City Music Hall in small blocks or even in individual pictures; and I think it has been testified to that all these defendants seek to get Radio City Music Hall as a first-run account.

Q. Well, in any event, the playing time represented by three pictures in a first-run in New York is much greater than that represented by six in any of these other communities, is that right? A. I should think so.

Q. Now, any other exceptions? A. In the case of Loew's?

Q. Yes. A. No, there was not.

Q. Now, as the RKO, what if any exceptions to that procedure did you make? A. Let me check just a moment, sir. In the case of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania——
(3134)

Q. What was the situation there? A. In Pittsburgh, RKO licensed 12 pictures to the Barry Theatre in that town.

Q. That theatre, that was on Mr. Rodgers' list, was it? A. Yes, it was.

Q. Why was that excluded. A. For several reasons. One, we did not believe it was a first-run account, because it appears from an examination of the answers to the interrogatories of all defendants that the only other defendant that sold pictures during that season to Skirball—that is, he owns this Barry Theatre, he owns or operates it—was Warner, who sold him three features. Furthermore, the Loew-Warner pool theatres in this city have clearance over all other theatres.

Q. Now, were there any other exceptions? A. To the best of my knowledge I do not believe there was.

Q. As to RKO? A. RKO or any of the other defendants.

Q. Now, as to Universal and United Artists, the admissions of fact were in a somewhat different form, were they not? A. That is correct, sir.

Q. In those cases they simply gave a general statement as to what the first-run account was during the entire period from 1936-1937 through 1943-1944, is that right? A. That is correct.

Q. They did not show the distribution of individual pictures in the towns in question in any of the seasons in question, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. So your data there is just taken as it was reported? A. Yes.

Q. Now how about Columbia? A. Columbia provided admissions of fact which merely gave the regular first-run account, according to my best recollection.

Q. And you simply took their statement as to which was the regular first-run account? A. That is right.

Mr. Wright: We offer 428 in evidence.

Mr. Proskauer: May we ask a few questions preliminarily?

Judge Hand: Yes.

Preliminary Cross-Examination by Mr. Proskauer:

Q. Lieutenant, Warner is in the first column, so I will talk to you first: As to all of these defendants and all the people shown on this chart, you arbitrarily omitted all accounts to which they sold fewer than six pictures, is that right? A. Six or less.

Q. Six or less? A. That is right.

Q. Now, why did you do that? A. Well, I think, as I understand it, the original request made to the defendants consisted of a list of theatres which constituted the regular first-run accounts.

Q. And you arbitrarily decided that if Warner was selling an independent theatre first-run anywhere in America (3136) six pictures, which is somewhere around a third or a fourth of its entire production, that you were going to exclude that in your computation; is that what you did? A. Well now—

Q. Now, just answer that yes or no. Didn't you do that?

The Witness: Will you repeat the question?

Mr. Proskauer: With the Court's permission, may the reporter read it?

(Question read.)

A. Well, if you mean by the question that we arbitrarily excluded theatres because it is Warner's—that is, independent theatres sold by Warner because it is Warner, I would say no. I am not sure that I understand your question.

Q. Have you got the material there showing the number of independent theatres that Warner sold first-run in amounts of six or less? A. Yes, we do.

Mr. Wright: Exhibit 129,

Mr. Proskauer: All right, we will get that later.

Q. Now, take Buffalo, for example: You knew, didn't you, and your records showed that we sold six first-run pictures in 1943-1944 to the Buffalo 20th Century, which was an independent company, operating the Century Theatre? A. I will tell you in just a moment, Mr. Proskauer. Would (3137) you kindly tell me what page it is on?

Q. What page? A. Yes, this admission of fact. I take it you have got that in your hand.

Q. Page 9. A. Yes, we omitted that because it was six or less.

Q. Do you know that Warner produced 19 pictures that year? A. That is correct.

Q. And you thought it was fair to try to give the Court the impression that we did not sell first-run to independents to make up a schedule arbitrarily omitting a sale of approximately a third of our product to an independent theatre in a great city like Buffalo?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, that question is objected to. There has been no attempt to show that they did not sell independents in these towns. What the table purports to show is who the regular first-run account was that showed pictures of these distributors.

The Court: The question is all right. Overruled.

Judge Goddard: Is there anywhere on these schedules anything to show that less than six pictures are not included?

Mr. Wright: Why, his testimony, I think——

Judge Goddard: Is there anything on here?

Judge Bright: He does not show the cities on this schedule in which such exclusions were made.

(3138)

Mr. Wright: I think he testified generally that as to all these cities, in dealing with the first five columns there, he excluded the situations where six or less were sold, with such exceptions as he noted.

Q. You cannot answer that question? I am leaving it to you. You are a lawyer, are you? A. No, sir.

Q. An accountant? A. No, sir.

Q. Formerly attached to the Attorney General's office? A. No, sir.

Q. Are you an accountant?

Judge Bright: He said he was a first lieutenant.

A. No, I said I was not an accountant. If you ask me what my occupation was, I can answer your question.

Q. I do ask. A. Economist and statistician.

Q. Economist and statistician? I am putting it to you as an economist and statistician whether you think that it was a fair use of statistics to create this document and just arbitrarily leave out what you have told us you left out? You can answer that yes or no, and I will take your answer either way you give it. A. I cannot answer it yes or no, but I can explain the basis for this elimination.

Q. You have explained all that I think you care to say—have you got anything to say, in explanation of it, other than what you have already told us? A. Yes. It appears that any split, whether it is between two defendants, two affiliated theatres, or between an affiliated theatre and an independent theatre, takes the form of a split of fifty-fifty or two-thirds and one-third. Now, in the case of Warner, one-third of 19 would be 6⅓, I would take it. Is that correct.

Q. Well, I think so. A. All right. However, in the case of seasons——

Q. I think the Court will take judicial notice of that A. (Continued) —in the case of seasons you note on charts 429, 430, or subsequent exhibits, or subsequent documents which will be marked in evidence, we used the same basis of elimination, that is, six. If you go back to the 1936-1937 season, Warner Bros.—I think it was about 50 features—60 features—a one-third split of that would have been 20.

Q. 60 features? A. That is right, 1936-37, Warner produced 36—60 features. I beg your pardon. A one-third split would have been 20. Yet, on the theory that a split of anything other than, or less than, one-third does not constitute a regular first-run account, I think that you certainly got to——

Q. All right. Have you given all the explanation that you care to make to the Court as to your conduct in making this arbitrary omission? A. That is all I can think of at the moment.

Q. I will take that and let the record stand at that and just ask you one more question. If I count correctly, in the figure 70 at the very end of column 1, where you say "Total affiliated first-runs" you have included 27 instances in which Warner played its pictures in its own theatres? A. I imagine if its own pictures were played in its own theatres, they would be included in here. I do not know what the exact number is offhand.

Q. The exhibit will substantiate my mathematical accuracy, as long as you tell us that you have included in total affiliated first-runs all cases where Warner played its own pictures in its own theatres, and you do so tell me. A. Yes.

Mr. Proskauer: That is all.

Direct Examination Resumed by Mr. Wright:

Q. Just one question on Warner, before you go to the next one. As a matter of fact, Lieutenant, if you had taken for Warner a three-picture division for that 1943-44 season, you would have exactly the same figures as you have there except for Buffalo, would you? A. Yes, that is correct.

Mr. Wright: That's all.

Preliminary Cross-Examination by Mr. Davis:

Q. Lieutenant, turn to the Loew column here and look (3141) at the line for Los Angeles, where you have marked "Fox and Loew." That indicates a product split, does it not? A. That is correct.

Q. Where did you get the idea that there was a product split in Los Angeles? A. Let me have Exhibit 58.

Mr. Wright: I think I can save time. I think that Mr. Davis is right, that there should be a dash between Fox and Loew, rather than an "and", because——

Mr. Davis: That is not what I am talking about.

Mr. Wright: (Continuing) ——because that was a Fox and Loew pool.

Mr. Davis: The facts are that in Los Angeles, while we own a theatre, we do not operate it. It is leased to Fox, and our only relation is as landlord of the theatre, and we are charged in this as splitting the product.

Mr. Wright: I think I can clear this up by saying that so far as we are concerned, I do not believe there is any such charge. We do treat as pool situations, or have treated for our purposes, those where one defendant owns the theatre and leases it to another for operation. There is no dispute as to the basic facts. I think it is only a matter of language that we are talking about, as far as I can see.

(3142)

Mr. Davis: I would like to know by what authority that is treated as a pool. Certainly a landlord of real estate has a right to lease it to anybody he chooses without entering into the business of his tenant.

Mr. Wright: There cannot be any question about that.

Mr. Davis: Then, all right, if it is agreed this is incorrect as to Los Angeles, we will pass to San Francisco.

Mr. Wright: On our tabulation I would say it should be with a dash instead of an "and"——

Mr. Davis: I say it should be neither.

Mr. Wright: (Continuing) ——and a footnote to the theatre list shows the precise relationship between Loew and Fox in the theatres in question.

Q. Let us pass to San Francisco. You have a charge here, or, rather, you have a line which indicates Loew-Fox-Paramount. Are you suggesting that there is a pool of those theatres in San Francisco?

Mr. Wright: Certainly there cannot be any question but that the answer is Yes to that, and I think there is a footnote reference to the exhibits on which we rely to establish the joint relationship of the defendants in question in those theatres.

Mr. Davis: The point I am making, Mr. Wright, is your witness comes on the stand and says this is a correct report of what the exhibits contain. I say it is not a correct report of what the exhibits contain. I say there is no pool in San Francisco. I say that in San Francisco the only theatre we own has been leased and we have no participation whatever in its operation or receipts.

Mr. Wright: Again, the facts as to the relationship are set forth in Exhibits 231, 232, 233 and 222, which are cited in the footnote.

Mr. Davis: Are you asserting that those exhibits support the statement which your witness has made in his schedule?

Mr. Wright: Yes, we are.

Mr. Davis: Well, I deny it.

Q. Will you point out, Mr. Witness, what the exhibits show as to San Francisco,

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I think we can shorten this again. Those exhibits make it appear that the theatres owned respectively by Loew and Paramount and Fox in San Francisco are all operated by Fox. Now, there is no dispute between us as to those facts. Again, it is simply one of characterization. For our purposes we have collected those joint interests and for convenience referred to them as pool situations. By any other name the relationship of course remains exactly the same.

Mr. Davis: I appreciate Mr. Wright's chivalry in coming to take the place of his witness on the stand. I am merely testing the witness, who has presented this as an accurate picture of the theatre situation.

Judge Hand: Go on and answer.

Mr. Davis: It is either right or it is wrong, and there is no reason why it should be represented here by symbols which are supposed to indicate a certain relationship between these defendants when the relationship does not exist at all, and a misrepresentation by symbols is just as much a falsity as a misrepresentation by words. That is my position about it.

Judge Hand: Can you answer this question?

The Witness: I am afraid I cannot.

Q. All right, I will ask you one more and then we will—I have some others, but I will stop with one more. Take Paterson, New Jersey: What does your schedule indicate about the Loew films in Paterson, New Jersey? A. It indicates a Paramount-Warner pool.

Q. And that Loew's films are licensed to a Paramount-Warner pool? A. That is correct.

Q. Does it take any account of the fact shown by previous testimony in this case, that Loew's films in Paterson are divided between Warner and Adams and the independent (3145) exhibitor? A. I am not sure about that.

Q. Well, I ask you whether your schedule indicates that, this schedule, this Exhibit No. 428? A. No, this schedule does not indicate the name of the theatre.

Q. Does that indicate licensing of films to any other exhibitor than an apparent, speaking by the schedule, Paramount-Warner pool? The answer is it does not? A. I am sorry. Will you read the question?

(Question read.)

A. I don't know.

Q. Let me give you one more. I will break my promise, and just mention one more here. Houston, Texas: What does your schedule, Exhibit 428, show as to the Loew films in Houston, Texas? A. Shows that they are exhibited in Loew and Paramount theatres or theatres affiliated with Loew and Paramount.

Q. Isn't it a fact that all Loew's first-run theatres in Houston are exhibited—licensed to Loew's own first-run house? You have been over the papers. Isn't that right. A. I know, but you—I am sorry, I did not get qour question. You said "first-run theatres."

Q. Isn't it a fact, ash shown by the evidence and by the documents you have been over that Loew's films in Houston are licensed to Loew's own first-run house alone and that there is no split with Paramount? A. No, this shows there (3146) is a split with Paramount.

Mr. Wright: That can be resolved by—haave you got exhibit 58?

Mr. Davis: Just a moment, Mr. Wright. I am speaking now, not of what Exhibit 428 shows, but of what the documents on which it is built will exhibit.

Mr. Wright: That is what I am trying to refer to. Exhibit 58, I believe, is the Loew's admission which will show what Loew said about where its pictures played.

Mr. Davis: That is all I want to ask him.

Judge Hand: We will adjourn until 2:15.

(Recess to 2:15 p. m.)

(3147)

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Court: Now let us move along. We have spent a very long morning, without any intermission, making corrections, and stuff like that, which I think ought to be agreed on between the parties in advance.

Mr. Caskey: Wr. Wright was told about these objections Friday afternoon and refused to make the changes.

Mr. Wright: Now that is an utter misstatement of fact.

Mr. Seymour: If your Honor please, the difficulty has been that we saw these for the first time late Friday. We checked them to some extent. They are not strict rebuttal material. It is really material that should have come in on the direct case.

Judge Hand: I think that is true.

Mr. Seymour: So we are doing the best we can.

Mr. Wright: The material itself, if the Court please, was all outlined in the appendix which was served on them September 20th. Now of course the additional material that was added here was not available then because the data on the additional cities necessary to complete the 92 did not come in until after our case was closed. We made every effort to give them the material in advance.

PETER M. BORWICK, resumed the stand.

Mr. Seymour: I just have a couple of questions on (3148) this.

By Mr. Seymour:

Q. Referring to the Paramount column, there are in that column some 48 theatres in which Paramount has an interest which shows Paramount product first-run, isn't that so? A. Well, I can't say offhand. I did not count——

Q. Subject to correction, it is approximately 48, isn't it? A. I would say somewhere in the neighborhood of that figure.

Q. Now, referring to the first entry in the column under the heading, "Paramount," what is that intended to mean, the word "Par." opposite "New York, N.Y."? A. It merely means that Paramount licensed its feature pictures to theatres affiliated with Paramount Pictures, Inc.

Q. In the City of New York? A. In the City of New York.

Q. And does New York, N.Y., include the five Boroughs? A. No. That includes Manhattan, first-run New York.

Q. That is not made clear, is it? A. Well, first-run New York is first-run New York—, Judge Goddard: Will you speak a little louder, please.

The Witness: I beg your pardon.

A. (Continuing) I say first-run New York is first-run New York City.

Q. Isn't it a fact that the admissions of fact show that in (3149)
Manhattan, which is only one of the five Boroughs of New York, N.Y., Paramount Pictures were shown first-run not only in the Paramount theatre but also in Loew's theatres and in independent theatres in the Borough of Manhattan? A. The only way I can answer that is by checking the original exhibit. Would you kindly get that, please? (Exhibit handed to witness.) Yes, there is one feature picture licensed to the Macon Amusement Corporation for exhibition first-run in the Criterion theatre. I think that is a Loew theatre.

Judge Hand: Why did you limit this to Manhattan? Just because you were told to?

The Witness: No, sir, because Manhattan has clearance over Bronx, Brooklyn, Richmond, Queens and surrounding area.

Q. Wouldn't it have been correct, then, to indicate, when you say New York, N.Y., that it is only the Borough of Manhattan? A. To be absolutely precise, I imagine so. We can make that correction.

Q. Yes, you can easily make corrections——

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, there is no need for any correction. First-run in Manhattan is first-run in the entire City of New York. That is where the first-run occurs, and it has clearance over all the rest of the area.

(3150)

The Court: All right. Let him go on with his cross-examination.

By Mr. Seymour:

Q. Now, would you go on, please? Aren't there features licensed to others first-run in Manhattan in addition to the Paramount theatre, in addition to the one you have already mentioned? A. There are four features licensed to Bobby-Dick, Inc., for first-run in the Globe theatre. I don't know who operates or runs the Globe theatre offhand.

Q. You just excluded those because you thought it would be a good idea? A. No, sir.

Q. Why was that, because there were less than six? A. I would say that that was an inadvertent omission.

(3151)

Q. Were there some other features licensed by Paramount in theatres other than the Paramount Theatre in Manhattan? A. There were two features licensed to City Enterprises Corporation for exhibition in the Victoria Theatre. Offhand I don't know whether that is a Loew theatre or not.

Q. Is that another inadvertent omission? A. Well, I said that the entire total of—now, wait a minute.

Q. I am told it is not a Loew theatre. I do not know the fact. A. That is a Loew theatre, according to Exhibit 163.

Q. Loew's counsel shake their heads. I don't know. A. There is 163.

Q. Anyhow, you considered it a Loew theatre but you did not show licenses to Loew in your entry under Manhattan, isn't that so? A. The way this thing should have read is "Paramount and Loew."

Q. Why shouldn't it also have read "and independent"? A. No, because the total number of independents licensed here is less than six.

Q. Will you look at your reference to Bobby-Dick again? How many does your copy of the admission show to Bobby-Dick? A. That is four.

Q. Doesn't it show five? A. It does not.

Q. So what you say is that there were only six to independents and therefore you left them out; is that it? A. Now, wait a minute, wait a minute. You have two feature motion pictures licensed to United Artists Theatre Circuit and Paramount Pictures, Inc. for exhibition in first-run Rivoli. Well, that is two plus eleven, thirteen. That leaves only two licensed to—I mean, four licensed to independents.
(3152)

Q. You gave us four as to Bobby-Dick and two— A. You see, there is one licensed to the Rivoli.

Q. What you say is you have left out reference to the independents on the ground that there weren't six? A. That is correct.

Q. According to your figures? A. That is right.

Q. And you inadvertently omitted the other one? A. That is correct.

By Mr. Caskey:

Q. Will you look at Richmond, Virginia, under the Fox column, about one-third down. A. Yes, I have it.

Q. You show there independent and Loew-Independent. A. That is right.

Q. Meaning that some pictures were licensed to an independent and more than six pictures were licensed to a theatre in which Loew and an independent had an interest? A. That is right.

Q. I show you Exhibit 44 for Richmond. Have you got it (3153)
there? A. That is correct.

Q. How many pictures were licensed to the group that you designate as Loew-Independent? A. It doesn't say the number.

Q. Sir? Got the answer? A. Oh, wait a minute, wait a minute. Yes, I have it.

Q. How many were licensed? A. It does not say the number that was licensed to an independent.

Q. Well, I didn't ask you that. I said, how many were licensed to this group that you described as being Loew-Independent? A. Four.

Q. But you put that on your list, didn't you? A. That was included inadvertently.

Q. The exhibitor, as shown here, just follow me, Twentieth Century licensed to W. & V. Company, Inc., J. D. Eagan, four features for exhibition at the National and Park theatres first run. That is Wilmer & Vincent, isn't it? A. I understand that to be a Loew-Wilmer & Vincent pool.

Q. Just answer my question. That is Wilmer & Vincent? A. No, I don't know whether it is Wilmer & Vincent.

Judge Hand: Where is this?

Mr. Caskey: Under Richmond, Virginia.

Judge Hand: Oh, still Virginia?

Q. Well now, Mr. Borwick, at the heading you have (3154) this title, "Exhibitors holding first-run contracts with defendant distributors," is that correct? Did I read that right? A. That is what it says, yes.

Q. Now, this chart does not purport to show any such thing, does it? A. I beg your pardon. That should read "Exhibitors"——

Q. "Exhibitors holding first-run contracts with defendant distributors." That is the way it reads, isn't that right? A. I beg your pardon. That is right.

Q. Now, it does not show any such thing, does it? A. A. How do you mean that?

Q. Stick to Richmond. There is no contract that you have seen in evidence with Loew's for the exhibition of any pictures in Richmond, is there? A. No, I haven't seen the actual contract.

Q. And the admission of fact is that we licensed four pictures to Wilmer & Vincent. Now, from some other source you say that Loew's have an interest in that theatre and so you show a chart indicating that Loew's has a contract for first-run pictures in Richmond, is that right? A. This Exhibit 163 shows the National Theatre as one in which Loew has an interest.

Q. Yes, that is right, but there isn't any contract with Loew's for any pictures? A. As far as I know, there is. (3155)

Q. You know to the contrary, don't you? The admission of fact is the only evidence that you have, isn't that so? A. Well, this W. & V. Company is an affiliated of Loew's.

Q. You know that to be a fact? Are you testifying to that either of your own knowledge or what you know to be in this record? A. I believe so. Get Exhibit 15, please.

Q. Let me illustrate it. Take San Francisco. There you show Loew-Fox-Paramount. You do not contend that there is any contract with Loew for the exhibition of Fox pictures in San Francisco, do you? A. Either with one or more of these defendants in the form of an operating company or some company affiliated with one or more of these defendants.

Q. Just sticking to San Francisco and Loew, do you content that there is in evidence any contract between Loew's and Twentieth Century-Fox licensing Fox pictures in San Francisco? Just that question. A. I can't answer that. I haven't seen the contract.

Q. Do you contend that there is any contract with any corporation in which Loew's has an interest? A. I believe so.

Q. What is the name of the corporation? A. (No answer.)

Q. Don't you know, Mr. Borwick, that Fox licenses its pictures to its own subsidiary in San Francisco?

(3156)

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I don't think there is any question about the fact that only——.

Mr. Caskey: I am cross-examining, Mr. Wright.

Mr. Wright: Just a moment. There is no contention on our part at all with respect to any situation where a pool is shown as the exhibitor that the license contract for the first-run films in question was made with more than one. The license contract in any event would be with the one who operates the theatre. The only thing that the pool indication there shows is that theatres affiliated with the exhibitors mentioned there were jointly operated as first-run outlets for the product in question.

Mr. Caskey: Well, but the heading——

Mr. Davis: I may ask Mr. Wright by what authority he says that Loew's is a member of the pool in San Francisco.

Mr. Wright: The authority for that statement is the evidence referred to in the footnote there which shows that Loew's leases its theatre to Fox for operation there along with the Paramount theatres in San Francisco and the Fox theatres. All three theatres are operated by Fox as first-run outlets in the town. The contracts are admittedly made with Fox, the film contracts.

(3157)

Judge Hand: Well, it is the same old question raised before, as I understand it——

Mr. Caskey: Well, your Honor, in the first place ——

Judge Hand: ——as to whether a landlord and tenant relationship under these circumstances is the equivalent of a pool; isn't that it?

Mr. Wright: Precisely.

Mr. Davis: Do I understand Mr. Wright to contend now that that is the equivalent of a pool; to lease a theatre, as we have in San Francisco, having no contract other than landlord and tenant, that that constitutes a pool? I would like Mr. Wright to answer that and say that that is his position, because then we will know what we are shooting at.

Mr. Wright: As far as we are concerned, we used the term "pool" as one short word to describe a variety of relationships. One of those relationships is a situation where one of the defendants owns a theatre and leases it to another; another such situation is where they both own the theatres and have an operating agreement under which the profits and losses are shared; another is where they each own stock in a corporation.

Judge Hand: I know. Any kind of association you claim is a conspiracy under all the circumstances, no matter what form it took?

(3158)

Mr. Wright: Yes. We use the word "pool" to cover all of those situations.

Mr. Davis: If the Court please, I submit the word "pool", legally speaking, as used by Mr. Wright, has no significance whatever.

Mr. Caskey: I just want to challenge the statement Mr. Wright made. I said there was a provision for leasing the Loew theatre in San Francisco, and then he used these words, according to the best of my memory, along with the Paramount and Fox theatres. Now there is no such agreement in evidence.

Mr. Wright: By "along with" I meant only that both Loew and Paramount executed leases with Fox for their respective theatres, and all of the theatres of all three are operated by Fox as first-run outlets in the town.

Mr. Caskey: Now, Mr. Wright, can it be conceded —maybe this will shorten it—that in these so-called pool situations which you have listed, where you have a hyphen here, that the contract, the license agreement, was made with the operator of the theatre as specifically shown in Exhibit 44?

Mr. Wright: Obviously.

Mr. Caskey: All right; and is not made, in the case of San Francisco, with either Loew's or Paramount?

Mr. Wright: The exhibit is not intended to contradict in any way any fact that may appear in underlying evidence.
(3159)

Mr. Caskey: All right.

By Mr. Caskey:

Q. Now, Lieutenant, when we come to Jersey City, you show Warner, RKO, Skouras. Now why is RKO included? A. Well, I think footnote 12 would indicate the exhibit which would explain that.

Q. Did you put those footnotes on? A. Those footnotes were put on by Mr. Wright.

Q. And you had nothing to do with it? A. That is right.

Q. And you don't know whether they are right or wrong? A. I assume they are right.

Mr. Wright: Thank you.

Q. Now, do you know that the pictures were licensed in Jersey City to Skouras under a franchise in 1931, four years before RKO acquired any interest in the Skouras theatre? A. I did not know that.

Q. And you did not read Exhibit 12 in preparation for your testimony? A. As I said, I did not mark the footnotes.

Q. Now, when you get down to Elizabeth, New Jersey, what basis is there for saying RKO and Warner? A. Elizabeth, New Jersey?

Q. Fourth from the bottom. A. May I have Exhibit 44? (3160)

(Exhibit handed to witness.)

Q. 44 shows it was licensed to Skouras Theatres Corporation, doesn't it? A. Yes, I believe that Stanley theatre is a Warner theatre.

Q. What is the Stanley theatre? And assuming that, what is the RKO theatre? A. Well, I imagine the State theatre is the RKO theatre.

Q. Don't you know that is a Skouras theatre? A. Well, it is a Skouras theatre, yes.

Q. Well, up here, in Newark, you put Skouras, didn't you? A. Yes, we did.

Q. And in Jersey City you put Skouras, didn't you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, what is the justification for leaving it out when you come to Elizabeth then? A. I do not know. Perhaps again it was due to inadvertence.

Mr. Caskey: I hope your Honors will not receive this exhibit in evidence.

Mr. Leisure: May I ask the witness just a couple of questions?

Judge Hand: Yes.

By Mr. Leisure:

Q. Lieutenant Borwick, the record here, RKO's answer to the Government's request to admit facts, the record shows for this 1943-44 season RKO licensed Warner and Loew's in (3161)

Pittsburgh. That is shown on your chart here under RKO in line 8, is it not? A. That is correct.

Q. Now I think you testified this morning that your first-run—you say the first-run contracts as used in this chart do not include the contracts for six or less pictures? A. That is correct, sir.

Q. It is a fact that RKO's answers do include in many instances licenses to independent theatres for less than six pictures? A. I could not give you a definite answer unless I checked the record.

Q. Well, without spending time on it, just let me refer you to this same one that we are talking about here in the Pittsburgh situation. You have shown Pittsburgh on your chart, haven't you, as to being Warner and Loew's? A. That is correct.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, he also covered it in his direct testimony and explained exactly what he did in that situation.

Mr. Leisure: If you will just be patient with me, Mr. Wright, I will only take a min[illegible]

Q. It is shown by RKO's answers that as to the Skirball theatres, 11 pictures were licensed during that same season, first-run to the Barry theatre, which was an independent. You have shown that fact on your chart, Exhibit 428, have you? A. That is right.

(3162)

Q. And as I understood your testimony, your reason for excluding those is because you did not consider the theatre a regular first-run theatre? A. That is correct.

Q. And by regular, you meant that it did not take clearance over other theatres? A. Not only that, but it did not play—in other words, it did not get the regular splits of either, as I said, one to three, or fifty-fifty, but played what it could get.

Q. Now on this very theatre that we are talking about in Pittsburgh, your records show that that very theatre, the Barry, took clearance over all other theatres in the city of 21 days on RKO pictures? A. You say the Barry theatre?

Q. Yes. A. Well, I do not have a record of it.

Q. Well, if you will just look at our interrogatories you will see that, sir. But without taking time to do that at this time, if that is true that in that case there was one theatre that was sold regularly that is classified as a first-run, your chart here does not reflect that, isn't that so? A. That is right,

Q. The record will speak for itself as to what I am saying as to whether it is true or not. Your chart does not reflect that as to the Barry theatre. A. This chart does not reflect the pictures sold to the Barry theatre.

Q. Now as I understood you in discussing the question (3163) with Judge Proskauer this morning as to Buffalo, you said that you excluded the Twentieth Century theatre, is that right? A. Yes, I think I did.

Q. And you gave the same reasons I believe then—so we won't bring Mr. Wright to his feet—you gave the same reasons on cross-examination then that you gave on direct as to why you excluded it? A. I don't remember at the moment what the reason was.

Q. Well, you did exclude those? A. Yes, I did exclude those.

Q. And you did not consider it a regular first-run, and that is why you excluded it? A. That is right.

Q. Now the record in this case shows that RKO sells all of its first-run to that theatre. Would you feel that a theatre could be first-run for RKO and not first-run for Warner Bros? A. Would you repeat that, please?

Mr. Leisure: Will you please read it?

Q. (Question read.) A. Well, the only way I can answer that is simply this, that if it played discarded pictures or small numbers of pictures of both of them, of course it would not be considered a first-run. Or if it played discarded pictures of RKO and did not play any pictures at all of Warner, why it still would not be a first-run.

Q. You say "if" now, Lieutenant. But the record shows (3164) that during the 1943-44 season, RKO Radio Pictures licensed 38 of its first-run pictures to the Twentieth Century, so there is no room for an "if" there, is there. It also played Princess O'Rourke. A. (No answer.)

Q. I don't want to spend any further time on it; I just want the record to be straight. A. Just a moment. I want to make sure that there is not an error here.

Q. Go right ahead. A. We show, of course, you played all your product independent in Buffalo.

Q. Does it show on the chart? A. It sure does. Are you talking about Buffalo, New York? Is that right?

Q. That is right. The point of my question was, and I was curious to know, how a theatre could be first-run for RKO and not be first-run for Warner Bros. That was the point of my examination about Buffalo. A. Yes. Well, let me say this, that the independent is already included in the distribution of product under RKO, so that the independent is already given credit for any product that it plays.

Q. That is true, but it is not shown as to Warner? A. That is right, it was not shown as to Warner,

Q. Yet it was the same theatre, and yet you excluded it as to Warner and did not exclude it as to us? A. As I say, it is already accounted for.

(3165)

Q. Did you have any other reason for excluding these theatres under 6 and the 11, such as the very theatre, other than the reasons you have given us for making up this total, Lieutenant Borwick? A. I don't recall of any.

Q. Now, you notice on your summaries, you have on your summaries—take RKO for instance—that we sold only 23 independents, and that we sold to 63 affiliated theatres. If those factors that I have been bringing out here show that we sold to 28 independents first-run, that would change your total so that the relationship instead of being 63 to 23 would be 35 to 20-some-odd; that would have changed your chart considerably, wouldn't it? A. On that assumption, yes.

Q. On the record? A. Well, not considerably. I beg your pardon. You said five changes would be involved. I would not say that is considerable.

Q. I said if there were 28, as I am suggesting to you, the record shows. A. That would be an increase of five which on the basis of a total of 92 cities would not be a considerable increase.

Mr. Leisure: If your Honors please, I object to this chart. I ordinarily certainly would not object to the chart, but this is not based on the record. The witness has taken the figures that are in the record and then arbitrarily outside of the record he has determined what he chooses to call regular first-run; so that there is something in the record here put in by this chart which is not borne out by the record. Now, if Mr. Wright had wanted to make this point it seems to me it was the burden upon him in his direct case to prove and show what he considered to be a regular first-run theatre as being a regular first-run theatre. Then this kind of a chart might be valuable. But as it is now, it seems to me it is grossly misleading to the Court, and I object to it not only because it is misleading but because it goes out of the record to prove what it tries to prove. Namely, as to RKO here, anyone reading this would think that we had sold to 63 affiliated theatres and to only 23 independents, whereas the record already shows that it should be a relationship of 35 affiliated and 20-some-odd independents, which is very close, and which we know to be a fact, and that is what it should be, and this chart does not show that, and it can only arrive at that conclusion by going outside the record, assuming for his own purposes that something is not a regular first-run theatre. And I have already shown that with respect to Buffalo he regarded it as a first-run theatre, because we sold all our first-run product there, but it was not a first-run theatre for Warner.

(3167)

So I think the chart is very much misleading, and I object to it.

Judge Hand: I think it is certainly confusing. At most this sort of thing is argumentative. It is not testimony at all. But we will admit it.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I can re-examine him on some of these situations which Mr. Davis covered, for example, and which Mr. Davis was in error about and the witness was right. I can call attention to other corrections of that nature, and it seems to me that it is futile to go through the process on the stand of covering the arguments of the parties with respect to the exhibit. We have made clear I think exactly what was done in this connection, and the exhibit does not purport to be anything more than a statement of our contentions as to what this underlying data that is referred to in the exhibit shows; and as such I think that it should be clearly received.

Now, if your Honor wishes me to spend more time with the witness on these discrepancies that have been developed, I will do it.

Judge Hand: I said we will admit it.

Mr. Wright: I am sorry, I did not get the Court's ruling.

(Government's Exhibit 428 for identification received in evidence.)

(3168)

Mr. Wright: Would you mark these exhibits 429, 430 and 431 respectively.

(Marked Government's Exhibits 429, 430 and 431 for identification.)

Judge Hand: What are these, more towns?

Mr. Wright: This is the same data for the same towns for three prior seasons which are covered by these same admissions of fact.

Mr. Proskauer: Mr. Wright, would you save time and concede that these that you are now offering are subject to the same infirmities developed in cross-examination as the ones received in evidence?

Mr. Wright: Precisely.

There is just one question I want to ask him. I think there was a different method used as to one or two seasons and I want to have him explain that to the Court.

Mr. Seymour: I would like to ask a question about the next chart before it is received.

Mr. Proskauer: Could I have an answer to my question? It might silence me if I got an affirmative answer.

Mr. Wright: What is your question?

Mr. Proskauer: Will you concede that these that you are now offering are subject to the same infirmities developed on the cross-examination of the witness as to the last one?

(3169)

Mr. Wright: I answered you with a firm yes once, and I will do it again.

Mr. Proskauer: It was not firm enough for me to hear it.

Mr. Wright: These are similar tabulations to 428 based upon the admissions of fact filed by the eight respective defendants. 429 covers the 1941-42 season; 430, the 1939-40 season; and 431, the 1936-37 season.

Mr. Seymour: I should like to ask a few additional questions about these. I will just be a moment.

Mr. Wright: Well, may I ask him some direct questions first?

Mr. Seymour: Surely.

Direct Examination resumed by Mr. Wright:

Q. Calling your attention to the Paramount column in the exhibits marked for identification as 430 and 431, those were seasons, were they not, prior to the consent decree method of selling in small blocks, is that right? I am calling your attention to 430 and 431, the 1939-40 and 1936-37 seasons. A. Yes, sir.

Q. Those were seasons which were prior to the consent decree method of selling in small blocks, is that correct? (3170)

A. That is correct.

Q. During those seasons did you notice that in the answers furnished by Paramount they sometimes showed more features as receiving a first-run exhibition in a town than they actually released during that season? A. That is correct, sir.

Q. In those cases did you ascertain what the explanation of that was? A. Yes.

Q. And the explanation was, was it not, that they had—after the one exhibitor had bought the entire group for the season, certain features were rejected by him for first-run and then sold to another exhibitor, is that right? A. That is correct, sir.

Q. In those situations, regardless of whether an exhibitor played six or more, you did not include in your tabulation the exhibitor playing the rejected features, is that right? A. That's right.

Q. Otherwise the method you have pursued was the same as that that you have already described with reference to Exhibit 428? A. Exactly the same, sir.

Preliminary Cross Examination by Mr. Seymour:

Q. As I understand it, on these other charts that have just been received, you continued the process of excluding from the column any independent exhibitors who played six or less pictures, is that right? A. That is correct.

(3171)

Q. And that runs through all the columns in all these other charts? A. That is right.

Q. Did you also, referring to the chart for the 1941-42 period, exclude from the Paramount column some independent exhibitors who played more than six Paramount feature pictures during that season? A. Well, if I did, it was done inadvertently.

Q. Weren't there more than six Paramount feature pictures licensed to independent exhibitors in Camden during that season? A. Talking about the 1941-42 season?

Q. That's right. A. I notice here that you have got a note, "Information in regard to five features which are unaccounted for will be forthcoming shortly." I don't remember offhand whether we got that information or not. If we did not get the information, of course, it would be excluded. If we did, we will make the proper corrections.

Q. I ask you the same questions about Pittsburgh, Spokane, Fort Worth and Norfolk, were there any independent exhibitors who licensed more than six pictures in that season from Paramount which are not included? A. To save time, I will say the same thing, that it would not—if it was omitted, it was omitted inadvertently and will be corrected

accordingly.

Q. Referring to, let me ask you about, Kansas City, Missouri, there you have included RKO although the admissions of fact indicate that, I think, seven features were licensed, but you made no reference to an independent which licensed eight features. Is your answer the same as to that? A. Yes, very definitely.

Q. Referring to the 1939-40 season, would you look at Denver? A. 1939-40?

Q. Yes. That shows that Paramount pictures were licensed to Fox, does it not? A. 1939-40?

Q. Yes. A. Yes, it does.

Q. Isn't it the fact that the admissions show approximately six licensed to Fox and approximately 55 licensed to an independent? A. If it does, as I say, if it does, that can also be corrected.

Q. And that would be an inadvertent omission? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I ask you the same questions as to the 1939-40 seasons as to Atlanta, Camden, Chicago, Fort Worth, Oakland, Paterson, Rochester, San Francisco, Scranton, Utica, Wilmington, Wichita and Norfolk, I aks you whether in the admissions of fact it does not appear that more than six features were licensed to independents in those cities in that year? A. As I say, I cannot tell you, again, without consulting the——

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, he has already testified that as to those prior years, 1936-37 and 1939-40, where they appeared to be rejected, that is, the features, he excluded the exhibitor playing them no matter how many there were.

Q. How could you tell from the admissions of fact that they were rejected features? A. Well, if you license 60 pictures during the season, that is, if you produced or distributed 60 pictures during the season and you distributed 70, of course, 10 must be rejected, so that the total number of exclusions would have to be 16, isn't that correct?

Q. So that, of course, applies to Denver where Fox licensed approximately six and an independent licensed 55, that is the reason you included Fox and not the independent? A. As I say, if there is—if in that total is included more pictures than you distributed during the season, therefore the basis for a rejection would have to be 16 and not 6.

Q. What you did was, where you found more than 60 you always excluded a reference to the independent, is that right? A. No, I can't say that.

Q. But generally where there was any question of doubt as to whether you ought to mention the independent, you excluded the independent? A. No, that is not so.

Q. I can give you some more cities in that 1939-40 season. I have already mentioned a long list. Didn't you also exclude Birmingham, Kansas City, Missouri, Long Beach, Pittsburgh, Portland and Spokane, where more than six features were licensed to independents and you make no reference to it? A. I said the same statement I made before applied to these cities.

Q. Your observations as to New York, N. Y., would be the same as they were on the 1943-44 chart as to all of these, is that so, that the reference is actually to Manhattan? A. Well, it would be true if that was the policy at that time.

(3175)

Q. Dealing with the 1936-37 season, isn't it the fact that the admissions of fact show license of more than six features to independents in the following cities which you have not referred to on the chart for that year? A. Well, again—

Q. (Continuing) Atlanta, Birmingham, Cleveland, Fort Worth, Kansas City, Missouri—— A. Let me——

Q. (Continuing) Long Beach, Oakland, Omaha, San Francisco, Spokane and Wilmington, Delaware? A. Let me say this, that the original information that Paramount submitted to us was not complete and any errors that may crop up can be partly—can partly be accounted for by the lack of complete information, and as such information is completed, corrections will be properly made.

Q. But where you got information in the admissions showing the licensing of more than six features to independents, that was not incomplete information, was it? A. No, it was not.

Q. And your reason for excluding it, if the information contained that information, was simply that you decided not to include it, is that it? A. No.

Q. It was an inadvertent omission? A. It was an inadvertent omission in the calculation.

Q. And that might have happened in all those cities I mentioned? A. It might have happened. I cannot say that it has.

By Mr. Wright:

Q. Lieutenant Borwick, in connection with those——

Mr. Caskey: Just a minute. Are you finished?

Mr. Wright: I want to ask him just one.

Q. (Continuing) ——in connection with those two seasons on Paramount, 1936-37, 1939-40, it is a fact, is it not, that as to those seasons you excluded exhibitors playing those pictures which appeared to have been rejected regardless of whether or not they were affiliated or independent, or regardless of how many features they played, is that right? A. That is correct.

By Mr. Caskey:

Q. Look at 1936-37 under Denver. You show Fox pictures licensed to Fox. Where did you get that information?

The Witness: Would you kindly repeat your question, Mr. Caskey?

(Question read.)

A. The list we have here shows Fox have an interest in those theatres.

Q. As of what date is that theatre list? A. I don't know offhand.

Q. Look at the front of it. A. August 1, 1945.

Q. What other basis have you got for saying that it was (3177)
Fox theatres? A. Well, we used answers given to interrogatory 50—1939—as the basis of determining the theatre affiliation of any particular defendant.

Q. Doesn't it appear right on the face of the answer to the interrogatory, which I am showing to the Court, that that was an independently operated theatre in 1936, and doesn't the changeover to Fox stand out perfectly plain? Just look at the whole answer for the four years. They are all on one sheet of paper, aren't they? Look at Exhibit 44. That is the answer to the interogatory. A. Well, I cannot say who had a financial interest but what you have got here, General Theatres. I would have to search back——.

Q. What evidence is there in the record that you or Mr. Wright or anybody else can produce that Fox had any interest in any theatre in Denver in 1936? A. Well, this Exhibit No. 12 shows—supplied by defendant Fox—shows this Aladdin Theatre, Broadway Theatre, Denver Theatre. Now, I do not know who the other theatre is, but I do not find it here, but you show, on this answer here, you show the Aladdin, you show the Broadway; you show the Denver.

Q. As of what date is that? A. Well, this was submitted sometime in 1939 or 1940.

Q. Yes, sir. It does not purport to be as of 1936, does it? A. No, this does not, I imagine.

(3178)

Q. What other evidence have you got to justify your statement in this chart? A. Whether——

Q. What evidence. A. (Continuing) ——there is evidence we may have had in the files that may not have been introduced in evidence, I don't know.

Q. Your counsel has stated this is a compilation of what is in evidence. What did you yourself personally look at that led you to classify those theatres as Fox? A. On theatre lists supplied to us by defendants plus answers to interrogatories of that character, particularly this 50, plus any other information that we had in the Department of Justice files pertaining to that.

Q. Will you produce it, anything that you have got, that is not in evidence? A. If it is available, I shall produce it.

Mr. Caskey: Mr. Wright, have you any evidence that you want to produce to justify this statement?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I do not know at this moment when the Fox Company acquired the first-run theatres in Denver from Hoffman, who I believe was the former operator there, and is now a Fox partner. As far as we are concerned it is of no importance; if Mr. Caskey will give us a date on it, we will accept that date as the fact.

Mr. Caskey: My point is that we answered the interrogatories, and on the face, there was no justification for this. This purports to be a summary of evidence, and I submit there is no evidence in the record that justifies that statement.

Mr. Wright: If there isn't, the statement goes out, there is no question about that. I said, just name the date when Fox acquired the Denver first-runs and we will accept it.

Mr. Caskey: I will find the date, but I submit the exhibit ought not to be received because there is no justification for this one.

Judge Hand: I do not think myself it is a very good answer to say, whenever they find mistakes here, name the date and we will concede it. I realize that this is a complicated thing with lots of facts and you cannot be a perfectionist. Probably it is subject to scrutiny.

Mr. Seymour: If your Honor please, what I am troubled by is this, when a thing like this, which is full of mistakes, is received, it becomes a jumping off place, it appears in the Government's brief as gospel because it was received, although it is proved to be heresay in the cross-examination, and then to remind your Honors, and to make the corrections, we have to go through this whole process again. Having shown that it is inaccurate and that it is not in accordance with the evidence, it burdens your Honors and us to have it received and then be the springboard for other contentions. It is wrong, all these four charts have been proved to be wrong in many respects, but they will crop up again, uncorrected, if they are received in evidence, and I do not think these three should be received, and I think the other one ought to be stricken.

Mr. Caskey: The whole purpose, at this late date, just at the close of the case, of putting these in, as I was given to understand, as told by Mr. Wright, was so that we would have something which could be used for the convenience of Court and counsel, which would be a fair summary of the evidence. These are not a fair summary of the evidence. They are, at most, a statement of contentions. In some instances we have shown them completely wrong, and they will simply, if received, as Mr. Seymour says, force upon us the burden, which is distasteful and distasteful to the Court of criticising and explaining and of attempting to set up another chart. We shouldn't have that burden. The person who prepared it should have that burden.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I submit that these charts are prima facie correct. There isn't any question that where you are dealing with 92 cities and exhibitors' contracts with first-run exhibitors with eight in each one, you have about 700-odd situations on each chart, and in no way I know of is it possible to avoid any errors creeping into the chart.

Judge Hand: In many cases this witness has not only said he did not know, but in some cases you have conceded they were wrong, a mistake to be corrected, and it is a pretty sloppy kind of exhibit to put in as a tabulation.

Mr. Wright: If the court please, the data was checked as carefully as we were able to check it. The reason for these arbitrary adjustments that we had to make in the first instance was simply because the defendants declined to give us what the other three defendants gave us, that was a straightforward statement of who their first-run accounts were in these cities. Instead of giving us that, they listed all the pictures that played their pictures—the theatres playing them, regardless of whether they were neighborhood, subsequent-runs, rejected pictures or anything else. I admit that has made a complex situation. We have dealt with it——

Judge Hand: Didn't they ever give you their first-runs?

Mr. Wright They gave us, as to these seasons, these statements, which simply said, in such and such and town the following number of pictures were exhibited first-run in such and such an exhibitor's theatre.

Judge Hand: What did they hold back from you, if they did hold anything back from you? Why haven't you got it long before this?

(3182)

Mr. Wright: This was a matter where we proceeded in this way: We originally served admissions with respect to some—notices to admit—with respect to some of these cities set forth, asking them to admit what the first-run theatres were in the town and what theatres were their regular first-run outlets, that is, during the seasons in question. Then they said, "Well, you don't need to serve any more notices. We will give you that data and for all the cities in the form of these statements," and when we got the statements they weren't the form of the statement as to what the first-run theatres were in the town. They refused to make any statement or concession as to what was or was not a first-run theatre in any town. They would not make any statement or concession as to who the first-run account, the regular first-run account, was in the town, but insisted on giving us only the statement as to who played the various number of pictures first-run in these towns. We took that data and we made this analysis of it, took it as they gave it to us, and I repeat, there is nothing in any of these charts that is intended to contradict any of that underlying evidence on which it is based. We did feel bound to tabulate in this manner rather than putting the Court to the burden of examining all of the exhibits that are reflected here for the purpose of determining the respective merits of the parties' con-tions.

Judge Hand: You know what has been done in these various theatres, and how would you classify them if you did know them?

Mr. Wright: The record should, I say, that the record——

Judge Hand: Don't tell me what "should."

Mr. Wright: I say that the record——

Judge Hand: You have had an opportunity here to examine these people very fully, according to my notion, and I am not going to admit a lot of stuff that was merely a vague classification based on nothing you found.

Mr. Wright: I submit, if the Court please, that the record as it now exists, the underlying evidence itself, does permit accurate determination or sufficiently——

Judge Hand: Then don't interlard your remarks with statements that you could not get what you wanted and all that sort of thing. I really don't understand your argument, so I am not—and your defense of this exhibit, so I am not in a very good position.

Mr. Proskauer: I think I can clear this issue. He asked us, "What are your first-run theatres?" And we say, "We give you a list of every theatre in every city where we exhibit first-run." He has got in his mind some kind of an a priori subjective classification of what is called by him a regular first-run theatre.

As I understand it, under that classification, the Music Hall in New York would not be a first-run theatre, because nobody uses it customarily, and he approximates everything, and he has throughout this trial, to the ridiculous norm that if we exhibit first-run, as we did in Buffalo, even with our guinea pig picture, not the refuse of our pictures, but the best picture we had, in a first-run theatre, where we sell six pictures, in his mind you exclude that because that is not what he calls a regular first-run, and all this difficulty comes from that obsession, subjective in the mind of the distinguished Assistant Attorney General. We have given him the facts and his criticism is that we do not adjust the facts to this a priori preconstruction of his about what he calls regular first-run accounts. I want to suggest to your Honor—

Judge Hand: He suggested that you have not given him the facts so that he could not get up any better exhibit than he has got.

Mr. Proskauer: They cannot get them——

Judge Hand: Wait just a minute. And he has followed that by a statement that his exhibit, with the exception of a few mistakes, which I should expect in a complicated situation like this is all right, that it is a proper classification. Those remarks seem to me wholly inconsistent.

Mr. Proskauer: They are not only inconsistent but they demonstrate why Mr. Seymour's objection and motion to strike the last exhibit should be granted. It does no harm to Mr. Wright to make that ruling, because he is still free to argue on his brief anything that is in this record. The vice that we see in this is that, instead of arguing what is in the record, we are going to have to argue that an exhibit you have put in, or admitted, is not in the record and we are going to have to start from there and work backwards. It is no harm to Mr. Wright to exclude these exhibits, if this evidence is in the record.

Mr. Davis: May I say something?

Judge Hand: Of course, it is quite indifferent to us what tabulations in the way of exhibits we receive as long as there aren't too many, but it is vital that we should know what they mean and that they should show on their face what they mean as a reflection of the evidence without too much outside correction and examination.

Mr. Davis: I am a little bit sensitive, your Honor, about my client. When Mr. Wright says that "They haven't given" him evidence, I suppose he means that "they" to be an all-inclusive pronoun and that we are within it. We have answered every interrogatory that was put to us. And on this question of what our first-run theatres are, your Honors remember that something like four weeks ago, the first witness who began the defendant's case, was introduced by my clients and gave a list of the theatres which he considered first-run, which was tendered and accepted subject to check, and on the 5th day of November last, two weeks ago, that list was formally and finally received in evidence. We have nothing more we can contribute on that subject.

Mr. Caskey: If your Honors please, my objection is just that this is plain unsupported by the record. We have shown to your Honors what we have answered. There was no holding back. We said Twentieth Century licensed to General Theatres, Inc., R. E. Hoffman, its pictures for exhibition by Aladdin, Broadway, Rialto, Tabor and Denver Theatres first-run. There can't be any clearer statement than that, and the plaintiff, without any record, anything in the record, has said that that was a Fox theatre.

(3187)

Mr. Raftery: Your Honors, aren't we back now to the point where we were this morning before we started? Judge Hand just commented about the charts, provided there are not too many. I think there are thirty more that are contemplated. Now gradually we are getting around to an argument between the witness who prepared his idea of what evidence is in and what counsel said——

Judge Hand: That is all right, we are perfectly satisfied to have that kind of thing go on; it goes on in every lawsuit where there are tabulating experts, and it is more aggravated and aggravating in a complex suit like this. What I do want to have in here is something we want to be satisfied is not merely confusing to us. I do not care what tabulations he puts in.

Mr. Raftery: If your Honors please, the only suggestion I wanted to make—I do not know whether this would be agreeable to the rest—let the witness, instead of offering this bundle of charts, put them together, give them to us, just as he would an index or an appendix to a trial brief, and we will answer him as best we can from what is in, instead of burdening the Court with what he says is in and which everybody else says is not in, and stop the eternal argument. That is the only point I make. It is not evidence, it is argument.

Judge Hand: It certainly is not evidence, that is true; but wouldn't some of your own testimony be subject to the same objection?

(3188)

Colloquy

Mr. Raftery: I did not offer a chart, not one.

Mr. Proskauer: The answer, your Honor, is no, because we put in evidence no chart which was even questioned as to its accuracy in correspondence with the record. Of course it is proper to put in tabulations and charts of evidence. What is improper is to put in tabulations and charts of things which are not evidence.

Mr. Wright: May I say this, if the Court please. The primary purpose in offering this is to aid the Court. Now admittedly this is argumentative in form. I am simply trying by this method to narrow the area of argument.

Now, without offering these charts, and simply starting with the basic material, we would set this up in a trial brief and argue it, or in a final brief, and they would make an argument in their brief disputing it. Now the range of that would be enormous, if in the first instance we just argued about the admissions of fact, the theat[illegible] lists, the pooling agreements, and the other data that is reflected here.

Now in order to narrow the scope of that argument we offer these tabulations as prima facie evidence of these facts, with a description of how they were derived, and what we did; and then it seems to me they direct their fire at this chart, and you come out with an accurate appraisal, a more accurate appraisal ultimately of what is in this record than the Court ever would if it simply tried to reconcile the different points of view without the tabulations.

Judge Hand: I have no doubt of that if those charts were not too vulnerable. In other words, if they really show what you are doing.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor, there would not be any objection to what Mr. Wright says if it were not for the fact that we have not only challenged him sucessfully to show that these charts are in accordance with the evidence, but we have affirmatively shown that they misstate the evidence. Now, how is it of illumination to the Court to admit complicated charts like these as——

Judge Hand: It certainly is not if what you say is accurate, and goes in deep enough to his charts. That is where I have difficulty. I do not think they are very satisfactory as presented because when we look at certain things and certain situations we certainly do not know without reading 25 or 30 or a hundred pages of testimony what the thing covers.

Mr. Proskauer: He can make these charts accurate and use them in a brief and not give us this sort of stuff.

Mr. Raftery: Mr. Wright just said in effect he is putting a jurat on the trial brief and having the witness swear to the truth of a trial brief. Now I submit that in the interest of economy of time, we will take his trial brief unsworn to and reply on what is in evidence.

(3190)

Judge Hand: If we could not make out a basis for what he is saying in his trial brief, a similar chart in his trial brief would not do any good.

Mr. Proskauer: That is why it does not have the dignity of an exhibit.

Judge Hand: The thing may be in doubt, but we want to get some kind of a head-on issue here and understand when certain statements are made what the contentions are.

Colloquy

Mr. Davis: Here is what it comes down to, your Honor: when this case comes on to be briefed, presumably Mr. Wright in his brief will make certain statements of fact, and he will refer to something to support them. If these exhibits are accepted he will in brackets in his brief say "See Exhibit 440" or whatever it is. If they are not accepted, he will have to refer your Honors to the original sources of evidence that the record contains.

Now there is no reason why a fallacious exhibit should go in to short-cut the burden of counsel in searching for the testimony on which the exhibit rests. If the exhibit's accuracy as a summary is admitted, it is a very great convenience to the Court, to the plaintiff, to the defendants, to be able to refer to that summary; but if the integrity of the summary is under serious—and in this case, as we think, entirely successful—attack, it ought not to be the subject of citation in any future brief or argument.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, the attack that has been made has been limited to certain specific situations appearing in the chart, and I submit that from the Court's standpoint it is of value to the Court to have this chart so that the attack, if well founded, may then be channeled to those specific situations, and you will have before you a comprehensive statement of what is shown or claimed to be shown by a great mass of underlying data,

Now, in the absence of any tabulation of this kind, we simply started at the point where, in order to make any statement, we have to say "See Exhibit So-and-so, so-and-so, and so-and-so," reeling off perhaps forty or fifty of them, and the Court has to do——

Judge Hand: Shouldn't you make a better summary of this?

Colloquy

Mr. Proskauer: It is perfectly simple to cut this Gordian knot. Let him make a decent and fair summary and we will agree to them.

Judge Hand: You can't expect him to make a summary according to your contentions, of course.

(3192)

Mr. Proskauer: I don't want that. Just what is in evidence.

Judge Hand: All we want is a summary based on his own contentions which points in that direction clearly so that we will know how he reaches these. I do not think we have that.

Mr. Wright: Let me see if I can make it clear: as to United Artists, Universal and Columbia, there is, of course, no question as to the method of tabulation used there. They furnished us with a list purporting to show their first-run accounts in the towns in question during those seasons. We just made a direct transcription of those cases.

Now as to the other defendants, the problem arose this way: they did not just name the first-run account in the city for the season. They gave us a list of theatres which played any of their films on a first-run in the town, with the number of films played.

Now the reasons why we had to make an arbitrary analysis of that material are these. It is an established fact from the testimony of witnesses here, that all of the features that these defendants released during any particular season are not sufficiently attractive at the box office to justify a first-run in what is known as a regular first-run theatre. Some of those in consequence, every year are rejected, and find their way for initial exhibition in some later run theatres that are not generally regarded as first-run theatres in the trade.

Judge Hand: And you would call such a theatre second-run where though it is playing a picture first-run, it is a run in a theatre which you do not consider a first-run theatre?

Mr. Wright: Yes. In almost all instances we agree with Mr. Rodgers' tabulation as to what is a first-run theatre. There are, in the entire list I would say two or three differences.

Judge Hand: How much would it affect you if you took their form of tabulation?

Mr. Wright: If we took what form, if the Court please?

Judge Hand: Their form of classification.

Mr. Caskey: If the Court please——

Judge Hand: Wait a minute, one at a time.

Mr. Wright: We did, as I understand, check—I asked to have it done; I assume it was done—check these 1943-44 lists against Mr. Rodgers' list of first-run theatres. Of course as to the prior season, Mr. Rodgers' list, covering a substantially later date, would not be of much assistance, and I think as to 1943-44 on either basis the differences between a tabulation using the methods we pursued, and a tabulation simply checking against his list would reveal very few differences, that the amount would not be significant? Now——

Judge Hand: Where is it significant? (No response.) Can't you hear me?

Mr. Wright: What?

Judge Hand: Where is it significant? In what years is it significant?

Mr. Wright: I say that his tabulation has no value for the other years because he put in a list of first-run theatres, a current list, which is close to the 1943-

44 season. But when you got back into 1941-42, 1939-40, and 1936-37, there would be different theatres operating as first-run theatres in the town than those shown on his list. Now we did use his list as to 1943-44, where it had value.

Judge Hand: I do not see why you could not use it in other years. I make nothing out of your statement.

Mr. Wright: If we did that, the defendants would claim, I suppose, that Mr. Rodgers' list had no relevancy in the prior years. Now in order to guard ourselves against that claim, we simply used the figures which they supplied for those years and made an arbitrary adjustment which we think gives a correct picture of the actual distribution of these films in the so-called first-run outlets in these cities which are accustomed to show the first class pictures of one or more defendants on a first-run.

(3195)

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor, Mr. Wright has suggested that these theatres that we listed playing first-run were playing the refuse, the rejects. That just is shown by the record to be a false alibi. Here, in our own case, this theatre up in Buffalo that he threw out of his tabulation because we sold him only six pictures was shown to have played Princess O'Rourke, which he took as our picture having the biggest return of any picture of the year, and we played that picture in that Buffalo theatre, which he says is not a first-run theatre, but it is a theatre which plays the entire output of RKO.

Judge Hand: You played it first-run, I suppose?

Mr. Proskauer: I beg your pardon, sir?

Judge Hand: I suppose you played it first-run up there?

Mr. Proskauer: Certainly, in that independent theatre.

Mr. Caskey: Your Honor, I should like to call your attention to one thing that is even more fundamental. When you take the 1941-42 chart, the town of Elizabeth is the fourth down at the bottom. Now, in Elizabeth, as this record clearly shows, there is the Liberty Theatre, operated by Skouras Theatres Corporation, in which, as you know, RKO has an indirect 15 per cent interest; and the Ritz and the Regent, operated by Warner Bros.; and to use Mr. Wright's words, those three theatres are pooled. Now, those are the only three first-run theatres in Elizabeth, and they exhibit the pictures of these eight defendants.

Now, let me read how the plaintiff describes those theatres: He says that Warner's licenses Warner. He says Fox licenses RKO and Warner; Paramount licenses Warner; Loew's licenses Warner; RKO licenses Warner and RKO; United Artists licenses Skouras; Universal licenses Warner.

Now, I submit that this Court, picking that chart up, would not know that the same three theatres were involved in each producer's product.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I think perhaps I can make this clear if I explained the ultimate use we would propose to make of these charts: For example, we would expect to show and argue in the brief from these the number of cities in which all the first-run outlets were affiliated. That is, according to my tabulation of the 92, 39. Now, for the purposes of that tabulation what Mr. Caskey is talking about would not make the slightest bit of difference. All of the outlets under his view, or our view, are affiliated. Again, we would make tabulations showing, on this question of where all the first-run outlets are affiliated, according to our figures, 39 of those, and 4 were all of the first-run outlets unaffiliated. On another tabulation we show that in 12 of the towns the independents got only one major distributor's product, and in none were there any towns where the affiliated exhibitor got only one major product.

Now, those are the ultimate facts which we would argue in the brief, and we are laying a foundation for that here. Much of this quibbling over individual distributions and individual situations simply would not damage or affect those ultimate conclusions we would ask the Court to draw from the material in any event. That is why I think the Court has been misled here by some of this examination of situations that have been made into supposing——

Judge Hand: You could certainly improve these exhibits and make them conform more to the evidence if you went at it, I should think. I do not see but what they are all vulnerable, except 1943-44. Apparently they are not.

Mr. Wright: We had an additional check on 1943-44 in the light of that first-run theatre list. But as to the others, I submit, if the Court please, the extent to which they are vulnerable is easily ascertainable by a comparison of what is on the tabulation offered here and the underlying exhibits, and it is simple enough for them to actually point out the extent and degree of any errors that may appear.

Judge Hand: It is really your job to get them right when you put them in. It is not an exercise for us at all to be comparing any more things than we have to compare.

Mr. Wright: I am merely suggesting that this is a more agreeable exercise for the Court than would be the exercise required to simply start from scratch without those, let us say, intervening work sheets and then attempt to determine——

Judge Hand: That may be, but that is no answer to your failure to put in correct exhibits.

Judge Bright: Wouldn't we have to start from scratch wherever there is a challenge?

Mr. Wright: This simply narrows the area of challenge, as I see it. I submit, if the Court please, that the number of instances in which there are errors here, when considered in the light of the number of situations covered, and the ultimate use to which we propose to put them, will appear to be insignificant.

Now, that——

Judge Hand: Maybe so. We do not know whether they are or they are not.

(3199)

Mr. Proskauer: Don't forget, if your Honors please, that our cross-examination was impromptu. I do not know how many other things I could have developed.

Mr. Leisure: If your Honors please, the problem I have, as far as RKO is concerned on this 1943-44 one which we have referred to, is that there are 28 separate cities which are not correct, according to the record. Now, that changes the total down here at the bottom which, as I pointed out in the cross-examination of the witness, instead of our having sold to 63 affiliated theatres and only 23 independents, when corrected—and we will have to call a witness on rebuttal; and we should not be put to that burden merely because an improper exhibit is put in—when corrected the exhibit would show that we sold 35 affiliates and some 20 independents, which is what the record should be. Now, I submit we should not be put to that burden of calling rebuttal witnesses merely to correct Mr. Wright's exhibits.

Mr. Wright: Mr. Leisure does not need to call any rebuttal witness. All he has to do is to point out what the underlying exhibit says that is in conflict with what the testimony about the exhibit was; and I do not think he can do it in those situations.

Judge Hand: Wait a minute. He has not got the burden of correcting these.

(3200)

Mr. Wright: Let me say this: As to 429, 430 and 413, those are offered by us for the assistance of the Court. If the Court does not want to take them and does not feel it will be beneficial in narrowing down and disposing of the ultimate issues, I shall withdraw them. The effort here has been to assist the Court.

The Court: I think you had better.

Mr. Raftery: What are the numbers?

Mr. Wright: The one I intended to have remain was 428, the one in evidence. The ones I am withdrawing are 429, 430 and 431.

Mr. Davis: 428 was the one where the firing started, and it was fired at just as heartily as any of the others. Then it was agreed by stipulation that the others, later offered, were subject to the same infirmities.

Judge Hand: Mr. Leisure particularly is weeping freely over this Exhibit 428 and says that it is very misleading with respect to his client. Now, I should think you could correct it.

Mr. Wright: I would say it is there for examination; he can cross-examine on any one of those errors that he says exists. I say that it is substantially correct in its present form, as testified to by the witness——

Judge Goddard: I think it is confusing.

(3201)

Mr. Proskauer: Why doesn't the tail go with the hide? That is a legal principle as old as any of us. You conceded that the others have the same infirmity. This is just as bad as the ones——

Mr. Wright: I have conceded no infirmity. As a matter of fact, Mr. Davis cross-examined him and brought out two statements in two situations which are wholly incorrect. If we want to have a redirect examination on them I can show that fact. I just do not see the point in taking up the time of the Court.

Judge Hand: How about Mr. Leisure's objection?

Mr. Wright: Mr. Leisure's objection is in vague general terms. As to the one situation in Pittsburgh which was specific, I covered that on his direct testimony. It is particularly clear as to what the difference between us was. Now, when he says there are ten other situations that are wrong, I simply say there are not, and if there are——

Mr. Caskey: What about Richmond where you would not concede it was wrong?

Mr. Proskauer: What about Buffalo, a first-run theatre, where our guinea pig picture was shown?

Mr. Seymour: What about——

Judge Hand: I think you had better get this right.

(3202)

Judge Goddard: I could not rely on that.

Mr. Wright: If your Honors simply accept the statement of counsel that they are incorrect as against mine that I think it is substantially correct, there is nothing more that I can do.

Judge Hand: What about Mr. Leisure's objection?

Mr. Wright: As I say, I think Mr. Leisure is in error.

Judge Bright: What about the witness's statement? That is evidence. He has admitted certain errors.

Mr. Wright: He has admitted certain errors. There are on this chart the distribution of the films of eight companies in 92 cities. That means a consideration of 700-odd situations. Now, I submit that the fact that he may have made errors in 5, 10 or 15 of those does not at all disturb the prima facie validity of the chart as such when it is considered particularly that this is only a stepping stone to ultimate statements which would be totally unaffected by some of these alleged discrepancies that have been brought out.

Mr. Leisure: If your Honor please, the state of the record seems to be now, Mr. Wright says, if it is left in evidence that I can go ahead and cross-examine the witness as to those 28 cities. I do not propose to burden the Court with anything of that kind. I picked out three situations out of 28—I have them all here; I can read them to you—which I thought shows clearly to the Court that the total is wrong that it should be enought to exclude it.

I have one of two courses open, either to take the Court's time and cross-examine him on 28 cities showing that they are each one wrong, or calling a rebuttal witness and showing that Mr. Wright's exhibit is wrong.

Mr. Wright: I suggest you cross examine him.

Mr. Leisure: Now, I think he should submit the exhibit to us out of court and we should agree on it. There is not any question about the rightness or wrongness of it. He has simply excluded from 28 cities RKO first-run, that is all there is to it. There can't be any dispute about that.

Judge Hand: I think you had better remodel this exhibit out of court. In my opinion I think it will only mix us up.

Mr. Proskauer: For the present I understand the record is that it is stricken?

Mr. Wright: I will examine the witness further.

By Mr. Wright:

Q. Now, Lieutenant Borwick, in connection with your examination of this data, can you tell us the number of towns in which all of the first-run outlets, as the term is (3204) defined in the complaint in this case, were affiliated?

Judge Bright: Read that question.

(Question read.)

Mr. Proskauer: I object to that as an incompetent question by the inclusion of the words "as defined in the complaint in this case."

Judge Hand: Objection sustained. You just cannot have broad conclusions like this put to an expert witness as a foundation for a tabulation. That is just the vice of the table. We do not know exactly what is covers.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please——

Judge Hand: No, we have ruled on that. Put another question. Go on with your witness.

Mr. Wright: Will you mark that with the next exhibit number.

Mr. Proskauer: See if my understanding of the record is correct: I understand that 428 for the present is stricken?

what the actual clearance in question was? A. That is right, we wrote a number of letters.

Q. And then when you got responses to those requests, (3295) giving you what the real clearance was, you also included, did you not, that clearance information in your tabulation? A. That is correct, sir.

Q. So that what you have here is a tabulation, then, is it not, of all of the first-run over second-run in the same town clearance data that was furnished by the defendants in response to our interrogatories? A. Yes, sir.

Judge Goddard: Mr. Raftery said that he submitted to you several hundred but you only account for 77.

The Witness: Well, Mr. Raftery——

Judge Goddard: Why didn't you analyze those others?

The Witness: Because the contracts—there was a space in those contracts for clearance. In most instances that was left blank with no remarks of any kind, so it was impossible to tell whether the clearance—whether there was no clearance at all, or whether there was what is called the usual clearance, clearance that has been prevailing, or whether they merely forgot to insert it in the contract.

Judge Goddard: To get the proper percentages, wouldn't it be proper to include in your figures those contracts where you were satisfied there was no clearance?

The Witness: Well, there was no other—no way of satisfying myself of that fact. I had to work only (3296) within the framework of the interrogatory material that was available to us.

Preliminary Cross Examination by Mr. Caskey:

Q. Lieutenant, I want to clear up one thing. You say with relation to Portland, Maine, that to determine the classification, you looked to see whether or not the picture also played second-run? A. That is right.

Q. We did not furnish you, or were not requested to furnish you, any second-run data as to the cities between 25 thousand 50 thousand, is that correct? A. You weren't required to furnish that?

Q. Yes, and did not. A. Yes, you were.

Q. Wait a minute. We only furnished on the specimen picture, we furnished first-run on the 412 cities, is that correct? We furnished first and second-run on cities of 50,000 and more? A. That is right.

Q. And we furnished first, second and third on 200,000 and more, is that right? A. That's right.

Q. So we did not furnish second-runs on the group of cities between 25 and 50,000? A. That is right.

Q. How did you operate there? A. Why, in many instances it merely says the clearance provision, opposite the name of the theatre—in answer to interrogatories—merely says 20 days over second run, regardless of whether you gave us information as to the theatre that played second-run. (3297)
Obviously that is the answer.

Q. If it listed various theatres with different dates, different specifications, what did you do? A. Well, for instance?

Q. Well, I have here Montclair, New Jersey, which reads, "14 days after first-run Newark, 14 days ahead of Bloomfield, Watsessing, Caldwell and Little Falls, 30 days ahead of Verona. A. We don't do a thing, we just discarded it, because it said nothing with reference to second-run—what was that town in question?

Q. Montclair. A. It said nothing with reference to second-run in Montclair, so we did not use any of that information.

Q. So that is not charted? A. That's right.

Mr. Proskauer: A very selective chart.

Mr. Caskey: I submit this exhibit is not a fair representation of the data that is in evidence.

Mr. Wright: Just a moment.

Direct Examination resumed by Mr. Wright:

Q. Lieutenant Borwick, I think when you answered Mr. Caskey's question as to what he furnished you you said that he did furnish you with all clearances in towns over 50,000 as to first and second runs. Now, the fact is that that is what his company and all of these companies were requested to furnish, isn't that right? A. That is right.

(3298)

Q. And no instance were you actually furnished with all of the clearance data that was requested, isn't that right? A. No, I did not mean to give that impression.

Q. What you were furnished with was whatever they supplied in response to the original interrogatory and subsequent letter requests and you took and tabulated everything that was furnished that was susceptible to tabulation in this form, isn't that right? A. That is correct, sir.

By Mr. Caskey:

Q. In the contract that I just read to you in Montclair, the clearance of first-run over any subsequent run in Montclair is zero, is it not? A. Not necessarily.

Q. Well, you had before you the data which on its face does not grant clearance of first-run Montclair over any other run. That is what you had in front of you, wasn't it? A. There is nothing here which says——

Q. Will you answer my question? This is the very pink sheet you had in front of you? A. That is right.

Q. It does not grant the first-run exhibitor any clearance over any other run in Montclair on its face, does it? A. On its face, it does not.

Q. So it should have been classified as zero, should it not? A. Now, just a moment, Mr. Caskey. This information is (3299) not complete—we believe it is not complete, because in many instances we came across situations where no clearance was mentioned or, for instance, we will say, "14 days." Well, "14 days" over what? We did not know whether it was 14 days over an adjoining town, I mean an adjacent town, over a second run, so if it wasn't specified, we did not include it.

Q. You are doing a tabulating job? A. That is right.

Q. Making an exhibit for the convenience of the Court, which is supposed to reflect what is in these two pink volumes? A. That is right.

Q. And you used nothing except the two pink volumes? A. That is right.

Q. Only what is in evidence in this case? A. That is right.

Q. What you had to work with showed that there was no clearance between first-run and second-run in Montclair, is that not correct? A. I don't know that from the record.

Q. You can't say that he granted no clearance there? You cannot say that those words grant no clearance? A. I can't say that. It says nothing about first-run having clearance over second-run in Montclair, and I don't know what the first-run clearance——

Q. If you were doing a tabulating job, wasn't it your duty to put down zero, whether you thought it was right or (3300) wrong? A. Not necessarily. All depends on your methods of tabulating.

Judge Bright: In your tabulating did you put down what you thought was right and leave out what you thought was wrong?

The Witness: Not at all. We left out those situations in which the facts were not clear.

Judge Hand: I can tell you one thing right now, Mr. Wright, we are not going to receive this exhibit, as far as I am concerned, unless it is accompanied by correcting statements which will change the tabulation as made. It has got to be.

There is no doubt that it has got to. Maybe you are right in your contention that where they say nothing about it, there is still a clearance, but that has got to appear before we take a tabulation in here such as this.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, the tabulation is not meant to suggest to the Court in any way that situations where clearance information was not furnished, where the data supplied to us merely said None or indicated no clearance over the succeeding town, we make no contention that this tabulation shows anything with reference to the existence or non-existence of clearance.

Judge Hand: It has got to show how many of those cases there are.

Mr. Wright: That is, in those situations.

Judge Hand: It has got to show how many of those cases there are. We are not going to take a thing like this, which merely gives one side of the argument and says nothing about the facts which have to be excluded, the data which has to be excluded in order to support that side of the argument. There is no use arguing this any more. This will be excluded unless it is corrected by some tabulation of some sort.

Mr. Wright: Do you wish to have added to this the number of situations in which we were furnished with data where the defendants' contracts or the summary of the contracts that they gave us said either none or where it was silent as to whether or not——

Judge Hand: That is right.

Mr. Wright: (Continuing) —there was clearance?

Judge Hand: That is right.

Mr. Wright: You wish a breakdown between the situations where the contract said none and where the provision was silent?

Judge Hand: That is all right. I should think that would be good too.

Mr. Wright: All right.

Mr. Proskauer: It would be very much fairer if in (3302)
your categories you followed the conventional phrases in these contracts which have been indicated to you, namely, 7 days, 14 days, 30 days, 60 days, not using these arbitrary figures which correspond to nothing that is known in the industry.

Mr. Wright: When it comes to categories, if the Court please, the figures are susceptible of tabulation, and in grouping one day——

Judge Hand: I suppose so. I don't think much of this category, in view of the cross-examination, but we wont exclude it on that ground. It will go in with such infirmities as inhere in such a prospective exhibit.

Mr. Wright: That is inevitable, and we shall supply that supplemental list.

One thing more, if the Court please, does the Court understand that there is only one clearance involved there for each town; that actually these numbers here, which refer to contracts, actually are substantially coextensive with the number of towns covered, that is, that Loew figure of 275 means that approximately——

Mr. Davis: 340.

Mr. Wright: (Continuing) —or 340 of the clearances in approximately 340 of those town situations were tabulated.

Judge Goddard: You mean 340 referred to cities, (3303)
not to contracts?

Mr. Wright: It refers to the single contract clearance, but those were furnished one for each city.

Judge Goddard: Would you answer my question so I at least get it clear? Does that 340 in the first column refer to cities or does it refer to contracts?

Mr. Wright: It refers to both, if the Court please. It refers to one contract for one picture in one city. That was the way the data was supplied. That I think should be understood in appraising the extent——

Judge Goddard: I think you could make your heading a little bit clearer. When we take this up, we won't remember what you told us now.

Mr. Wright: We can change the heading in any way that you think would——

Judge Bright: It says Number of Situations, I understand it. It apparently refers to number of contracts.

Mr. Wright: No; there was submitted to us in the interrogatory answer—we asked for the data as to each of these towns with respect to one picture, that is, one contract, which would presumably be typical of the contracts made for all pictures during the season, inasmuch as clearance does not vary from picture to picture. That infirmity, if it is an infirmity, is inherent in the data and the method that we pursued in attempting to assemble the information.

(3304)

The purpose of that, of course, was to relieve the defendants of the burden of examining 40 or 50 contracts made during a season to determine the clearance in a town, inasmuch as we are both satisfied that there isn't any substantial variation during the season. Therefore, the contract clearance with respect to only one picture was examined in each instance, but that represents, on this tabulation, a different town in each instance, and the extent of the coverage is represented by a comparison of the total numbers at the bottom here with the total towns to which the interrogatories were directed, that is, in the case of Loew, 340 against 420. I think the examination——

Judge Hand: Please go on. We cannot have so much talk.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 442 for identification.)

By Mr. Wright:

Q. I will show you this Exhibit 442 for identification, entitled "Distribution of feature film exhibition contracts between distributor defendants and exhibitors by the distances covered in clearance terms, 1943-1944 season," and can you tell the Court exactly how you prepared that tabulation?

(3305)

Judge Goddard: Mr. Wright, isn't it possible that you and other counsel could stipulate some of these things instead of going through them?

Mr. Raftery: This simply is the second obscure one. Those are the only two obscure ones I have found.

Mr. Wright: There could not be any dispute between us as to how these were prepared or what data was used. There is no question about that.

Mr. Frohlich: There is a very serious question about that, Mr. Wright.

Judge Hand: We cannot enlarge this. Go on with your case, and if they object to something, why, we will admit it or exclude it.

Q. (Continuing) Will you just tell the Court what you did in preparing this tabulation? A. This tabulation was prepared in a manner similar to the previous one. This merely represents the situations where one—where the exhibitor in one town gets clearance over an exhibitor in another town. The same information was used as on the previous exhibit. The number of miles merely represents the distance between the town which takes clearance over—the surrounding towns over which clearance is taken.

Q. And again you have, I notice, a smaller number of actual contract clearances that are tabulated here than you had in the other chart? A. That's right.

(3306)

Q. Why it that? A. Because the contracts themselves were silent as to such provisions or no information was made available to us.

Q. That is, where the contract clearance did not specify any clearance over another town, you did not include that in this tabulation? A. That's right.

Q. This was limited only to those situations where it appeared from the data furnished that there was some clearance in favor of one town over another, is that right? A. That is correct.

Q. And you included in this tabulation all of those situations for which they supplied you with data where such clearances appeared, isn't that right? A. That's right.

Q. And then in computing those distances, you simply took the mileage as shown between the town taking the clearance and the farthest town over which the clearance was taken, in accordance with road maps, is that right? A. That is right, Automobile Association road maps.

Judge Bright: You made the computation? You computed the mileage; it was not on the contract?

The Witness: No, sir, that is right.

Judge Hand: Did this cover all towns of a certain size and certain population in the United States?

Mr. Wright: The data requested was for the same towns as is covered by the other, that is, we asked for first-run clearance in all towns over 25,000, which was 400-odd.

(3307)

Judge Hand: With respect to clearances, the situation between a country district and a suburb is often widely different, so that you do not get any standard at all. You take a place like——

Mr. Proskauer: Prescott, Arizona.

Judge Hand: —50 miles, perhaps, out of New York, or 25, or whatever your figure would be, it would be right here, with commuters coming in all the time, shoppers coming in all the time. You take it up in the Adirondacks and it is a different world, only a few people that can afford it, and a few joyriders in the summer will go to these things that far away, so that I do not think a tabulation based on mileage, universally applied, is very inclusive.

Mr. Wright: I agree with your Honor that it is not inclusive. However, there was an attempt to secure here, by the interrogatory data, uniform samples for each of the distributors. Had we gotten from them reasonably complete data, we would have had a better table. We did the best we could with what we got.

Judge Hand: Don't begin to complain again. As they view it, it is very tiresome. The data that you could have got, why didn't you get more, if you didn't like the data you got, or think it is insufficient?

Mr. Wright: I have pointed out that where there was deficiency—that these were checked for deficiencies—that we requested additional data in those instances. In some instances we got it, in others we did not, but in any event we had no choice but to take whatever we ultimately got and to tabulate it, and that is what was done.
(3308)

Judge Bright: But your exhibit is based on stuff that is not in the information furnished by the company.

Mr. Caskey: That is right.

Mr. Wright: As to the mileage computations, as to the exhibit, that is dependent upon a consideration of what was done with reference to material not in evidence, there is no question about that, except that in some instances, I might say, of course, the first-run clearance itself is stated in terms of so many days over a town within 25 miles, or 20 miles, or 15, as the case may be.

By Mr. Caskey:

Q. Lieutenant Borwick, I show you from the volume of answers to interrogatories on Fox the one pertaining to Stamford, Connecticut, which reads, "60 days clearance in Stamford, 30 days over Darien and Springdale, 14 days over Greenwich and New Canaan. Now, where did you put that in this chart? A. Well, what we did was to list the distances (3309)

from Stamford to Darien and Springdale and New Canaan.

Q. Yes. A. And took the distances, maximum distances of any of these three cities and put that down as one indicating one situation.

Q. Well now, as I understand it, the town of Stamford and the town of New Canaan are contiguous. How did you treat that? A. We just took the points as indicated on the road maps. If, of course, if the two dots were on top of each other, why, it was the distance of those two dots to Stamford.

Q. The town of Greenwich, Connecticut, and the town of Stamford are contiguous. How did you treat that? A. Well, as I just said, you could not tell from a road map whether it was contiguous or not, so we took the distance from Stamford to whatever town was the maximum distance from Stamford.

Q. I suggest there is no distance. A. Well, we just, as I said, we took the AAA map.

Q. You did not attempt to measure from theatre to theatre? A. No, of course.

Judge Bright: What did you do, scale it off on the map?

The Witness: Yes, that is correct, sir.

Judge Bright: With a ruler?

The Witness: Yes. You know, the automobile (3310)
maps measure off short distances and we took those and summed up the total.

Q. What did you do for New York City? How did you treat New York City? A. You show me what clearance was on New York City.

Q. Never mind that. What did you do with Boise, Idaho, pictures playing the Pinney Theatre to have seven days clearance over Meridan, Nampa and Caldwell? A. Well, we followed the same procedure, we measured the distance from Boise, Idaho, to each one of these towns, as shown on the map, point to point, and then took the maximum distance from Boise to the town which is—that is, the town which is the maximum distance from Boise indicates the figure as included in here.

Q. What comparison is it to show that the clearance of Stamford, Connecticut, extends seven miles to the theatre in New Canaan, Connecticut, and two miles to the theatre in Greenwich, Connectieut and five miles to the theatre in Darien, Connecticut, and that the clearance of the Pinney Theatre in Boise, Idaho, extends 40 miles to Caldwell? A. I am sorry, I did not understand your question.

Q. I say, the purpose of this chart is to compare various things, is it not? A. Well, it is to summarize the areas—summarize in simplest and convenient forms the data as (3311) indicated in these answers to interrogatories in terms of area covered by clearances.

Q. If your figures are right, you put Stamford here in "10 or less"? A. That is correct, is the distance from Stamford to any one of these points mentioned in the clearance was that distance.

Q. And you put Boise, Idaho, probably in "51 and over"? A. I can't tell you where I put Boise, Idaho.

Q. I think that is correct, if I follow you. A. Wait a minute.

Q. What does that comparison established? A. What does that comparison establish?

Q. Yes, sir. A. I am not interested in what it establishes. I was merely interested in summarizing the facts

Q. Your general observation, of course, is that in the western part of the country the area of clearance is greater than in the eastern part of the country? A. Well, it could be. I wouldn't be sure unless I had these tabulations.

Q. After having worked on these 15, 16-hundred contracts, you are not able to say that that is so? A. Well, I don't want to make a general statement unless I have something to back it up.

(3312)

By Mr. Seymour:

Q. Do I understand correctly that where there were three places over which a first-run theatre had clearance, one of them one mile, one of them two miles and one of them fifteen miles, you only used the 15 miles on this chart? A. Yes because this chart attempts to show the maximum distance covered by these clearances.

Q. Where is there anything on the chart indicating that only the maximum was used? A. Right here, the footnote 1, bottom of the table.

Q. The farthest city, is that it? A. Yes, that is right.

Q. So that this does not purport to be a summary of the mileage in the clearance contracts, but only a summary of the farthest city? A. That is right.

Q. Let me ask you this, if you put your mileage categories differently, if you had used five miles instead of ten miles as the breaking point, you would have gotten quite a different picture, wouldn't you? A. I wouldn't say that at all.

Q. Any more than you would have got a different picture on the last exhibit by using different categories, is that right? A. That's right.

Mr. Davis: Why would it be different if he took five miles instead of ten?

(3313)

Mr. Proskauer: Well, he defends any choice he makes, and I am not going to examine him about it.

Mr. Davis: I am going to examine.

By Mr. Davis:

Q. Who suggested to you these 10-mile steps? A. This is my own idea, Mr. Davis.

Q. Why did you adopt 10 miles as the category? A. I could have adopted intervals of five miles.

Q. Yes. A. It would have meant we would have had ten 5-miles intervals instead of five 10-miles intervals.

Q. If you had adopted that, you would have gotten a different-looking picture? A. As I told Mr. Seymour, I am not sure that we would have. I don't know.

Q. What do you think of the probabilities? Don't you think it is probable you would have got a different picture? A. Well, no, because examining this kind of data, with hundreds of towns involved, in clearance, I would have to have a very prodigious memory to give you offhand an answer to a question like that.

Q. I am asking you if it is true as a matter of simple mathematical probability that if you had taken 5 miles instead of 10 you would have a different figure in your list of contracts and different figures in your percentages of the total? A. Well, sure, any different type of frequency distribution, Mr. Davis, you would use, you would get different percentages.

Q. I would suppose so, and I am surprised that you should hesitate to admit it. A. Well, no, I did not understand your question. Your question wasn't that at all.

Q. Where did you get the 275— A. I did not understand that question at all.

Q. Where did you get the 275 contracts of Loew that you say you examined? A. That is, again, answers to interrogatories.

Q. Did you find in any of those contracts a mileage figure stated for clearance? A. Any Loew's contract?

Q. Yes. A. I can't say offhand. I know in some contracts there were—for instance, they would say, covering an area of 25 miles, or includes a number of counties.

Q. Where they said covered an area of 25 miles, you took that to be 25 miles measured by automobile road or 25 miles measured by radius from the center? A. By automobile road, of course.

Q. And you think if a contract said clearance over all theatres within 25 miles that meant road miles and not surveyor's miles? A. I don't know what they meant. I imagine people travel on road miles, Mr. Davis, rather than as the (3315) crow flies.

Q. How did you interpret that phrase, if it was used? A. Well, I interpreted it as—well, it is subject to any interpretation, for that matter.

Judge Bright: How did you interpret it, is the question?

The Witness: I interpreted it as road miles, of course.

Q. Measured by ruler on an automobile map? A. Measured by a ruler or, if the automobile map gave the distances, I used the distances and added them up.

Q. Can you tell me again whether or not you found in any Loew contracts a clearance measured by mileage other than by the name of the town over which clearance was granted? A. I could not tell you unless I examined all your exhibits.

Q. You do not recollect any at this moment? A. No, I do not. I can't answer either way.

Judge Bright: I wonder, Mr. Wright, what you claim is the value of this exhibit?

Mr. Wright: All that this exhibit does, if your Honor please, is merely show that extensive clearances are regularly granted by these defendants in favor of one town over another, that is, that first-run control in a particular town actually may mean, and frequently (3316)

does mean, control over first-run exhibitions in fairly wide areas.

Judge Bright: Granted as against other defendants and independents?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Bright: Then what is the value of this particular exhibit?

Mr. Wright: The exhibit is not offered to show any differences in treatment between a clearance granted to independent theatres and affiliated theatres in this regard. It simply is intended to show the general characteristics of clearance as such, clearance as an institution in this particular industry.

Judge Hand: It is the old argument you have been making, apparently, that there is inherent vice in clearance and yet clearance is inevitable.

We will adjourn for lunch.

(Recess to 2:15 p.m.)

(3317)

AFTERNOON SESSION.

PETER M. BORWICK, resumed the stand.

Mr. Caskey: We have no further cross examination. We object to the exhibit on the ground of relevancy and materiality.

Mr. Wright: We offer the exhibit.

Judge Hand: We will receive it for what it is worth. I do not think it is worth much.

(Government's Exhibit 442 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Now, if the Court please, I have here a series of charts but I propose to finish the presentation of our case today, come what may. Now I have these charts here. I have given copies to the defendants. I can tell the Court what they are. If any defendant objects to them and the Court does not want them, I shall not offer that chart. If there is any one which is of interest to the Court and the defendant objects, I will offer that, but I hope I can shorten this up by telling you what they are, and we will find out whether there are objections.

Judge Hand: Yes, all right.

Mr. Wright: Now we took as to that one picture that you have the chart in evidence there for each company as showing the distribution of rentals in the towns over 25,000 on that picture first-run as compared to total revenue and total exhibitions in the various exchange areas. Now we took the same pictures and tabulated the data in the interrogatories showing the revenue in the cities over a million from the first four runs, which was the data we got; the revenue in the cities between 200,000 and a million received from the first three runs; and the cities between 50,000 and 200,000 where we got the first two runs, the revenue received from the first two runs.

In each of these cases these charts are subject to similar infirmities as those already discussed, in that there is not complete data as to all situations in all of the charts. The data, however, is complete as to certain cities in each one, and the extent to which it is incomplete and the reasons for incompleteness are reflected in footnotes on each chart.

Now that data is simply a refinement of the study of first-run control that we have already attempted to make. I think it is useful data, but as I say, I have no desire to inflict it upon the Court if the Court is not interested in any of it, regardless of what the defendants' position may be. If the Court wants any of it, and if there is objection from the defendants, I still won't insist on it, but I do have it here and I have copies and I offer it to this extent.

Judge Hand: Have you gentlemen been over these graphs?

Mr. Davis: I have been over them, your Honor, as to Loew's. The only objection I make to them is the same objection I made this morning, that they are misleading in this: They state the percentage of first-run rentals from affiliated theatres, one hundred per cent for instance in Manhattan. Now as a matter of fact that one hundred per cent was from Loew's own theatre. They have it on one picture, one picture in Loew's own theatre, is rated as one hundred per cent of the first-run rental from affiliated theatres, which is a distorted picture entirely. There is an implication that the revenue derived is from a consolidated source consisting of the five defendants.

Now the same thing as to Exhibit 447, cities from 200,000 to one million population. There are 38 cities on that list, and it shows—it is a very pretty chart—it shows that one hundred per cent of all film rentals received by Loew's, first-run rentals, was received from affiliated theatres, one hundred per cent the whole way down the line with the exception of Portland, Oregon. As a matter of fact, 24 of those theatres were Loew's; one was an independent; five were Fox; one RKO, and seven Paramount. And to say that that is one hundred per cent affiliated is, I think, a distortion of the facts. I do not challenge the exhibits in any other particular.

Mr. Seymour: As far as Paramount is concerned, we have spot checked the charts; we have not had time to do more than that; we found a few errors; and the same observation applies that Mr. Davis made, that this business of taking a hundred per cent where the company has some interest in a theatre does distort the thing. Now, rather than take time to point out the errors, I am perfectly willing to do this: if your Honors want to receive these charts and if they are received against others, to have them received and then send the Government a list of the errors which we found, with the understanding that they will physically correct the charts at sometime.

Judge Hand: Yes; and particularly point out in your briefs the situation with regard to your own theatres, which of course you all will, I am perfectly sure. I think we will receive these.

Mr. Raftery: May I make a correction in 499? I am not objecting to the charts. In 499, footnote 4 reads, "Blanket contract." That is the contract we have with Loew's for second, third and fourth run in metropolitan New York. For the record, the contract is a single picture contract for a picture called Stage Door Canteen, made between Loew's Inc. and United Artists. The terms are 25 per cent of the gross receipts until the combined gross receipts of all suburban runs, as we call them—that is, everything after the first-run in Loew's in Metropolitan New York—until those combined receipts equal fifty per cent profit of our film rental. Then the overplus of receipts are divided, two-thirds to United Artists and one-third to Loew's. So instead of a blank here for second, third and fourth run, the film rental paid by Loew's for those pictures on those runs was $163,673. Now that is what the facts show and I will produce a witness if Mr. Wright wants it.
(3321)

Mr. Wright: There is no question about the facts. The reason the footnote says blanket rental here is that the chart only purported to deal with three runs, and this rental payment, of course, that he is referring to, covers many more runs, and there is no breakdown as between Loew's. That is why for the purpose of the treatment here it is impossible to allocate or show any particular rental for any of those runs, and the notes simply refer to it as the runs as covered by a blanket deal which did not show individual run rental.

Mr. Raftery: The only objection we have is calling it a blanket contract. That is not a blanket contract. It is an individual contract for one picture.

Mr. Wright: There is no question about that.

Mr. Proskauer: Speaking for Warners, in the (3322)

chart which was furnished us for Princess O'Rourke, Bronx, Brooklyn and Richmond are shown as first runs——

Judge Hand: The one you propose to offer?

Mr. Proskauer: I am not offering anything. I am speaking of the suggestion——

Judge Hand: The one that Mr. Wright has in his list which he has not yet offered?

Mr. Proskauer: Yes, I am speaking of his suggestion that we let these in——

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Proskauer: We heard Mr. Wright and the witness disavow this morning that either Brooklyn, Bronx or Queens were first-runs; that they were second runs after Manhattan; and yet to get a showing on this chart he lists those Boroughs as showing first-runs. Now I am perfectly willing, having called attention to that, to let that point go, and I will comment on it in my brief, but I would like Mr. Wright to concede that in Manhattan, in Los Angeles and in Philadelphia, all the first-run income was from our own theatres and not from theatres of any other defendant.

Mr. Wright: I think that is perfectly true. Now as to the reason for treating Manhattan, Bronx, Brooklyn, Richmond and Queens first-run separately here, that is the way they were reported in the interrogatory answers to requests, and that is the way they have been set up in the tabulation.

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Frohlich: If your Honors please, the only exhibit that I thought I would object to this afternoon is 456, where Mr. Wright has taken a small group of cities on Cover Girl, from 200,000 to one million population, and he puts in the first and second run rentals.

Now we have been taking a lot of testimony in this case on 92 cities, and I do not want the Court to draw any inference from a small group of ten or fifteen cities. So I have prepared a chart of all of the 92 cities where Cover Girl was shown for the first and second runs, and I would like to put that in together with Mr. Wright's exhibit, and then I have no further objection at all.

Mr. Wright: We have no objection.

Judge Hand: All right. Now Mr. Leisure wishes to be heard.

Mr. Leisure: RKO Exhibit 453, we have gone over that with Mr. Wright, and under the heading, Buffalo, one hundred per cent first-run rentals for affiliated theatres, Mr. Wright concedes that that is an independent theatre and not an affiliated theatre. I wish the record to so show.

Mr. Wright: Correct.

(3324)

Mr. Proskauer: So your Honors may realize that I was not at all captious in my objection, that total of the first column is $160,000. Those that I mentioned in our own theatres only aggregate only $101,000.

Judge Hand: Well, that is very important in your brief. We will receive these exhibits and receive Mr. Frohlich's exhibit too.

Mr. Caskey: What are the numbers, Mr. Wright.

Mr. Wright: Those that have just been received, on the ones you have the numbers are 435 to 458 inclusive, but the numbering in the record here will be eight more in each case.

Mr. Davis: Let us get them right.

Mr. Wright: The first one will be 443.

Mr. Caskey: What is the first one?

Mr. Wright: 443, Princess O'Rourke, in cities over one million, first four runs broken down as to New York and five Boroughs.

444, Sweet Rosie O'Grady, same areas, same runs.

445, Let's Face It, same areas, same runs.

446, Lady Takes a Chance, same area, same runs.

447, As Thousands Cheer, same area, same runs.

448, Cover Girl, same area, same runs.

449, Stage Door Canteen, same area, same runs.

Mr. Proskauer: I haven't got a copy of that, Mr.

(3325)

Wright.

Mr. Wright: That is right. That was typed and you will be supplied with those as soon as we can run off an extra set.

450, Christmas Holiday, same area, same runs.

451, Princess O'Rourke, first three runs in the cities with population between 200,000 and a million.

Mr. Proskauer: Let me see that one, will you please.

Mr. Wright: That is 451. Your number on it is 443.

Mr. Proskauer: On 454, I can't do such lightning calculation, but I am reserving the right, if it is not already in the record, to show the information.

Mr. Wright: 451, your picture, Princess O'Rourke, in the first three runs in cities between 200,000 and a million.

Mr. Proskauer: I understand that it is in the record.

Mr. Wright: 452, Sweet Rosie O'Grady, same cities, same runs.

453, Let's Face It, same cities, same runs.

454, Lady Takes a Chance, same cities, same runs.

455, As Thousands Cheer, same cities, same runs.

Mr. Davis: Now may we have a stipulation that of the 38 cities that are listed, 24 are Loew's, one is an independent, five Fox, one RKO and seven Paramount?

(3325-a)

(3326)

Mr. Wright: That sounds right to me. I accept your figure.

456, Cover Girl, same cities, same runs.

457, Stage Door Canteen, same cities, same runs.

Mr. Proskauer: I haven't that.

Mr. Wright: That will have to be retyped.

458, Christmas Holiday, same cities, same runs.

Mr. Proskauer: I haven't that.

Mr. Wright: That also will have to be another run on the typewriter.

459, the picture Princess O'Rourke, in cities between 50,000 and 200,000, first two runs.

Mr. Proskauer: The difficulty with this is it lumps all together and it looks as though we were all playing this thing when, as a matter of fact, the bulk of it is exhibition in our own theatres.

Mr. Wright: 460, Sweet Rosie O'Grady——

Judge Hand: Wait a minute, Mr. Wright. Are exhibits already in indicative of that fact?

Mr. Wright: That is correct.

Mr. Proskauer: I think we can correct the inference, which I think is wrong there, evidence which is already in the record.

Judge Hand: That is the only thing that we are really interested in, in regard to any of these tabulations, of course.

(3327)

Mr. Wright: That is correct.

Mr. Caskey: Mr. Wright, could you state for the record now for the convenience of counsel the exhibit numbers of the eight cities on interrogatories and the exhibit numbers of the theatre list, which, as I understand it, is the basic data from which all these charts are prepared?

Mr. Wright: May I finish this first?

Mr. Caskey: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Wright: Then I will go back and take that up.

461 is Let's Face It, same cities, same runs.

462 is Cover Girl, same cities, same runs.

463 is As Thousands Cheer, same cities, same runs.

Mr. Davis: Where is that, I haven't got that.

Mr. Wright: Your number on it would be 455.

Mr. Davis: You have put in two As Thousands Cheer. Is this a third one?

Mr. Wright: This is the one that covers the first two runs in cities from fifty to two hundred thousand.

Mr. Davis: I have it. What is the number?

Mr. Wright: 463.

(3328)

Mr. Davis: All right.

Mr. Wright: 464, Lady Takes A Chance, same cities, same runs.

465, Stage Door Canteen, same cities, same runs.

Mr. Proskauer: We haven't got that.

Mr. Wright: You will get a typed copy of that.

466, Christmas Holiday, same cities, same runs. You fill also receive a typed copy of that.

The data reflected in these tabulations, your Honors, are taken from the following exhibits, first, the theatre list, which shows the affiliation of the various theatres involved, are, for Fox, Exhibits 160 and 359; for Loew, Exhibits 163, 163-A and B; for Paramount, Exhibits 161, 162 and 360; for RKO, Exhibits 158 and 159; for Warner, Exhibits 156 and 157.

The interrogatory answers in question which are tabulated here are contained, for Fox, in Exhibits 41 and 42; for Loew, in Exhibits 57-1 through 57-49 and 57-A and B; for Paramount, Exhibit 82; for RKO, Exhibit 94; for Warner the exhibits are 126, 127 and 128; for Columbia 139; for United Artists 369, 369-1 through 369-6; Universal, 365, in two parts.

The tabulations I want to offer are those which were submitted at the conclusion of our case to all of the defendants with respect to the tabulations of data that was furnished in 1939 with reference to three cities, Altanta, Kansas City——

Mr. Proskauer: Mr. Wright, we do not hear you.

Mr. Wright: —Atlanta, Kansas City and Philadelphia.

Mr. Raftery: That is, submitted to all the defendants?

Mr. Wright: That is my understanding. I will explain to the Court what this data is first. The data I am referring to are tabulations made from interrogatory answers filed by each of the defendants in 1939, showing the rentals received and the play dates of all of their pictures in these three selected cities.

Mr. Proskauer: Which are they?

Mr. Wright: Atlanta, Georgia, Kansas City, Missouri, and Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

There is for each city a basic tabulation for each distributor. Those are the ones which were submitted respectively to the distributors whose pictures were tabulated on that. There is also a composite tabulation for each of the cities, showing the percentage of affiliated and unaffiliated rental derived from all runs in the cities for all distributors.

Mr. Davis: May we see that summary?

Mr. Caskey: What changes have been made since these were offered and excluded?

(3330)

Mr. Wright: These, I do not think, were offered and excluded. They were submitted to you, instead of being offered at that time, with the thought that any changes could be made by stipulation.

Mr. Raftery: May I see one?

Mr. Wright: Yes. I will just ask to have this Atlanta summary marked with the next plaintiff's exhibit number, and I will distribute copies to you gentlemen. There are three for the Court.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 467 for identification.)

Mr. Wright: I think, if the Court pleases, that the chart is self-explanatory and it shows on its face the data from which it was derived.

Mr. Proskauer: Mr. Wright, you are not offering New York, to which I made objection?

Mr. Wright: No, I am not.

Mr. Davis: Let us make sure that we are talking about the same thing.

Mr. Caskey: Mr. Wright, I have understood——

Mr. Wright: I will ask to have marked 468 for identification a similar summary for Kansas City.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 468 for identification.)

Mr. Caskey: With regard to 468, the attempt is to show that the first-run revenue, 99.5 per cent, came from affiliated theatres, and the vice of the exhibit is that it neglects to state what is in evidence, namely, that the RKO revenue, in the amount of $29,000, came from its own theatre; the Fox revenue came from two theatres, two other theatres which it operates; that the Loew revenues came from Loew's Midland Theatre; and that the Paramount revenue came from the Newman Theatre. So that by the process of lumping four separate groups of theatres, operated by four separate defendants, you arrive at the fact that among the four they played all the product. The only vice of these charts, Atlanta, Kansas City and Philadelphia, is in the selection of the cities. If you start out with a city where you know that the first-runs are operated by these defendants and the second-runs are operated by these defendants, then, as Judge Hand observed this morning, you get an exhibit that shows those theatres played all the pictures.

In addition to that, we told Mr. Wright that we objected to the phraseology "preferred runs", and I understand that that was to be corrected.

Mr. Wright: I think the footnote shows that preferred runs means first, second and third. If you want to strike out the "preferred" and just substitute first, second and third runs, that is agreeable to us.

Mr. Caskey: There again, your Honors, I think it appears from one of the decisions of the Appeal Board, which your Honors admitted, in Kansas City there is a second-run theatre, the Boswell theatre, which is one of the finest theatres, not only in Kansas City, but anywhere, and it runs second-run in Kansas City and is operated by National Theatres. It has what the Appeal Board calls—the industry calls—a clear second-run, that is, it is the only theatre in Kansas City which plays 28 days after first-run. So, by selection, you get the result that all the second-run revenue in Kansas City comes from one theatre which National Theatres operates. The whole problem is purely one of selection.

Judge Hand: I assume that you will show the infirmities of selection in your brief and argue them.

Mr. Davis: May I make one more suggestion, because there is something there which I do not think Mr. Wright wants to commit himself to. It is a fly speck in the Atlanta chart. On the column of the Atlanta gross, he has it, as to each distributor, Atlanta gross is 3/10ths of 1 per cent of the national gross. It cannot be uniform for all of them, and it is not uniform on the figures in the column out of which the computation grows. There is a manifest mathematical error in that column.

Mr. Wright: If there is a mathematical error in the column, it clearly ought to be corrected. I must say I am not enough of a mathematician——

Mr. Davis: I think if you will look at it you won't want to say it is the same in every case.

Mr. Wright: I would say clearly, as to Universal, the figure—no, the figures are too large for me to handle at a glance, I confess.

Mr. Davis: They are to me, but I just know there is something wrong with that column.

Judge Bright: He refers to the column marked Atlanta Gross. You give each one of them 3 per cent of the gross total and your total is 3 per cent of the national gross. There must be some discrepancy.

Mr. Wright: Whatever the discrepancy is, it is apparent from the face of the chart. If there is an error there, it will be, I can assure you, corrected. I cannot stand here and correct it because my mathematical ability is not that good.

Mr. Davis: I think if I were you, I would just strike that column out entirely.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 469 for identification.)

Mr. Caskey: I wonder if I may, Judge Hand——

(3334)

Judge Hand: I should think there was trouble with your percentages, perhaps right through, but I don't understand it.

Mr. Wright: I beg your pardon?

Judge Hand: I should think there was trouble with your percentages right through. I don't understand it.

Mr. Wright: You mean because of the apparent uniformity?

Judge Hand: Well, I was looking at 468 now. No, they are not uniform.

Mr. Wright: That is the percentage——

Judge Hand: What is the 5 per cent, 5 per cent of what?

Mr. Wright: The 5 per cent figure there opposite the word "Loew's"? That is the percentage which $176,331, the Kansas City gross, is supposed to bear to the figure $37,658,719, the gross, national gross, for those pictures.

Judge Hand: Say that again.

Mr. Wright: The figure $176,331 represents the total gross for the 49 Loew features, and from all runs in Kansas City. The proportion that that gross bears to the total gross received from those features from all runs all over the country, that is, $37,658,719, is .5, that is 5/10ths of 1 per cent.

(3335)

Mr. Davis: My mental arithmetic was always poor, but I do not believe that is so.

Judge Hand: We cannot do this here on the bench anyway. I should think, if it was very important, that you should have it corrected——

Mr. Wright: I agree.

Judge Hand: —if it goes in. Maybe it is.

Mr. Wright: I agree with that, I think it is.

Judge Bright: If you take half of one per cent of 37 million dollars, it isn't $176,000. It is nearer $180,000.

Mr. Wright: $37,000,000, I suppose, 3 per cent would be about something less than one million. Half of one per cent would be something about a sixth of that.

Judge Bright: If you multiply the first two figures of 37,000,000 by 5 you get 185.

Mr. Caskey: They are obviously adjusted to the next highest——

Judge Bright: They have taken the fraction and made a round figure.

Mr. Caskey: Yes; you can see that the national gross in Kansas City, to be 5 per cent, would have to be $741,000.

Mr. Wright: If the Court desires to have us carry out those percentages, we will do them to just as many decimal places your Honors think is appropriate.

(3336)

Judge Bright: Don't we have to admit 5 per cent is exactly half of it?

Mr. Wright: They are, on their face, to the nearest 1/10th of 1 per cent. That, I think, is plain on the face of the chart.

Mr. Caskey: With regard to the Philadelphia one, Mr. Wright, we would like to have the heading "All Preferred Runs" go out and specification as to what it is.

By Mr. Wright:

Q. That, I believe, Lieutenant, refers to the first three runs? A. If you will give me the chart.

Q. You have the chart there in front of you with reference to Philadelphia.

Mr. Proskauer: While the Lieutenant is looking at that, may I, with the Court's permission, ask you: You selected these three cities. Are you making any contention that those three cities are typical of a national situation? And if so, have you got any evidence of that?

Mr. Wright: We selected the three cities simply to show that in a situation where, concededly, all or substantially all of the first-run theatres are affiliated theatres, that the total film rentals derived from those cities, about 70 per cent comes through the affiliated outlets.

(3337)

Mr. Proskauer: I am perfectly aware of that and you heard the historical explanation as to how we came to own these theatres, this large number of first-run theatres in Philadelphia, and for that reason you chose to choose Philadelphia. Now, with the Court's permission I should like to have you answer my question: Do you claim that these three cities are fairly typical of a national situation?

Mr. Wright: They are only typical to the extent that they reflect the proportions of film rental derived from affiliated and unaffiliated theatres and other situations where the first-run theatre setup is substantially the same. There are many other situations in this country besides these where all or substantially all of the first-run theatres are affiliated.

Mr. Proskauer: In other words, all you are claiming is that where you have a situation like this one, that happens to exist in Philadelphia, this is typical of such situations?

Mr. Wright: Precisely.

Mr. Proskauer: But not of others. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Hand: He tenders evidence of sore spots and then he is at liberty to argue either that you should abolish the sore spots or——

(3338)

Mr. Proskauer: I am trying to segregate the sore spot problem from the general problem.

Mr. Caskey: Lieutenant, we want to know what those preferred runs are on the Philadelphia chart, and the number of theatres.

The Witness: Well, if Mr. Wright will kindly give me the basic tables from which was copied the information, I can tell you just exactly what it included.

By Mr. Wright:

Q. (Handing paper to witness.) A. This table itself, Mr. Wright, that you gave me, does not specify what those preferred runs are, but I know there are some basic tables which specify, which have a footnote. This one was omitted for some reason or other, but there is another basic table from one of the other towns or one of the other distributors, which indicates what those preferred runs are; whether they are first, second and third or first, second, third and fourth, I am not sure offhand.

Q. Your Kansas City footnote indicates that you took first, second and third in that town. I do not find a similar footnote for— A. There is one.

Q. —Philadelphia.

Mr. Caskey: Mr. Wright, you will concede that (3339) in Kansas City that the so-called preferred runs constitute first-runs operated by the four defendants separately, the Plaza Theatre, which is second-run, and the Isis Theatre, third-run, and nothing else.

Mr. Wright: As far as the separate operation is concerned, I believe the record shows that there was a pool there during part of the season, which was dissolved during the season.

Mr. Caskey: So the rest of it is correct, that the second-run theatre is the Plaza and the third-run theatre is the Isis, and they are the only two theatres that are included in the data under the right portion of the chart, in addition to the first-runs.

Mr. Wright: That, I think, is undubitably correct.

Mr. Caskey: Can we get the number of theatres involved in the other two charts—the other one?

Q. These basic tables that we have here do not show any footnote as to what those preferred runs are. Do you have a work sheet here that shows what they were? A. I think we sent work sheets for the basic tables, for these three cities, to all the defendants for any proper corrections they would care to make and those indicate—they are classified by runs, first, second, third and fourth, and the theatres are specified (3340) as to what particular defendant has a financial interest. I believe, however, Mr. Wright, that this tabulation on Philadelphia covers, that is, the phrase, "All Preferred Runs," covers first, second and third only.

Q. First, second and third? A. First, second and third, that is right.

Q. Only? A. Only.

Mr. Caskey: Why not leave it that way, unless there is a correction to be made in the record?

Mr. Wright: Yes. You apparently have the sheets which show the fact.

We will offer these last exhibits, 467, 468 and 469 for identification, these three summary sheets on those towns.

Judge Hand: All right, we will admit them.

Mr. Wright: We had submitted——

Judge Hand: We have admitted 443 to 466 and marked them in evidence.

Mr. Wright: And we are now offering 467, 468 and 469. I understand those are admitted?

Judge Hand: We have admitted those.

(Government's Exhibits 467, 468 and 469 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Proskauer: Are we going to see those before they are marked?

(3341)

Mr. Wright: You have copies.

Mr. Caskey: 467 is Atlanta?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Caskey: 468 is Kansas City?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Caskey: 469 is Philadelphia?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

I have, if the Court please, these additional basic tabulations that were referred to here, which were submitted to the defendants, and which contain the picture by picture breakdown of each distributor in each city of these rentals. I have no desire to put those into the record unless the Court has some interest in having them in, or the defendants. If anybody wants them in, they are here.

Judge Hand: What do the defendants say to that?

(3342)

Mr. Proskauer: I don't know what he is talking about.

Mr. Raftery: We have never seen that and do not want to see it.

Mr. Proskauer: I suggest that Mr. Wright put his case in. I have not asked him to put in anything else. I do not know what he is talking about. I have not any desires about it at all.

Mr. Wright: That concludes, then, our offer of tabular material subject to our supplying the attached list of division of product, which is to supplement Exhibit 428, and the list of clearance situations where the data provided shows no clearance or was not supplied, which is to be attached, as I understand it, to Exhibit 441 for identification, which was not received in evidence, but which the Court indicated it would receive if we attached the list showing the extent to which the other data was not supplied.

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Caskey: I assume we will have an opportunity to see it and cross-examine before it is received?

Judge Hand: You mean the one he has in his hand?

Mr. Caskey: That has been excluded. Now, if he gets something else up we want to see it.

(3343)

Mr. Wright: I do not propose to get anything else up. I propose merely to supplement this in accordance with the Court's suggestion with a list of the number of situations supplied which either showed that the contract set no clearance or where the data was silent as to whether there was clearance or not.

Judge Hand: That is not much of a job, is it?

Mr. Wright: I think we can get that in probably by tomorrow morning.

Judge Hand: All right. They are entitled to see it, of course.

Mr. Wright: Of course, before we submit it.

Judge Hand: I do not believe they will want to do much talking about that.

Judge Bright: Does the Government rest?

Mr. Proskauer: The trouble with these charts is, they have been put in in categories which are not conventional in the trade. I have never seen a more misleading chart than that, by reason of the arbitrary selection of categories of days of clearance which bear no relation to anything that is conventional in the trade.

Judge Hand: Well, I cannot recommend any medicine to be applied in such a situation.

Mr. Proskauer: Well, we will have to supply our own medicine.

(3344)

Judge Hand: All right, and I have no doubt you will.

Mr. Proskauer: I just wanted the Court to know what the sickness was.

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Wright: I think that is all.

(Witness excused.)

The Clerk: Some of the exhibits have not been marked.

Judge Hand: Yes. You see there is a sad gap here between 453 and 467. I do not know what will cure that.

Mr. Wright: I think if we had a brief recess, we could pick these off the title and supply them. I hesitate to take the Court's time——

Judge Hand: All right, we will take a short recess.

(Short recess.)

Mr. Shears: Will you mark these 419-A and 419-B for identification.

(Marked Government's Exhibits 419-A and 419-B for identification.)

Mr. Shears: They are subject to another exhibit which I am now offering. Yesterday your Honors will recall that I had marked for identification a number of price discrimination and clearance discrimination——

(3345)

Mr. Proskauer: A number of what?

Mr. Shears: Schedules of price discrimination and clearance discrimination; and I offered at that time to make any corrections which defendants saw fit to suggest. Only two defendants have done so, and they have stipulated as to those documents.

I shall now offer Exhibit 419 for identification and 419-A and B.

Mr. Davis: Tell us what it is, will you?

Mr. Shears: 419 consists of three sheets of Radio Keith-Orpheum Corporation, and 419-A is a national gross percentage contract with Theatre Service Corporation, dated June 1, 1944. 419-B for identification——

Judge Bright: What is 419-A, did you say?

Mr. Shears: It is a contract between the Radio Keith-Orpheum Pictures Corporation and the Theatre Service Corporation, dated June 1, 1944, relating to a percentage of national gross on 114 theatres.

Mr. Proskauer: Is that the one in Louisiana?

Mr. Shears: Yes.

Mr. Proskauer: That is an independent circuit.

Mr. Shears: We contend it is not an independent circuit: E. B. Richards purchases for both that and Paramount theatres——

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor, that is where we go overboard. Mr. Richards——

(3346)

Mr. Shears: Just a moment. May I furnish this, and then you may speak?

Mr. Proskauer: Surely.

Judge Bright: We have a copy here of so-called 419-A.

Mr. Shears: Yes.

Judge Bright: Now, what is this 419-A?

Mr. Shears: A and B are contracts which are referred to on pages 2 and 3 of the exhibit which you have a copy of there. I do not have copies of 419-A and B, but they are explanatory of the exhibits which you have on pages 2 and 3. These are offered——

Judge Hand: Here we have 418, 420——

Mr. Shears: Those are subsequent offers.

Judge Hand: (Continuing) —423 and 419.

Mr. Shears: 419 is all I am offering at this time. 419 are the first three pages that you have in your hand.

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Shears: And A and B are supporting contracts.

Judge Hand: I see.

Mr. Shears: This is offered, and I understand it is without objection on the part of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation. And I also offer a stipulation at the same time.

(3347)

Mr. Proskauer: May I see it, please?

(Handed to Mr. Proskauer.)

Mr. Proskauer: In so far as this concerns Warner Bros. this schedule shows that a picture was leased to us for two days at 35 per cent; it was leased to Apex, independent theatre, for 40 per cent to 12,000 gross, and that is what is shown on the main exhibit. The stipulation shows the final adjusted contract terms to the Apex Theatre in Washington and the Bailey Theatre in New York; that the Washington contract was reduced to 35 per cent of the gross; so that Apex for two days, including a Sunday, paid 35 per cent, and the two Warner theatres paid 35 per cent.

Mr. Shears: And the Apex played after the Warner theatres.

Mr. Raftery: What picture is that?

Mr. Shears: Lady Takes a Chance.

Will you mark this 419-C for identification?

Mr. Proskauer: In order that this may all be in the record, the evidence already in will show that for their two days the Warner theatres paid very much more in dollars.

Mr. Shears: They should, getting first-run over the other theatre.

(3348)

Mr. Proskauer: You got the Sunday.

Mr. Shears: By requirement, while the others were optional.

Judge Hand: Now we have admitted all these intervening exhibits here by numbers, 453 to 466 inclusive.

(Government's Exhibits 453 to 466 for identification, inclusive, received in evidence.)

Mr. Shears: Now, do I understand that 419 is now admitted in evidence?

Judge Hand: Yes.

(Government's Exhibits 419, 419-A, 419-B and 419-C for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Shears: And I now offer Exhibit 423 for identification in evidence, which is a similar schedule on the part of Warner Bros. Pictures Inc., and attached thereto are data with regard to their theatres indicated on this schedule supplied by the defendant.

Mr. Proskauer: May I see which one you are offering?

(Exhibit handed to Mr. Proskauer.)

(Mr. Shears confers with Mr. Proskauer.)

Mr. Proskauer: You better correct your statement on the record.

Mr. Shears: The data supplied by the defendant as to certain theatres in New Orleans and vicinity to which they sold pictures——

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honors, would it help if I called attention to this? We have corrected a schedule which they tendered us, and agreed on this, and I think it would be helpful if you would let me very briefly point out what the correction involves.

Mr. Shears: Just a moment, sir.

Mr. Proskauer: Pardon me?

Mr. Shears: Is this subject to stipulation, or are you going to argue?

Mr. Proskauer: I have stated to the Court that I am consenting to the admission pursuant to stipulation. I am not accustomed to withdrawing from my stipulations.

Mr. Shears: Then I submit to the Court there is no need for an explanation of what the corrections were; it only wastes the time of the Court.

Judge Hand: I do not know whether it is a waste of time or not. He said it would be brief.

Mr. Proskauer: By brief, I mean three minutes.

We leased, as this stipulation shows, pictures to a concern called the United Theatres which operated down in Louisiana. They owned about 20 theatres, and we had a general contract with them that they were to pay us 15 per cent of the box office on our pictures in all their theatres. We made that deal with them generally. United Theatres is an independent, unaffiliated corporation, and the discrepancy here which is shown, de minimis, as will surely appear to your Honors when you look at this, is due to the fact that we had this general agreement with this independent exhibitor for an overall 15 per cent in all their theatres.

Mr. Shears: May I answer that just by one brief statement? In Exhibit 419-A the Theatre Service Corporation buys for 114 theatres, and in the record on page 754 Mr. Rodgers said that E. V. Richards did the purchasing for Theatre Service and United Theatres.

Mr. Proskauer: What?

Judge Hand: Mr. Rodgers said that E. V. Richards did the purchasing for United Theatres.

Mr. Shears: And Theatre Service. Page 754.

Mr. Proskauer: Mr. Richards owned an independent circuit. He also had in some city a Paramount theatre—he was a Paramount partner. That does not make the circuit in which Paramount had no interest whatever an affiliated circuit.

Mr. Shears: We do not claim it is affiliated. We claim Mr. Richards buys not only for his own chain but for the Theatre Service chain, which is indicated on this.

Mr. Proskauer: But he did not buy from us for the other chain. He bought for his independent circuit.

(3351)

Mr. Shears: I pass up to the Court the list of theatres for which Mr. Richards purchased, which is shown in Exhibit 419-A and Exhibit 419-B, purchased on the same dates from RKO and now in evidence.

Judge Bright: Mr. Shears, while you are on these exhibits, what do you say that Exhibit 419 shows?

Mr. Shears: 419 shows that on the same date Paramount Richards, which is E. V. Richards, and Theatre Service purchased from RKO on the same national gross deal for all the theatres shown on those sheets—and those include all the theatres on the present exhibit——

Judge Bright: I thought you said you were offering Exhibits showing discriminatory practices.

Mr. Shears: Those are in support of the exhibits.

Judge Bright: Now, are you talking about the same exhibit I am?

Mr. Shears: 419.

Judge Bright: Tell me again what you are offering this to show.

Mr. Shears: 419, and subsequent exhibits which I am about to offer——

Judge Bright: No. 419 I am talking about.

Mr. Shears: (Continuing) ——show a discrimination in price and in some cases in clearance between theatres which are neither affiliated or where they are in a big circuit, or as in this present case, purchased by E. V. Richards, who is a Paramount official, between those groups of theatres and the independents, has nothing to do with the company to which we sold, shown on that exhibit.

Mr. Proskauer: May I say there is not a scintilla of evidence that Richards is a Paramount official. There is evidence that in a separate company, which has nothing to do with the company to which we sold, he has some interest with Paramount; and if what my friend is saying, that it shows we sold for a lower percentage to a circuit, wholly unaffiliated, which had a large number of theatres,—we did sell for 15 per cent overall to such a circuit, which was wholly unaffiliated. That is the fact. Now, you can argue anything you want from it.

Mr. Shears: We can submit that in our briefs; but the evidence is clear in the record at the present time that E. V. Richards purchased for United Theatres and for Theatre Service, which are the two in issue at this point.

Mr. Proskauer: I do not see that that differs from what I said. All I said was that he purchased from us, at least this one circuit purchased from us and not the others.

Mr. Shears: The record is also clear that E. V. Richards is an official of the Paramount Company by virtue of the fact that they submitted an affidavit of his as the New Orleans representatitve for Paramount Company.

Mr. Proskauer: What do you mean by New Orleans representative?

Mr. Seymour: Now, I have sat quietly here——

Mr. Shears: He is a director. I will amend my statement.

Mr. Seymour: Mr. Richards is an officer of a company in which Paramount is interested in New Orleans. The Theatre Service Corporation which has been referred to is a company in which Paramount has no interest. Mr. Richards has an interest in that company.

Mr. Proskauer: The same is true of United Theatres. Paramount has no interest in that?

Mr. Seymour: Yes.

Judge Hand: What has this large independent circuit to do with this? Is your allegation of preferential treatment based on the fact that that was large and got better treatment than some small people? What is it based on?

Mr. Shears: Our argument is based on the fact that Mr. Richards, who is the head of this organization, being affiliated with Paramount, obviously got a better deal than the independents did in that area, as shown by the figures on these charts.

Judge Bright: What figures? That is what I want you to show. Point out what you are driving at so we will understand it. Take 419, which is what I am talking about.

Mr. Shears: Yes. We were on the subject of the admission of the Warner documents. 419 is a blind deal, because in that case Theatre Service, Paramount-Richards purchased on a 00 301 percent of the national gross of all theatres using that picture, not only their own, but all theatres in the United States.

Mr. Proskauer: I don't like to interrupt, but you are mixing up RKO with Warner. There is no such thing on the Warner sheet at all.

Mr. Shears: I was asked about RKO by his Honor.

Judge Bright: I am only talking about 419. That is the RKO sheet.

Mr. Proskauer: Oh.

Mr. Shears: Counsel has been talking about one case and I have been talking about the other.

Judge Hand: This independent circuit, or this circuit that has been characterized, at least, as independent by Judge Proskauer—is that a circuit of Richards?

Mr. Shears: Theatre Service is composed of Richards' children, and Richards himself does the buying for Theatre Service, Paramount Richards and United Theatres. Now, that is all in the record.

(3355) Judge Hand: That is the independent circuit you referred to?

Mr. Shears: We do not characterize it as independent.

Judge Hand: All right. That is the circuit you referred to?

Mr. Shears: Yes.

Judge Bright: The only reason you say Theatre Service is not independent is because Richards buys for it? Have any of the defendants any interest in Theatre Service circuit as such?

Mr. Shears: They have not.

Judge Bright: But Richards buys for that and what other?

Mr. Shears: And for his own, Paramount Richards, in which they do have an interest; and you will see from these Exhibits 419-A and B, which I just passed up, the deal was made on identically the same day and identically the same terms.

Judge Hand: What interest had defendants in having Richards make favorable terms for some theatre circuit in which he and his children, or he or his children were interested and they were not interested, or do you claim there is an inference that they were interested? I do not know what your claim is about this independent circuit.

(3355A) Mr. Shears: We make no claim as far as United Theatres and Theatre Service are concerned, that any defendant has any interest whatsoever in those companies.

Mr. Proskauer: Those are two different companies, if your Honor please.

Judge Hand: Then what has it got to do with the case?

(3356)

Mr. Shears: Except that Paramount-Richards, in which Paramount does have a 50 per cent interest, as well as those companies do their booking through Mr. E. B. Richards who is a director of the Paramount Company.

Judge Goddard: Do you claim that he and his family got better clearance because of that; is that it?

Mr. Shears: The evidence shows that on these exhibits, yes, sir.

Judge Goddard: That is the purpose of it, isn't it?

Mr. Shears: That is the purpose of the exhibit.

Judge Bright: Now, does the evidence show that the Dreamland Theatre, for instance, which is given this 00301 rate pay more or less than the New Orleans Peacock which is listed at 35 per cent gross?

Mr. Shears: As I say, the national gross is a blind deal. There is no way for us to obtain that information. However, on the next exhibit——

Judge Bright: What we are interested in is this: You say it is discrimination.

Mr. Shears: Yes.

Judge Bright: Was he given a better deal than the other theatre was? And that would depend upon what he had to pay, wouldn't it?

(3357)

Mr. Shears: We would say yes.

Judge Bright: Does the evidence show that 35 per cent of the gross is more or less than 00301 of the national gross?

Mr. Shears: We will have to reduce that in our briefs. I could not reduce such a tremendous problem at this time, but we will do so.

Judge Bright: What do you say about it? You must have something to say about it. Is it more or less?

Mr. Shears: We say it is less.

Now, in the Warner Bros. exhibit, which is No. 423, it is evident from the face of the document that the same theatres about which we have been talking, the rate was 15 per cent as opposed to 35 and 40 per cent for the independents. Now, there is no question in this document about the discrimination; and, obviously, if E. V. Richards purchased for both United Theatres and Theatres Service and Paramount-Richards, on identically the same terms, it must be that the percentage national gross deal is a better deal, inas much as it is with Warner Bros. That is page 4 of the document that you have in front of you, the Warner Bros. Exhibit.

Mr. Proskauer: May I make perfectly clear to your Honors that what this exhibit shows was that we were selling a specific two films to Peacock, New Orleans, and also we were selling these two independent circuits, United Theatres and Theatres Service Company on a large over-all deal of 15 per cent of their gross in all theatres. Now, you can argue until you are blue in the face as to which was the better or which was the worse deal. We were not discriminating against Peacock because it was an independent. We had a general deal with two other independent circuits owning some 20 or 30 or 40 theatres—I do not know how many exactly—selling them——

(3358)

Mr. Shears: I will give you that number if you wish. 114 for Theatres Service and 57 for Paramount-Richards.

Mr. Proskauer: All right, that is all the better. We made a deal with two theatres—I understand that is not strictly correct, but it is sufficient for my purpose to say that we had a general contract with these two independent circuits to license pictures to them on a straight 15 per cent basis for this large number of theatres. How that is discriminating against an independent, I don't know. They were themselves an independent circuit, both of them.

Mr. Shears: I will not labor the point. The 15 per cent is, of course, the theatre gross. The 35 and 40 per cent are of the theatre gross in each case.

(3359)

Mr. Proskauer: I made one inadvertent statement. The 15 per cent was for United Theatres. To Theatres Service we sold on a flat basis.

Judge Hand: Now, what is the situation, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: I would like to get through, if I possibly can, with the offer of the remaining exhibits here tonight.

Judge Hand: Now, these have been marked for identification.

Mr. Shears: 419 and 420 are in by stipulation. As to the balance——

Judge Hand: All right, they are admitted.

Now, go ahead, Mr. Wright.

Mr. Shears: As to 418, 417, 416, 422, 420 and 421, I have received no stipulation——

Mr. Seymour: I understood from counsel yesterday that he was giving us those schedules, and that he was going to offer them today, and at that time we would comment on them. When he is ready to offer the schedules which concern Paramount, I am ready to comment on them; and subject to some stipulations I want to make, and we will make progress. So why don't you go ahead?

Mr. Shears: I asked counsel yesterday to correct these documents and I received no correction.

(3360)

Mr. Raftery: He gave me two of them, and I am ready to stipulate on what terms I will consent to their going in. You offer them.

Mr. Seymour: Why don't you offer your schedule?

Mr. Shears: I withdraw the offer as to those which we have been unable to agree about, in order to save the Court's time.

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Shears: As a matter of fact, in each one we did not receive the data required to build up the document. The only two we have received complete are RKO and Warner Bros.

Mr. Seymour: In other words, you are not going to offer any against Paramount, is that right?

Mr. Raftery: I regret he is not offering the one on Universal.

Mr. Seymour: I regret he is not offering the one against Paramount.

Now, do you withdraw the Paramount schedule, Mr. Shears? Is that the point?

Mr. Wright: We withdraw the offers. If they want to offer them they can offer them. We want to get to material about which there cannot be any question.

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Wright: Now I will ask to have marked for (3361)

identification the supplemental schedule that the Court asked us to prepare to go with Exhibit 428, and I will ask to have it marked as 428-A, showing the exact splits of pictures in each of the situations——

Mr. Proskauer: Is this our old friend——

Colloquy

Mr. Wright: This is what Mr. Raftery refers to as the bouncing exhibit.

Mr. Proskauer: Now, what have you done to make it stop bouncing?

Mr. Caskey: Have you a copy?

Mr. Wright: No.

Mr. Proskauer: Mr. Wright, it is utterly unintelligible when you you look at it. I do not know what it means.

Mr. Wright: Maybe I can make it clear to you.

Mr. Proskauer: I hope you can.

(3362)

The 428-A that you have there shows in each situation covered by 428 the number of features listed on the respective admissions of fact in evidence in the case which played affiliated and independent theatres wherever there was a division. Where there was no division, the notation simply gives the number or the word "or" as it was reported in the admission. Where there is a split reported, the precise split is indicated on this exhibit.

Judge Bright: May I ask you, Mr. Wright, to take the first line "New York, N. Y."

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Bright: Warner 16. That means 16 pictures?

Mr. Wright: The numbers in each case refer to feature pictures, yes.

Judge Bright: Then in the next one, in the Fox column, that would be 15 of Fox pictures?

Mr. Wright: 15 Fox pictures.

Judge Bright: Three of the Loew Pictures?

Mr. Wright: No, I beg your pardon. The features in the Fox column are all features released by Fox; 15 of them had their first-run in New York City in Fox theatres, three in Loew theatres; nine in independent theatres first-run New York City.

Mr. Proskauer: As I understand it, if you will let me ask, Mr. Wright, the first column, Warner Bros. showed all fifteen of their features in their theatres.

Mr. Wright: First-run New York City, that is correct; and in Chicago, Warner showed 16 in Paramount theatres there, one in an independent theatre, that is, one Warner feature was shown by an independent first-run in Chicago, 16 by the Paramount affiliate, Balaban & Katz.

Judge Bright: You offer the exhibit with the amendments?

Mr. Wright: Yes, 428 and 428-A.

Mr. Caskey: If your Honors please, I think as far as Fox is concerned, the vices which we pointed out have been corrected, but certainly there is no need, I think, for 428 to go in with all of the various mistakes that we pointed out.

Judge Hand: We will overrule you on that. We have been arguing about this thing for——

Mr. Caskey: Many hours.

Judge Hand: —nearly two days, and it will have to go in subject to such comments as you may make in your briefs and argument.

Mr. Proskauer: They will be very unpleasant comments, your Honor.

Judge Hand: I have no doubt of it.

Mr. Seymour: One problem about it, if your Honors please, is this, we have had no time to check this at all.

Judge Hand: It is subject to correction. I imagine you will get together and do that, if there is anything to correct.

Mr. Seymour: If there are any corrections, we will notify the Government, and if those corrections are not made, we would like an opportunity to clip to this exhibit, so that they will be readily available, the corrections which we maintain the evidence requires.

Mr. Wright: Entirely agreeable.

Mr Davis: Have you another copy of that?

Mr. Wright: No, we have just had one run on the typewriter.

Judge Bright: Mr. Wright, he may have my copy, if he wants it. Give it to Mr. Davis.

Mr. Wright: We will supply copies.

(Marked Government's Exhibits 428 and 428-A in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: We will ask to substitute a photostat of Exhibit 384 for the one which is in evidence, and return the original to whoever supplied it. The original was an exhibit in another case and so we have had to return the originals.

And I will ask to have marked as Exhibit 470 for (3365)
identification a franchise, a two-year deal, for the 1943-44, 1944-45 seasons, for Universal Pictures in the Kincey circuit, a Paramount affiliate. I offer this for purposes of comparison with the form of two-year deal that was offered by Universal in its case as being made with independents.

Judge Bright: Marking it for identification, you said?

Mr. Wright: Yes—well, I am now offering it.

Mr. Seymour: May I see it?

(Marked Government's Exhibit 470 for identification.)

Colloquy

Mr. Wright: Mark this as 471 for identification.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 471 for identification.)

Mr. Wright: Is there any objection to 470?

(No response.)

(Government's Exhibit 470 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And I will offer an agreement, a current franchise, for the 1944-45 and 1945-46 seasons for the exhibition of Columbia pictures in the Loew metropolitan circuit, which has been marked for identification as Exhibit 471.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 472 for identification.)

Mr. Davis: No objection.

Mr. Frohlich: No objection.

(3366)

(Government's Exhibit 471 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And I will offer Exhibit 472 for identification, which is a two-year deal covering the 1943-44 and 1944-45 seasons for exhibition of Columbia pictures in the Fox Intermountain Circuit.

Mr. Caskey: Where did you get it.

Mr. Wright: I think we got that from Columbia. Mark that 473.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 473 for identification.)

Mr. Caskey: Do you know this, Mr. Frohlich?

Mr. Frohlich: That is accurate. No objection.

(Gov. Ex. 472 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And I will offer in evidence a two-year franchise deal for Universal pictures to be exhibited in the RKO metropolitan New York circuit, which has been marked for identification as 473.

Mr. Raftery: Does this come from uptown, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: I believe it did.

Mr. Raftery: I mean, who supplied it? Mr. Leisure says RKO supplied it. If they say it is O.K., it is O.K. with me.

(Government's Exhibit 473 for identification received in evidence.)

(Government's Exhibit 474 marked for identification.)

Mr. Wright: I offer 474 for identification, at this time.

(3366a)

Mr. Proskauer: May I see it, please?

(Handed to Mr. Proskauer.)

Mr. Proskauer: In so far as this concerns Warner Bros., this schedule shows that a picture was leased to us for two days at 35 per cent; it was leased to Apex, independent theatre, for 40 per cent to $12,000 gross, and that is what was shown on the agreement between Paramount Pictures, Inc., and Partmar Corporation, relating to the exhibition of Paramount pictures in the Paramount theatre in Los Angeles, covering a ten-year period from 1939 through 1949. That I take it, is received.

(3367)

Colloquy

Mr. Wright: I have here, if the Court please, a three-year agreement covering the 1939-40, 1940-41 and 1941-42 seasons for the exhibition of Universal pictures in the so-called Sparks Circuit in Florida. I will offer the entire agreement if any one else wants the entire agreement in. All I am interested in is this one provision which I will read into the record, if that procedure is agreeable to the other parties.

Mr. Proskauer: I can't tell you whether it is agreeable because I never saw it and I don't know what it is.

Mr. Wright: This agreement, as I say, covers a three-year period for the exhibition of Universal films in the towns in the Sparks Circuit. The number of towns covered are those which comprise the circuit and are, I believe, about forty or fifty in number. I don't think the exact number is material for our purposes.

The provision I want to call attention to is this:

"If desired, one additional run will be granted in the following towns without additional charge:

(3368)

"De Land, Orlando, Fort Lauderdale, Sarasota, Gainesville and St. Augustine."

Mr. Proskauer: Is it a percentage contract?

Mr. Wright: The terms of the contract are simply rental of $81,909 per year. "Such film to be exhibited in the town and according to the runs designated upon the attached sheet, Exhibit B, made a part of the contract."

And then there is a further provision that Sparks Circuit, Inc., "may have the right to exhibit any picture included in this contract in any theatre operated by it in the town of Palm Beach, Florida, and that the rental of such film shall be $100." And then "it is further agreed that any runs set forth in this agreement shall carry a rental price of $25 per run."

Mr. Raftery: You only want incorporated that Sparks got a free run in those towns, if he wanted it?

Mr. Wright: He was given an optional free run in the towns of De Land, Orlando, Fort Lauderdale, Sarasota, Gainesville and St. Augustine.

Mr. Raftery: How many towns are there altogether?

Mr. Wright: There are——

Mr. Raftery: I mean, the free run?

Mr. Wright: There are six towns.

(3369)

Mr. Raftery: I don't care whether he puts the contract in or puts the provision in, as far as Universal is concerned.

Judge Bright: Is the Sparks Circuit an independent circuit?

Mr. Wright: No, that is one in which Paramount, I believe, owns approximately 90 per cent interest.

Mr. Frohlich: That is the one, your Honors will recall, where Columbia gave the franchise agreement to Sparks and it was proven that out of the 43 cities Mr. Sparks owns all the theatres in 32 cities. There isn't another theatre in any of those 32 cities but the Sparks theatres.

Mr. Raftery: That is the one Scully testified that Rogers was a tough buyer.

Mr. Wright: There isn't any dispute about that.

Judge Bright: About the testimony about the fact that he is a tough buyer?

Mr. Raftery: Either way.

Mr. Wright: That he is a tough buyer. I don't remember the other part of it. Then I have here a franchise agreement from RKO Radio—I have another exhibit that I simply want to call attention to the facts about, without making an offer unless someone wants it in the record. It is a franchise from RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. to Junior Orpheum Corporation, San Francisco, Limited, dated September 1, 1941, but actually executed November 19, 1941, between those parties covering the exhibition of RKO films in the town of San Francisco for a ten-year period, commencing September 1, 1941, and ending August 31, 1951. I merely offer the statement of that fact to show that RKO has made franchises for RKO pictures since the consent decree was entered.

(3370)

Mr. Leisure: We have no objection to it as long as the record shows that the theatres are our own subsidiaries.

Mr. Wright: I have here also a contract between Universal and Skouras Theatres Corporation covering the seasons 1944-45, 1945-46, and 1946-47, which relates to a number of theatres operated by Skouras in metropolitan New York. The provision I want to call attention to is simply one which appears in the clearance schedule for each of the, I believe, thirty or forty odd theatres, altogether. This appears at the bottom of each page on which the theatres are scheduled. "Skouras theatres to have seven-day clearance on any new or newly operating theatres within the area of the furthest point over which any Skouras theatre is accorded clearance.

Mr. Raftery: The only objection we have to that is that Skouras is not a part to this action in any respect. It is a dealing with an exhibitor not a party to it and you are not going to offer the whole thing?

Mr. Wright: If you want the whole thing in, I will put it in.

Mr. Raftery: I don't want anything in.

Mr. Wright: Otherwise I will offer the provision. If the Court please, I believe we actually have somewhere here a provision as to the existence of a fact. Have you got a copy of our stipulation, Mr. Frohlich?

Mr. Frohlich: I haven't, but I have no objection to your reading it or putting it in the record.

Mr. Wright: If I can find it, I will put it in.

The stipulation executed between Mr. Frohlich and myself is as follows:

> "It is hereby stipulated between counsel for the defendant Columbia Pictures Corporation and the plaintiff that Columbia now serves its feature films to two neighborhood houses in New Orleans, Louisiana, to-wit, the Beacon and Lakeview theatres which are located within two blocks of each other, with sixty days' clearance in favor of the Beacon over the Lakeview, and has maintained that clearance from the opening of the Beacon in 1941 to the present time."

That, the Court will recall, is one of the situations where the appeal board cut a similar clearance in favor, or, used by other defendants, to one day in 1943.

Mr. Frohlich: And Columbia was never a party to any clearance controversy.

Mr. Wright: That is quite correct. As far as the decree is concerned, Columbia did not sign it.

I had a similar stipulation, or a stipulation in somewhat different form regarding the same theatres with United Artists, I believe, which I also appear to have——

Mr. Raftery: I am ready to stipulate on this not in that form.

Mr. Wright: Yes, I understand that. You have a copy then?

Mr. Raftery: No, I haven't a copy. I will read into the record what I am willing to stipulate. You may take it or leave it.

Mr. Wright: All right, why don't you do that?
